VER. 6. Mosera, by Mount Hor, for there Aaron died. Num. xx. This and the following verses seem to be inserted by way of parenthesis, (Ch.) as far as the 10th. The reason of their insertion here cannot easily be explained; but we must adore, in silence, the designs of the Holy Spirit. C.—Moses had just mentioned the ark, designed to contain the tables of the law; and as the priests and Levites were to be the guardians of those sacred things, he takes occasion to specify something with respect to their institution, &c. Mosera was perhaps twice visited by the Hebrews. The first time, they came thither from Beroth-Benejacan, or from "the well of the children of Jacan," and thence measured back their steps; though, the second time, Mosera, or Moseroth, is not noticed, because it had been specified already, and they did not stop long there, but proceeded to Gadgad. Num. xxxiii. 30. Bonfrere. M.—Others think that Mosera and Benejacan are not the same places as Moseroth and Beroth Bensacan, though the names be similar. A. Lapid.—Perhaps it will be more satisfactory to acknowledge, that Mosera has been transposed by the copyists, as it ought to come before Beroth, particularly as Moses places it in that order, where he gives an account of the 42 stations; and the Samaritan copy agrees with him in this place. C.—It also retains many words which have been omitted in Hebrew, and in all the versions taken from it; whence the omission seems to have taken place before the appearance of the version of the Septuagint. The Samaritan version, which is acknowledged to have preceded the Septuagint, agrees with its text, and reads, "And the children of Israel journeyed from Moseroth, and pitched in Benejacan: from thence they journeyed, and pitched in Hagidgad: from thence they journeyed and pitched in Jotbathah, a land of rivers of waters: from thence they are there till this present, as the Lord commanded me.

6 And the children of Israel removed their camp from Beroth, of the children of Jacan into Mosera, where Aaron died, and was buried, and Eleazar, his son, succeeded him in the priestly office.

7 From thence they came to Gadgad: from which place they departed, and camped in Jetebatha, in a land of waters and torrents.

8 At that time he separated the tribe of Levi, to carry the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and to stand before him in the ministry, and to bless in his name until this present day.

9 Wherefore Levi hath no part, nor possession with his brethren: because the Lord himself is his possession, as the Lord thy God promised him.

10 And I stood in the mount, as before, forty days and nights: and the Lord heard me this time also, and would not destroy thee.

11 And he said to me: Go, and walk before the people, that they may enter, and possess the land, which I swore to their fathers that I would give them.

12 And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but that thou fear the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways, and love him, and serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul:

13 And keep the commandments of the Lord, and his ceremonies, which I command thee this day, that it may be well with thee?

14 Behold heaven is the Lord's thy God, and the heaven of heaven, the earth, and all things that are therein:

15 And yet the Lord hath been closely joined to thy fathers, and loved them, and chose their seed after them, that is to say, you, out of all nations, as this day it is proved.

b Num. xxxiii. 31.—c Num. xx. 28. and 29.

they journeyed, and pitched in Ebronah: from thence they journeyed, and pitched in Ezion-gaber: from thence they journeyed, and pitched in the wilderness of Zin, which is Kadesh: from thence they journeyed, and pitched in Mount Hor. And there Aaron died," &c. Kennicott. 2 Dis.—Thus Mosera will be the 27th, and Mount Hor the 34th station; (Pococke) whence the Israelites departed, after the death of Aaron, to Salmora, directing their course to the countries east of the Jordan, which had been promised to them. The appointment of Eleazar to succeed Aaron, and the separation of the Levites unto the Lord, should be all placed together, after the different encampments. H.

VER. 8. Time, during the pontificate of Aaron. Num. iii. 6. M.—God had made this appointment at Sinai, (Ex. xxviii. 1,) where he ordered the tabernacle and the priests to be consecrated. Upon the sedition of Core, which probably took place at Jetebata, he confirmed the rights of the Levitical tribe. Num. xvi. 17. and 18. C.—Ark. The priests carried it, on more solemn occasions, (Jos. iii. 3,) as they also blessed the people. M.—Yet the Levites sung the praises of God, in which sense the word blessing is often used, 1 Par. xxiii. 13. Hence Castalio translates, "to celebrate his name."

VER. 10. Stood. Moses does not follow the order of events, but recalls to the minds of his audience what might serve to make the deepest impression upon them. He mentions some farther instructions which he had received from God on Mount Sinai, during the second term of 40 days. C.—It might have been placed in a more natural order at the head of this chapter. M.—Some believe that Moses speaks of the third fast of 40 days. Salien.

VER. 12. And now. He shews what advantages may be derived from a constant observance of the commandments, that it may be well with thee, v. 13. God stands not in need of our services, (v. 14,) but chooses whom he pleases to display the treasures of his love, (v. 15,) which ought to move us strongly to make him a suitable return of gratitude, (C.) by withdrawing our affections from every thing that may be displeasing to him, v. 16. If we refuse, we must expect to fall under the rod of his indignation, notwithstanding all the efforts of his clemency, which he holds forth for our imitation, v. 17. 19. He will judge all alike, the rich and the poor. H.

VER. 14. Of heaven. The Scripture mentions the third heaven, (2 Cor. xii. 2,) where the majesty of God most gloriously appears. The second is the region of the stars, and the first the atmosphere, where the birds and the clouds move about. C.

VER. 15. Joined, (conglutinated) as it were, with glue, (H.) to shew the vehemence of love. M.

16 Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart, and stiffen your neck no more:

17 Because the Lord your God he is the God of gods, and the Lord of lords, a great God, and mighty and terrible, *who accepteth no person, nor taketh bribes.

18 He doth judgment to the fatherless and the widow, loveth the stranger, and giveth him food and raiment.

19 And do you therefore love strangers, because you also were strangers in the land of Egypt.

20 ^bThou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him only: to him thou shalt adhere, and shalt swear by his name.

21 He is thy praise, and thy God, that hath done for thee these great and terrible things, which thy eyes have seen.

22 In seventy souls thy fathers went down into Egypt: and behold now the Lord thy God hath multiplied thee as the stars of heaven.

CHAP. XI.

The love and service of God are still inculcated, with a blessing to them that serve him, and threats of punishment if they forsake his law.

THEREFORE *love the Lord thy God, and observe his precepts and ceremonies, his judgments and commandments, at all times.

2 Know this day the things that your children know not, who saw not the chastisements of the Lord your God, his great doings and strong hand, and stretched-out arm,

3 The signs and works which he did in the midst of Egypt to king Pharaoh, and to all his land,

4 And to all the host of the Egyptians, and to their horses and chariots: how the waters of the Red Sea covered them, when they pursued you, and how the Lord destroyed them until this present day:

5 And what he hath done to you in the wilderness, till you came to this place:

VER. 16. Circumcise. The Hebrews esteem circumcision as a mark of their greatest glory. All who had it not, were looked upon as profane. They call the ears, mind, and heart uncircumcised, when they would not hear, understand, or obey the law of God. S. Paul (Rom. ii. 28,) frequently inculcates this interior circumcision, to which Moses alludes in these his last exhortations. C. xxx. 6. The people had not regularly practised circumcision in the desert. Moses takes care to raise their thoughts to something more spiritual; and declares, in clearer terms than he had hitherto done, the necessity of loving God. All must be banished from the heart which might resist this love. C.—Vanity, blindness, luxury, must be retrenched. M.

VER. 17. Gods. Idols are nothing, 1 Cor. viii. 4. Hence Theodoret supposes, that all who have authority upon earth are here designated. But admitting the false notions of the pagans respecting their gods, the superiority of the true God is here asserted: (C.) and all, both in heaven and on earth, gods and lords, must bow before him. H.

VER. 18. Widow. God resents the injuries done to such. Ex. xxii. 22.

VER. 20. Only, a word not found in the Hebrew, but deemed necessary by the Sept. to express the true meaning of this passage. See C. vi. 13. C.—Name, when an oath is necessary. Thou shalt never swear by false gods. W.

VER. 21. Praise, the object whom thou must praise, and the source of all thy happiness and glory. Other nations will revere the Jews on this account. C.—An ancient oracle could not refuse giving them this singular commendation, though to the prejudice of idolatry. "Chaldees alone philosophy may claim—but Hebrews worship God, the self-born king—with pure religion." H.—agnos, (C.) S. Cyr. c. Julian 5. and S. Just. Exhort. read auton, him. But the meaning is clear from the context. The palm of wisdom is given to the Chaldees for natural learning, and to the Jews for divinity. Walton, Proleg. xii. Porphyrius owns the oracle. Theodoret. H.

VER. 22. Seventy. Some copies of the Sept. add "five," with S. Stephen. See Gen. xvi. 26. C.

CHAP. XI. VER. 2. Know, &c. Reflect on the wonders of God, which you must explain to your children, who were not born, or able to discern them, when they were effected at the Red Sea, and in the punishment of the seditious, v. 7. Heb. "know ye this day, for I do not address myself to your children, who know not (or have not understanding) and saw not," &c. C.

VER. 4. Day So that none of the Egyptians have since been able to molest you.

was the son of Ruben: *whom the earth, opening her mouth, swallowed up, with their households and tents, and all their substance, which they had in the midst of Israel.

7 Your eyes have seen all the great works of the Lord that he hath done,

8 That you may keep all his commandments, which I command you this day, and may go in, and possess the land, to which you are entering,

9 And may live in it a long time: which the Lord promised by oath to your fathers, and to their seed, a land which floweth with milk and honey.

10 For the land, which thou goest to possess, is not like the land of Egypt, from whence thou camest out, where when the seed is sown, waters are brought in to water it after the manner of gardens:

11 But it is a land of hills and plains, expecting rain from heaven.

12 And the Lord thy God doth always visit it, and his eyes are on it from the beginning of the year unto the end thereof.

13 'If then you obey my commandments, which I command you this day, that you love the Lord your God, and serve him with all your heart, and with all your soul:

14 He will give to your land the early rain and the latter rain, that you may gather in your corn, and your wine, and your oil,

15 And your hay out of the fields to feed your cattle, and that you may eat and be filled.

16 Beware lest perhaps your heart be deceived, and you depart from the Lord, and serve strange gods, and adore them;

17 And the Lord being angry shut up heaven, that the rain come not down, nor the earth yield her fruit, and you perish quickly from the excellent land, which the Lord will give you.

VER. 8. That. Fear might stimulate them to observe God's commands, lest they should be overtaken by a similar chastisement. H.

VER. 10. Gardens. Heb. "where thou didst sow the seed, and water it with the foot, as a garden," by means of various machines or wheels, which were turned by the feet. Philo.—Solinus (ii. 22. 36,) takes notice of this inconvenience in Egypt. The country is watered only by the Nile, which overflows for six weeks, about the beginning of June. Various canals or reservoirs are formed to preserve a sufficient supply of water during the remainder of the year. Pliny (xviii.) observes, that "if the Nile rise less than 12, or more than 16 cubits high, famine is inevitable." C. See Gen. xlii. 8.—Prince Radzivil saw the canals of Egypt, which the people said had been dug by the Hebrews. Augustus ordered his soldiers to clean them out. Sueton. c. 18.—After the seed was committed to the earth, it was necessary to water it frequently, as the sun would harden the soil too much. No rain falls in that part of Egypt where the Hebrews had dwelt, according to many respectable authors; (T.) or at least what little may fall is not sufficient to keep the earth moist. Proclus allows that some showers are felt in Lower Egypt, which lies nearest to the Mediterranean Sea; and travellers often take notice of them, in their journeys from Alexandria to Memphis. Yet the country in general is destitute of this advantage. Zac. xiv. 18. Lloyd. H.

VER. 14. Rain, which falls in Judea, chiefly about the vernal and the autumnal equinoxes, in March and October.—The latter rain, (Heb. mal'kosh;) is that which falls when the seed is just sown, though the Rabbins pretend that yore has this signification, in opposition to the Sept. It fell at the beginning of the Jewish year, which commenced in September. Joel ii. 23. Zac. x. 1. C.—Rain contributed to make the seeds take root, and to bring the fruit to maturity, and God promises to give what may be requisite, provided his people serve him with fidelity. H.—His grace helps us to begin and to perfect every good work. W.

VER. 15. Hay. Seed grass was sown, like corn, in Palestine, as it is still in the Levant, where meadows are unknown. The hay consisted chiefly of trefail, and was carried on beasts in long journeys. Gen. xliii. 27. Judg. xix. 19. Cattle fed commonly on straw and barley. The hay grass which grew on mountains was of a different sort, and used for pasturage, (Job xl. 15,) though it might also be cut. Prov. xxvii. 25. C.

VER. 17. You. In all this discourse, Moses attributes the fertility of the promised land to the blessing of God, and indeed it seems to be naturally far from being so luxuriant as to be able to feed so many inhabitants. Travellers inform us, that 18 ^a Lay up these my words in your hearts and minds, and hang them for a sign on your hands, and place them between your eyes.

19 Teach your children that they meditate on them, when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest on the way, and when thou liest down and risest up.

20 Thou shalt write them upon the posts and the doors of thy house:

21 That thy days may be multiplied, and the days of thy children in the land, which the Lord swore to thy fathers, that he would give them as long as the heaven hangeth over the earth.

22 For if you keep the commandments which I command you, and do them, to love the Lord your God, and walk in all his ways, cleaving unto him, 23 The Lord will destroy all these nations before your face, and you shall possess them, which are greater and stronger than you.

24 ^b Every place, that your foot shall tread upon, shall be yours. From the desert, and from Libanus, from the great river Euphrates unto the western sea shall be your borders.

25 None shall stand against you: the Lord your God shall lay the dread and fear of you upon all the land, that you shall tread upon, as he hath spoken to you.

26 Behold I set forth in your sight this day a blessing and a curse:

27 A blessing, if you obey the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you this day:

28 A curse, if you obey not the commandments of the Lord your God, but revolt from the way, which now I shew you, and walk after strange gods, which you know not.

29 And when the Lord thy God shall have brought thee into the land, whither thou goest to dwell, thou shalt put the blessing upon Mount Garizim, the curse upon Mount Hebal:

a great part is incapable of cultivation. But it is no longer the object of God's complacency, v. 12. It is under the curse. C. xxviii. 23. C.

VER. 18. Place. Heb. "that they may be as frontlets between your eyes." C. vi. 9. Ex. xiii. 9. H.

VER. 20. Posts. Upon one post the Jews hang boards, enclosing a piece of parchment, with the 13th to the 21st verse of this chapter; and from v. 4. to the 9th of the 6th chapter, they hang with great solemnity upon the other post.

VER. 21. Earth, as long as the world shall endure. The psalmist (lxxxviii. 30.) expresses the duration of the reign of the Messias nearly in the same terms. See Bar. i. 2. C.—If the Jews had continued faithful to God, and had submitted to the Messias, they might never have been banished from their country. H.

VER. 24. Yours. The nations of Chanaan, how strong soever, should fall, and their country be lawfully possessed by the Hebrews.—Western sea. Heb. "the sea of the back." The Jews speak of the different parts of the world, with respect to a man who has his face turned towards the east. Gen. xiii. 9. The countries, from the desert of Zin to the Euphrates, were never entirely occupied by the Israelites, except under the reigns of David and of Solomon. C.—God never intended to subject the whole world to their dominion, as the Rabbins would hence infer. M.

VER. 26. Curse. Their respective effects you shall experience, according to your behaviour. C.—God helps our free will to do good. S. Aug. q. 15. W.

VER. 29. Put the blessing, &c. See Deut. xxvii. 12, &c. and Josue viii. 33, &c. Ch.—Six tribes were to be stationed on each of these mountains. C. xxviii.—Garizim. Eusebius says the Samaritans are grossly deceived, in placing this mountain in the vicinity of Sichem, instead of Jericho. But this is a mistake; for Jotham addressed the inhabitants of Sichem from that mountain. Judg. ix. 7. Morizon informs us that it is of the same shape as Hebal, and separated from it only by a valley of about 200 paces, in which the town of Sichem stands. Hebal is a barren rock, while Garizim is very fertile, (Ludolf,) though an ancient poet makes both equally covered with verdure. Ap. Euseb. præp. ix. 22. C.

VER. 30. Near. Heb. "over-against Galgal, beside the plains of More, or Aluni More." Samar. reads, "the plain of More, near Sichem," as Ex. xx. 17. H.—This is styled the noble vale. Gen. xii. 6. C.—The road from Jericho to the Mediterranean Sea, left these mountains on the north. The Chanaanite inhabited all that region, from Galgal to Sichem. How far these places were distant from 30 Which are beyond the Jordan, behind the way that goeth to the setting of the sun, in the land of the Chanaanite, who dwelleth in the plain country over-against Galgal, which is near the valley that reacheth and entereth far.

31 For you shall pass over the Jordan, to possess the land, which the Lord your God will give you, that you may have it, and possess it.

32 See therefore that you fulfil the ceremonies and judgments, which I shall set this day before you.

CHAP. XII.

All idolatry must be extirpated: sacrifices, tithes, and first-fruits, must be offered in one only place: all eating of blood is prohibited.

THESE^a are the precepts and judgments, that you must do in the land, which the Lord the God of thy fathers will give thee, to possess it all the days that thou shalt walk upon the earth.

2 Destroy all the places, in which the nations that you shall possess, worshipped their gods, upon high mountains, and hills, and under every shady tree.

3 ^d Overthrow their altars, and break down their statues, burn their groves with fire, and break their idols in pieces: destroy their names out of those places.

4 You shall not do so to the Lord your God:

5 But you shall come to the place, which the Lord your God shall choose out of all your tribes, to put his name there, and to dwell in it:

6 And you shall offer in that place your holocausts and victims, the tithes and first-fruits of your hands, and your vows and gifts, the first-born of your herds and your sheep.

7 And you shall eat there in the sight of the Lord your God: and you shall rejoice in all things, whereunto you shall put your hand, you and your houses, wherein the Lord your God hath blessed you.

8 You shall not do there the things we do here this day, every man that which seemeth good to himself.

each other, is not here specified; though Eusebius seems to have inferred from this text, that Garizim was near Jericho. But the plain might be very extensive, or noble, and reach from Sichem as far as Galgal.

VER. 32. Fulfil. How inconsistent must such exhortations be, if, as Protestants assert, the commandments be impossible, and "the law exacteth impossible things." Luther in Gal. iii. H.

CHAP. XII. VER. 1. These. Having inculcated the general precepts, and the obligation of loving God above all things, Moses now descends to particular duties. C.

VER. 2. Tree. See Gen. xxi. 33. All the monuments of idolatry must be destroyed. The very names of the idols must be abhorred and obliterated. (Ex. xiii. 13.) to shew that they have lost possession of the country. So (v. 5.) to put his name there, means to take possession of a place.

VER. 3. Statues. The most ancient idols were not finely carved, but only rough stones. The Phrygian goddess, sent to Rome by Attalus, was a small dark-coloured stone of this nature. Arnob. c. Gentes. 8.—The Venus of the Arabs was but a stone in the form of a pyramid. C.

VER. 5. It, where the ark was to be kept. H.—Before the building of the temple, it was removed from one tribe or place to another. Jerusalem was thenceforward styled the city of the great king. Ps. xlvii. i. 9.

VER. 6. Hands, which you have procured by your industry, (M.) or what you are able to present to the Lord. Lev. v. 11.

VER. 7. You. In gratitude, you shall therefore offer your victims. H.—The Jews were accustomed to make a feast thrice a year in the holy city. They might also eat some parts of the peace-offerings. M.

VER. 8. Himself. Some confine this to the sacrifices, which each person might offer, where he thought proper, till the ark was fixed at Silo. But many other parts of the ceremonial law, seem not to have been in force till the Hebrews crossed the Jordan. Amos v. 25. Circumcision was omitted, as well as most of the festivals. Several laws were, however designed for the people during their sojournment, such as those which regard the order of judgment, the cleanness of the camp, the purification of women, and of those who had touched a dead body &c. Ex. xviii. 25. Num. v. 2. Lev. xv. 31. It was not left to their option to observe or to neglect the sabbath. (Num. xv. 32.) the leaves of proposition, or the perpetual fire, &c. Num. iv. 7. 13. C.

9 For until this present time you are not come to rest, and to the possession, which the Lord your God will give you.

10 You shall pass over the Jordan, and shall dwell in the land, which the Lord your God will give you, that you may have rest from all enemies round about: and may dwell without any fear, 11 In the place, which the Lord your God shall choose, that his name may be therein. Thither shall you bring all the things that I command you, holocausts, and victims, and tithes, and the first-fruits of your hands: and whatsoever is the choicest in the gifts, which you shall vow to the Lord.

12 There shall you feast before the Lord your God, you, and your sons, and your daughters, your men-servants, and maid-servants, and the Levite that dwelleth in your cities. For he hath no other part and possession among you.

13 Beware lest thou offer thy holocausts in every place that thou shalt see:

14 But in the place, which the Lord shall choose, in one of thy tribes, shalt thou offer sacrifices, and shalt do all that I command thee.

15 But if thou desirest to eat, and the eating of flesh delight thee, kill, and eat according to the blessing of the Lord thy God, which he hath given thee, in thy cities: whether it be unclean, that is to say, having blemish or defect: or clean, that is to say, sound and without blemish, such as may be offered, as the roe, and the hart, shalt thou eat it;

16 Only the blood thou shalt not eat, but thou shalt pour it out upon the earth as water.

17 Thou mayst not eat in thy towns the tithes of thy corn, and thy wine, and thy oil, the first-born of thy herds and thy cattle, nor any thing that thou vowest, and that thou wilt offer voluntarily, and the first-fruits of thy hands:

18 But thou shalt eat them before the Lord thy God in the place, which the Lord thy God shall choose, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and maid-servant, and the Levite that dwelleth in thy

"Yet thou mayst kill and eat the flesh which thy soul desireth in all thy gates, with which the Lord thy God hath blessed thee, the unclean and the clean may eat thereof, as of the roe buck," &c. H.—The Vulgate translates v. 22 in this sense, intimating that these meats did not contract any such peculiar sanctity, as to exclude those who were unclean, v. 20. Lev. xvii. 3. Fagius pretends, that only the clean were allowed as yet to eat of such meats, though the unclean might eat in the promised land what was lawful, without bringing the beast to be slain before the tabernacle. But this opinion seems to have no solid foundation. Unclean beasts could never be eaten. C.—But those which had any defect, were excluded from being sacrificed. Lev. xxi. 22. M.

19 Take heed thou forsake not the Levite all the time that thou livest in the land.

20 *When the Lord thy God shall have enlarged thy borders, as he hath spoken to thee, and thou wilt eat the flesh that thy soul desireth:

21 And if the place which the Lord thy God shall choose, that his name should be there, be far off, thou shalt kill of thy herds, and of thy flocks, as I have commanded thee, and shalt eat in thy towns, as it pleaseth thee.

22 Even as the roe and the hart is eaten, so shalt thou eat them: both the clean and unclean shall eat of them alike.

23 Only beware of this, that thou eat not the blood, for the blood is for the soul: and therefore thou must not eat the soul with the flesh:

24 But thou shalt pour it upon the earth as water,

25 That it may be well with thee and thy children after thee, when thou shalt do that which is pleasing in the sight of the Lord.

26 But the things which thou hast sanctified, and vowed to the Lord, thou shalt take, and shalt come to the place which the Lord shall choose:

27 And shalt offer thy oblations, the flesh and the blood upon the altar of the Lord thy God: the blood of thy victims thou shalt pour on the altar: and the flesh thou thyself shalt eat.

28 Observe and hear all the things that I command thee, that it may be well with thee and thy children after thee for ever, when thou shalt do what is good and pleasing in the sight of the Lord thy God.

29 ^bWhen the Lord thy God shall have destroyed before thy face the nations, which thou shalt go in to possess, and when thou shalt possess them, and dwell in their land, 30 Beware lest thou imitate them, after they are destroyed at thy coming in, and lest thou seek after their ceremonies, saying: As these nations have worshipped their gods, so will I also worship.

VER. 18. Hand, in all thy undertakings and labours, (H.) and in all thy goods. M.

VER. 21. Far off. Hence many conclude, that those who lived near the tabernacle, were bound to bring the animals which they designed for their own use, to be slain there, as they did in the desert. Others suppose that all were under the same predicament, and are hereby authorized to follow the same regulations, and to eat the flesh, whether they be clean or otherwise, provided they abstain from the blood. See Lev. xvii. 3. C.—The custom of bringing the beasts to be slain before the door of the tabernacle, was to be no longer obligatory. M.

VER. 22. Alike. This must be understood of those who had contracted only a smaller stain, which did not communicate the uncleanness to others, but debarred people from approaching to sacred things. C.—Those who had touched the dead, &c. were not allowed to eat with people, who were not under any such legal uncleanness. M.

VER. 23. Soul. See Gen. ix. 4. Blood maintains the life of animals, and it would seem cruel to begin to eat them before they were perfectly dead. But the obligation of this positive law has long ago ceased, as it was intended chiefly for the Jews.

VER. 27. Oblations. Heb. "holocausts . . . and the blood of the sacrifices" of peace. Parts of the latter were eaten by the offerer, but the former victims were entirely burnt. H.

VER. 30. Imitate. Heb. "be ensnared by imitating them." The example of the wicked, is one of the most dangerous snares which the devil can place in our way. Notwithstanding these repeated admonitions of God, we see how prone the Hebrews were to adopt the superstitious customs of these nations, whose destruction ought surely to have warned them to keep at a distance. H.

VER. 31. Fire. See Lev. xviii. 21.

God. For they have done to their gods, all the abominations which the Lord abhorreth, offering their sons and daughters, and burning them with fire.

32 What I command thee, that only do thou to the Lord: neither add any thing, nor diminish.

CHAP. XIII.

False prophets must be slain, and idolatrous cities destroyed.

IF there rise in the midst of thee a prophet, or one that sayeth he hath dreamed a dream, and he foretells a sign and a wonder,

2 And that come to pass which he spoke, and he say to thee: Let us go, and follow strange gods, which thou knowest not, and let us serve them:

3 Thou shalt not hear the words of that prophet or dreamer: for the Lord your God trieth you, that it may appear whether you love him with all your heart, and with all your soul, or not.

4 Follow the Lord your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and hear his voice: him you shall serve, and to him you shall cleave.

5 And that prophet or forger of dreams shall be slain: because he spoke to draw you away from the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you from the house of bondage: to make thee go out of the way, which the Lord thy God commanded thee: and thou shalt take away the evil out of the midst of thee.

6 If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or daughter, or thy wife that is in thy bosom, or thy friend, whom thou lovest as thy own soul, would persuade thee secretly, saying: Let us go and serve strange gods, which thou knowest not, nor thy fathers,

7 Of all the nations round about, that are near or afar off, from one end of the earth to the other,

8 Consent not to him, hear him not, neither let thy eye spare him to pity and conceal him,

9 But thou shalt presently put him to death. ^b Let thy hand be first upon him, and afterwards the hands of all the people.

10 With stones shall he be stoned to death: because he would have withdrawn thee from the Lord thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage:

11 That all Israel hearing may fear, and may do no more any thing like this.

12 If in one of thy cities, which the Lord thy God shall give thee to dwell in, thou hear some say:

13 Children of Belial are gone out of the midst of thee, and have withdrawn the inhabitants of their city, and have said: Let us go, and serve strange gods which you know not:

14 Enquire carefully and diligently, the truth of the thing, by looking well into it, and if thou find that which is said to be certain, and that this abomination has been really committed,

^a A. M. 2553.

VER. 32. That only do thou, &c. They are forbid here to follow the ceremonies of the heathens, or to make any alterations in the divine ordinances. Ch.—To adopt fresh regulations, in the same spirit, was not forbidden. Thus David ordered those who had kept the baggage, to share equally with the soldiers who had gone to battle; (1 K. xxx.) and our Saviour approved, by his presence, the feast of the dedication of the temple, instituted long after Moses. 1 Mac. iv. Jo. x. W.—He perfected the law by the precepts of the gospel. Mat. v. 17. Josephus (c. Ap. ii.) says, "During so many years, no one has dared to stretch any thing from, (the sacred books) or to make any addition to them. We look upon them as of divine authority, . . . and we would lay down our lives, if necessary, to defend them. (C.) Among us, who believe that the law was first given by the will of God, nothing is pious but the exact observance of it. For who can introduce any change, or invent any thing better?" C. iv. 2. Christ is full of grace and truth. Jo. 1. He has fulfilled the law and the prophets. H. S. Aug. a. Faust. xvii. 2. and xix. 9.—"Grace, says he, pertains to the fullness of charity, truth to the completion of the prophecies." D.

CHAP. XIII. VER. 1. If . . . a prophet, or even an angel from heaven, as S. Paul (Gal. i. 8.) says on a similar occasion, (C.) should work a miracle, and afterwards adduce it in proof of a false religion, believe him not. The Jews and Christians had already received such convincing proofs from God, of the truth of what they had been taught, that they had reason to conclude either that the miracle was false, or that the person who would persuade them to embrace a different religion had fallen, after God had honoured him with miraculous powers: or, in fine, that if he were an impostor at the time when he exercised that power, like the magicians of Egypt, or Balaam, the miracle was either not wrought in confirmation of what he preached, or at least it was eclipsed by some greater miracle in favour of the truth. Whether God will ever suffer a real miracle which may seem to countenance error, or not, this appears to be unquestionable, that he will never deny himself, or, in a contest of miracles, permit falsehood to gain the victory. If the magicians performed wonderful works, they were forced at last to confess their inferiority, and yield to Moses. Ex. viii. 18. 19. Miracles are generally a proof of the truth of any doctrine; but when the doctrine is already established, as in this case of the unity of God, (v. 2.) it may be adduced with propriety as a criterion of miracles. Truth can never be in contradiction to truth. The light of reason suffices to evince that there is but one God. The same truth had been repeatedly confirmed by miracles, particularly during the last forty years, during which God had manifested his power over all nature, in the sight of all the Hebrews, and had trampled on the idols of the Gentiles. If therefore any person should attempt, by his dreams or predictions, to invalidate this most fundamental and undeniable article, his testimony could not be received. H.—The Jews, in vain, allege this passage against the religion of Jesus Christ. He did not subvert, but fulfilled the law; so far was he from endeavouring to persuade them to abandon the true God. C.—If he had not come to act in this manner, the law would have contained in itself the seeds of dissolution, by falsely holding forth the expectation of a future Messiah, who would bring all things to perfection. C. xviii. 15. Gen. iii. 15. and xlix. 10, &c. Hence when he really appeared, the Jews desired him to prove his mission by a miracle, as he did repeatedly. Mat. xii. 38. Jo. viii. 40. and x. 26.—A dream, of a mysterious kind, like those of Joseph and of the prophets. H.

VER. 2. To pass. The completion of a prophecy does not always prove, that the person who uttered it was a true prophet. Chance, a knowledge of natural causes, &c. may enable an impostor sometimes to hit upon the truth. God may also, for reasons known to himself, declare what will come to pass by the mouth of a false prophet, or of a wicked man, as he did by Balaam and Caiaphas. Judas wrought miracles before his apostacy. C.—Yet if any who had been so highly favoured, should attempt to enforce by their preceding miracles, any false doctrine, let him be anathema. Gal. i. 8.—Not. The Hebrews had incontrovertible proofs of the existence of one God. They could not therefore acknowledge any other. H.—Novelty in religion is a mark of idolatry or of heresy. W.

VER. 3. Trieth you, not in order to induce you to embrace evil, (Jam. i. 18,) nor to discover your real dispositions, but to lay open your hearts to yourselves and to the world, (H.) that, if you continue steadfast, others may be encouraged to imitate you; but if you fall, they may take warning, and stand with all humility and circumspection. C.—Appear. Heb. "to know, or to disclose." M.

VER. 5. Forger. Heb. "dreamer," to whom God reveals his secrets in the night, as he does to the prophet while he is awake.—Slain. Philo says, without any trial or delay; but the Rabbins allow that, although the impostor was not to receive an admonition, no ignorance being able to excuse him, as in other cases, he was to be brought before the Sanhedrim, at Jerusalem, and strangled. See Luc. xiii. 33. The Jews, it is thought, condemned our Saviour on the plea that he was a false prophet. Mat. xxvi. 57. They commonly required before this condemnation, that a person should have assumed the character of a prophet, and not barely that he should have performed some wonderful work by his ingenuity. For if he only did the latter, and thereby endeavoured to withdraw the people from the service of the true God, he was punished as a seducer. They also refused to condemn one who had foretold evils, if they did not take place, because God, being merciful, might have pardoned those who did penance, (C.) as was the case with Jonas and the Ninivites. H.—But those who taught or did any thing contrary to the law, in quality of prophets, were in danger of condemnation, unless their great reputation might screen them from suspicion. Thus Elias offered sacrifice on Mount Carmel, without giving offence, 3 K. xviii. 23. If a true prophet bore witness to another, the latter might also claim respect. C.—Yet though S. John the Baptist, had repeatedly commended Jesus Christ, the Jews did not hesitate to call him a seducer, and to put him to death. H.—The evil one. Syr. 1 Cor. v. 13.

VER. 6. If thy own brother, to distinguish him from the rest of the Jews, who were all styled brethren, as being descended from the same stock of the Patriarchs. M.

VER. 9. Presently put him to death. Not by killing him by private authority, but by informing the magistrate, and proceeding by order of justice. Ch. W.—Philo seems to assert the contrary. But he perhaps speaks of those who publicly endeavoured to lead the people astray. Presently is not in Heb. Other criminals were allowed twenty-four hours after condemnation. No delay was granted to false prophets. No excuse was admitted. If he had even been once acquitted, he might be examined again.—Thy hand. The accuser or witness first threw a stone; after the wretch had been conducted out of the city. C. xvii. 4. Acta vii. 58.

VER. 12. Cities. If the inhabitants agreed, in general, to introduce the worship of idols, they were to be first admonished, (C.) and if incorrigible, to be utterly destroyed. H.—The obligation of seeing that this was executed, was left to the magistrates. D.

VER. 13. Belial: that is, without yoke. Hence the wicked, who refuse to be 15 Thou shalt forthwith kill the inhabitants of that city with the edge of thy sword, and shalt destroy it, and all things that are in it, even the cattle:

16 And all the household goods that are there, thou shalt gather together in the midst of the streets thereof, and shalt burn them with the city itself, so as to consume all for the Lord thy God, and that it be a heap for ever: it shall be built no more.

17 And there shall nothing of that anathema stick to thy hand: that the Lord may turn from the wrath of his fury, and may have mercy on thee, and multiply thee as he swore to thy fathers, 18 When thou shalt hear the voice of the Lord thy God, keeping all his precepts, which I command thee this day, that thou mayst do what is pleasing in the sight of the Lord thy God.

CHAP. XIV.

In mourning for the dead, they are not to follow the ways of the Gentiles: the distinction of clean and unclean meats. ordinances concerning tithes, and first-fruits.

BE ye children of the Lord your God: you shall not cut yourselves, nor make any baldness for the dead;

2 ^b Because thou art a holy people to the Lord thy God: and he chose thee to be his peculiar people of all nations that are upon the earth.

3 ^c Eat not the things that are unclean.

4 These are the beasts that you shall eat, the ox, and the sheep, and the goat,

5 The hart, and the roe, the buffle, the chamois, the pygarg, the wild goat, the camelopardalus.

6 Every beast that divideth the hoof in two parts, and cheweth the cud, you shall eat.

* A. M. 2558.—^b Supra vii. 6. Infra xxvi. 18.—^c Levit. xi. 4.

subject to the divine law, are called in Scripture the sons of Belial. Ch.—The devil is called Belial, or “an apostate, rebel,” &c. The word is also applied to Antichrist, to idols, and to those who are notoriously wicked. S. Jer. in Nahum i. and Isai. xxvii. 3 K. xxi. 18.

VER. 15. Even the cattle. Nothing at all must be spared. Yet the Rabbins, and some who argue that penal laws must be restrained as much as possible, exempt the women, and boys under thirteen years of age, and understand this law only of the central cities, v. 18. If the city was seduced by one man, or by women, or by people of a different tribe, the culprit was only to be stoned, and the Sanhedrim had to take cognizance of the whole affair. If many cities joined in the idolatry, or if any of them were cities of refuge, &c. they were not included. Seld. Syned. iii. 5. Grotius.—But these limitations seem visibly to contradict the law. The goods of the innocent were involved in the common ruin, that they might learn to make all possible resistance to the introduction of so abominable a crime; and those of the guilty were destroyed wherever they were found. C.—But the persons of those who fled away, to shew their disapprobation, and denounce the attempt of their brethren, (H.) would no doubt be saved. C.—If they continued among them, their indolence or connivance deserved punishment. H.—Grotius (Jur. ii. 15.) maintains, that the magistrate is authorized by the law of nature to punish those who deny the existence of God or his Providence, as these errors strike at the root of all society.—For the Lord, as a victim of expiation, and to manifest your zeal for the honour of the only true God.—No more. Sept. “it shall be uninhabited.” The Rabbins are so exact, as to entertain a doubt whether the place might even be used as a garden. C.

VER. 17. Hand. Thou shalt reserve nothing for thyself, (M.) as Achan did. Jos. vii. H.

CHAP. XIV. VER. 1. Be ye. Heb. “you are,” &c. It may be connected with the preceding chapter.—Cut, as the barbarians and infidels do, who have no hope, 1 Thea. iv. 12. Lev. xix. 28.—Dead idols, Adonis, &c. The Arabs and Sarcas cut the hair on the forehead of the head only, and so did the ancient Scotch monks, in imitation, as they pretended, of S. John. The Egyptians cut off the hair of their head and eye-brows, when they were initiated in the mysteries of Isis, (S. Amb. ep. 58.) to testify that they partook in her sorrow for the death of her husband, Osiris. Hence, it is probable, that Moses forbids any conformity in such superstitious practices; particularly as the Israelites were consecrated to the service of the living God. C.

VER. 3. Unclean. See the annotations on Leviticus xi. Ch.—Some of the beasts here specified were not mentioned before, as the buffle, &c.

VER. 5. Buffle. Heb. yachmur, which some translate “the fallow-deer.” The Arabs give this name to a beast resembling a hart, which has horns and red hair. C.—It was served up on the table of Solomon, 3 K. iv. 23. Pliny (viii. 13.) mentions the bubalus of Africa, which is like a calf. M.—Chamois, (tragela-

7 But of them that chew the cud, but divide not the hoof, you shall not eat, such as the camel, the hare, and the cheroiril: because they chew the cud, but divide not the hoof, they shall be unclean to you.

8 The swine also, because it divideth the hoof, but cheweth not the cud, shall be unclean; their flesh you shall not eat, and their carcasses you shall not touch.

9 These shall you eat of all that abide in the waters: All that have fins and scales, you shall eat.

10 Such as are without fins and scales, you shall not eat, because they are unclean.

11 All birds that are clean you shall eat.

12 The unclean eat not: to wit, the eagle, and the grype, and the osprey,

13 The ringtail, and the vulture, and the kite according to their kind:

14 And all of the raven's kind:

15 And the ostrich, and the owl, and the larus, and the hawk according to its kind:

16 The heron, and the swan, and the stork,

17 And the cormorant, the porphyron, and the night-crow,

18 The bittern, and the charadrion, every one in their kind: the houp also and the bat.

19 Every thing that creepeth and hath little wings shall be unclean, and shall not be eaten.

20 All that is clean, you shall eat.

21 But whatsoever is dead of itself, eat not thereof. Give it to the stranger, that is within thy gates to eat, or sell it to him: because thou art the holy people of the Lord thy God. Thou shalt not boil a kid in the milk of its dam.

phum) a beast which has the head of a he-goat, and the carcass of a hart. Scaliger Plin. viii. 33.—Bochart translates akko after the Arab. “the wild goat.”—Pygarg, another species of the goat, (Plin. viii. 53.) of the colour of ashes. Bellon. q. 51. Dishon means “ashes” in Hebrew.—Goat, (orygem) “a wild goat, (Sept.) Bochart, &c.) or ox.” Aristotle allows it only one horn. Juvenal mentions that the Getulians feasted on its flesh; and the Egyptian priests, according to Horus, were allowed to eat it, without any scrupulous examination of the sealers. C.—Camelopardalus. This animal resembles a camel in its head and longish neck, and the panther in the spotted skin. Plin. viii. 18.—Bochart (iii. 21.) thinks that the Heb. zamer, means “a wild goat,” noted for “leaping.”

VER. 7. Cheroiril, or porcupine. Lev. xi. 5. S. Barnabas and Clem. Alex. (Pæd. ii. 10.) subjoin the hyena to the hare, though the name occur not in Moses. This animal was supposed to change sexes every year and was a symbol of incontinency. M.

VER. 10. Unclean. S. Barnabas adds, “Thou shalt not eat the murena, polypus, or cuttle fish;” and these are in effect of the description given by Moses. C.

VER. 13. Ringtail, (ixion.) Heb. raa. The same bird seems to be called dae, in Leviticus, by the change of the first letter, though it is there translated the kite. The ixion is a sort of white, quick-sighted vulture.—Kite. Heb. diae, according to Bochart, means the vulture, as Isaias (xxxiv. 15.) insinuates that this bird goes in flocks, while the kite is a solitary bird.

VER. 15. Ostrich. Heb. “the daughter of the jane.” The Rabbins say only the young ones were eaten. But this seems doubtful, with respect to many nations, which formerly served up ostriches at table. Heliogabalus presented some of these, as well as camels, to his guests, falsely asserting, (C.) that the Jews were commanded to eat them, preceptum Judæis ut ederent. Lamprid.

VER. 19. Wings. Heb. “every reptile that flyeth,” such as bees. C.

VER. 21. Of itself, or by suffocation.—Stranger, who has not embraced your religion. M.—Hence it is inferred, that the Jews might keep unclean animals, and sell them; as they did not defile till they were dead. Jans.—If they had been unclean by nature, they could not have been sold, which shews that this ceremonial law regarded only the Jewish religion.—Dam. All appearance of cruelty must be avoided. Christ, who is signified by the kid, on account of his assuming our sinful nature, shall not be slain in his infancy. S. Tho. i. 2. q. 102.

a. 6. W.—Some take this prohibition literally, and extend it to calves and lambs. The Arabs use milk in almost all their ragouts. Roger. ii. 2.—Others think that kids must not be eaten, while they are as yet too tender, Qui plus lactis habet quam sanguinis. Juv. Sat. xi.—But we believe that God forbids the paschal lamb or kid to be offered while it sucks. It must be of a competent age, of one year. Ex. xii. 5. and xxiii. 19. Other victims were not to be offered if they were only eight days old. Lev. xxii. 27. C.

22 Every year thou shalt set aside the tithes of all thy fruits that the earth bringeth forth, 23 And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place which he shall choose, that his name may be called upon therein, the tithe of thy corn, and thy wine, and thy oil, and the first-born of thy herds and thy sheep: that thou mayst learn to fear the Lord thy God at all times.

24 But when the way, and the place which the Lord thy God shall choose, are far off, and he hath blessed thee, and thou canst not carry all these things thither,

25 Thou shalt sell them all, and turn them into money, and shalt carry it in thy hand, and shalt go to the place which the Lord shall choose:

26 And thou shalt buy with the same money, whatsoever pleaseth thee, either of the herds, or of sheep, wine also and strong drink, and all that thy soul desireth: and thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, and shalt feast, thou and thy house:

27 And the Levite that is within thy gates: beware thou forsake him not, because he hath no other part in thy possession.

28 The third year thou shalt separate another tithe of all things that grow to thee at that time: and shalt lay it up within thy gates.

29 And the Levite that hath no other part nor possession with thee, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are within thy gates, shall come and shall eat and be filled: that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the works of thy hands that thou shalt do.

CHAP. XV.

The law of the seventh year of remission. The firstlings of cattle are to be sanctified to the Lord.

IN the seventh year thou shalt make a remission.

2 Which shall be celebrated in this order. He to whom any thing is owing from his friend, or neighbour,

* A. M. 2558, A. C. 1451.—^a Mat. v. 42. Luke vi. 34.—^b Exod. xxxiii. 10.

VER. 22. Tithes. The Jews carried with them some money to buy peace-offerings. E.

VER. 26. Herds. Heb. "oxen."—Sheep; under which name are comprised goats.

VER. 29. Filled. Of this feast the owner did not partake, (S. Aug. q. 20,) as he did of the former, v. 26. M.—Josephus (iv. 8.) acknowledges three sorts of tithes: but Calmet thinks that only two were paid every third year, and that the same tithe is mentioned, v. 22. and 28. Tobias i. 7. The only difference is, that on the third and sixth years, the products were consumed on the spot, and in other years they were spent at Jerusalem. See Lev. xxvii. Many, however, believe that three tithes were then exacted: 1. For the Levites. 2. For a feast at Jerusalem, and to defray the expenses on the road. 3. For the poor at home. D. & H.

CHAP. XV. VER. 1. In the. Heb. "at the extremity of seven years," which some erroneously refer to the end, though the original signifiy also the beginning. C.

VER. 2. Again. Heb. does not mention friend. H.—"He shall not exact it, (or urge) his neighbour or his brother, because," &c. Whence Cajetan gathers, that debts might be demanded after the expiration of the seventh year, on which the products of the earth did not enable the Jews to pay any thing. Grotius also asserts, that perpetual debts might be required; and Menoch, includes things lent under the same regulation. But all debts became extinct as soon as the seventh year commenced; (v. 9. C.) at least they could not be demanded till it was expired; though things merely lent, might be taken back. D.

VER. 3. Stranger, who has not received circumcision. Such were entitled only to the common privileges of people in distress. They could not claim a share in the feasts, made out of the tithes of the Jews, &c. Grotius.

VER. 4. There shall be no poor, &c. It is not to be understood as a promise, that there should be no poor in Israel, as appears from v. 11, where we learn that God's people would never be at a loss to find objects for their charity: but it is an ordinance that all should do their best endeavours to prevent any of their brethren from suffering the hardships of poverty and want. Ch.—Beggar, is not expressed, though it be implied in Heb. or the Sept. which connect this with the preceding verse, (H.) "because (or save when) there shall be no poor among you;" as if the rich could not derive the benefit from the remission of debts. Vatable.—God had made abundant provision for the poor. He might have prevented any from falling into distress. C.—But he suffered this sometimes to take place, to try the dispositions both of the rich and of the poor. H.—If they had faithfully complied with his laws, he would not have permitted them to fall into the last degree of misery. C.—He allows no public begging, which all well regulated or brother, cannot demand it again, because it is the year of remission of the Lord.

3 Of the foreigner or stranger thou mayst exact it: of thy countryman and neighbour thou shalt not have power to demand it again.

4 And there shall be no poor nor beggar among you: that the Lord thy God may bless thee in the land which he will give thee in possession.

5 Yet so if thou hear the voice of the Lord thy God, and keep all things that he hath ordained, and which I command thee this day, he will bless thee, as he hath promised.

6 Thou shalt lend to many nations, and thou shalt borrow of no man. Thou shalt have dominion over very many nations, and no one shall have dominion over thee.

7 If one of thy brethren, that dwelleth within the gates of thy city, in the land which the Lord thy God will give thee, come to poverty: thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor close thy hand,

8 But shalt open it to the poor man; * thou shalt lend him, that which thou perceivest he hath need of.

9 Beware lest perhaps a wicked thought steal in upon thee, and thou say in thy heart: "The seventh year of remission draweth nigh; and thou turn away thy eyes from thy poor brother, denying to lend him that which he asketh: lest he cry against thee to the Lord, and it become a sin unto thee.

10 But thou shalt give to him: neither shalt thou do any thing craftily in relieving his necessities: that the Lord thy God may bless thee at all times, and in all things to which thou shalt put thy hand.

11 "There will not be wanting poor in the land of thy habitation: therefore I command thee to open thy hand to thy needy and poor brother, that liveth in the land.

12 "When thy brother, a Hebrew man, or Hebrew woman, is sold to thee, and hath served thee six years, in the seventh year, thou shalt let him go free:

Lev. xxv. 2.—^a Mat. xxvi. 11.—^b Exod. xxi. 2. Jer. xxxiv. 14.

nations discountenance. M.—The Jews carefully relieve their brethren. They gather alms, and one of the judges distributes what may be sufficient for the ensuing week. Leo, p. i. c. 14.—Those who refused to give according to their abilities, were formerly ordered by the Sanhedrim to be scourged, till they had complied with their duty; and sometimes, things were taken forcibly from their houses. Maimon.—They relieve the distressed in proportion to their former condition. Seld. Jur. vi. 6.

VER. 6. Lend. The Jews give a wrong interpretation to this passage, to authorize usury with regard to strangers. But God can never sanction injustice. He promises such riches to his people, if they be faithful, that they shall be in a condition to lend to many, without wanting themselves. C.—Over thee. Hence the Jews submitted to a foreign yoke with so much reluctance. But they should have remembered to keep God's law. H.

VER. 8. Need of. The Rabbins understand this of giving freely without any prospect of receiving again, much less of any advantage by usury. They esteem themselves bound also, by the laws of humanity, to assist even idolaters, though they will not beg of such, in public. Some assert, that they never allow public beggars among themselves, and indeed such are seldom to be seen. Yet no law forbids it; and Juvenal (vi. 541.) upbraids them with begging slyly at Rome. Arcanum Judea tremens mendicant in aurem. C.—If people be in extreme want, the law requires that necessities should be given them; but if they be not so far reduced, but that they may be able to pay again in a little time, it may suffice to lend. H.

VER. 9. Eyes. Heb. "and thy eye be evil against," &c. This expression denotes one who is a prey to the base passions of avarice, jealousy, envy, &c. C. xxviii. 54. Mat. xx. 15. C.—A sin, or draw on punishment. M.—"If thou hast not fed, thou hast killed" thy neighbour in extreme want. S. Amb. Off. ii. 7. W.

VER. 10. Neither. Heb. "thy heart shall not be evil in giving: for to this end the Lord . . hath blessed thee." Imitate his clemency.—Hand, in all thy undertakings and possessions.

VER. 11. Needy. Heb. expresses the order to be observed in giving alms, "open thy hand wide (give with profusion) to thy brother, (or relations) to thy needy, (in extreme want) and to thy poor in the land," whoever they may be. C.—To exercise the charity of his people, God suffered some to be poor. W.

VER. 12. Free. The Hebrews might sell themselves only to their own countrymen; and the judges might condemn those who had committed a theft, and had not wherewith to make restitution, to be sold to their brethren. See Ex. xxi. 2.

13 And when thou sendest him out free, thou shalt not let him go away empty:

14 But shalt give him for his way out of thy flocks, and out of thy barn-floor, and thy wine-press, where-with the Lord thy God shall bless thee.

15 Remember that thou also wast a bond-servant in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God made thee free, and therefore I now command thee this.

16 But if he say: I will not depart: because he loveth thee, and thy house, and findeth that he is well with thee:

17 Thou shalt take an awl, and bore through his ear in the door of thy house, and he shall serve thee for ever: thou shalt do in like manner to thy woman-servant also.

18 Turn not away thy eyes from them, when thou makest them free: because he hath served thee six years according to the wages of a hireling: that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the works that thou dost.

19 Of the firstlings, that come of thy herds, and thy sheep, thou shalt sanctify to the Lord thy God whatsoever is of the male sex. Thou shalt not work with the firstling of a bullock, and thou shalt not shear the firstlings of thy sheep.

20 In the sight of the Lord thy God shalt thou eat them every year, in the place that the Lord shall choose, thou and thy house.

21 ^a But if it have a blemish, or be lame, or blind, or in any part disfigured or feeble, it shall not be sacrificed to the Lord thy God.

22 But thou shalt eat it within the gates of thy city: the clean and the unclean shall eat them alike as the roe, and as the hart.

^a Levit. xxii. 20. and 21. Eccli. xxxv. 14.

VER. 14. Way. Heb. lit. "Thou shalt put round his neck, (or furnish him abundantly) out of thy flock," &c. This is not specified in the Book of Exodus.

VER. 17. House, before a judge. It is supposed that this law regarded only those who had sold themselves, or had been condemned to be slaves. Fagius—For ever; that is, till the year of jubilee.—Also, not by piercing her ear, as some have thought, but by setting her at liberty, and giving her something, v. 14.

VER. 18. Hireling. His freedom is due to him, as much as wages are due to the hireling. He is also entitled to a decent provision, for which he has laboured. Heb. "he hath been worth twice as much to thee as a hired servant," by his greater diligence, labour, and fidelity. Servitude has also rendered his work doubly severe. C.

VER. 19. Firstlings. Some belonged to the priests. Others, of which Moses speaks here, might be disposed of by the owners. C. xii. 17. C.—Thus females, which came first, belonged to them, but they could not work with them; (M.) with such at least as were the best, and fattened for a religious feast. Sheep designed for this purpose were not to be shorn; or, as the original term means, their wool was not to be "torn away." Bellon observes, that this is still the custom in some parts of the East, as it was formerly in Italy, according to Varro. Plin. (viii. 48.) also remarks, that the fleece was torn off in some places, (C.) and the same method is said to prevail still in Shetland. H.

VER. 22. Unclean. This shews, that they could not be peace-offerings. M. C. xiii. 15. C.

CHAP. XVI. VER. 1. Corn. Heb. abib, "green ears of corn," when barley begins to ripen, and wheat is yet green in Palestine; at the time of the year, which corresponds with half of our March and April. The Chaldees called this month Nisan, "of the standards;" because the armies then left their winter quarters. The first-fruits of the barley harvest were offered on the second day of the paschal solemnity. Lev. xxiii. 10. Ex. xii. 4. C.—Night. We read (Ex. xii. 22, and Num. xxxiii. 3.) that the Hebrews were ordered not to leave their houses till morning, and that they departed from Ramesses on the day after the passage of the destroying angel. They began, therefore, to prepare for their journey on the evening of the 14th, and began their march at day-break on the 15th of Nisan, v. 8. Their departure may be considered in its different stages: 1. Of eating the paschal lamb, with their staves in their hands; 2. of being urged by the Egyptians to depart, at midnight; 3. of their leaving their respective homes, to meet all together at Ramesses; and lastly, of their beginning their march from that place to leave Egypt. They did not, however, quit the confines till they had passed the Red Sea, which took place effectually in the night. Ex. xiv. 20. 24. H.—Thus they departed in the evening, at night, in the morning, and in the open day. C.

VER. 2. Phase. Heb. and Sept. "the Phase (or lamb) to the Lord thy God, sheep and oxen," or "of the flock and the herd," (Protest.) offered on the same festival, (H.) or victims proper for the solemnity, besides the paschal lamb. Num.

23 Only thou shalt take heed not to eat their blood, but pour it out on the earth as water.

CHAP. XVI.

The three principal solemnities to be observed: just judges to be appointed in every city: all occasions of idolatry to be avoided.

OBSERVE ^b the month of new corn, which is the first of the spring, that thou mayst celebrate the Phase to the Lord thy God: because in this month the Lord thy God brought thee out of Egypt by night.

2 And thou shalt sacrifice the Phase to the Lord thy God, of sheep, and of oxen, in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose, that his name may dwell there.

3 Thou shalt not eat with it leavened bread: seven days shalt thou eat without leaven, the bread of affliction. because thou camest out of Egypt in fear: that thou mayst remember the day of thy coming out of Egypt, all the days of thy life.

4 No leaven shall be seen in all thy coasts for seven days, neither shall any of the flesh of that which was sacrificed the first day, in the evening, remain until morning.

5 Thou mayst not immolate the Phase in any one of thy cities, which the Lord thy God will give thee:

6 But in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose, that his name may dwell there; thou shalt immolate the Phase in the evening, at the going down of the sun, at which time thou camest out of Egypt.

7 And thou shalt dress, and eat it in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose, and in the morning rising up thou shalt go into thy dwellings.

8 Six days shalt thou eat unleavened bread: and on xxviii. 19. 2 Par. xxx. 15. Peace-offerings were also made; (Lev. vi. 12. 2 Par. xxxv. 7.) and of these free offerings, some explain the words of the Jews, Jo. xviii. 28,) as they suppose the lamb had been eaten the night before. M. Bochart. T.—They might, however, have refrained from eating of these on that day. C.—But they perhaps did not choose to be debarred of that privilege.—There. The place peculiarly consecrated to the worship of God, for length of days. H.

VER. 3. Affliction. Heb. also, "of poverty." Syr. "of humility." Sept. "of evil treatment;" or such bread as the poorest sort of people and slaves are forced to eat. The Jews serve the bread in small pieces, to denote their former poverty. This unleavened bread is also less palatable, and less wholesome.—Par. Sept. "in haste." Ex. xii. 11. The psalmist (civ. 48.) mentions, the exultation and joy of the Hebrews, but it was mixed with fear, lest they should lose so great a benefit.

VER. 6. Phase, or paschal lamb, which was to be sacrificed between the two evenings, during the space of about four hours, in the court before the ark. Some think that this precept was binding only in times of peace; and that when the people could not assemble in the place appointed, they might sacrifice the lamb elsewhere, which seems very probable, though no positive proof can be adduced. In the reign of Amon, when the priests could not perform their sacred functions in the temple, they removed the ark to another place; but Josias caused it to be brought back. 2 Par. xxxv. 3. C.—As the Jews have now no temple, they cannot sacrifice the paschal lamb. T.—The priests were very expert, and observed an admirable order in offering such a surprising multitude of victims, (C.) as would be offered by every family of ten people. H.—The blood, and perhaps the fat also, was presented on the altar of holocausts, which was very large, and the court exceedingly spacious. C.—Which. This may not signify the precise hour, but may refer to all the time while the Hebrews were preparing for and commencing their journey. M. v. 1.—Heb. "at the (return of the) season in which," &c.

VER. 7. Dress, (coques.) Heb. bashal means frequently, to boil, and sometimes to roast, as it must here, if it refer to the paschal lamb; the other victims might however be boiled, and the Sept. use both expressions, "Thou shalt boil and roast." See 2 Par. xxxv. 13. It seems that Moses speaks only of the lamb, the method of preparing which he had abundantly explained before. C.—Heb. has not it, and of course the passage may be understood of all the victims offered on this solemnity. On the morning after it was concluded, people might all depart to their respective homes. The Rabbins observe, that they could not do this on the morning of the 15th Nisan, as it was a solemn festival, on which long journeys were prohibited, and they ought to wait till the end of the seventh day to make their offering. Under Ezechias and Josias, the people appear to have continued together during the whole octave. 2 Par. xxx. and xxxv. 17. H.—Others are of opinion that the people might retire home after the 15th, (Tostat or in the morning after they had eaten the paschal lamb. C.)

VER. 8. Six days after the solemn day is ended, or in all seven; (Ex. xiii. 7 C.) or the seventh day is here remarkable, for some particular distinction. M.—

the seventh day, because it is the assembly of the Lord thy God, thou shalt do no work.

9 Thou shalt number unto thee seven weeks from that day, wherein thou didst put the sickle to the corn:

10 And thou shalt celebrate the festival of weeks to the Lord thy God, a voluntary oblation of thy hand, which thou shalt offer according to the blessing of the Lord thy God:

11 And thou shalt feast before the Lord thy God, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, who abide with you: in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose, that his name may dwell there:

12 And thou shalt remember that thou wast a servant in Egypt: and thou shalt keep and do the things that are commanded.

13 Thou shalt celebrate the solemnity also of tabernacles, when thou hast gathered in thy fruit of the barn-floor and of the wine-press:

14 And thou shalt make merry in thy festival time, thou, thy son, and thy daughter, thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, the Levite also, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are within thy gates.

15 Seven days shalt thou celebrate feasts to the Lord

* Exod. xxiii. 15. and xxxiv. 20. Eccl. xxv. 6.

Assembly. Heb. "the feast of prohibition, or of withholding," or rather the festival day, in which all must make their appearance, to do homage to their Lord. Lev. xxiii. 36. C.—Sept. "on the 7th is the dismission, (or termination) a feast to the Lord." H.

VER. 9. Corn: that is from the 16th of Nisan, (M.) the second day of the paschal solemnity, on which new barley was presented before the Lord, as new wheat was on the second day of Pentecost. Lev. xxiii. 10.

VER. 10. Hand. Heb. and Sept. "as much as thy hand is able," an offering, bearing a due proportion with what God has bestowed upon thee. H.—Each one was exhorted to make peace-offerings and feasts, at Jerusalem, in honour of God, v. 11. On these festival days the first-born, fattened animals, were brought to be slain. C. xii. 17. and xiv. 23. The Jews think that by these feasts their solemnities are very much honoured. But the intention of the lawgiver, was only to keep them at a distance from the profane rejoicings of the pagans, and to raise their thoughts and their hearts, by degrees, to the more solid spiritual delights. They were, however, too much inclined to stop at the gratification of the senses, and understood in that sense the sabbath, which Isaiah (lviii. 13,) calls delightful, or delicate. Buxt. Syn. x.

VER. 12. Commanded, in gratitude for past favours.

VER. 15. In joy. Heb. adds, "surely, or wholly." Hence the Rabbins esteem it unlawful to marry on these days, lest they should blend sacred and worldly joy together.

VER. 16. Empty. All were bound to make some offering, which was left to their option, and thus the festivity was much increased, by the abundance of all things; so that all might find a particular pleasure in being present at these feasts, even though they were not influenced by sentiments of piety and of religion. See Ex. xxiii. 15. C.—While the masters of families were from home, thrice in the year, God protected their houses and children from the incursions of enemies, so that they were never more secure. Sanctius. T.

VER. 18. Magistrates, (magistros), "masters;" people learned in the law, who may assist the judges with their counsel in any emergency. Heb. shotrim, "officers, heralds, victors," &c. C. i. 15. H.—Bonfrere (in Ex. xviii. 25,) thinks that these were the judges set over each tribe, or else the assessors of the judges. M.—The Rabbins mention three tribunals of the Jews: 1. The Sanhedrim, consisting of seventy judges, with a prince at the head of them; 2. the twenty-three judges, who resided in considerable cities; 3. the tribunal of three judges, who administered justice in the villages, which had not above 120 inhabitants. But Josephus (iv. cap. ult.) only mentions, that Moses established in each city seven judges, who had each two officers of the tribe of Levi.—Gates, where the judges sat.

VER. 19. Just. Avarice is like a cloud, (C.) which darkens the understanding. Oppression troubleth the wise, and (Heb.) "a present destroyeth the heart." A timid or interested judge is unfit for his office. Sir Thomas More was very careful not to receive presents, while he was high chancellor of England. H.—If even the just are in danger of being perverted by presents, what must we think of others! D.

VER. 20. Just. Heb. "thou shalt follow justice." Thou shalt be guided solely by the dictates of justice, in passing sentence. Ex. xxiii. 1. 9. C.—That judge who passes sentence according to truth, executes his office unjustly if he be actuated by the love of a temporal reward. S. Greg. mor. 9.

VER. 21. Tree. The pagans had consecrated different sorts of trees to their idols. They always planted groves near their temples, to increase the reverential awe, and but too often to hide the abominations which were there committed.

thy God, in the place which the Lord shall choose: and the Lord thy God will bless thee in all thy fruits, and in every work of thy hands, and thou shalt be in joy.

16 Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God, in the place which he shall choose: in the feast of unleavened bread, in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles. "No one shall appear with his hands empty before the Lord:

17 But every one shall offer according to what he hath, according to the blessing of the Lord his God, which he shall give him.

18 Thou shalt appoint judges and magistrates in all thy gates, which the Lord thy God shall give thee, in all thy tribes: that they may judge the people with just judgment, 19 And not go aside to either part. ^b Thou shalt not accept person, nor gifts: for gifts blind the eyes of the wise, and change the words of the just.

20 Thou shalt follow justly after that which is just: that thou mayst live and possess the land which the Lord thy God shall give thee.

21 Thou shalt plant no grove, nor any tree, near the altar of the Lord thy God:

22 Neither shalt thou make, nor set up to thyself a statue: which things the Lord thy God hateth.

^b Exod. xxiii. 8. Levit. xix. 15. Supra i. 17. Eccl. xl. 31.

The Hebrews frequently imitated them in these particulars. Yet Hecateus observes, that no tree was to be seen near the temple of Jerusalem.

VER. 22. Statue. Heb. matseba, means also a pillar, monument, heap of stones, image, title, &c. Gen. xxviii.—Hateth, when they are designed for superstitious purposes. On other occasions, statues and pictures may be very instructive and commendable. H.—The patriarchs set up pillars, altars, &c. as did also the Israelites, (Jos. xxii. 10.) Samuel, &c. even after this prohibition, and without any offence. The Rabbins allow, that the proselytes of justice do well in erecting such monuments of religion, provided they be not intended for false worship. Seld. Jur. ii. 6. C.—How blind then must be our dissenting brethren, who cannot make this easy and obvious distinction, but indiscriminately condemn all Catholics as guilty of idolatry, because they make and keep in their chapels, and bow down before images of the saints. This trifling objection is pressed with great vigour by J. Wesley, the founder of the Methodists. "The Papists, says he, set up their idols in their churches—they worship the picture of the Queen of heaven—they idolize a dead man or woman." To whom Dr. Parker, a Protestant bishop, replies: (Disc. for the Abrog. of the Test.) "Yet, after all, we have no other ground for the bold conceit, than the crude and rash assertions of some popular divines, who have no other measures of truth and zeal, but their hatred of popery. . . As to the use of images in the worship of God, I cannot but admire at the confidence of these men, to make so bold a charge against them in general, when the images of the cherubim were commanded by God himself. Ex. xxv. 22. They were the most solemn and sacred part of the Jewish religion, and therefore, though images, so far from idolatry, that God made them the seat of his presence, and from between them delivered his oracles. This instance is so plain and obvious to every reader, . . that it is a much greater wonder to me that those men, who advance the objection of idolatry so groundlessly, (against the greater part of Christendom, as he observed before) can so slightly rid themselves of so pregnant a proof against it." See an answer to the Rev. J. Wesley's Misrepresentations, &c. by the Rev. N. G. published at Whitby, 1811, where some of the variations in doctrine of the pillars of Methodism, are also briefly noticed, as well as the absurdity of a man setting up for a reformer of religion, who at the time did not believe in Christ, (Journal ii. p. 102-3,) and for forty-two years afterwards preached a doctrine either Popish (Jour. for 1739) or Antinomian, than which, to use the words of his own recantation, "nothing could be more false." (Minutes of a Conference, 1770.) It may not be improper to observe, that in the last great deluge of error, the Methodist Society began, 1st May, 1738, at London, though it had a more obscure beginning at Oxford, 1729, and another at Havannah, 1736. Yet even when this third grand attempt was made to spread it wider, and to rectify former mistakes, the author acknowledges that he was not converted, no not till many days afterwards, when, being in a Lutheran society! (26th May) "an assurance, says he, was given me, that Christ had taken away my sins, even mine;" (Journal) and still, in the year 1770, he had to "review the whole affair." Such is the man who has deluded so many thousands! Out of thy own mouth will I condemn thee. Surely those who wilfully follow such blind guides, deserve to fall into the ditch. What confidence now can the Methodists have in the interpretations which Wesley has given them of the Scriptures, since he stumbled in broad daylight; and even preached for above thirty years together, that the observance of God's law is not only unnecessary, but sinful, an error to which he was forced, at last, to open his eyes by the scandalous immoralities of several of his deluded admirers, whom he had been all along foolishly flattering with the assurance that faith alone would ensure their salvation. Strange it may appear that he should not be put on his guard by the fall of Lu ther, who split against the same rock, and scrupled not to condemn the Epistle of St. James as not worth a straw, stramineam epistolam, an expression for which he is said afterwards to have been sorry, as Wesley was for the doctrine which he had been delivering for so many years. But the evil was then done. Multitudes had been deceived by these arch impostors. Their surviving followers might however, if they would, derive this lesson from their tardy repentance and recantation, to examine with more caution their other doctrines, which they have delivered with the like confidence; and as they have reason to fear the yielding an implicit belief to such innovators, so they may be induced to flee to the ark, the true Catholic Church, that they may be protected from the contradiction of tongues, Ps. xxx. 21. St. Aug. ib. "After Christ and the gospel, we have no farther enquiry to make." Tert.—We know that novelty in religion is a sure mark of falsehood, as no one can place any other foundation besides that which has been fixed by the beginner and finisher of our faith. From the written and unwritten Word of God, we learn what He has taught, and among the rest, we are authorized to keep holy pictures with respect. This is not an attempt against the worship of God, but designed to promote it. We do not make them to ourselves, without a divine authority. The same things which we are not allowed to adore, we must not make. Yet Methodists have and make pictures. We have God's will clearly expressed to us by his Church, which he has commanded us to hear and to obey. If we be led astray by so doing, we may at least plead that we did, to the best of our judgment, as we were ordered by God; which those, who choose for themselves, cannot do. If this Church, so strongly recommended to us in Scripture, be capable of deceiving us in an affair of so great consequence as in that of idolatry, to what article of the Christian revelation can we yield our assent with safety! So, on the other hand, if Luther and Wesley have grossly imposed on their followers, by teaching them to believe that Catholics are idolaters, and that faith alone is necessary for salvation, as they are self-convicted in the latter point, how can their disciples forget the old proverb, "A liar is not believed even when he speaks the truth;" and consequently, how can they take up their faith on their bare word, though they may pretend to ground their doctrine on the word of God! They confessedly misapplied that sacred word, with respect to faith alone, and they shut their eyes to the obvious meaning of the texts which forbid graven things. Ought not, therefore, the unlearned and the unstable to dread lest they may have wrested the other Scriptures to their own perdition! 2 Pet. iii. 16. See Ex. xx. This subject is of such vast importance, the accusation of idolatry is of so black a nature, that it deserves to be accurately and frequently refuted. It is not an accusation brought only by a few obscure individuals, who have not the power to do any great harm by it; the most exalted dignitaries of the Protestant church, such as Dr. Shute, of Durham, in two charges to his clergy, the most famous modern reformers, like Wesley, &c. have not scrupled to repeat the calumny; and the Legislature has, for many years, been actuated by what they perhaps have thought a pious zeal, to exterminate the imitators of the Chanaanites! They may have listened too attentively to the intolerant institutor of the love-fests, (who seems, nevertheless, to threaten the overthrow of the established church) and who, in the excess of his zeal, exclaims, "I insist upon it that no government, not Roman Catholic, ought to tolerate men of the Roman Catholic persuasion." Letter written 1780, a short time before the riots. They must then be murdered, banished, or forced into the church, that little society which began in the evening of the 1st of May, 1738, in Fetter-lane; (Journal i.) for Methodists assert, that the God of this world has hitherto triumphed over every revival of true religion, (Dedic. prefixed to the Life of J. Wesley, by Drs. Coke and Moore) and consequently over the reformed Church of England; so that they can hardly insist, that we should embrace her doctrine, and thus increase the triumph of the devil. We have therefore no alternative left, but either to abandon our country or our religion. These are the apostles, worthy of Mahomet, who would have us believe that they are inspired by the Holy Ghost, and divinely commissioned to raise another holy temple out of the scattered lively stones of that once beautiful building, which was erected by Jesus Christ, against which they say (Ibid.) the gates of hell have never wholly prevailed. These are the teachers whom they have heaped up to themselves, having itching ears. 2 Tim. iv. 3. These are the interpreters of the sacred oracles! Both Wesley and Coke have, at least, acquired great celebrity with their adherents, by their labours in this way; but how much their explications may be depended upon, we may form some judgment from the preceding remarks. The character of bishop, which Dr. Coke extorted from the hands of his great master, 10th of Sept. 1784, at Bristol, will not give us any higher idea of the capacity of either. It disgusted all thinking men, as a similar action of Luther, a fallen priest, consecrating a bishop, had done long before. Mr. Charles Wesley quired diligently, and found it to be true, and that the abomination is committed in Israel:

5 Thou shalt bring forth the man or the woman, who have committed that most wicked thing, to the gates of thy city, and they shall be stoned.

6 By the mouth of two, or three witnesses, shall he die that is to be slain. Let no man be put to death, when only one beareth witness against him.

7 The hands of the witnesses shall be first upon him to kill him, and afterwards the hands of the rest of the people; that thou mayst take away the evil out of the midst of thee.

upon hearing of his brother having ordained a bishop, being but a presbyter himself, is said to have exclaimed,

"So easily are bishops made, by man's or woman's whim;

Wesley his hands on Coke has laid—but who laid hands on him!"

See Nightingale, &c. for farther information on Methodism, which now makes such a noise, though its novelty, variations, acknowledged mistakes, calumnies, spirit of persecution, want of lawful pastors, &c. here briefly instance, might suffice to put people upon their guard. H.

VER. 2. Covenant, by incurring the evil of idolatry. C. Heb. x. 29.

VER. 3. The host of heaven. That is, the stars. Ch.—This species of idolatry was the most ancient and common in the East. Job. (xxxi. 26. 8.) takes notice of the adoration of the sun and of the moon, and calls it a very great iniquity, and a denial against the most high God. He lived in Arabia, and probably not far from the place where Moses was addressing the Israelites. H.—The pagans looked upon the sun and moon as the king and queen of heaven, and the stars as their guards. Plato says (in Phædro) that "the sun marches at the head of the gods, in a winged chariot, and the eleven other gods lead on their bands of demons," or the stars, &c.

VER. 5. Stoned, not far from the gates, where they received sentence. Thus the sabbath-breaker was stoned without the camp, (Num. xv. 35,) and St. Stephen out of the city of Jerusalem, Acts vii. 57. When only a few were concerned, the twenty-three judges passed sentence: but if a whole tribe had been guilty, the cognizance of the affair was left to the Sanhedrim. When a city was infected with this abomination, it was wholly destroyed. But no one was punished, except two witnesses (v. 6.) attested that formal idolatry, by sacrifice, &c. had been committed. Seld. Syned. iii. 4.

VER. 6. Slain. When the action was public, this formality was not requisite. C. xii. 9.—Him. One witness was never admitted to prove any crime; neither would the Jews receive for witnesses, women, infants under thirteen, slaves, publicans, thieves, &c. Josep. iv. c. ult. The Rabbins also reject other notorious offenders, enemies, relations, and those who had not a competent knowledge of the law, &c. Ap. Seld. VER. 7. Kill him. Thus testifying that they approve the sentence, and are willing that his blood should be required at their hands, if they had accused him falsely. The criminal was hurled down a precipice by one of the witnesses, and, if he survived, he was stoned by the other, and by the whole people. Maimonides asserts, that the execution took place on some great festival, for the terror and instruction of the multitude; but others call this in question. Fagius. C.

VER. 8. If thou perceive, &c. Here we see what authority God was pleased to give to the church-guides of the Old Testament, in deciding, without appeal, all controversies relating to the law; promising that they should not err therein; and punishing with death such as proudly refused to obey their decisions: and surely he has not done less for the church-guides of the New Testament. Ch.—Hard. Heb. also means, "doubtful, hidden, divided;" so that the opinions of the judges do not agree. In matters of fact, the thing is more easily investigated on the spot. But in these cases, where the law is ambiguous, as even the divine ordinances frequently are, being delivered in human language, (Grot.) a living judge is necessary. God remits the Jews to the council of the priests, at the head of whom was the sovereign pontiff, who was the natural and supreme judge of such difficulties, v. 9. 12. H.—And blood, to decide when murder must be punished with death, and when the right of an asylum may be claimed. C.—The Vulg. renders the same words, 2 Par. xix. 10.—Between kindred and kindred, as the different degrees cause many embarrassments, with regard to marriages, &c. T.—The Rabbins understand that the judge had to declare when a woman was rendered unclean. Lev. xii. 4. Lyran.—And cause, or lawsuit; some thinking that a greater sum for reparation of an injury should be required, others judging that one of the contending parties should be set at liberty, while the other judges are of a contrary sentiment. Heb. "between judgment and judgment," when a doubt arises whether laymen or the Levites may be the proper judges. The Rabbins only remit three cases to the tribunal of the latter, respecting, 1. The red heifer; 2. the woman accused of adultery by her jealous husband; 3. the heifer to be offered in sacrifice, for a murder committed by a person unknown. C. xxi. 5.—And leprosy. Various difficulties might arise concerning this matter, of which the priests had to pass sentence. Lev. xiii. Some render the Heb. negah, "wound."

see that the words of the judges within thy gates do vary: arise and go up to the place, which the Lord thy God shall choose:

9 "And thou shalt come to the priests of the Levitical race, and to the judge, that shall be at that time: and thou shalt ask of them, and they shall shew thee the truth of the judgment.

10 And thou shalt do whatsoever they shall say, that preside in the place, which the Lord shall choose, and what they shall teach thee, 11 According to his law: and thou shalt follow their sentence; neither shalt thou decline to the right hand nor to the left hand.

12 But he that will be proud, and refuse to obey the commandment of the priest, who ministereth at that time to the Lord thy God, and the decree of the judge,

• 2 Par. xix. 8.

The law of retaliation required a scrupulous nicety. Blood, cause, and leprosy, may denote lawsuits of a criminal, less important, and ceremonial nature. Jans. —Vury. Heb. "which are matters of contention within thy gates."

VER. 9. Judge. Moses does not specify whether the contending parties, or the judges themselves thought proper to have the matter debated before a higher court. The Rabbins observe, that appeals to the Sanhedrim were only the last resort, and that the sentence of that tribunal was to be complied with under pain of death, v. 12. Seld. Syned. iii. 2. 2. The judge here mentioned, according to them and the generality of commentators, after Josephus, Philo, &c. is no other than the high priest, as the Scripture plainly indicates. C. xxi. 5. Eze. xlv. 24. He abode near the tabernacle, and God enabled him to explain the law, when he was arrayed with the ephod, and the Urim and Thummim. Some moderns, who have an interest to lessen the authority of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, with Calvin, Ainsworth, &c. pretend that an appeal was to be made to the priests, in disputes which concerned religion, and to the civil magistrate in other cases. The latter were indeed commissioned to pass sentence in the different cities. 2 Par. xix. 5. C.—But an appeal to the high priest, in doubtful cases, could not be denied. The government of the Jews was a theocracy, and the pontiff acted as the viceroy of God. H.

VER. 10. Preside. The high priests who are to succeed each other. W.
VER. 11. According, &c. This law was to be the rule of the priests, in passing sentence. It was not left to the judgment of individuals to comply or not, according as they might explain the law for themselves. Such a proceeding would be nugatory, as they would thus be themselves the ultimate judges of their own cause. H.—They shall seek the law at his (the priest's) mouth. Mal. ii. 7. Protestants make, therefore, a very frivolous restriction, when they allow his sentence to bind only "so long as he is the true minister of God, and pronounceeth according to his word." Bible, 1608. W.—If any had been proud enough among the Jews, to persuade himself that he understood the law better than the high priest, he would not on that account have escaped death. H.—The authority of the Christian Church is not inferior to that of the Synagogue, only, "instead of death, excommunication is now inflicted" on the rebellious. S. Greg. Mat. xviii. 17. S. Aug. q. 88. In effect, S. Paul assures us that the priests of the law, serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things. But now he (Christ) . . . is the mediator of the better covenant, which is established on better promises. Heb. viii. 5. 6. If therefore the privilege of deciding points of faith and morality, without danger of mistake, was granted to the synagogue, can any one doubt but that Christ would provide as ample a security for his Church, with which he has promised to remain for ever, and with his Holy Spirit to teach her all the truth? H.—S. Augustine dwells upon this argument, (Doct. 4.) and proves the infallibility both of the Jewish and of the Christian Church. Hence Christ said, with respect to the former, which was not yet rejected, All therefore whatsoever they shall say to you, observe and do: but according to their works, do ye not: for they say the truth, and do not practice what they require of others. If the heads of the Catholic Church should be equally immoral, their true doctrine must not therefore be despised, lest Christ and his Father be at the same time despised. For this is the express admonition of our heavenly lawgiver, hear the Church: (Mat. xviii. 17.) and this he does not require without giving us a full assurance, that we may do it without fear of being led astray. The sole command of God implies as much, if he had said no more. For can he order us to sin! The pretended reformers, who blushed not to make this blasphemous assertion, might easily swallow down the other, respecting the defection and fallibility of the whole Church; and might even believe, that the whole world had been drowned in abominable idolatry for eight hundred years and more. Hom. on the peril of idolat. p. 8. How much more they do not determine, lest they should be forced to tell when the religion of the Catholics began, and that they will never do without dating from Christ and the apostles, the foundations of the only true Church. H.—The Jews had such a respect for the decisions of their Rabbins, in consequence of this command of God, that some hesitate not to assert, that if one of them should declare that the left hand was the right, they would believe him; and they condemn the refractory to most grievous torments in hell. Buxtorf Syn. i. —We must shew the most profound submission to the decrees of the Church. C.—Yet we are not bound to assent to the decisions of every teacher. Only, when the Church speaks, we must not refuse to obey, nor pretend to appoint ourselves judges of what she teaches. A private doctor, however eminent, may fall into some absurdities, but the major part of the pastors of the Church, with the Pope at their head, never can. In vain have the records of that man shall die, and thou shalt take away the evil from Israel:

13 And all the people hearing it shall fear, that no one afterwards swell with pride.

14 When thou art come into the land, which the Lord thy God will give thee, and possessest it, and dwellest in it, and shalt say: I will set a king over me, as all nations have that are round about:

15 Thou shalt set him, whom the Lord thy God shall choose out of the number of thy brethren. Thou mayst not make a man of another nation king, that is not thy brother.

16 And when he is made king, he shall not multiply horses to himself, nor lead back the people into Egypt, being lifted up with the number of his horsemen, especially since the Lord hath commanded you to return no more the same way.

nineteen centuries been ransacked, to find a single instance of such a general agreement in error. If the Synagogue passed a wicked sentence upon Jesus Christ, we must reflect that the forms here required (v. 8.) were neglected; and it was then expiring, and giving place to a better covenant, as the prophets had foretold. Yet even in that sentence, which was so unjust on the part of Caiphas, S. John (xi. 51.) acknowledges the truth of God. And this he spoke not of himself: but being the high priest, that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for the nation, and not only for the nation, but to gather together in one the children of God that were dispersed. The Synagogue could claim submission no longer, after the great prophet had come to abrogate the law of fear, and to substitute that of love. Hence while he was there to teach himself, (Heb. i. 2.) there was no danger of deception for the people. But the covenant which he has established is to last for ever: no prophet or lawgiver is promised to introduce any change, or greater perfection, so that no one can plead for an excuse of his rebellion, that the Church may deceive and pass an erroneous judgment; or, if he do, he must be cut off from the society of the faithful, by the spiritual sword; and, dying in that state, without the Church for his mother, he need never expect that God will acknowledge him for his son. See S. Cyp. Unit. Ecc. If an individual pastor should pass such a perverse sentence, the case would be very different. Yet, even in such trying cases, an humble conduct will be the best security and proof of innocence, and God will reward those who have suffered unjustly. H.

VER. 12. And the decree. Some copies read with Sixtus V. ac decreto, by, &c. "decreet," (H.) as if a lay-judge stood ready to put the sentence in execution. C.—But there was no necessity of any further judgment after the high priest had spoken, who is here declared the sovereign judge. S. Cyp. ep. 55. Heb. "or to the judge." Amama ridicules his friend, Ant. a Dominis, for saying that the Heb. and Vulg. have et decreto. H.—The Rabbins inform us, that if any judge refused to acquiesce in the decision, and endeavoured to draw others into his opinion, in matters of consequence, (as those are where the guilty is ordered to be cut off) he was to be strangled, on a festival day, at Jerusalem, that all the people hearing it might fear, v. 13. Seld. Syned. iii. 8. C.

VER. 13. Pride. Heb. "do presumptuously," as the Prot. translate. How will they excuse their leaders, Luther, &c. and themselves, from this grievous charge! If the person, who presumed to assert that the leprosy had not infected some one, whom the priest condemned, (v. 8.) could not escape death, shall we esteem those innocent whom the whole Church rejects! Hic niger est, hunc tu Romane caveto. Hor. H.

VER. 14. King. The Rabbins observe, that one was to be elected before the place for the temple was fixed upon, that the tribes might not contend about that honour. Grotius.—God foresees that the people will insist upon having a king, and gives his consent, reserving to himself the choice, and appointing laws for him, that he may not forget that he is only the lieutenant of the most high. Yet God testified his displeasure, when the Israelites demanded a king, because they did it in a seditious manner, so as to reject the prophet Samuel, whom he had given them for a ruler, in whom they could discover no fault. C. 1 K. viii. 7. and x. 19.

VER. 15. Choose, as he did Saul, David, and Solomon, who succeeded to the throne of his father, though he was not the eldest son. M.—Then the throne began to be hereditary, in virtue of God's promise to David. C.—Brother. The Jews neglected this law, when they willingly recognized the authority of Herod, two years after the birth of Christ. See Gen. xlix. 10. H.—A stranger might attempt to draw off the people from the service of the true God, and mutual love would not so easily subsist between them. M.

VER. 16. Horses. Josue and David rendered the captured horses useless, (Jos. xi. 6. 2 K. viii. 4.) and the judges rode on asses. Judg. x. 4. and xii. 14. Solomon began to keep some, and in his days Egypt was noted for the traffic of horses; though, after Sesostris had intersected the country with canals, they were more neglected. Marsham. Canon. æsc. xiii. and xiv. God did not wish his people to engage in the tumults of war, nor would he permit their king to be puffed up with his own strength. Ps. xix. 8. and xxxii. 17. Philo says he would not have them to listen to any who might promise to conduct them to a better country, and thus teach them to lead a wandering life. C.—He precludes also the attempt to conquer Egypt. Heb. "he shall not make the people return to Egypt, in order that he may multiply horses," by their buying them for him in that country, 3 K. x. 29.—Way. When the people proposed returning God severely punished them. Num. xiv. 5.

17 He shall not have many wives, that may allure his mind, nor immense sums of silver and gold.

18 But after he is raised to the throne of his kingdom, he shall copy out to himself the Deuteronomy of this law in a volume, taking the copy of the priests of the Levitical tribe,

19 And he shall have it with him, and shall read it all the days of his life, that he may learn to fear the Lord his God, and keep his words and ceremonies, that are commanded in the law, 20 And that his heart be not lifted up with pride over his brethren, nor decline to the right or to the left, that he and his sons may reign a long time over Israel.

CHAP. XVIII.

The Lord is the inheritance of the priests and Levites. Heathenish abominations are to be avoided. The great PROPHET, CHRIST, is promised. False prophets must be slain.

THE "priests and Levites, and all that are of the same tribe, shall have no part nor inheritance with the rest of Israel, because they shall eat the sacrifices of the Lord, and his oblations.

2 And they shall receive nothing else of the possession of their brethren: for the Lord himself is their inheritance, as he hath said to them.

3 This shall be the priest's due from the people, and

VER. 17. Mind, and reign in his name. Heb. "and his heart turn not away" from the worship of the true God, as it happened to Solomon, and to many other kings, whom Moses seems to have had in view. Too great a number of wives would tend to perplex and enervate the king, and to eat up the treasures of his people. The Jewish lawyers allow the king only 18, and they say David and Roboam had that number. But the latter had moreover 60 concubines, (2 Par. xi. 21,) and Solomon had many more. In effect, the number seems not to be restricted, and, what is very singular, the Rabbins allow all but the high priest and the king as many as they can keep, though the sages advise people to have no more than four, which seems to be the sentiment of the Mahometans. This liberty was taken by the Jews till the emperors restricted them, A. D. 593. Seld. Uxor. l. 8, &c. Plurality of wives was not formerly a sin, though Solomon offended by too great excess. S. Aug. q. 27. W.—Gold. Immense riches are seldom possessed even by kings, without the oppression of their subjects, and great danger of falling into extravagance. If David amassed so much gold, it was destined for the building of the temple. But Solomon laying on heavy taxes, alienated the hearts of his people, and gave occasion to the revolt of 10 tribes; and Ezechias brought on a severe chastisement, by making a parade of his treasures to the ambassadors of the king of Babylon, 4 K. xx. 15. C.

VER. 18. Of this law, perhaps from the 14th verse to the end of the chapter, (H.) or the whole Book of Deuteronomy, which contains an abridgment of the law, (Jos. viii. 32. M.) or even the five books, which were formerly written without any division, and went under the name of the law. Grotius, &c.—Heb. seems favourable to this last opinion, (C.) "he shall write a copy of this law in a book, out of that which is kept by the priests," unless Moses might only require that he should have a copy of what he was then delivering. H.—Some say that the king was obliged to take two copies, one of which he was to have always about him. It is not certain whether he was obliged to write himself, as Philo asserts, or another might do it for him. The diadem and the law were presented to Joas, when he ascended the throne, 2 Par. xxiii. 11. C.—If (H.) Josias had not seen a copy of the law before the 18th year of his reign, this precept must have been very ill observed, 4 K. xxii. 11. C.—But, very probably, that book, which Helcias discovered in the temple, was the autograph of Moses, and therefore made a deeper impression upon all who saw and heard it read, than if it had been only an ordinary copy. This copy might have been mislaid or secreted in those troublesome times; and when the high priest brought it to light again, he as well as the king and all the people, were filled with joy and amazement. H.—It was the custom of the Jews to present a copy of the law to their kings, when they first sat upon the throne; and hence, perhaps, they make a similar present to the Pope, when he goes to take possession of the Lateran church. Morus.—They presented one to Innocent II. when he made his entry into Paris, 1146, and another to king Louis the Fat, as Suger informs us. C.—Priests. Temporal princes who desire to become virtuous and wise, will ever take the law of God at the priest's hands. W.

VER. 19. Law. Pious Christian emperors and kings have esteemed it their greatest glory and happiness to read and meditate on the holy commandments of God, in order to regulate their conduct, amid the various dangerous occupations of their station. H.—Constantine the Great, Charlemagne, S. Stephen of Hungary, Alphonsus I. of Spain, were noted for the zeal which they shewed in this particular. Alphonsus of Arragon, had read the Bible, with the Commentaries, 14 times over, and the great Alfred wrote all the New Testament twice over with his own hand. C.—He had translated into English Saxon all or most of the Bible before 900, as King Athelstan did about 925. Encyc. Brit. Bible, &c. Yet the 8 He shall receive the same portion of food that the rest do: besides that which is due to him in his own city, by succession from his fathers.

9 When thou art come into the land, which the Lord thy God shall give thee, beware lest thou have a mind to imitate the abominations of those nations.

Catholic Church never condemned this conduct of her children, as Protestants would insinuate. Cath. Doct. by N. G.

VER. 20. With pride. This is not expressed in Heb. but it is clearly (H.) implied. Humility is the most difficult virtue for a prince to practice, amid the flattery of his courtiers, and the splendour with which he is environed. See S. Aug. C. D. v. 24. C.—His sons. Wicked kings seldom left a quiet possession of the throne to their heirs. M.—David and his posterity reigned in succession, by an effect of the divine bounty. C.

CHAP. XVIII. VER. 1. Oblations. Heb. "they shall eat the holocausts of the Lord and his inheritances." The priests shall have the parts of the sacrifices for peace allotted to them, &c. tithes shall be given to support the Levites. (H.) These parts are what God claims from the people, as their Sovereign, (C.) and these he assigns to his ministers. Sept. "The fruits of the Lord are their inheritance, they shall eat them." H.

VER. 3. Due, (judicium.) Moses only mentions a part, having explained the rest. Ex. xxix. 27. Lev. vii. 32.—Breast, (ventriculum.) In the other places pectusculum occurs. Heb. "the shoulder, the two cheeks and the navel," called in Latin omasum, being the last and the fattest of the four ventricles, and highly esteemed by the ancients. The cheeks or claps are specified no where else; so that some think that Moses here supplies what he had left imperfect, assigning to the priests the cheeks and the tongue. Jansenius supposes that this is only a part of the breast, which appears to have two cheeks when the shoulders are cut off. But Moses here probably speaks not of the peace-offerings, but of the beasts which were killed by the Israelites at home for their own uses, &c. (Clerc) as Philo explains it, (de præm.) and Josephus (iv. 4.) only specifies the right shoulder and the breast, which were given to the priests on those occasions. C.—Sept. "the shoulder, the cheeks, and the last ventricle." The victims were not, therefore, of a sacred nature; as they were only sacrificed, inasmuch as the blood was to be offered to the Lord. H. See Gen. xliii. 16.

VER. 4. Corn, besides those which were offered to the Lord at the feast of Pentecost. Each landholder was bound to give between the 40th and the 60th part of his produce. S. Jer. See Ex. xxii. 29.

VER. 5. Stand. This was the usual posture of the priests ministering in the temple, as well as of people praying.—Minister. Sam. and Sept. add, "and to bless in," &c.

VER. 6. Levite. In the days of Moses, all the Levites probably assisted in the service of the tabernacle, when they thought proper. But, after they should be dispersed, he encourages them to come willingly. David afterwards divided the priests and the Levites into classes, which were obliged to serve in their turns, 1 Par. xxiii. &c. Though he derogated from the words of the law, he followed the spirit of the injunction, which was intended to promote the great glory and decency of religion; and even after this regulation, (C.) those who desired, like Samuel, (M.) to consecrate their labours to the Lord for life, or for a long time, were in all probability entitled to the privileges here granted. C.

VER. 8. Portion. Whence this was taken, whether from the tithes in general, or from the treasury of the temple, or from the revenue of the high priest, &c. does not appear. C.—Fathers. The Levites might possess houses, suburbs, and cattle. M.—Heb. "besides that which ariseth from the sale of his patrimony." H.

VER. 10. Fire. This impiety is not punished with death, (Lev. xviii. 21,) as the burning of children was. Lev. xx. 2. Grotius.—It was done in imitation of the latter, and became more common, as it was less cruel; the person who was thus expiated, being to pass between or to jump over fire. The council in Trullo (a. 65,) was forced to condemn this remnant of an abominable superstition. But the 12 For the Lord abhorreth all these things, and for these abominations he will destroy them at thy coming.

13 Thou shalt be perfect, and without spot before the Lord thy God.

14 These nations, whose land thou shalt possess, hearken to soothsayers and diviners; but thou art otherwise instructed by the Lord thy God.

15 ^bThe Lord thy God will raise up to thee a PROPHET of thy nation, and of thy brethren, like unto me: him thou shalt hear, 16 As thou desiredst of the Lord thy God in ^cHoreb, when the assembly was gathered together, and saidst: Let me not hear any more the voice of the Lord my God, neither let me see any more this exceeding great fire, lest I die.

17 And the Lord said to me: They have spoken all things well.

18 ^dI will raise them up a prophet out of the midst of their brethren, like to thee: and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak all that I shall command him.

19 And he that will not hear his words, which he shall speak in my name, I will be the revenger.

20 But the prophet, who being corrupted with pride, shall speak in my name, things that I did not command him to say, or in the name of strange gods, shall be slain.

21 And if in silent thought thou answer: How shall I know the word, that the Lord hath not spoken?

22 Thou shalt have this sign: Whatsoever that same other inhuman worship of Moloc, and of other pagan divinities, was certainly very common, and chiefly brought down destruction upon the people of Chanaan. See Jer. xix. 5. Eze. xxiii. 37. Ps. cv. 37. 4 K. xvii. 31. Ennius says, Poeni sunt soliti suos sacrificare puellios. See S. Aug. C. D. vii. 17. S. Jer. in Jer. vii. 31. C.—Soothsayers. The original term may also signify, "that useth divination." Both those who set up for diviners, and those who consult them, are condemned. H.—Hiscuni explains it of a superstitious practice, by which a person measured a stick with his finger, saying first I will go; and then I will not; and if, when he came to the end of the stick, he had to say I will go, he determined to begin his journey. See Eze. xxi. 21.—Dreams. Heb. mechonen, Lev. xix. 26,) may denote one who judges from the sight of the clouds, or feigns revelations.—Wizard. Heb. "witch." Sept. "poisoner," or one who gives things to do harm. Rabbins.

VER. 11. Charmer of serpents. Ps. lvi. 6. One who makes a compact with the devil.—Spirits. Python was the name of the serpent, which Apollo slew. It might be derived from the Heb. patah, "to seduce," because a serpent seduced Eve, and dealers with the devil generally deceive those who consult them. Sept. "a belly talker," as these impostors muttered some sounds, intimating that a spirit gave answers from their belly. See Isai. xxix. 4.—Tellers. Heb. "wise men." H.—Those who promise great knowledge from the secrets of the caballa, or magic.—Dead. Necromancy was already very common. Thus the witch of Endor made the ghost of Samuel appear to Saul, 1 K. xxviii. 7. The Rabbins say that the person took a bone, or the skull of the dead, when he intended to enquire into futurity. Drusius.

VER. 12. And without spot. This is by way of explication of the word perfect. Any mixture of superstition in the worship of God is hateful to him; and that man who acknowledges any other spirit capable of foretelling what will come to pass, freely (H.) denies the Lord. C.

VER. 14. God, who has already informed thee how to proceed in difficult emergencies, (C. xvii. 8,) by having recourse to the council of priests, and will also, after any death, send in due time a succession of true prophets. Heb. "God hath not suffered thee" to imitate those nations; (H.) or those prophets, whom the Lord thy God will give thee, shall not resemble these (C.) soothsayers (or observers of times) and diviners. H.—They shall be filled with my spirit. C.

VER. 15. Prophet. This passage plainly proves, that the Scripture may have many literal senses; for the context insinuates that God would supply the wants of his people, so that they should not need to go far in order to consult diviners, since they should have leaders and prophets, after the death of Moses, who might explain to them God's will, as they had desired; but at the same time, it clearly refers to the Messiah, as it is explained by S. Peter, (Acts iii. 22. W.) and by S. Stephen, Acts vii. 37. The Jews, at that time, were convinced of the truth of this application; but they only denied that Christ was the Messiah. They have since gone a step farther, and deny that it regards the Messiah, some referring it to Josue, others to Jeremiah, &c. Ap. Munster & Fag. But surely what other prophet could prophet foretelleth in the name of the Lord, and it cometh not to pass: that thing the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath forged it by the pride of his mind: and therefore thou shalt not fear him.

CHAP. XIX.

The cities of refuge. Wilful murder, and false witnesses must be punished.

WHEN ^athe Lord thy God hath destroyed the nations, whose land he will deliver to thee, and thou shalt possess it, and shalt dwell in the cities and houses thereof:

2 ^bThou shalt separate to thee three cities in the midst of the land, which the Lord will give thee in possession,

3 Paving diligently the way: and thou shalt divide the whole province of thy land equally into three parts: that he who is forced to flee for manslaughter, may have near at hand whither to escape.

4 This shall be the law of the slayer that fleeth, whose life is to be saved: He that killeth his neighbour ignorantly, and who is proved to have had no hatred against him yesterday and the day before:

5 But to have gone with him to the wood to hew wood, and in cutting down the tree the axe slipped out of his hand, and the iron slipping from the handle, struck his friend and killed him: he shall flee to one of the cities aforesaid, and live:

6 Lest perhaps the next kinsman of him whose blood was shed, pushed on by his grief, should pursue and apprehend him, if the way be too long, and take away the life of him who is not guilty of death, because he is proved to have had no hatred before against him that was slain.

Hence prophet is written in the singular, to denote his eminent dignity. S. Aug. c. Faust.—S. Philip recognized the claim of Jesus, as did the people after the multiplication of bread, Jo. i. 45. and vi. 14. God the Father seems to allude to this passage, according to the remark of Tertullian, (c. Mar. iv. 22,) when he says hear ye him, (Lu. ix. 35,) as S. Cyprian believes our Saviour does also, Jo. v. 45. S. Athanasius (c. Ariano 2,) condemns the error of the Jews, who would apply this passage to any other prophet but to the Messiah. If they could be excused for denying him this latter claim, they surely cannot in calling in question that Jesus was a true prophet, since he has all the marks of one; (Grotius) and if they would once acknowledge this, they must soon confess that he is also the Messiah, and the Son of God, as these truths are so necessarily connected. C.—The miracles of Moses were far exceeded by those of Jesus Christ, and the latter conversed more intimately with his eternal Father, &c. M.

VER. 16. Dis. This promise is not recorded, Ex. xx. 19. God will send you a mediator, who shall hide the splendour of his divinity (C.) under the form of a servant. Phil. ii. 7. H.

VER. 18. Mouth. So Christ says, The words that I speak to you, I speak not of myself. Jo. xiv. 10.

VER. 19. Revenger. S. Peter (Acts iii. 23,) reads, And it shall be that every soul which will not hear that prophet; (instead of Heb. "my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him,") or he shall be destroyed from among the people. Tert. a. Mar. iv. 22. H.—God now chastises the faithless Jews. D.

VER. 20. To say. These denote heretics, as the following point out apostates. W. VER. 22. Far him. Sept. "you shall not spare him," but cut him off by death. H.—Though the completion of what has been foretold be not a sure sign of a true prophecy, (C. xiii. 2,) yet when the thing does not come to pass which the prophet had spoken unconditionally, he must undoubtedly be rejected; as also when he speaks in the name of false gods. No miracles can then establish his credit. The prophecy of Jonas, and many of the other prophecies, were conditional. C.

CHAP. XIX. VER. 2. Cities. These were Hebron, Sichem, and Cades, on the west side of the Jordan. Jos. xx. 7. Those on the east were already appointed. C. iv. 41. Three others might also have been added, (v. 8. C.) in case the Hebrews had gotten full possession of the countries as far as the Euphrates. H.—The cities of refuge were not above forty-five miles distant from each other, in the land of Chanaan. Those in Galaad were not so far off, as the territory was smaller. C.

VER. 3. Way, and keeping all in good repair, with guide-posts at the cross roads, on which Oleaster says moklot, "escape," was written. See Num. xxxv.

VER. 6. Grief. The law granted so much to the sudden passion of a relation, who met the man slayer out of the cities of refuge, as not to punish him if he gave way to the dictates of vengeance, how unjust soever. C.

7 Therefore I command thee, that thou separate three cities at equal distance one from another.

8 And when the Lord thy God shall have enlarged thy borders, as he swore to thy fathers, and shall give thee all the land that he promised them,

9 (Yet so, if thou keep his commandments, and do the things which I command thee this day, that thou love the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways at all times) thou shalt add to the other three cities, and shalt double the number of the three cities aforesaid:

10 That innocent blood may not be shed in the midst of the land which the Lord thy God will give thee to possess, lest thou be guilty of blood.

11 But if any man hating his neighbour, lie in wait for his life, and rise and strike him, and he die, and he flee to one of the cities aforesaid,

12 The ancients of his city shall send, and take him out of the place of refuge, and shall deliver him into the hand of the kinsman of him, whose blood was shed, and he shall die.

13 Thou shalt not pity him, and thou shalt take away the guilt of innocent blood out of Israel, that it may be well with thee.

14 Thou shalt not take, nor remove thy neighbour's landmarks, which thy predecessors have set in thy possession, which the Lord thy God will give thee in the land that thou shalt receive to possess.

15 One witness shall not rise up against any man, whatsoever the sin, or wickedness be: but in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall stand.

16 If a lying witness stand against a man, accusing him of transgression,

* Gen. xxviii. 14. Ex. xxxiv. 24. Supra xii. 20.—b Num. xxxv. 30.—c Supra xvii. 6. Mat. xviii. 16. 2 Cor. xiii. 1.

VER. 7. At equal, &c. This addition is not in Heb. (C.) or the Sept.; (II.) but is conformable to the regulation given, v. 3. C.

VER. 8. And when. Sept. "but if." This condition was never fulfilled at all times; (v. 9.) and therefore the Israelites could blame only themselves, if the promises which God had made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, (Gen. xv. and xxvi. and xxviii. and xxxv.) were not realized. H.—Though the country was conquered under David and Solomon, the Israelites did not drive out the former inhabitants, (C.) nor did they keep possession for any long time. H.

VER. 12. His city. Strict enquiry was made into the circumstances attending the manslaughter. Num. xxxv. 12. If the refugee was proved guilty, he was delivered up to the next relation of the deceased to be put to death. H.

VER. 13. Innocent. Many Latin copies have "guilty blood," noxium. By putting the offender to death, Israel was expiated from the blood which had been shed unjustly. C.

VER. 14. Landmarks, either which divided the tribes, or the inheritance of individuals. The former were strictly kept up till after the captivity. Those who removed the latter were to be scourged for theft, and again for disobeying this law. Seld. Jur. vi. 3. Josephus (iv. 8.) understands that encroachments on the territories of others, which give rise to many wars, are hereby prohibited. C.—So are likewise innovations in religion. The Romans had a superstitious veneration for these landmarks, which they adored under the name of the god Terminus, (H.) crowning them with flowers, and offering cakes and sacrifices to them. Spargitur et caso communis Terminus agno. Ovid. Fast.—They punished the crime of removing them either with death, banishment, or a fine.

VER. 15. One would suffice to make an enquiry into the affair, and to oblige the person accused, in pecuniary matters, to take an oath that he owed nothing. Maimonides.—Stand. This expression was become proverbial, to denote the certainty of a thing. Mat. xviii. 16. 2 Cor. xiii. 1. Two witnesses cannot so easily carry on a cheat, (C.) as was seen in the case of Susanna. H.—The law is satisfied with moral certainty. C.

VER. 16. Transgression against the law, by apostacy or by idolatry, (Junius) or by any other grievous crime. The person accused might, in this case, be examined, but he could not be condemned unless another witness appeared. Demosthenes (c. Aristocrat.) informs us how (C.) the Athenians (H.) required the witness in criminal matters, to swear on the flesh of a wild boar, ram, and bull, that he spoke the truth, and to utter horrible imprecations against himself and family, if he did otherwise. C.

VER. 17. Lord, in the tabernacle. M.—Judges. Hence it appears evidently that the priests were to pass sentence in all difficult questions, as well in those which regarded individuals, as in those which attacked the worship of God; once the false accuser is to lose life or limb, according as he had attempted to injure his neighbour; (v. 21.) and the Lord ratifies their sentence. C.

17 Both of them, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the Lord in the sight of the priests and the judges that shall be in those days.

18 And when, after most diligent inquisition, they shall find that the false witness hath told a lie against his brother:

19 They shall render to him as he meant to do to his brother, and thou shalt take away the evil out of the midst of thee:

20 That others hearing may fear, and may not dare to do such things.

21 Thou shalt not pity him, but shalt require life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.

CHAP. XX.

Laws relating to war.

IF thou go out to war against thy enemies, and see horsemen and chariots, and the numbers of the enemy's army greater than thine, thou shalt not fear them: because the Lord thy God is with thee, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt.

2 And when the battle is now at hand, the priest shall stand before the army, and shall speak to the people in this manner:

3 Hear, O Israel, you join battle this day against your enemies, let not your heart be dismayed, be not afraid, do not give back, fear ye them not:

4 Because the Lord your God is in the midst of you, and will fight for you against your enemies, to deliver you from danger.

5 And the captains shall proclaim through every band, in the hearing of the army: What man is there, d Dan. xiii. 62.—e Ex. xxi. 23 and 24 Levit. xxiv. 20. Mat. v. 38. f A. M. 2533. —g 1 Mac. iii. 56.

VER. 20. Things. This is the design of penal laws, to render justice to the innocent, and to prevent the spreading of a contagious evil, by cutting off the hopes of impunity. Grot. Jur. ii. 10. 9.—"I would cause the criminal's throat to be cut, says Seneca, (de Ira ii.) with the same countenance and mind as I kill serpents and venomous animals."

VER. 21. Pity. This regarded the judge, who must act with impartiality. W.—The law admits of no mitigation, but inflicts the same punishment on the calumniating witness, as he intended should fall upon his brother. Lyran, &c.—Some Rabbins (apud Fag.) pretend that this was executed with rigour, only when the innocent had sustained some real injury. See Ex. xxi. 24. C.

CHAP. XX. VER. 1. Egypt. Hence it appears that the doctrine of the Quakers, who condemn all wars, is contrary to that of God. If they were always essentially unlawful, He would never have authorized them. H.

VER. 2. Priest. Eleazar, the high priest, acted in this capacity in the war against Madian, and sounded the trumpet, as it was not beneath his dignity. Many priests always attended the army, (C.) the captain of whom (H.) first made the declarations (v. 5. 6. 7.) to the whole army; and these were repeated by the inferior priests at the head of each company, when the army was set in array. So were also the promises of protection, (v. 3. 4.) when all were ready for battle. The Rabbins assert, that the option was granted only in those wars which were undertaken without the express command of God, and that officers were placed in the rear with hatchets or scythes, to cut the legs of those who attempted to flee. Grotius, &c.—But this seems to be an invention of their own, and Moses makes no distinction between voluntary wars and those of precept. These regulations were, no doubt, observed, though the sacred historians do not mention the particulars. C. See 1 Mac. iii. 56.

VER. 3. Back. Heb. "do not quake," (H.) or fall into disorder, hurry, &c.

VER. 4. God. All must be done in his name, by the direction of his ministers. The Jews pretend that the ark was carried, in the midst of the army. But this does not seem to have been generally the case. C.—Of you. "We must co-operate, being assisted" by God, as S. Aug. (c. 30.) observes, in our spiritual conflicts. D.

VER. 5. Captains. Heb. shotrim, (Sept. grammateis.) shall proclaim to the people. Whether these were the chief officers, or only heralds, does not appear. C.—They were probably the priests attached to the army, v. 2. See C. i. 15. H.—Dedicate it. Heb. "begin to use it," on which occasion a feast was made. Jana.—Ps. xxix. seems to have been intended for such a solemnity. At the dedication of the walls of Jerusalem, great rejoicings were made, 2 Esd. xii. 27. Josephus and the Rabbins allow a whole year for the occupation of the house, before the builder or new owner, could be obliged to go to war, in like manner as that term is specified for a person who had lately married a wife. C. xxiv. 5. The ancient Greeks deemed it a great misfortune to leave a house unfinished and a new wife desolate, which was the case of Protesilaus. Homer, Il. i.

that hath built a new house, and hath not dedicated it? let him go, and return to his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man dedicate it.

6 What man is there, that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not as yet made it to be common, whereof all men may eat? let him go, and return to his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man execute his office.

7 What man is there, that hath espoused a wife, and not taken her? let him go, and return to his house, lest he die in the war, and another man take her.

8 After these things are declared, they shall add the rest, and shall speak to the people: "What man is there, that is fearful and faint-hearted? let him go, and return to his house, lest he make the hearts of his brethren to fear, as he himself is possessed with fear.

9 And when the captains of the army shall hold their peace, and have made an end of speaking, every man shall prepare their bands to fight.

10 If at any time thou come to fight against a city, thou shalt first offer it peace.

11 If they receive it, and open the gates to thee, all the people that are therein shall be saved, and shall serve thee, paying tribute.

12 But if they will not make peace, and shall begin war against thee, thou shalt besiege it,

13 And when the Lord thy God shall deliver it into

* Judges vii. 3.

VER. 6. Common. Heb. "hath not profaned it." M.—During the three first years, the fruit was not eaten. In the fourth it was sacred to the Lord, and given to the priests, so that the owner could not partake of the fruit till the fifth year, when it ceased to be in a manner sacred. Jonathan translates, "and has not redeemed it," by paying the first-fruits of the fifth year. Sept. "has not rejoiced in it," by feasting, as was probably the custom at the first vintage. Other fruit-trees entitled the owner to the like privilege. Schikard. Jus. reg. 5.—Whereof all may eat, is added by the Vulg. to explain what is meant by common. C.

VER. 7. Taken her. It was customary to leave the espoused virgin in her father's house for the space of a year, (during which time, if she proved unfaithful, she was punished like an adulteress, C. xxi. 23, &c.) and she could not be given till she was 12 years old. If she were 18 complete, when she was asked in marriage, she was only obliged to wait 30 days. Seld. Uxor. ii. 1. C. xxv. 5. Philo allows this immunity from war, only to those who had espoused a virgin. They were also freed from paying taxes, mending roads, &c. C. xxix. 5. C.—Those who are entangled with worldly cares, are apt to discourage the valiant, and to dissuade fighting, for fear of losing these advantages: much more are those in danger who have to fight for a heavenly kingdom, if they be too much attached to the things of the earth. W. H.—"That man who is enslaved to his wife, cannot serve in the warfare of the Lord." S. Jer. c. Jov. i.

VER. 8. Fear. Such often occasion the loss of battles. Alexander sent away all who had not courage to follow him in his expeditions. Curt. x. The Rabbins condemn these faint-hearted soldiers to carry water, &c. for the army, to prepare the roads and places for encampments. C.—But this seems contrary to the intention of the lawgiver, who sends them back to their houses.

VER. 9. Man. Heb. and Sept. "when the officers have made an end of speaking to the people, they shall appoint captains of the armies to lead forth the people." H.—It seems rather late to have this to do, when the battle was ready to commence, unless perhaps the whole was arranged in a general assembly, when no one was at the head of the people, (C.) as was sometimes the case in the days of the judges. H.—Heb. of the Misorets implies, "The princes of the army shall make a review (or take down the numbers) at the head of the people."

VER. 10. Peace. Interpreters are not agreed whether this law was general, and included the nations whom God had ordered the Hebrews to exterminate, or not. They were nothing but the executioners of his decree. They were commanded not to marry any of their daughters, but to put all to fire and sword. Ex. xxxiv. 15. 16. The cities which were not assigned to them for a possession, were to be treated in a different manner; (v. 15,) and hence the Gabaonites, being convinced that they were comprised in the number of the devoted cities, pretended that they came from a great distance. Josue (ix. 4. 7,) and the heads of the people, acknowledge that they could not make a league with those nations whose lands they were to possess. Yet the Gemarra of Jerusalem asserts, that Josue proposed to the Chanaanites, "flight, peace, or war." The Gergesites hereupon fled into Africa, the Gabaonites accepted peace, and 31 kings declared for war. Seld. Jur. vi. 13.—Maimonides and Grotius (Jur. ii. 13,) maintain, that no war can be lawful, unless an offer of peace be made. The latter undertakes to prove, that the commands respecting the Chanaanites were conditional, and presupposed that they would not yield to the terms which were offered. Hence Rahab was saved, the league with the Gabaonites was kept, even after it was known who they really were. Solomon, who conquered some of the surviving thy hands, thou shalt slay all that are therein of the male sex, with the edge of the sword, 14 Excepting women and children, cattle and other things, that are in the city. And thou shalt divide all the prey to the army, and thou shalt eat the spoils of thy enemies, which the Lord thy God shall give thee.

15 So shalt thou do to all cities that are at a great distance from thee, and are not of these cities which thou shalt receive in possession.

16 But of those cities that shall be given thee, thou shalt suffer none at all to live:

17 But shalt kill them with the edge of the sword, to wit, the Hethite, and the Amorrite, and the Chanaanite, the Pherezite, and the Hevite, and the Jebusite, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee:

18 Lest they teach you to do all the abominations which they have done to their gods: and you should sin against the Lord your God.

19 When thou hast besieged a city a long time, and hath compassed it with bulwarks, to take it, thou shalt not cut down the trees that may be eaten of, neither shalt thou spoil the country round about with axes: for it is a tree, and not a man, neither can it increase the number of them that fight against thee.

20 But if there be any trees that are not fruitful, but wild, and fit for other uses, cut them down, and make engines, until thou take the city, which fighteth against thee.

Chanaanites, did not think himself bound to destroy them, 3 K. ix. 2. 2 Par. vii. 7. The reason why they seem to be consigned to death without pity, is because God foresaw their evil disposition, as Josue (xi. 20,) insinuates, and the Israelites under his eye gave quarter to some Chanaanites. "War, says S. Aug. (ep. 189. ad. Bonif.) is waged only that peace may be obtained." But these arguments do not seem so convincing, as to take away the opposition which God has established between these devoted nations and others, v. 15. What he commands cannot be unjust, and the army only executes his sentence. S. Aug. in Jos. q. 10. Grotius allows that he foresaw the obstinacy of the Chanaanites, so that it would have been useless to offer them any terms; and in effect, we find no vestiges of any being offered in the books of Moses or of Josue. C.—Yet see C. xxi. 10. H.—The Israelites might have many reasons for going to war either with their brethren, or with foreign nations, as to punish a heinous crime, a rebellion, &c. (see Judg. xx. 2 K. x. 4. and xx. 15,) on which occasions they were bound to offer terms. C.—"A wise man ought to try every expedient before he takes up arms." Terence.

VER. 11. Tribute. This was usually imposed by the victor, to defray the expenses of the war, and to prevent its breaking out again. The kings of Moab had to pay 100,000 rams, and as many sheep, to the kings of Juda, 4 K. iii. 4. Hiram gave 120 talents of gold to Solomon, by way of tribute, 3 K. ix. 15. Josue and Solomon condemned some of the Chanaanites to manual labour, 2 Par. viii. 8.

VER. 12. Besiege it. The Rabbins assert, that when the city of Madian was attacked in the days of Moses, one side was left unmolested, that the inhabitants might escape, and that this practice was afterwards observed as a law. But we see nothing of the kind in Scripture.

VER. 14. Excepting women, &c. These were supposed incapable of making any resistance, or of carrying arms. Slaves also were excused, on account of their want of liberty to choose for themselves, and old men, unless the war was undertaken by their advice. "I am not accustomed to wage war with captives, nor with women," said Alexander. Curt. 5.

VER. 16. Live. Heb. "thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth." Josephus (iv. 8) acknowledges that all were to be slain; though some of the Rabbins have supposed that they might be spared, if they would abandon idols, &c.

VER. 17. Jebusite. Sam. and Sept. add "the Gergesite." C.

VER. 19. Not a man. Heb. "the tree of the field, man." Which the Protestants supply, "is man's life to employ them in the siege." Sept. "is the tree . . a man?" H.—We might render the Heb. "as for the tree of the field, it shall come to thy assistance in the siege." v. 20. H.—They are "like men," and may be of great service in making warlike engines. They are here contrasted with fruit-trees, which must not be cut down, unless they be in the way, or of service to the enemy. All other things of the same nature, as houses, corn, water, &c. must be spared, as well as those who do not bear arms. Yet God ordered the houses to be demolished in the war with the Moabites, 4 K. iii. 19. C.—Pythagoras enjoins his disciples not to spoil a fruit tree. Jamblic and the great teachers have complied with this advice. C.

VER. 20. Engines. Heb. matsor, Besieged cities were surrounded with pali- sades, for which a great deal of wood was requisite. Lu. xix. 45. Josephus (Bel. v. 31,) informs us, that Titus surrounded Jerusalem with a wall in the space of three days, having cut down the wood all around. See 4 K. vi and xvii and xxv. Ezec. xxvi. 7. C.

CHAP. XXI.

The expiation of a secret murder. The marrying of a captive. The eldest son must not be deprived of his birth-right for hatred of his mother. A stubborn son is to be stoned to death. When one is hanged on a gibbet, he must be taken down the same day, and buried.

WHEN there shall be found in the land which the Lord thy God will give thee, the corpse of a man slain, and it is not known who is guilty of the murder,

2 Thy ancients and judges shall go out, and shall measure from the place where the body lieth, the distance of every city round about:

3 And the ancients of that city, which they shall perceive to be nearer than the rest, shall take a heifer of the herd, that hath not drawn in the yoke, nor ploughed the ground,

4 And they shall bring her into a rough and stony valley, that never was ploughed, nor sown: and there they shall strike off the head of the heifer:

5 And the priests, the sons of Levi, shall come, whom the Lord thy God hath chosen to minister to him, and to bless in his name, and that by their word every mat-

— A. M. 2553, A. C. 1451.

CHAP. XXI. VER. 1. Land. The Jewish doctors hence infer, that if the corpse was found hanging or drowned, &c. or nearer a town of the Gentiles than one of the Israelites, this law did not oblige. They are so exact as to dispute whether the distance must be measured from the nose or from the navel of the deceased. Seld. Syned. iii. 7. But the law shews us, that the author of the murder must be discovered, if possible, as the crime is so grievous as, in a manner, to defile the land, and draw down the vengeance of God, if it be carelessly left unpunished. C.

VER. 2. Ancients and judges. After the strictest enquiry, if the murderer could not be discovered, the magistrates and senate of the neighbouring cities measured which city the corpse was nearest. Joseph. iv. 8. The Rabbins pretend that five of the Sanhedrim were commissioned to make this enquiry, along with the magistrates of the neighbourhood. Others think that the ancients were only the old men. The measuring took place only when the point was contested, and those cities are probably meant, which were of sufficient importance to have twenty-three judges fixed in them. C.—It was presumed that the nearest had been guilty of greater negligence. H.

VER. 3. Heifer, not above three years old, say the Rabbins. The pagans esteemed those victims more agreeable to the gods, which had not been yoked. Cherron observes, that the Egyptians rejected such as had been once "consecrated to labour." Grotius.—This circumstance might here indicate, that the murderer was a son of Belial, or "without yoke;" (C. xiii. 13. M.) and the heifer was slain to show what he deserved, and must expect if he be discovered. H.

VER. 4. Valley. In such places murders are most frequently perpetrated. Heb. may signify, "a desert," deep or inaccessible torrent, (H.) on the side of which the heifer was to be slain, and its body was then, it seems, thrown into the water. The ancients first washed their hands over her. Thus the victim of maleficence against those who break a covenant, is buried in a ditch, or cast into the sea. Hom. Iliad i.—Waa. Some translate the Heb. "shall be," as if the place was to be hereafter considered as unclean and accursed. C.—The roughness and depth of the valley, denote the hardness of the murderer's heart, and the depth of his malice. M.—Strike off, or cadent, "cut the neck," (H.) at the top, without perhaps separating it entirely from the body. Blood was given for blood, and this was the chief design of the bloody sacrifices. For this reason, the Egyptians impressed a seal on the horns of the victim, representing a man kneeling, with his hands tied behind his back, as if ready to receive the stroke of death. Plut. Isis.

VER. 5. Judged. We see here again the great authority of the priests. C. xvii. 9. Heb. "by their word shall every controversy and every stroke be tried," as the Prot. render it. H.—Some understand by stroke, the leprosy, of which they were undoubtedly the judges. But it is better to explain it of all wounds, and even of death, (C.) concerning which Moses is here speaking. H.—The Rabbins restrain the authority of priests as much as they can, to give greater power to their chimerical Sanhedrim. They pretend that here they had only to pronounce the blessing, v. 8. Josephus (iv. 8.) joins the magistrates with them in the whole ceremony. This awful meeting of so many people, tended to discover the authors of the murder, as all would naturally converse together on the subject, and each person declaring what he knew, some suspicions might at last be formed, which might by degrees lead to the detection. Josephus says rewards were proposed to any who might make a discovery. Draco decreed, that on the very day when a murder was announced, if the author was not known, the whole people (of Athens) should be purified. C.—Abulensis insinuates, that if the murderer was present in the crowd, he might be detected by blood gushing from the corpse of the deceased, &c. as God often brings murder to light in a wonderful manner. Cic. Div. i. T.

VER. 6. Wash. This was intended to testify that they were not guilty of the blood which had been shed, and that they wished to remove the punishment of it from themselves upon the head of the heifer, (C.) the representative of the unknown murderer. So Pilate conformed to this custom, when he condemned Christ to the bare accusation of the Jews; (Mat. xxvii. 24.) and the priest, at mass, ter should be decided, and whatsoever is clean or unclean should be judged.

6 And the ancients of that city shall come to the person slain, and shall wash their hands over the heifer that was killed in the valley,

7 And shall say: Our hands did not shed this blood, nor did our eyes see it.

8 Be merciful to thy people Israel, whom thou hast redeemed, O Lord, and lay not innocent blood to their charge in the midst of thy people Israel. And the guilt of blood shall be taken from them:

9 And thou shalt be free from the innocent's blood that was shed, when thou shalt have done what the Lord hath commanded thee.

10 If thou go out to fight against thy enemies, and the Lord thy God deliver them into thy hand, and thou lead them away captives,

11 And seest in the number of the captives a beautiful woman, and lovest her, and wilt have her to wife,

12 Thou shalt bring her into thy house: and she shall shave her hair, and pare her nails, washes his hands, as an emblem of that innocence, with which he ought to approach to the holy of holies. H.—Asterius was stricken with lightning, for touching the altar of Jupiter without having washed his hands. Natal. Myth. i. 10. 14. The pagans generally purified themselves with fumigations, or by sprinkling sea water upon their bodies. Achilles ordered the things which had been used to purify the Greeks, at the siege of Troy, to be thrown into the sea, as being unclean. Iliad i.

VER. 7. H. Magistrates are in some degree responsible, if by their neglect the high roads are unsafe. C.—They had testified that they had done their duty. W.

VER. 8. And, &c. Heb. "Thou shalt put away," (H.) or "extinguish the voice of innocent blood," which otherwise would cry to heaven for vengeance. Gen. iv. 10. In this sacrifice, (C.) though it deserves not the name, (M.) we may consider Jesus Christ suffering for the sins of others. C.

VER. 10. Captives. Some Rabbins say this was only lawful in what they call voluntary wars, which the Lord had not commanded, as in those which were waged against the devoted nations, it was not permitted to reserve the women, even though they should embrace the true religion. Calmet seems to be of the same opinion in the preceding chapter, to which he even refers. But here he thinks, that upon their complying with the condition specified, they might be married, as Rahab was, and consequently this law must be considered as an exception to those general laws, which prohibit matrimony with those nations of Chanaan, which were otherwise ordered to be entirely destroyed. C. vi. 16. "We believe, says he, that if these women changed their religion, they might be espoused, of whatever nation they might be." He seems still to exclude the Chanaanite women, (C. xxiii. 8.) which variation of sentiment shews that the point is not to be easily decided. H.

VER. 11. Lovest her. The Jewish doctors explain this of an action, which modesty disallows, and which they tolerate nevertheless in the first transports of victory; (Seld. Jur. v. 13.) though the pagans condemned it as unjust and contrary to reason. Grot. Jur. iii. 4.—All know with what reserve Alexander treated the captive women; and the Romans banished one Torquatus, for having violated a prisoner of war. Plut.—Yet the Jews blush not to assert, that such liberties might be taken even with married women, as their former marriage with a pagan was by some deemed null, and by others thought to be dissolved. Joseph. iv. 8. C.—The law, however, seems only to allow the marrying of those who had no husbands before, as the women are only said to mourn for father and mother, v. 13. H.—On these occasions the Chinese, and probably the Egyptians also, and the Roman matrons, formerly clothed themselves in white, while almost all other nations assumed black. T.

VER. 12. Hair. In mourning, people did the reverse to what they were accustomed to do in the days of joy. The men let their hair grow, the women cut this ornament of their head, a thing which the prophets often threaten. Is. xv. 23. Jer. xlvii. 5. &c. C.—Nails. Some would translate the Heb. "she shall make her nails grow," as a mark of sorrow, perhaps usual among the pagans, faciet ungues. But the Sept. Philo, &c. agree with the Vulg.; (M.) and the Heb. may very well have the same sense. We must not judge of the idea which others have of beauty, by our own sentiments. Some women in America have long nails, and esteem them as marks of beauty and nobility; and in China, they let those of the left hand grow, and cut them in mourning. Hist. Sin. iii. 1. The people of Mauritania take a pride in having long nails. Strabo xvii. The Duke of Burgundy, not 300 years ago, was distinguished among the slain, before Nancy in France, (H.) by the length of his nails; (C.) and, in ancient times, people never cut them in voyages at sea, unless to express their grief in extreme danger. Hinc fluctus vivo radicibus abstulit ungues. Propert. iii. Petron. Why, therefore, might not these captives follow the same custom, as all depends on fashion? C.—The woman being deprived of her ornaments, the passion of the soldier might probably abate. S. Jerom (ep. 84.) applies this to worldly learning, which he endeavoured to make subservient to the truth, after he had cut away what was dead and pernicious in it. D.

13 And shall put off the raiment, wherein she was taken: and shall remain in thy house, and mourn for her father and mother one month: and after that thou shalt go in unto her, and shalt sleep with her, and she shall be thy wife.

14 But if afterwards she please thee not, thou shalt let her go free, but thou mayst not sell her for money, nor oppress her by might: because thou hast humbled her.

15 If a man have two wives, one beloved, and the other hated, and they have had children by him, and the son of the hated be the first-born,

16 And he meaneth to divide his substance among his sons: he may not make the son of the beloved the first-born, and prefer him before the son of the hated;

17 *But he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the first-born, and shall give him a double portion of all he hath: for this is the first of his children, and to him are due the first birth-rights.

18 If a man have a stubborn and unruly son, who will not hear the commandments of his father or mother, and being corrected, slighteth obedience:

19 They shall take him, and bring him to the ancients of his city, and to the gate of judgment,

20 And shall say to them: This our son is rebellious and stubborn, he slighteth hearing our admonitions, he giveth himself to revelling, and to debauchery, and banquetings:

21 The people of the city shall stone him: and he shall die, that you may take away the evil out of the midst of you, and all Israel hearing it may be afraid.

22 When a man hath committed a crime for which he is to be punished with death, and being condemned to die, is hanged on a gibbet:

23 His body shall not remain upon the tree, but shall be buried the same day: for he is accursed of God that hangeth on a tree: and thou shalt not defile thy land, which the Lord thy God shall give thee in possession.

CHAP. XXII.

Humanity towards neighbours. Neither sex may use the apparel of the other. Cruelty to be avoided, even to birds. Battlements about the roof of a house. Things of divers kinds not to be mixed. The punishment of him that slandereth his wife, as also of adultery and rape.

THOU shalt not pass by if thou seest thy brother's ox, or his sheep go astray: but thou shalt bring them back to thy brother.

2 And if thy brother be not nigh, or thou know him not: thou shalt bring them to thy house, and they shall be with thee until thy brother seek them, and receive them.

* 1 Par. v. 1.—b Gal. iii. 18.

c A. M. 2553. Exod. xxiv. 4.

VER. 13. Raiment. In mourning, people wore different clothes from what they did at other times. 2 K. xiv. 2.—One month. So long the mourning for Aaron and Moses continued. C. ult. Num. xx. M.

VER. 14. Her. Nothing shews the weakness of the Hebrews more than this liberty, which the law was in a manner forced to allow, to prevent greater evils. The soldier who has married a captive, may abandon her, if he set her free, (C.) which was but a slight punishment for his inconstancy.

VER. 15. Two wives. Moses never expressly (H.) sanctions polygamy; but he tolerates it frequently, as excused by custom, the example of the Patriarchs, &c. a toleration which Christ has revoked, as contrary to the primary design of God, and the institution of matrimony. C. Mat. xix.

VER. 16. Hated, or less loved. H.—The inheritance goes to the first-born independently of the father's disposition, in order to prevent the disturbances which would otherwise have taken place in families, where the different wives would have been continually endeavouring to get their respective children preferred before the rest. David indeed assigned the throne to Solomon, to the exclusion of Adonias; but this was done by the command of God. 3 K. i. 17. The regulation of Jacob, in favour of Joseph was made prior to this law. The Jewish doctors inform us, that a father cannot disinherit any of his lawful heirs, except the judges ratify his sentence, while he is in health. But if he be dangerously ill, his verbal declaration will suffice, provided he appoint some one whom the law does not reject. For if he were to make a Gentile his heir, the will would be null. The testament must be made in the day time, for which they cite Eccl. xxxiii. 24. They say likewise that a father may, while living, give his effects to whom he pleases, and by this means disinherit his children; or he may give the succession to one of them, who is then considered as a tutor of the rest, and is bound to maintain them with necessaries till the year of jubilee, when each may claim his respective share. Seld. Succes. c. xxiv. But all these regulations seem to contradict the law. C.

VER. 17. Double portion. If a person left six children, his effects were divided into seven equal parts, and the eldest son received two of them, though others think that he was entitled to one-half of the whole, (C.) in order to enable him to support the dignity of the family, (H.) and the greater expenses which he had to incur for sacrifices and solemn feasts. Grot.—If he were dead, his children or heirs were entitled to his portion. This was the prerogative of the first-born, 1 Par. v. 2. Selden.—The right to the priesthood, if they might have claimed it before the law, was now given to the family of Aaron. Females had no privilege above one another. They received equal shares, when there was no male issue, Num. xxxvi. H.—First. Heb. "the beginning of his strength." See Gen. xlix. 3.

VER. 18. Son. The Rabbins do not look upon children as bound by the law, till they be 13 years old. Their faults, before that age, are imputed to the father, and he is to be punished for them. When, therefore, a son has attained the competent years, the father makes attestation of it in the presence of ten Jews, declaring that he has instructed his son in the commandments, customs of the nation, and daily prayers; and that he now sets him at liberty to answer, in future, for his own faults, praying that God would enable him to lead a virtuous life. C.

VER. 19. Ancients. In considerable cities there was a tribunal of three, and another of 23 judges. The former took cognizance of the first accusation, and condemned the stubborn child to be scourged: but the latter sentenced him to be stoned in case of a relapse, provided both parents concurred in prosecuting their son, as they would not both surely be guided by passion. Theod. q. 20. The Rabbins, according to their custom, modify this law, and exempt girls, orphans, and boys under 13 years of age. Seld. Syn. i.—Josephus (xvi. 17,) says, that the parents laid their hands on the head of the undutiful, and then all the people stoned him. Moses has not specified the punishment of parricides, (C.) as he deemed it next to impossible. H.—But we may hence judge how he would have chastised so heinous a crime. The Romans formerly sewed such wretches in a leathern sack, (Cic. Invent. ii.) but afterwards they enclosed with them a dog, a cock, a viper, and a monkey; and having first whipped them so as to fetch blood, placed them in a chariot drawn by black oxen, and hurled them into the sea or into some river. Justinian.—Solomon sentences those who condemn their parents to be the food of crows and eagles. Prov. xxx. 17. No restraints were laid by the ancient Greeks on the authority of a father, as he was esteemed the most equitable judge. Sopater, ap. Grot. C.

VER. 22. Gibbet. Whether the person was first killed, as the Jews assert, or he was left to die upon the gibbet, see Calmet's Diss. It is also a matter of doubt, whether he was nailed to the gibbet, or hung on it by a rope. Bonfrere.

VER. 23. Of God. Chal. "he has been fixed on the gibbet for sinning against God." Sym. and Arab. "he has blasphemed the Lord." Syriac, "the man who has blasphemed shall be hung." Only people accused of great crimes, such as blasphemy and idolatry, were condemned to this reproachful death, and prayers were not said for them in the synagogue, as they were for other persons, during the 11 months following their decease. C.—They are not to be remembered before God. Their dead bodies are to be buried before sunset, that the country may not be defiled. The punishment itself is extremely infamous, and the name of God is often used by the Jews, to express something in the highest degree, as the cedars of God, &c. H.—Some understand this passage, as if the body were not to be left on the gibbet, because man, being created to the likeness of God, he will not allow the body to be insulted. Homer (Il. xiv.) says that Achilles offered an insult to the earth, when he dragged the dead body of Hector round the walls of Troy. Others think, that the criminal having been treated with due severity, as accursed of God, his corpse must not be deprived of decent burial. Res sacra miser. The Jews refused this privilege to none but suicides, (Josep. Bel. iii. 25,) while the Egyptians and Phœnicians suffered the bodies to rot upon the gibbet, whose inhumanity God here reproves. S. Paul reads this verse in a different manner both from the Heb. and Sept. leaving out of God, and substituting, with the Sept. the words every one, and on a tree. Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree. Gal. iii. 13. S. Jerom remarks, that on this as well as on other occasions, he adheres to the sense, without following the express words of Scripture. He also observes, with Tertullian, that only those are declared accursed by the law, who are hung for their crimes; and as Jesus Christ suffered, not for any fault of his own, but being willing to appear in the character of one accursed, he has procured for us all blessings. C.—In a mystical sense, that man is accursed who is obstinate in sin, hanging as it were on the tree, which was the occasion of our first parents' transgression. W.—S. Jerom seems to think that the Jews have inserted of God, to intimate that Christ was accursed of him. H.

CHAP. XXII. VER. 1. Pass by. Heb. "hide thyself," pretending not to see it.—Brother. Any fellow creature. Ex. xxiii. 4. Lu. x. 30. C.—"We are very inhuman, not to shew as much concern for a man, as the Jews do for a beast of burden." S. Chrys. ser. 18. D.

VER. 2. Not nigh, either in blood or in place, (C.) though the latter signification seems more applicable; as, if the person lived at too great a distance, it would suffice to inform him where he might find what he had lost; and, if the owner was unknown, the thing must be taken care of by him who finds it, till he be discovered. H.

3 Thou shalt do in like manner with his ass, and with his raiment, and with every thing that is thy brother's, which is lost: if thou find it, neglect it not as pertaining to another.

4 If thou see thy brother's ass or his ox to be fallen down in the way, thou shalt not slight it, but shalt lift it up with him.

5 A woman shall not be clothed with man's apparel, neither shall a man use woman's apparel: for he that doth these things is abominable before God.

6 If thou find, as thou walkest by the way, a bird's nest in a tree, or on the ground, and the dam sitting upon the young, or upon the eggs: thou shalt not take her with her young:

7 But shalt let her go, keeping the young which thou hast caught: that it may be well with thee, and thou mayst live a long time.

8 When thou buildest a new house, thou shalt make a battlement to the roof round about: lest blood be shed in thy house, and thou be guilty, if any one slip and fall down headlong.

9 Thou shalt not sow thy vineyard with divers seeds: lest both the seed which thou hast sown, and the fruit of the vineyard, be sanctified together.

* Num. xv. 38.

VER. 3. If, &c. Heb. "thou must not hide thyself," so as to pass it by, nor yet conceal it from the right owner. When a thing is certainly abandoned by him, it belongs to the person who seizes it first; but if it be only lost, it must surely be restored, if possible, (Grot. Jur. ii. 10,) as nature forbids us to take advantage of another's misfortune. Cicero.—The Rabbins have corrupted this law, like so many others, by their evil interpretations. They pretend that a Jew must restore what he has found belonging to another true believer, if it have certain marks by which it may be known, but not if it belonged to a prevaricator or infidel. In the former supposition, they got the thing cried on a high stone near Jerusalem four times, and if the owner did not then claim his property, the finder might keep it. Seld. Jur. vi. 4.—The inhabitants of Cumæ condemned the next neighbour to restore what had been lost; as Hesiod (op. 348,) very well remarks, that things would not easily be lost, if the neighbours were not ill-disposed.

VER. 4. With him. Heb. "thou shalt not hide thyself, but help him to lift up." Ex. xxiii. 4.

VER. 5. God. Some take this literally, as the contrary practice is contrary to decency, and might be attended with very pernicious consequences. All know what noise was occasioned by the action of Clodius, who put on women's apparel, that he might be present with the Roman ladies at the feast of the good goddess. Yet others think that Moses here forbids some superstitious practice. S. Ambrose (ep. 69,) remarks, that in some of the mysteries of the idols, it was requisite for those present to change clothes in this manner, sacrum putatur. Lucian testifies, that men put on women's clothes at the feasts of Bacchus. They did the like in those of Venus, while the women took men's clothes in the festivals of Mars. Jul. Hirmic. c. 4. Maimon.—In the East, people honoured the moon, to which they attributed both sexes, and Venus in like manner. Josephus (iv. 8,) believes that women are here prohibited to engage in warfare. Heb. "the vessels (armour) of man shall not be upon a woman." Semiramis gained a great name by her martial exploits, and commanded all her subjects to dress like herself. Justin. i.—The Amazons were likewise very famous in war, and it is said that half the army of Bacchus was composed of women. Alb. Gentil maintains that Moses here condemns an abominable crime, which he did not wish to mention, at which the Book of Wisdom hints, (C. xiv. 26,) and which S. Paul condemns more explicitly. Rom. i. 26. Moses had already denounced death against the perpetrators of it; and surely the manner in which he now speaks, seems to forbid something more than simply putting on the garments of the other sex, for he, &c. C.—Yet that disorderly conduct deserved to be reprobated in strong terms, (H.) when it was not excused by some necessity or proper motive, such as actuated some holy virgins, S. Theodora, &c. T.

VER. 6. Thou shalt not take, &c. This was to shew them to exercise a certain mercy even to irrational creatures; and by that means to train them up to a horror of cruelty; and to the exercise of humanity, and mutual charity one to another. Ch.—Some were of opinion that the person who could take the old bird on the nest, might assure himself of good fortune, fecundity, &c. S. Thom. i. 2. q. 102. a. 6. Such superstition is reprehensible. Phocildes advises not to take all the young ones, nor the hen, in consideration of one's having more birds. C.

VER. 7. Time. Those who refrain from cruelty, even towards beasts, will be induced more easily to shew mercy to their fellow creatures, (Tert. c. Marc. ii.) and will draw down the blessings of God upon themselves. M.

VER. 8. Battlement. This precaution was necessary, because all their houses had flat tops; and it was usual to walk and to converse together upon them. Ch.—King Ochozias had the misfortune to fall from the top of his house, (4 K. i. 2,) and David saw Bethsabee when he was walking on the roof of his palace, 2 K. xi. 2. Saul slept on the top of Samuel's house, 1 K. ix. 25. See Jos. ii. 66. Mat. x. 27. H.

10 Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together.

11 Thou shalt not wear a garment, that is woven of woollen and linen together.

12 *Thou shalt make strings in the hem at the four corners of thy cloak, wherewith thou shalt be covered.

13 If a man marry a wife, and afterwards hate her.

14 And seek occasions to put her away, laying to her charge a very ill name, and say: I took this woman to wife, and going in to her, I found her not a virgin:

15 Her father and mother shall take her, and shall bring with them the tokens of her virginity to the ancients of the city that are in the gate:

16 And the father shall say: I gave my daughter unto this man to wife: and because he hateth her,

17 He layeth to her charge a very ill name, so as to say: I found not thy daughter a virgin: and behold these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity. And they shall spread the cloth before the ancients of the city:

18 And the ancients of that city shall take that man, and beat him,

19 Condemning him besides in a hundred sicles of silver, which he shall give to the damsel's father, because he hath defamed by a very ill name a virgin of

VER. 9. Together. If wheat was sown in a vineyard, it would ripen much sooner than the grapes; and as the first-fruits of both were offered to the Lord, the owner would lose the profit which he had too greedily sought after, the place being esteemed both pure and impure at the same time. This mixture of seeds would also impoverish the land, so that it would be like a place defiled, and unfit for cultivation, Jansen, in Lev. xix. 19. Maimonides supposes that the practice of the Zabians is here reprobated. They sowed the land with corn and dry grapes, in honour of Ceres and Bacchus, (More. Nev. p. 3. c. 57,) who presided over the harvest and vintage among the pagans. Wm. of Paris. Leg. 18.—Moses might also, by this symbolical language, condemn unnatural connexions, as he perhaps does, v. 10.

VER. 10. Plough. In Levit. xix. 19, this law is expressed, so as to forbid the procreation of mongrels. See Judg. xiv. 18. People who have treated on agriculture observe, that it is a pernicious practice to make animals of unequal size and speed work together. Colum. vi. 2.—S. Paul explains to us the mystical sense of this passage. Bear not the yoke together with infidels, 2 Cor. vi. 14. C.—Marry not with such. H.—Employ not in the sacred ministry the imprudent and wicked with those of a virtuous disposition. S. Greg. Mor. l. 18.

VER. 11. Together. This is now lawful. But a virgin consecrated to God, must not dress like a married woman: the different states of life must not be confounded. S. Aug. c. Faust. vi. 9. D.

VER. 12. Strings, probably to gird the outer garment round the loins. See Num. xv. 38.

VER. 14. Name. Heb. "and occasion reports against her to bring an evil name upon her," (H.) that he may not have to return her dowry. For, according to many of the Rabbins, he might give her a bill of divorce, simply if he did not like her. Seld. Uxor. iii. 1, &c.—They allow the proof here specified, only with respect to a Hebrew woman between twelve and twelve and a half years old, during the period of her being espoused, but not taken home by her husband. The cause was to be tried before the 23 judges. Oftentimes only witnesses, probably matrons, were examined in defence of the woman. Josep. iv. 8. S. Ambrose (ep. 8. 64. ad Syagr.) highly disapproves of such unsatisfactory methods. The marks assigned by the law were commonly observed in Syria, Persia, &c. The Arab physicians speak of them. See Valosius, c. xxv. The age in which women were then married, the climate, &c. caused these indications to be more clear, and deposited for or against the fidelity of the bride. The mother had them entrusted to her care by the friends of the husband, who had kept watch at the door on the wedding night. M. Nachman, ap. Fagium.

VER. 15. Her. It does not appear that the woman was present at the trial; she remained at her father's, or rather at her husband's house, till sentence was passed. C.—Heb. "then shall the father of the damsel and her mother take and produce the damsel's virginity," or the tokens of it.

VER. 18. Beat him. Heb. "chastise." Sept. may signify also, "reprimand him." But (H.) Josephus says the husband was to receive 39 lashes; and Philo informs us that the woman might leave him, if she thought proper; though, if she were willing to stay, he had not the power to divorce her, v. 19.

VER. 19. A hundred. Josephus only mentions 50. As it was presumed that the false accusation proceeded from a desire to defraud the woman of her dowry, the law obliged the husband to allow her double (C.) the usual sum. Yet this punishment, together with the scourging, was very inadequate to what the woman would have had to suffer if she had been condemned. H.—S. Augustine (q. 32,) is surprised at this decision, as in other cases calumny was subjected to the law of retaliation, or punished with death. This shews also that wives, among the Jews, were considered as little more than servants. C.

Israel: and he shall have her to wife, and may not put her away all the days of his life.

20 But if what he chargeth her with be true, and virginity be not found in the damsel:

21 They shall cast her out of the doors of her father's house, and the men of the city shall stone her to death, and she shall die: because she hath done a wicked thing in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: and thou shalt take away the evil out of the midst of thee.

22 *If a man lie with another man's wife, they shall both die, that is to say, the adulterer and the adulteress: and thou shalt take away the evil out of Israel.

23 If a man have espoused a damsel that is a virgin, and some one find her in the city, and lie with her,

24 Thou shalt bring them both out to the gate of that city, and they shall be stoned: the damsel, because she cried not out, being in the city: the man, because he hath humbled his neighbour's wife. And thou shalt take away the evil from the midst of thee.

25 But if a man find a damsel that is betrothed, in the field, and taking hold of her, lie with her, he alone shall die:

26 The damsel shall suffer nothing, neither is she guilty of death: for as a robber riseth against his brother, and taketh away his life, so also did the damsel suffer:

27 She was alone in the field: she cried, and there was no man to help her.

28 If a man find a damsel that is a virgin, who is not

* Levit. xx. 10.—^b Exod xxii. 16.—^c A. M. 2553.

VER. 21. Die. It was concluded that she had committed the sin after her espousal. If it had happened before, she was to receive only 25 sicles for a dowry; though, if she took an oath that violence had been offered to her, she was entitled to 50: which opinion of the Rabbins seems very equitable. Æschines (in Timarch.) relates, that a man at Athens punished the transgression of which his daughter had been guilty, while she was at home, by shutting her up with a horse, in order that she might be torn in pieces by the famished animal. C.

VER. 22. Die. The man was to be strangled as well as the married woman; if she were espoused only, she was to be stoned. The daughter of a priest was burnt alive. Rabbins. C. See Lev. xx. 10.

VER. 24. Wife. After the woman was espoused, (v. 23,) she was called a wife, and punished accordingly, if she proved unfaithful.

VER. 25. Hold. Sept. "offering violence," also v. 28. H.—Die. Moses supposes that the woman in the field had made all possible resistance, and that the one in the city had, by silence at least, consented. But if the case were otherwise, the judges were to make all necessary enquiries, and pass sentence accordingly. C.

VER. 29. Life. A law nearly similar occurs, Ex. xxii. 16. (H.) only there Moses speaks of seduction. M.—If the father or the woman refused their consent to the marriage, the person had only to pay the 50 sicles; which the woman received, if her father was not alive. But if they consented, the person who had been condemned by the judge, was bound to marry the woman, how deformed soever. Seld. Uxor. i. 16. C.

VER. 30. Covering. See Lev. xx. 11. A wife should be hidden from all but her husband. H.

CHAP. XXIII. VER. 1. Eunuch. By these are meant, in the spiritual sense, such as are barren in good works. Ch. Theod. q. 25. W.—The Heb. also specifies three sorts of eunuchs, though the Sept. and Chald. have only two. No mention is made of natural eunuchs, who are not excluded from the church of the Lord. C.—This outrage of castration was first offered to nature by Semiramis. Am. Marcellin. 14.—Church. That is, into the assembly or congregation of Israel, so as to have the privilege of an Israelite, or to be capable of any place or office among the people of God. Ch.—Philo says, they were not to enter the court of the temple. See Lament. i. 10. Others think they could not embrace the Jewish religion. Ex. xii. 48. But this privilege could not be refused. Most probably the custom of making eunuchs is forbidden, and if any were found among the Jews, they should not be admitted to any place of authority. Isaias (lvi. 5,) speaks of some faithful eunuchs, to whom God will give a place in his house; but he alludes to those of the new law, who embrace the state of celibacy. Mat. xix. 12. Eunuchs were rejected from the magistracy among the Romans; and when some were at last received, it was deemed unnatural, as their disposition is generally cruel and selfish. Omnia cessarent Eunuchis Consule monstra. Claud. in Eutrop. i. C.—Those who had the misfortune among the Jews to be eunuchs, did not perhaps (H.) lose the right of citizenship. T.

VER. 2. Mamzer, &c. The author of the Vulg. adds the explication of mamzer, which only occurs again, Zac. ix. 6. It may in both places denote a stranger, or one of a different religion from the Jews, as Jephthe was the son of a prostitute, (Jud. xi. 1,) and yet became a judge of Israel. But strangers, as long as they espoused, and taking her, lie with her, and the matter come to judgment, 29 *He that lay with her, shall give to the father of the maid, fifty sicles of silver, and shall have her to wife, because he hath humbled her: he may not put her away all the days of his life.

30 No man shall take his father's wife, nor remove his covering.

CHAP. XXIII.

Who may and who may not enter into the church: uncleanness to be avoided; other precepts concerning fugitives, fornication, usury, vows, and eating other mens' grapes and corn.

A N *eunuch, whose testicles are broken or cut away, or yard cut off, shall not enter into the church of the Lord.

2 A mamzer, that is to say, one born of a prostitute, shall not enter into the church of the Lord, until the tenth generation.

3 *The Ammonite, and the Moabite, even after the tenth generation, shall not enter into the church of the Lord, for ever:

4 Because they would not meet you with bread and water in the way, when you came out of Egypt: *and because they hired against thee Balaam, the son of Beor, from Mesopotamia in Syria, to curse thee:

5 And the Lord thy God would not hear Balaam, and he turned his cursing into thy blessing, because he loved thee.

6 Thou shalt not make peace with them, neither shalt professed a false religion, could not be entitled to the privileges of Jew'sh citizens; and even after they had relinquished their false worship, they were bound to wait ten whole generations, or a long time, before they could fill the posts of honour and command. C.—This, however, seems to be contrary to the disposition made in favour of the Idumeans and Egyptians, who were admitted in the third generation. A mamzer may, therefore, be (H.) a bastard of a different nation from the Jews, (M.) which was not the case of Jephthe. H.—The Rabbins specify three sorts of mamzers: 1. those born of parents who, by the law, are forbidden to marry, being too near akin; 2. those who are the fruit of adultery, or of some criminal commerce, which is punished with death; and 3. those whose birth subjects the parents to be cut off or retrenched from the people. Seld. Jur. v. 18.—The Sept. &c. exclude the children "of a harlot," which is the sense of mamzer in the canon law. The Christian Church rejects such from holy orders, and the Athenians would not suffer bastards to offer sacrifice in the city, but only in the Cynosarge, dedicated to Hercules, whose birth was hardly legitimate. In a word, some understand that mamzer comprises all concerning whose birth any doubts might be entertained. C.—It is observable, that even often imitate the wicked conduct of their parents; in which case, they are unfit for the magistracy; and though they may live a very exemplary life, the law is intended to discourage such practices in parents, which may entail dishonour and loss upon their children; that, if they be not sufficiently restrained by their own personal disgrace, they may at least by the love for their innocent offspring. H. Tenth. In the 11th generation, when the stain was obliterated, the descendant might become a magistrate. M.—Some understand that they were excluded for ever, as when the judges of the Areopagus ordered a man to appear again before them in 100 years' time, they meant that his cause was entirely rejected. Vatab. Casaub. in Athen. vi.

VER. 3. Ever. This shews that the former verse only excludes bastards for a time. But why are these nations treated with more severity than the Edomite and Egyptian? Because their enmity seemed to proceed from pure malice, and they attempted to ruin the souls of the Hebrews by lust and by idolatry, without any prospect of interest to themselves. Their parents were also of very base origin, and Abraham had rescued their father, Lot, from destruction; so that for his children to oppose with such virulence the descendants of Abraham, manifested a degree of ingratitude and perversity. C.—They had found their attempts to hurt Israel abortive, and yet ceased not to persecute their near relations, (H.) by drawing them into carnal sins. Those who are obstinate in their evil ways, can never be rightly received into the Church of God. W.—Achiur and Ruth embraced the Jewish religion, but it does not appear that they were admitted to places of trust. Jud. xiv. 6. H.—These regulations were observed till the Babylonian captivity, while the genealogies might be ascertained. C.—In cases of extraordinary merit, as in that of Achiur, the Ammonite, (Judith. xiv.) a dispensation might be granted. T.

VER. 4. Water: the necessities of life. This inhumanity is highly resented. —Son. Heb. "of Beor, of Pethor, a city of Mesopotamia, to curse thee." H. Num. xxii. 5.

VER. 6. Peace. Heb. "ask or seek not their peace nor their advantage" as a nation; keep at a proper distance; have no familiarity with them. H.—Then thou seek their prosperity all the days of thy life for ever.

7 Thou shalt not abhor the Edomite, because he is thy brother: nor the Egyptian, because thou wast a stranger in his land.

8 They that are born of them, in the third generation shall enter into the church of the Lord.

9 When thou goest out to war against thy enemies, thou shalt keep thyself from every evil thing.

10 If there be among you any man, that is defiled in a dream by night, he shall go forth out of the camp, 11 And shall not return, before he be washed with water in the evening: and after sun-set he shall return into the camp.

12 Thou shalt have a place without the camp, to which thou mayst go for the necessities of nature, vices, not their persons, are to be hated. David behaved in a friendly manner with the king of Ammon, 2 K. x. 2. He was afterwards forced to make war upon the people, though, without such extraordinary provocations, war was not to be declared against them. C.—Prosperity. Have no intercourse with them. M.—Sept. "Salute them not, wishing them what may tend to their peace and advantage."

VER. 7. Brother. Esau and Jacob were twins.—Land. The Egyptians had for some time afforded the Hebrews an asylum in their country, and though the kings had of late persecuted them, the people seem not to have entered into the views of their rulers, and spared the male children notwithstanding their cruel edicts. They gave them also very rich presents before their departure. Ex. xii. 85. Gratitude required that these things should be considered, (II.) and God orders his people generously to pass over the subsequent ill treatment of these two nations.

VER. 8. Lord. The Rabbins explain this of the permission to marry the grand-children of such as had embraced the Jewish religion, though some of them suppose that an Idumean or an Egyptian woman might be taken to wife, as Solomon took the daughter of Pharo; but the Israelites could not give their children in marriage to the men of those nations. The grand-children of converts are rather hereby entitled to the privileges of other Jewish citizens. C.

VER. 9. Thing, rapine, libertinage, &c. which are but too common among soldiers. C.—We know what instructions S. John the baptist gave to those who followed that lawful profession. Lu. iii. 14. H.

VER. 10. Camp of the Levites, according to the Rabbins. C.—Bonfrere explains this of priests. M.—But it rather refers to all who dwelt in the camp, where the ark seems to have been generally present, along with the armies, v. 14. Num. xxxi. 6. C.—It is not clear, however, that the law alludes to any other camp, but that in the midst of which the tabernacle was fixed; and Calmet, elsewhere, denies that the ark commonly followed the army. II.

VER. 11. Water of the fountain. M.

VER. 12. Girdle. Heb. azon, means "a balance," as the Hebrews generally carried weights, &c. about them. C. xxv. 18. Moderns translate, "a paddle upon thy weapon." But the Sept. seem to have read ezor, "a girdle," (C.) which is more intelligible, as the Jews were accustomed to carry the necessary utensils, money, &c. not in their pockets, as we do, but in a bag, which they fixed to their girdles, or belts. All the Jews who dwelt in the camp, were bound to have a paddle, for the purpose here mentioned. II.—Josephus (Bel. ii. 7.) observes, that the Essenians always made use of one, with which they made a hole a foot deep, and covered it with their robes, that nothing indecent might be exposed to view. B.—The Turks still follow the same custom, when they are encamped. Busbec, ep. iii. C.

VER. 14. No uncleanness. This caution against suffering any filth in the camp, was to teach them to fly the filth of sin, which driveth God away from the soul. Ch.—Those who have had the misfortune to fall into the sink of iniquity, must not fail to use the sharp instrument of compunction, with which they may hide the enormity of their crimes. II.—Incessanter terram mentis nostræ poenitentia dolore confodit &c. abscondit. S. Greg. Mor. iii. 13.—In a camp where three million people were collected, if some such regulation had not been made, great and serious inconveniences would have ensued. The lawgiver, therefore, descends to several particulars which to us might appear minute; but besides the obvious meaning, which is very rational, the words convey other mystical instructions of the highest importance. God was pleased to assume the character of a powerful monarch, residing among his people, and hence every appearance of indecency must be removed. II.

VER. 15. To thee, from among the Gentiles. The promised land was thus declared a land of liberty, (C.) to encourage poor slaves to embrace the service of the true God, and to flee from the slavery of the devil, and from the society of those who adored him in their idols. The whole earth belongs to the Lord, and He was thus pleased to punish those who might claim a right to these slaves. H.—Some believe that the price was given to the owner, at the public expense. The Rabbins allow this privilege of an asylum, only to those who fled from a foreign country, or from an infidel master, to embrace the true religion. Circumcision was given to them as an inviolable mark of liberty. Chald. Those who had been sold for their crimes, or for debt, by the sentence of the judge, could not claim this exemption. Grot. Jur. iii. 7.—Philo (de humanit.) says, it would be unjust to give up a slave who has sought refuge with us. We ought either to reconcile him to his master, or sell him to another, and give the price to the former owner. Some translate the Heb. in a contrary sense, "Thou shalt not shut

13 Carrying a paddle at thy girdle. And when thou sittest down, thou shalt dig round about, and with the earth that is dug up thou shalt cover

14 That which thou art eased of: (for the Lord thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thy enemies to thee;) and let thy camp be holy, and let no uncleanness appear therein, lest he go away from thee.

15 Thou shalt not deliver to his master the servant that is fled to thee.

16 He shall dwell with thee in the place that shall please him, and shall rest in one of thy cities: give him no trouble.

17 There shall be no whore among the daughters of Israel, nor whoremonger among the sons of Israel.

up the slave who has fled to thee from his master," as if it were unjust to refuse to deliver him up. But the law points out some cases where it is lawful for a slave to flee away, and consequently people must be allowed to receive him. The following verse is decisive in favour of this explanation.

VER. 17. Israel. Some hence very erroneously infer, that before this prohibition the thing was not criminal. Seld. Jur. v. 4. Notwithstanding the law, such lewd practices continued to be very common. The original expresses that both the women and the men were consecrated, "kalush," in all probability to some idol, whom they intended to honour by abominable prostitutions, a thing very common in all the East, as we learn both from profane and sacred authors. Athen. xiii. 5. 4 K. xxiii. 7. The men were called the effeminate, 3 K. xiv. 24. C.—Some copies of the Sept. have a double translation of this verse, and add, "None of the daughters of Israel shall bear the mysteries, nor shall any of the sons of Israel be initiated (in these mysteries of idols) to make every vow." Telesphoros denotes a strumpet for hire, v. 18; or, according to Vossius, one who is initiated or performs the pagan mysteries, as fornication and idolatry, commonly go together in the sacred writers. Hesychius seems to understand, that it refers to "the house where a person has been delivered of a child." But Tertullian (pudic. ix.) explains it thus, "No one . . . shall pay tribute;" as telos means tribute, (II.) and the Jews are supposed to have refused to pay any to the Romans on the authority of this verse. See Casaub. in Bar. ii. 19. Grot. C.—But it seems far more probable, that it is a farther elucidation of the text, and prohibits that scandalous impiety by which many were not ashamed publicly, like dogs, to commit the most obscene actions, and to present the hire of their bodies to the idols. Mic. i. 7. Clem. Alex. Exhort. Villal. in Ezec. xliii. We could hardly give credit to those who have attested such things, did not God here find it necessary to caution his people not to fall into such blindness and delusion. That the poor ignorant idolater should think by these means to appease those gods who, while here on earth, had been infamous for the like excesses, needs not so much to excite our surprise. But that the Gnostics, Manichees, and other heretics, almost of all ages since the light of the gospel shone forth, should have thought that they could honour the true God by abusing the flesh, is truly astonishing. Yet they gave into this delusion, by first persuading themselves that the flesh was the creature of an evil principle, fighting against the author of the spirit and of all good, with whom they intended to take part. The way of a fool is right in his own eyes. Yea, there is a way that seemeth to a man right, and the ends thereof lead to death. Prov. xii. 15. and xvi. 25. These wretches grounded their opinion on the authority of their gods, or of the Scripture. Will this excuse be admitted by the Sovereign Judge? But these delusions are perhaps now at an end.—A principle, however, is still maintained of a far more pernicious tendency, inasmuch as it strikes at the root of every law, divine and human. This horrible doctrine was inculcated by J. Wesley for above thirty years, as we have already observed. C. xvi. 22. "O natural man, says he, (Serm. on Orig. Sin.) thou canst do good. Thy natural actions are sin; thy civil actions are sin; thy religious actions are sin. As many thoughts, words, and actions, so many sins; for nothing but sin comes from thee. Thy duties are sins. Can an evil tree bring forth good fruit?" Thus Scripture teaches him that to work for one's family, to pay taxes, to pray, read the Scriptures, or even to be lieve, will be a sin! "Knowest thou not that thou canst do nothing but sin, till thou art reconciled to God?" Serm. on the Righteousness of Faith. Hence arose the Still-Methodists, Jour. iv. p. 92. Even after this celebrated reformer had begun, when almost 70 years of age, to discover "the subtle poison, which he says, (Jour. viii. p. 90,) has infected, more or less, almost all, from the highest to the lowest among us," it is astonishing that he still acknowledges those who were infected with it, as the "real children of God by faith." Many of these, he says, (serm. on the law) lay it down as an unquestionable truth, that when we are come to Christ, we have done with the law; and that in this sense, Christ is the end of the law to every one that believeth. We need, therefore, no longer wonder that the pagans should think they honoured their idols by prostitution, (which on other occasions they condemned as "a great disgrace," oneidos mega, as Musonius calls it,) since in this enlightened age, a man of no mean abilities and far advanced in years, a man who requires that all the preachers in his connexion shall conform to his Sermons and Notes on the New Testament, or be superceded, (Jour. xx. p. 34,) could decide that those who maintain this principle, and make it a branch of their religion to break the law of God on purpose, are the "real children of God by faith;" people, "whom God has taken out of the world." As well might he say that a man may live on subtle poison, and please God, by following a doctrine than which "nothing can be more false," as he styles this 18 Thou shalt not offer the hire of a strumpet, nor the price of a dog, in the house of the Lord thy God, whatsoever it be that thou hast vowed: because both these are an abomination to the Lord thy God.

19 Thou shalt not lend to thy brother money to usury, nor corn, nor any other thing:

20 But to the stranger. To thy brother thou shalt lend that which he wanteth, without usury; that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all thy works in the land, which thou shalt go in to possess.

21 When thou hast made a vow to the Lord thy God, thou shalt not delay to pay it: because the Lord thy God will require it. And if thou delay, it shall be imputed to thee for a sin.

22 If thou wilt not promise, thou shalt be without sin.

23 But that which is once gone out of thy lips, thou very principle of Antinomianism, to which he and his preachers had "leaned" for such a length of time. "If, says a great admirer of his, Mr. Fletcher, (1 Check, 4th letter,) the three first propositions of the minutes are scriptural, Mr. Wesley may well begin the remaining part, by desiring the preachers in his connexion to emerge along with him from under the noisy billows of prejudice, and to struggle quite out of the muddy streams of Antinomian delusions, which have so long gone over our heads, and carried so many souls down the channels of vice into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." This is then to be the abode of those whom "God has taken out of the world, and who are real children of God by faith!" This is the heaven, of which they may boast in dying that they are infallibly sure of! At least, the man whom they have so eagerly followed as their judge, has passed this woful sentence upon them, as if he had a mind to laugh at their credulity. If he join us also in the same condemnation, and say, "I have the same assurance that Jesus is the Christ, and that no Romanist can expect to be saved, according to the terms of his covenant;" (Jour. iii. p. 84.) we are not solicitous about his good opinion; we have not chosen him for our judge, nor have his writings given us reason to think that he knew the nature of our covenant. If he did, so much the more dreadful must have been his reckoning with that unerring Judge, before whom he has appeared 20 years ago. It is the glory and happiness of the Catholic Church, that no one attempts to assail her, but he presently betrays the spirit by which he is inspired, the spirit of calumny, and of the perverse application of Scripture. It was thus that our divine head was treated by the father of lies, who alleged Scripture to encourage suicide, or presumption. Mat. iv. 8. So in the various points of faith which Mr. Wesley attacks, he shamefully misrepresents our doctrine, that he may have something to oppose. We have seen how unjustly he accuses us of idolatry. C. xvi. 22. But in order, perhaps, to comfort us with the reflection, that we have many partners in guilt, he represents the Protestants as equally criminal. "They set up their idols in their churches; you set up yours in your heart. . . O how little is the difference before God! How small pre-eminence has the money worshipper at London over the image worshipper at Rome; or the idolizer of a living sinner over him that prays to a dead saint." Word to a Prot. How much soever the Protestants may be entangled in this species of idolatry, they do not at least pretend to authorize it by the principles of religion, as some of the Methodists have done. Witness the man with whom J. Wesley conversed at Birmingham. Do you believe that you have nothing to do with the law of God? He answered, I have not, I am not under the law. . . Have you also a right to all the women in the world? Yes, if they consent. And is not this a sin? Yes, to him who thinks it is a sin; but not to those whose hearts are free. The same thing that wretch, Roger Ball, affirmed in Dublin. Surely these are the first-born children of Satan. Journal vi. p. 133. Witness Mr. Fletcher, a celebrated clergyman in the Methodist connexion, who has informed us that Antinomian principles and practices had spread like wild fire among the Methodists. Nor need I go far, says he, for a proof of this sad assertion. In one of his (Wesley's) societies, not many miles from my parish, a married man, who professed being in a state of justification and sanctification, growing wise above what is written, despised his brethren as egalists, and his preachers as persons not clear in the gospel. He instilled his principles into a serious young woman; and what was the consequence? Why, they talked about finished salvation in Christ, and the absurdity of perfection in the flesh, till a perfect child was conceived and born; and, to save appearances, the mother swore it to a travelling man that cannot be heard of. Thus, to avoid legality, they plunged into hypocrisy, fornication, adultery, perjury, and the depth of rantism, &c. Check i. Let. 2. But enough of such absurdity. We may now easily believe to what length the dissolute examples and maxims of the heathenish mythology, would lead their unhappy votaries, when we behold the purest lessons of the gospel so strangely perverted. H.—Whoremonger. It is very probable, that the Scripture here means such as were guilty of unnatural impurities, "consecrated," as it were, to some idol of lust, as these crimes were common under several faithless kings of Israel and of Juda, 3 K. xv. 12, and xxii. 47. Simple prostitutes are styled zona. C.—God will not allow these to be publicly tolerated, though they contrived but too often in private to ensnare the hearts of God's people, 3 K. iii. 16. T.—Onkelos translates, "No Israelite shall give his daughter in marriage to a slave, nor take one for his son's wife," as the contract would be null, according to the Rabbins, for want of liberty. C. He may, per-shalt observe, and shalt do as thou hast promised to the Lord thy God, and hast spoken with thy own will, and with thy own mouth.

haps, have given this singular turn to this verse, because the preceding one speaks of fugitive slaves.

VER. 18. Dog. Many explain this in a figurative sense, as we have done in the last verse, to denote the public impudence by which some thought to honour their gods. H.—Such impiety the Lord abhors, though practiced by all the surrounding nations, as ancient records unanimously attest. How incredible soever it might otherwise appear, that a false notion of religion, joined to a natural depravity, could prompt people to such excesses, we cannot call in question the veracity of so many historians. See Herod. i. and ii. Just. xviii. 5. Euseb. prep. iv. 6. S. Aug. C. D. iv. 10. and the sacred writers, Bar. vi. 42. Prov. xix. 13. The Rabbins explain dog literally, and observe that a prostitute, or one who has had any commerce with a man with whom it was not lawful for her to marry, could not offer what she had thus gained to the Lord, nor what had been received in exchange for a dog. Josephus (iv. 8.) understands it of such hunting or shepherds' dogs as had been lent for hire to propagate the breed. Maimonides thinks that what the strumpet had received in kind, could not be presented, but with the price of it she might buy suitable victims. But Josephus and Philo admit of no such exceptions. They reject all sorts of presents made by strumpets, in detestation of their crimes; and it was probably from the same motive that the Jews concluded it was unlawful to put the price of blood into the treasury of the temple, Mat. xxvii. 6. In the Christian Church, the offerings of public sinners were not received, even to be distributed among the poor. These would not even take an alms from the hands of S. Asra, while she remained a courtesan of Augsbourg. Even the pagan emperor, Severus, refused to admit into the sacred treasury the tribute arising from such unworthy means. Lamprid.—Some believe that Moses forbids the price of a dog to be presented, as the Egyptians had a sovereign respect for dogs; and many nations offered them in sacrifice, particularly for expiation. All the Greeks purified themselves, by making a dog be carried round them. Bochart, p. 1, B. ii. 58. Isaias (lxvi. 3,) seems to insinuate that dogs were sometimes immolated. S. Augustine (q. 38,) and others, believe that dogs are not to be redeemed, as the first-born of other things are, probably because they were too mean, and the price too insignificant to purchase another victim. But we may adhere to the explication which was first proposed. C.—Both. The dog was an unclean animal, and strumpets defile their own bodies, and draw down the indignation of that God, who is a pure Spirit, and loves chaste souls. Without are dogs and sorcerers, and unchaste, and murderers, and servers of idols. Apoc. xii. 15. H.

VER. 20. To the stranger. This was a dispensation granted by God to his people, who being the Lord of all things, can give a right and title to one upon the goods of another. Otherwise the Scripture every where condemns usury, as contrary to the law of God, and a crying sin. See Exod. xxii. 25. Lev. xxv. 36. 37. 2 Esd. v. 7. Ps. xiv. 5. Ecce. xviii. 8. 13, &c. Ch.—The stranger means the devoted nations of Chanaan, &c. whom God authorized his people to destroy. "Exact usury of him whom thou mayest kill without a crime," says S. Amb. (de Tob. c. 15,) though this principle will not always excuse usury. This practice was always considered as unjustifiable, except when God gave permission to his people to get by this means the possession of the property of the stranger, the right to which he had already given to them; unless we may consider, that he only tolerates this practice towards the stranger, on account of the hard-heartedness of the Jews. Christ has now expressly declared it unlawful for any one. See Ex. xxii. 25. C.

VER. 21. Delay, beyond the time appointed. M.—If no time was specified, the vow must be fulfilled without any unnecessary procrastination. See Num. xxx. 2. H.—Vows induce an obligation which before did not exist. W.

VER. 24. Thee. Heb. "thou shalt not put into thy vessel," or basket. This privilege is restrained by the Chal. &c. to the vintagers. But Josephus (iv. 8,) extends it to all; and he says, that those who did not even invite travellers to partake of their grapes, and other fruit, were to be punished with 39 lashes.

CHAP. XXIV. VER. 1. Uncleanness. Tertullian (c. Marc. iv.) reads, "if she be found guilty of any impurity," negotium impudicum. Sept. "unseemly action;" and many learned commentators suppose that Moses only allows a divorce in cases of adultery, or in those which render the woman dangerous to a family, as if she had the leprosy, or some other infectious disorder, or was likely to corrupt the morals of her children, or if she were barren. The Pharisees were divided

2 And when she is departed, and married another husband,

3 And he also hateth her, and hath given her a bill of divorce, and hath sent her out of his house, or is dead :

4 The former husband cannot take her again to wife : because she is defiled, and is become abominable before the Lord : lest thou cause thy land to sin, which the Lord thy God shall give thee to possess.

5 When a man hath lately taken a wife, he shall not go out to war, neither shall any public business be enjoined him, but he shall be free at home without fault, that for one year he may rejoice with his wife.

6 Thou shalt not take the nether, nor the upper millstone to pledge : for he hath pledged his life to thee.

7 If any man be found soliciting his brother of the children of Israel, and selling him shall take a price, he shall be put to death, and thou shalt take away the evil from the midst of thee.

8 Observe diligently that thou incur not the stroke of the leprosy, but thou shalt do whatsoever the priests of the Levitical race shall teach thee, according to what I have commanded them, and fulfil thou it carefully.

among themselves in determining the sense of this law, (C.) and they endeavoured to inveigle our Saviour, by proposing the question to him. If it were lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause, quacumque ex causa, or for any reason whatsoever. Mat. xix. 3. H.—Our Lord does not take notice of the limitation here added by Moses; (Mat. v. 31.) nor do the Pharisees, when he asks them, What did Moses command you? Mar. x. 3. Whence it seems, that the liberty which was taken was very great, and that the limitation was not regarded. Our Saviour, nevertheless, alludes to it, when he admits that Moses permitted a divorce, in case of adultery. But he recalls them to the institution of marriage, and will no longer allow people to marry again, even in this case, as Moses had been forced to permit the Jews, on account of the hardness of their heart. C.—Before this permission, the Jews were therefore, it seems, much addicted to this practice.—Bill. The law does not command divorces; but in case the parties come to such a determination, it requires a bill to be given to the woman. The Jews require the greatest formality in drawing it up, and witnessing it, and they say the divorce must take place upon a fountain or river. Schikard. Jur. iii. 9.—Munster gives this form of a bill: "The 4th day of the month of Sivan, of the year 5298 from the creation of the world, in this place and in this city of N, F. N, son of N, had a mind to divorce, and has divorced N, daughter of N, who hitherto has been my wife; and I grant her leave to go whither she has a mind, and to marry whomsoever she pleases, so that no one shall hinder her. In witness whereof, I have given her this bill of divorce, according to the ordinances of Moses and of Israel." The Jews still assert their right to put away their wives. Buxt. Syn. xxix. C.—But it is sinful for them, or for any other, to marry the woman divorced, till the first husband be dead. If they do, they are guilty of adultery, as our Saviour and S. Paul repeatedly inculcate. 8 Aug. de Adult. Conj. i. 11. W.

VER. 4. Defiled. This insinuates that the second marriage was a real adultery, (C.) and only tolerated by the law to prevent greater evils. H.—It might be said indeed that the woman was defiled, with regard to her former husband, who could not take her back without condemning his former proceeding; (C.) as he would seem to have only lent her for some mean consideration. M.—Domitian took the privilege of a judge from a Roman knight, who had resumed his wife after he had divorced her for adultery. Sueton. viii. But how then is the woman abominable before the Lord? Some say the thing itself is extremely dishonourable, as the Heb. intimates, though the woman have done nothing but what the law allows. Grotius believes that the man might take back his wife, at any time, before she was married to another. But the Rabbins limit this privilege to three months after the date of separation. God forbids his priests to marry with those who had been divorced, as it is to be presumed that they have not been rejected by their former husbands without great reason. Lev. xxi. 7. The man who cohabits with an adulteress, is deemed a fool; (Prov. xviii. 22.) and some have believed, that it was necessary to put such away. But S. Paul advises a reconciliation, 1 Cor. vii. 11.—To sin, or to incur the punishment due to it. C.—If the state connived at the transgression of the law, the judgments of God would fall upon the people.

VER. 5. Wife. This indulgence was granted to those who had married a widow also. Heb. "a new wife," as she was new to him, (H.) which right he could not claim, if he only resumed the one whom he had divorced. R. Salom. Drus. See C. xx. 7.

VER. 6. Life, or the means of supporting himself. H.—The upper millstone was deemed the less necessary. In more ancient times it was customary to dry the wheat by fire and afterwards to pound it in a mortar. Then millstones were invented, which slaves of the meanest condition had to turn. Pliny (xviii. 10.)

10 When thou shalt demand of thy neighbour any thing that he oweth thee, thou shalt not go into his house to take away a pledge :

11 * But thou shalt stand without, and he shall bring out to thee what he hath.

12 But if he be poor, the pledge shall not lodge with thee that night, 13 But thou shalt restore it to him presently before the going down of the sun : that he may sleep in his own raiment, and bless thee, and thou mayst have justice before the Lord thy God.

14 * Thou shalt not refuse the hire of the needy, and the poor, whether he be thy brother, or a stranger, that dwelleth with thee in the land, and is within thy gates :

15 But thou shalt pay him the price of his labour the same day, before the going down of the sun, because he is poor, and with it maintaineth his life, lest he cry against thee to the Lord, and it be reputed to thee for a sin.

16 * The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers, but every one shall die for his own sin.

17 Thou shalt not pervert the judgment of the stranger, nor of the fatherless, neither shalt thou take away the widow's raiment for a pledge.

mentions, that some few water-mills were used in his time. But this useful invention had been neglected, till Belisarius restored it again in the fifth century, when he was besieged in Rome by the Goths. Procop.—Jonathan, and the paraphrast of Jerusalem, explain this quite in a different sense: "Thou shalt not use any enchantment for the consummation of marriage, since it would be to destroy the lives of the children to be born."

VER. 7. Soliciting. Heb. "stealing a soul;" (M.) or decoying one to a distance from home, where he may have an opportunity of selling him for a slave. H. Ex. xxi. 16.

VER. 8. Leprosy. Do nothing which may expose you to the danger of being infected, and if you have the misfortune to contract it, obey the directions of the priests. C.—It seems from this and the following verse, that God frequently punished disobedience to his ministers, as he did Mary, (Num. xii.) by inflicting upon them this shameful disorder. H.—So he punished king Ozias, 2 Par. xxvi. M.—The design of this precept is, therefore, not so much to order people not to contract a disease, which they cannot perhaps always avoid, as to caution them against pride and rebellion. H.

VER. 10. Pledge. This was left to the choice of the debtor, provided he gave sufficient. The Athenian and Roman laws allowed a person to search his neighbour's house, for what he had lost: but he was to enter covered only with a short garment round his middle, (C.) to prevent his taking away any thing which did not belong to him.

VER. 12. Night, if it be a garment or bed covering, which may be necessary for the poor man. H.—By allowing the creditor to keep the pledge such a short time, God wished to discourage the taking of any from such as were in real distress. M.—The same regulation required, that if a necessary implement for labour, during the day time, was pledged, it should be returned in the morning. C.—This was done every day, to admonish the creditor and the debtor to exercise mercy and justice in their respective situations. The debtor was to remember to do his utmost in order to pay his debts. S. Aug. q. 41.—These daily debts were not remitted in the sabbatic years, according to the Rabbins, whose opinion seems very hard and inconsistent. H.—Solomon advises not to stand bond for another's debts. Prov. xx. 16. and xxii. 26. Many nations in the Indies allowed no action at law to recover debts, as the creditor ought to have taken his precautions before he parted with his money or merchandize. Stobæus. Strabo xv. C.

VER. 13. Justice, or mercy, which never enters the breast of the unjust. Prov. xii. 10. M.

VER. 14. Hire. Heb. "Commit no violence (or fraud) towards an hired servant." Lev. xix. 13. H.

VER. 15. Maintaineth: encourageth him. C.—Sept. "in it he placeth his hope." H.—Day labourers are obliged to support themselves and families with their wages; (M.) so that if they agree to have them paid every day, it would be an injustice to detain them. H.

VER. 16. Sin. Judges have no right to punish any but those who have transgressed. C.—God may for reasons known to himself, which cannot be unjust, visit the sins of the fathers upon their children; (Ex. xx. 5.) and hence, (Jos. vii.) he ordered the family of Achan to be involved in his punishment. Temporal sufferings, or death itself, are not however always a misfortune. They frequently prove a source of inconceivable blessings. Rom. v. 3. H.—The Rabbins understand, that fathers and children are not to be received as witnesses against each other; (Onkelos) which seems foreign to the sense of the present law. C.

VER. 17. Pervert. Thou shalt not pass an unjust sentence upon any one, particularly (H.) upon those who are least able to defend themselves. M.

18 Remember that thou wast a slave in Egypt, and the Lord thy God delivered thee from thence. Therefore I command thee to do this thing.

19 When thou hast reaped the corn in thy field, and hast forgot and left a sheaf, thou shalt not return to take it away: but thou shalt suffer the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow to take it away: that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the works of thy hands.

20 If thou have gathered the fruit of thy olive-trees, thou shalt not return to gather whatsoever remaineth on the trees: but shalt leave it for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow.

21 If thou make the vintage of thy vineyard, thou shalt not gather the clusters that remain, but they shall be for the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow.

22 Remember that thou also wast a bondman in Egypt, and therefore I command thee to do this thing.

VER. 18. This thing. It is uncertain whether this refer to the preceding or to the following law. It may be applied to both, as the remembrance of the Egyptian slavery might teach God's people not to oppress, but rather to shew mercy to those in distress. As the same thing is however repeated, v. 22, it seems more probable that the present verse forbids any oppression. H.

VER. 19. Forgot. The Rabbins say, that both the owner and the labourers must forget the sheaf: but this is a vain subtlety. C.—Josephus (iv. 8.) is more agreeable to the spirit of the law, when he (H.) observes that gleanings, and some of the fruit of the vine and olive trees, were to be left on purpose for the poor. Lev. xix. 9. M.

CHAP. XXV. VER. 2. Down, tying him to a low pillar; (M. Grot.) though many assert, that the criminal was forced to lie prostrate on the ground, as the Jews still do, in Germany, when they undergo this punishment. Buxtorf, Syn. 20. The Jews do not commonly give above 39 strokes, and double the number is inflicted on the back, from what fall upon the breast.

VER. 3. Eyes. Heb. "depart covered with confusion (or more vile) before thy eyes." Hence the Jews do not consider this chastisement as ignominious. C.

VER. 4. Not muzzle, &c. S. Paul understands this of the spiritual labourer in the church of God, who is not to be denied his maintenance. 1 Cor. ix. 8. 9. 10. Ch.—Other labourers, and even beasts, must likewise be treated with humanity. It was formerly the custom in Egypt, Judea, Spain, &c. to have a clean spot in the field, round a tree, where during the heat of the day, they spread the sheaves, and made oxen continually go round, to tread out the corn. Some had the ill nature to muzzle them, or to cover their mouths with dung; (Ælian iv. 25.) whence arose the proverb, "an ox in a heap" of corn, to denote a miser, who amidst plenty will not eat. Suidas—Moses condemns this cruelty; as it is not just, says Josephus, to refuse these animals so small a recompense for the assistance which they afford us in procuring corn. C.—Besides this literal sense, God had principally in view the mystical one, which S. Paul unfolds to us. M.—Paine hence takes occasion to ridicule priests, who, he says, "preach up Deuteronomy, for Deuteronomy preaches up tithes." But this book enjoins them no more than other books of Scripture, and common reason dictates that the labourer is worthy of his hire. If the artizan, &c. will not work for nothing, why should priests spend their lives and fortunes, for the benefit of the people, without deriving any advantage from them? Who has served in the wars at his own charge at any time? 1 Cor. ix. 7. Whether the mode of paying tithes be the most eligible, for the support of God's ministers, is a question of smaller importance. It may at least plead a very high antiquity, (H.) as it was in force 400 years before the law of Moses. Abraham paid tithes to Melchisedec, who was both king and priest; and Pisistratus received tithes from the people of Athens, to be expended in the public sacrifices, and for the general good. Laert. in Solone. Watson, let. 2.

VER. 5. Together, as the sons of Juda did: (Gen. xxxviii. 6.) though custom (C.) and analogy extend this to other brothers, at least to those who live in the promised land, and have the inheritance in common, as appears from the history of Ruth, i. 13. &c. Noemi supposes that all the sons whom she might have had, would have been under the same obligation towards her daughter-in-law. The Rabbins restrain this law as much as they can, asserting that if the deceased left an adopted or natural child, the brother need not marry his widow, nor was any obliged but the next in age, and not married. S. Justin (q. 132.) teaches the stripes: they shall lay him down, and shall cause him to be beaten before them. According to the measure of the sin shall the measure also of the stripes be:

3 Yet so, * that they exceed not the number of forty: lest thy brother depart shamefully torn before thy eyes.

4 *Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out thy corn on the floor.

5 *When brethren dwell together, and one of them dieth without children, the wife of the deceased shall not marry to another: but his brother shall take her, and raise up seed for his brother:

6 And the first son he shall have of her, he shall call by his name, that his name be not abolished out of Israel.

7 But if he will not take his brother's wife, who by law belongeth to him, the woman shall go to the gate of the city, and call upon the ancients, and say: *My husband's brother refuseth to raise up his brother's name in Israel: and will not take me to wife.

8 And they shall cause him to be sent for forthwith, and shall ask him. If he answer: I will not take her to wife:

9 The woman shall come to him before the ancients, and shall take off his shoe from his foot, and spit in his face, and say: So shall it be done to the man, that will not build up his brother's house:

10 And his name shall be called in Israel, The house of the unshod.

reversa. C.—Half-brothers were included, (M.) and indeed every relation, in order, who, upon the refusal of the next heir, wished to take possession of the deceased person's land. Ruth iv. H.—The Jews no longer observe this law, as they have not possession of Chanaan. Cuneus i. 7.—Fagius asserts that it was neglected after the captivity of Babylon, because the inheritances were confounded. C.—This, however, does not seem to have been the opinion of those who have undertaken to reconcile the genealogy of our Saviour, given by SS. Matthew and Luke, by supposing that S. Joseph was the son of Jacob by birth, and of Heli according to the law. S. Hilary. Africanus says, (Ep. to Aristides) that "Heli dying without issue, Jacob was obliged to marry his widow, by whom he had Joseph, a descendant of Solomon by Jacob, and of Nathan by Heli," as their common mother, Estā, had married successively Mathan and Melehi, (or rather Mathat) who sprung from those two branches of David's family. Dupin. H.—The Athenians followed a similar regulation with respect to orphan young women, whom the next of kin were bound to marry and to endow. The Tartars assert their right to marry the widows of their brethren. The Egyptians did not consider the marriage as real, nor any relationship contracted, in case the woman had no issue, on which principle there was no impediment to prevent the brother from marrying the widow of his brother. On other occasions such contracts were declared illegal. Lev. xviii. 16. C.—This was a positive law, (W. Gen. xxxviii.) which admitted of an exception.

VER. 6. Name. Josephus (iv. 8.) takes this literally, as S. Aug. once did, though afterwards he retracted that opinion, (B. ii. 12.) on considering that Booz called his son Obed, and not Mahalon, which was the name of the first husband of Ruth. C. iv. 17. C.—Houbigant thinks some omissions have taken place in the very short genealogy of David, mentioned in that chapter, and instead of Obed, he would substitute Jachin, as the first-born of Ruth. He thinks that Solomon alluded to two of his ancestors, when he styled the two pillars before the temple Jachin and Booz. "In strength it shall stand or establish." 3 K. vii. 21. Heb. "the first-born which she beareth shall arise (or succeed) in the name (or by the right and title) of his brother." See Num. xxiv. 3. H.—Name is sometimes put for succession, (C.) or instead of another. M.

VER. 9. In his face, or presence, upon the ground, as appears from the Gen. of Jerusalem, where we read this form: (H.) "In our presence, (the three judges are specified) N, widow of N, hath taken off the shoe of N, son of N. She brought him before us, and took off the shoe from his right foot, and spat in our presence, so that we saw her spittle upon the ground; and she said to him, So shall he be treated who will not establish the house of his brother." Before this ceremony took place, the widow was obliged to wait three months, to prove that she was not in a state of pregnancy; for if she were, the brother could not marry her. He was never obliged to do it, but if he refused he was deemed infamous. The taking off the shoe was intended to humble him, as well as to shew that he relinquished all his claim to the inheritance. Josephus (v. 11.) says, that Ruth gave the relation who would not marry her, a slap on the face, or rather as it ought to be printed "she spat in his face," which was a mark of the greatest ignominy. C. xii. 14. Isai. l. 6. Mat. xxvi. 67. C.

VER. 10. Unshod. Those who have no consideration for their brethren, or for the commonwealth, deserve to be despised. Much more do they who are appointed pastors of the Church, if they do not zealously endeavour to increase the number of God's servants, whom they must attach to him, and not to them-

11 If two men have words together, and one begin to fight against the other, and the other's wife, willing to deliver her husband out of the hand of the stronger, shall put forth her hand, and take him by the secrets:

12 Thou shalt cut off her hand, neither shalt thou be moved with any pity in her regard.

13 Thou shalt not have divers weights in thy bag, a greater and a less:

14 Neither shall there be in thy house a greater bushel and a less:

15 Thou shalt have a just and a true weight, and thy bushel shall be equal and true: that thou mayst live a long time upon the land which the Lord thy God shall give thee.

16 For the Lord thy God abhorreth him that doth these things, and he hateth all injustice.

17 *Remember what Amalec did to thee in the way when thou camest out of Egypt:

18 How he met thee: and slew the hindmost of thy army, who sat down, being weary, when thou wast spent with hunger and labour, and he feared not God.

19 Therefore when the Lord thy God shall give thee rest, and shall have subdued all the nations round about in the land which he hath promised thee: thou shalt blot out his name from under heaven. See thou forget it not.

AND when thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God will give thee to possess, and hast conquered it, and dwellest in it:

selves. Thus the disciples of S. Paul were known by the general name of Christians. S. Aug. c. Faust. xxxii. 10. W.

VER. 12. In her regard: words supplied also by the Sept. conformably to the context. C.—The indecency and impudence of the woman, left her no excuse; (H.) though the Rabbins falsely maintain, that she might transgress this law in case of necessity, and might cut off the hand of her husband's antagonist. Grotius. C.—She would thus put the man in danger of having no posterity. M.—If even the imminent danger of her husband would not authorize her to act in this manner, when the person was stripped to fight, how severely will God punish all wanton liberties!

VER. 16. Injustice. Prov. xx. 10. To have a greater weight for buying, and a less one for selling, is the way to grow rich here, or to obtain the mammon of iniquity; though, when such mean practices are detected, the man who cheats often loses more than he had gained; and at any rate, must either make restitution, if possible, or receive the wages of his unjust labour and craft in the world to come. H.

VER. 17. Amalec. This order for destroying the Amalecites, in the mystical sense, sheweth how hateful they are to God, and what punishment they are to look for from his justice, who attack and discourage his servants when they are but just come out, as it were, of the Egypt of this wicked world, and being yet weak and faint-hearted, are but beginning their journey to the land of promise.

VER. 18. God. This circumstance is not mentioned, Ex. xvii. 14.

VER. 19. Heaven. Destroy him entirely, a sentence which Saul was ordered to put in execution, 1 K. xv. H.

CHAP. XXVI. VER. 1. It. The land where Moses was speaking, which had been already conquered, was no less under the obligation of paying the first-fruits, &c. than Chanaan, and the parts of Syria which were promised to the Israelites. H.—All the products of the earth seem to have been liable to be offered, (Mat. xxiii. 23,) in proportion as they ripened, at the feasts of the Passover and of Pentecost, (C.) and of tabernacles. M.—Yet we find no mention here of the therumah, or offering, of which the Rabbins speak so much, as distinct at least from the first-fruits, which were heaved both by the priest and the offerer towards heaven and earth, on the right and left hand. Each (C.) landholder, the Lord thy God, that I am come into the land, for which he swore to our fathers, that he would give it us.

4 And the priest taking the basket at thy hand, shall set it before the altar of the Lord thy God:

5 And thou shalt speak thus in the sight of the Lord thy God: The Syrian pursued my father, who went down into Egypt, and sojourned there in a very small number, and grew into a nation great and strong, and of an infinite multitude.

6 And the Egyptians afflicted us, and persecuted us, laying on us most grievous burdens:

7 And we cried to the Lord the God of our fathers: who heard us, and looked down upon our affliction, and labour, and distress:

8 And brought us out of Egypt with a strong hand, and a stretched-out arm, with great terror, with signs and wonders:

9 And brought us into this place, and gave us this land, flowing with milk and honey.

10 And therefore now I offer the first-fruits of the land, which the Lord hath given me. And thou shalt leave them in the sight of the Lord thy God, adoring the Lord thy God.

11 And thou shalt feast in all the good things which the Lord thy God hath given thee, and thy house, thou, and the Levite, and the stranger that is with thee.

12 When thou hast made an end of tithing all thy fruits, in the third year of tithes, thou shalt give it to the Levite, and to the stranger, and to the fatherless, and to the widow, that they may eat within thy gates, and be filled:

13 And thou shalt speak thus in the sight of the Lord thy God: *I have taken that which was sanctified out of my house, and I have given it to the Levite, and to the stranger, and to the fatherless, and to the widow, as thou hast commanded me: I have not transgressed thy commandments, nor forgotten thy precepts.

14 I have not eaten of them in my mourning, nor (H.) and even the king himself, was bound to bring his own basket to the temple, and to recite the words here prescribed. The wheat and barley were first winnowed, and the grapes and olives made into wine and oil. Before the offering was made to the Lord, no one was allowed to taste any of the produce. Lev. xxiii. 10. Num. xviii. 12. &c. Whether legumes were to be tithed, seems a matter of dispute. C.

VER. 5. The Syrian. Laban. See Gen. xxvii. Ch.—Heb. "My father was a Syrian, poor, (or ready to perish) and he went down," &c. The ancestors of Jacob had, in effect, come from beyond the Euphrates, and he had dwelt in Mesopotamia for twenty years. But the translation of the Sept. seems preferable, "My father abandoned (apebalen) Syria." C.

VER. 8. Terror. Sept. "with surprising visions," (Heb.) or "with astonishing prodigies," &c. C.

VER. 10. God, with profound humility, acknowledging that all comes from him, (H.) and praying for a continuance of his fatherly protection. M.

VER. 11. Feast. The Jews could not yet be required with propriety to raise themselves to delights purely spiritual. C. xii. 7. Strabo (x.) observes, that the Greeks and barbarians accompanied their sacrifices with feasting and music, which served to take off their thoughts from earthly concerns, and gave them a sort of foretaste of the divinity. C.

VER. 12. Third. It has been remarked, (C. xiv. 28. and Lev. xxvii. 30.) that the Jews gave two tithes every year, the second was for feasts at Jerusalem, or on the third year, at home, if there was not also a third tithe due on that year. H.

VER. 13. Taken. Heb. "burnt." C.—I have brought all that was due, (T.) so that no more can be found in my house than what the fire would have spared, if it had been thrown into it.

VER. 14. Mourning. It was then unlawful to taste what was set apart for the Lord, and even to touch a thing, at that time, would render it unclean. Osee ix. 4. Others explain it thus: I have not eaten, how much soever I was distressed; or, I eat it with a cheerful heart. But these interpretations seem unnatural. Spencer (Rit. ii. 24.) thinks rather that the Jews thus disclaim having given any worship to Isis, whom the Egyptians invoked after the harvest, with mournful cries. Diod. Sic. i. About the same season of the year, lamentations separated them for any uncleanness, nor spent any thing of them in funerals. I have obeyed the voice of the Lord my God, and have done all things as thou hast commanded me.

15 *Look from thy sanctuary, and thy high habitation of heaven, and bless thy people Israel, and the land which thou hast given us, as thou didst swear to our fathers, a land flowing with milk and honey.

16 This day the Lord thy God hath commanded thee to do these commandments and judgments: and to keep and fulfil them, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul.

17 Thou hast chosen the Lord this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways, and keep his ceremonies, and precepts, and judgments, and obey his command.

18 ^bAnd the Lord hath chosen thee this day, to be his peculiar people, as he hath spoken to thee, and to keep all his commandments:

19 And to make thee higher than all nations which he hath created, to his own praise, and name, and glory:

were also made for the death of Adonis, (Marcel. xxii.) and for that of Osiris. Firminus.—The Phenicians mourned in like manner for the desolate appearance of the earth, after the fruits were collected. The Egyptians thought that Isis had discovered fruits and corn, and therefore offered the first-fruits to her. But the Jews are here taught to refer all such favours to God alone, and they testify that they have taken no part in the superstitious rites of other nations, nor spent any thing in funerals. Heb. "upon the dead;" Osiris, &c. here styled uncleanness, by way of contempt. C.

VER. 16. This day. In this last solemn harangue of Moses, the covenant between God and his people was ratified. M.

VER. 19. To his own praise. Heb. Sept. &c. "higher . . in praise, reputation, and glory." H.

CHAP. XXVII. VER. 1. Ancients, particularly the priests, v. 9. H.—These exhorted the people to observe diligently, what they had all heard from the mouth of Moses. C. v. 1. C.

VER. 2. Stones. The Latin translation of the Sam. copy, defines the number to be two, (Ex. xx. 18,) and shews that the law, which was to be written upon them, was no other than the decalogue, to which the curses and blessings here recorded have a direct reference. When no number is specified, the dual is commonly understood. H. Lev. xii. 5, &c.—Two large stones would be sufficient to contain the words of the decalogue, and they would more strikingly represent the two tables written with the finger of God. They were probably first polished, and the letters raised upon them in relieve, as the Arabic marbles in the University of Oxford are done. The white plaster being then used to fill up the interstices between the letters of black marble, the words would appear very plainly. Kennicott, Dis. 2.—Others think that a high and durable monument was raised both for an altar and for the inscription, though some would allow four others for this purpose. C.—Plaster. The Heb. does not specify all over; and Houbigant supposes, that the cement was only used to join the stones together. Neither do the Heb. or Sept. intimate that the plaster was laid on for the purpose of writing more easily.

VER. 3. That, &c. Heb. and Sept. "And thou shalt write upon them (stones) all the words of," &c. H.—This law, the decalogue, (Masius in Jos. viii. 32,) or all the laws of Moses, leaving out the historical parts of his work, or the 20th and three following chapters of Exodus, or the discourses of Moses in this book, &c. Josue, in effect, wrote upon stones the Deuteronomy of the law of Moses, which Josephus explains of the curses and blessings inscribed upon the two sides of the monument, as an abridgement of the whole law. C.—The Jordan is not in Heb. expressly, but in the Sept. After the Israelites had crossed this river, they were thus to make a solemn profession of their adherence to the law of God, (H.) as they did (v. 12,) after they had taken Hii; though Josephus insinuates, that they deferred for five years the accomplishment of what is here required. T.

VER. 4. Hebal. It affords matter of surprise to Ludolf, that this barren mountain of cursing, (v. 13,) should be fixed upon by God, for the erection of his altar and for solemn feasting, instead of Garizim, which is most luxuriant. Reland believes that their very names designate sterility and fruitfulness. But we must observe that the Sam. copy, both here and Ex. xx. specifies that Garizim was to be the place so highly distinguished. Almost all interpreters agree in condemning the Samaritans of a wilful corruption of their text, on this account. But Kennicott adduces several very plausible arguments in their defence, and even throws the blame upon the Jews, who are accused of having taken similar liberties with their text, by S. Jerom, (Gal. iii. 10,) in leaving out the word col, all, which he found in the Sam. Pentateuch, (v. 26,) as well as in S. Paul. It is remarkable that the Prot. "version allows the corruption of the present Heb. copies. For as it inserts other necessary words elsewhere, so here, says the Doctor, it inserts the word all, noting it with a different character, as deficient in the present Hebrew." Another plain instance of fraud is acknowledged by many of the Jews, (Judg. xviii. 30,) where, because the grandson of their lawgiver became the first priest of Michas idol, in the tribe of Dan, they have inserted an a over or in the name of Moses, to change it into Manasseh. "The letter nun was written, says Jarchi, in order to change the name for the honour of Moses." Talmud, fol. 109.

that thou mayst be a holy people of the Lord thy God, as he hath spoken.

CHAP. XXVII.

The commandments must be written on stones: and an altar erected, and sacrifices offered. The observers of the commandments are to be blessed, and the transgressors cursed.

AND Moses, *with the ancients of Israel, commanded the people, saying: Keep every commandment that I command you this day.

2 And when you are passed over the Jordan into the land which the Lord thy God will give thee, thou shalt set up great stones, and shalt plaster them over with plaster.

3 That thou mayst write on them all the words of this law, when thou art passed over the Jordan: that thou mayst enter into the land which the Lord thy God will give thee, a land flowing with milk and honey, as he swore to thy fathers.

4 Therefore when you are passed over the Jordan, set up the stones which I command you this day in Mount Hebal, and thou shalt plaster them with plaster:

^b Supra vii. 6.—A. M. 2558.

Michaelis adduces the same reason from Abendana, (Gottingen, comment. 4, 1768,) thus acknowledging a wilful corruption made by the Jews, which in the former volume he had asserted had never yet been clearly proved against them. Kennicott himself had once been of the same persuasion. Josue xv. 60, eleven cities are omitted, perhaps originally by mistake, though S. Jerom thinks that they may have been left out by the ancient Jews, because Bethlehem Ephrata is there described as in the tribe of Juda, agreeably to the prophecy of Mic. v. 2. It seems, therefore, that the Jews were as capable of falsifying the text as the Samaritans. Their hatred against the latter was also excessive, inasmuch that they vented all sorts of imprecations against them, and even decreed, "that no Israelite eat of any thing that is a Samaritan's, nor that any Samaritan be proselyted to Israel, nor have any part in the resurrection." R. Tanchum. Walton, proleg. 11. 4.—Hence we read, (Jo. iv. 9,) the Jews do not communicate with the Samaritans. See Eccli. 1. 25. Many passages of the New Testament set the character of the latter, however, in a more favourable light than that of the Jews. They were open to conviction, on the preaching of Christ and of the apostles. See S. Chrys. on Jo. iv. and the history of the Samaritan cured of the leprosy, whose behaviour, contrasted with the ingratitude of the nine Jews, obtained the glorious approbation of the Son of God, who disdained not to describe himself, on another occasion, under the character of the good Samaritan. Lu. x. and xvii. The Samaritans are also acknowledged by the Jews themselves, to be more zealous for the law of Moses, and more rigid observers of the letter of it, than people of their own nation. Obadiah Hottinger.—It is not probable, therefore, that they would designedly interpolate that very law, which alone they received as a divine authority among the writings of the prophets. Besides, what interest could they have on this occasion to substitute Garizim? As they had possession of both the mountains in question, if they had known that Hebal had been honoured with the altar, &c. what hindered them from building their temple upon it? What could be the reason why Joatham chose Mount Garizim as the place from which he might address the men of Sichem, to bring them to a sense of their duty! unless because he was convinced not only that Abraham had sacrificed there when he first came into Chanaan, (Gen. xii. 6,) but also that God had chosen it for the place where his covenant with Israel should be ratified, as soon as the Israelites had taken possession of the country. But it may be said all the ancient versions agree with the Hebrew. No doubt those which have been taken from that text, agree with it. But the Samaritans have a version in their own dialect, and another in Arabic, both which were in the possession of Walton, who believes that the former "was made not long after the days of Esdras, while the Samaritans and the Jews followed the same religion." This, as well as the Arabic, which is extant in this place, both in its own and in the Samaritan character, all admit the word Garizim; and the Greek version, which some believe was made from the same text soon after the reign of Alexander the Great, (Hottinger) if it really ever existed, must no doubt have retained the same reading. These versions claim a higher antiquity than that of the Sept. But in reality the versions can prove nothing on either side, in the present case, as the interpolation is supposed to have taken place before they were made, and soon after the building of the famous temple of Sanaballat, which Prideaux places about the year 408, B. C. This temple chiefly enkindled the mortal hatred of the Jews against the Samaritans; and as it was built upon Mount Garizim, they were afraid lest they might from this text conciliate greater authority to that place, and assert that it was the house of the sanctuary, as they afterwards did, having priests of the stock of Aaron, who there offered holocausts, when Benjamin visited them above 400 years ago. Their claim however was unjustifiable, and their priesthood ecclesiastical. Though Moses commanded that an altar should be erected on one of these mountains, he did not determine that the ark was to remain there for ever, nor does he seem to have decided where it was to be fixed. God afterwards chose Mount Sion for his habitation, and revealed his will by his prophets. These the Samaritans ought to have obeyed, as well as the pastors, whom the Almighty had commissioned to determine all difficult matters. C. xvii. The text before us decides nothing in their favour. The substitution of Hebal makes nothing against them, much less does it establish the pretensions of the Jews, who, if they had

5 And thou shalt build there an altar to the Lord thy God, *of stones which iron hath not touched,

6 And of stones not fashioned nor polished: and thou shalt offer upon it holocausts to the Lord thy God.

7 And shalt immolate peace-victims, and eat there, and feast before the Lord thy God.

8 And thou shalt write upon the stones all the words of this law plainly and clearly.

9 And Moses, and the priests of the race of Levi, said to all Israel: Attend, and hear, O Israel: This day thou art made the people of the Lord thy God:

10 Thou shalt hear his voice, and do the commandments and justices which I command thee.

11 And Moses commanded the people in that day, saying:

12 These shall stand upon Mount Garizim to bless the people, when you are passed the Jordan: Simeon, Levi, Juda, Issachar, Joseph, and Benjamin.

13 And over-against them shall stand on Mount Hebal to curse: Ruben, Gad, and Aser, and Zabulon, Dan, and Nephtali.

* Exod. xx. 25. Jos. viii. 81.

intended to authorize the building of the temple at Jerusalem, ought rather, it should seem, to have written Moria or Sion. As they have not done this, perhaps it may be as well to admit that this variation may have originally happened, by the inadvertency or malice of some transcriber of great authority, whose copy being followed by others for some time, without any criminal design, might at last supersede the proper word, particularly when the erroneous reading was become common, and was found to annoy an enemy. Authors of great eminence are forced, at least, to account for many variations of equal importance in this manner. It seems difficult to lay the blame of such mistakes upon a whole nation, which can never be prevailed upon to join in the collusion so heartily, but that some man of more conscience than the rest will expose the imposture. When this variation took place, we may well suppose that the copies of the law were not very numerous. After a succession of wicked princes had reigned in Judea, they drew down the vengeance of God upon the whole nation, and almost all were led away captives to Babylon, where they remained seventy years. In this state of confusion, while impiety overflowed the land, how few would have an opportunity or a will to take an exact copy of the law! Some have thought that it was almost entirely forgotten in the days of Josiah. Others have asserted that Esdras had to write afresh, as it were by inspiration, all that had been given by the more ancient sacred penmen. These opinions are not indeed to be admitted, but they shew that many have supposed that the copies of the law were once exceedingly scarce. Perhaps they were never more so than when the Jews were just returning from captivity, the time when the schismatical temple of Garizim was erected, and when, we have before observed, this variation is supposed to have taken place. Josephus, though a bitter enemy of the Samaritans, speaks with hesitation respecting the precise situation of the altar prescribed by Moses. The ancient Fathers seem to have taken no notice of this controversy, perhaps because it was not yet agitated with so much heat as it has been since. Our Saviour condemns neither party. If however the Samaritan copy be in this respect interpolated, as we know the reason of it, the authority of the whole Pentateuch must not on that account be rejected, as Houbigant well observes. The Jews objected to the Samaritans, that they had inserted the word Sichem: (C. xi. 30.) "I have said to you, O Samaritans, ye have falsified your law: for ye say the plain of Moreh which is Sichem. [they add Sichem of their own accord.] We ourselves indeed confess that the plain of Moreh is Sichem." Eliczer, who mentions these words, (V. ii. p. 505,) expresses great surprise at this Jew's accusing the Sam. of so slight a matter, and at his not at all mentioning that far greater subornation as to Mount Garizim. "What seems still more wonderful is, that no such accusation is brought against them in that famous dispute which Josephus (xiii. 3,) informs us took place before king Ptolemy, in which the parties bound themselves by oath to produce their proofs according to the law; and yet the historian mentions not one text from it, nor does he insinuate that the Samaritans were arraigned on account of any wilful corruption, which might then have been so easily proved. The king condemned them unheard, if we believe Josephus, though the Samaritans give quite a different account; and say that Ptolemy decreed the victory to them. Act. Erud. Lips. 1691. See Jos. viii. 30. Kennicott. H.

VER. 5. Stones: the same as those which composed the monument, (C.) or rather different from them, (M.) as those were polished, v. 2.

VER. 6. Polished. Heb. simply, "of whole stones."

VER. 8. And clearly. Heb. "very plainly;" (H.) so that they might be easily read. Some Rabbins say that Josue wrote them in 70 different languages, that all nations might read them. Happy expedient! C.

VER. 12. Garizim. The children of Jacob, by Lia and Rachel, have the more honourable function of blessing, while those of the handmaids, with Ruben and Zabulon, the first and the last of the sons of Lia, at their head, on Hebal, have to answer to the various curses which were to be proclaimed by the priests and Levites, v. 14. These were stationed with the ark, between the two mountains; and when they pronounced, for example, "Blessed is he that maketh not a graven or molten thing," &c. those on Garizim answered Amen; and when they turned

14 And the Levites shall pronounce, and say to all the men of Israel, with a loud voice:

15 Cursed be the man that maketh a graven and molten thing, the abomination of the Lord, God the work of the hands of artificers, and shall put it in a secret place: and all the people shall answer, and say: Amen.

16 Cursed be he that honoureth not his father and mother: and all the people shall say: Amen.

17 Cursed be he that removeth his neighbour's landmarks: and all the people shall say: Amen.

18 Cursed be he that maketh the blind to wander out of his way: and all the people shall say: Amen.

19 Cursed be he that perverteth the judgment of the stranger, of the fatherless, and the widow: and all the people shall say: Amen.

20 Cursed be he that lieth with his father's wife, and uncovereth his bed: and all the people shall say: Amen.

21 Cursed be he that lieth with any beast: and all the people shall say: Amen.

22 Cursed be he that lieth with his sister, the daughter towards those on Hebal, and said, Cursed, &c. they replied in like manner. In the mean time, the body of the Levites might be with the other five tribes on Mount Garizim, though the priests, and those of greater dignity, might remain beside the ark, to perform this sacred function; as we read in Josue that they were stationed between the two divisions of the army. Bouffere.—Some think that Levi is placed with the rest only according to the order of his birth, and that Joseph stands for two tribes. Vatab.—Josephus asserts, that the whole army was divided into two parts, as well as the tribe of Levi, part of which stood on each of the mountains. Then the tribes on Garizim prayed that God would bless the observers of his law; and those on Hebal answered, Amen; and after they had repeated the same blessings, those on Garizim made a similar acclamation. In like manner, they repeated the curses one after another. C.—But this would make both the mountains equal in dignity. He places the altar likewise, with the inscription of blessings and curses on each side of it, in the midst of the valley, or rather nearer to Garizim; as he says it was not far from Sichem, which was built at the foot of that mountain, on the north side, while Hebal lay still farther to the north of the city, and being scorched with the sun-beams, was rendered fruitless and unpleasant. H.—If Josephus afterwards (Ant. v. 1,) say that the altar was on Hebal, we must either acknowledge that his work has been there interpolated, or that he contradicts himself. Kennicott also takes notice of a strange mistake in the grand edition of S. Ephrem, in the Latin translation, by Benedict; which, in opposition to the Syriac, has (v. 18,) "these shall rise to curse on Mount Garizim," though Hebal is universally allowed to have been the mount of cursing.

VER. 14. Pronounce. Heb. "answer," as the older Protestant editions, 1540, &c. had it; though "our last translators, 1613, says Kennicott, in this, as in several other instances, altered for the worse," shall speak. A select company of Levites in the valley, repeated what had been declared from Hebal.

VER. 15. Thing. Protestant, any. . . image. They insert the word any, and translate image, as they almost constantly do where idols are meant, to make the ignorant believe, that all images are to be rejected with the utmost abhorrence, as cursed things. Why then do they not observe the injunction themselves! C. xvi. 22. H.—Secret. The magistrates had to punish all acts of public idolatry with the utmost severity. But God will not suffer those to escape who do such things even in the most private manner.—Amen, truly; (C.) so be it.

VER. 16. Honoureth not. Heb. "curseth." Sept. "despiseth." See Lev. xx. 9.—"Ex. xxi. 17. Moses proclaimed, He that curseth his father or (Heb. and) mother, shall die the death." But here he goes still farther, and denounces a curse on those who make light of (Heb. makle, nilipendit) their parents; or, as the Carthusian expresses it not amiss, on him "who does not honour, by shewing them obedience in due time, or by not relieving their wants as far as possible; and chiefly, if instead of honouring, he curses and uses opprobrious language towards them." "I have made this remark, says Amama, (p. 376,) in order to admonish the Germans and the Dutch that this passage has been translated by Luther with too great carelessness, curseth, as if the same Heb. word kalal, were here used as in the text of Exodus. But those who are not too brazen, will confess that the Heb. text, and the more accurate versions, require greater reverence to be shewn to parents. Etiam illi judicabunt qui nondum aere lavantur." This author, in his animadversions upon the Vulg. often takes occasion to mention the blunders "of B. Luther," as well as of the Sept. and other interpreters; for he seems to be satisfied with no version which has hitherto been published. H.

VER. 17. Landmarks, contrary to the prohibition, C. xiv. 14. The Rabbins say that Cain first adopted such distinctions. The ancient Greeks placed little pillars at the end of their fields, with the name of the owner engraven upon them. Pollux, iii. 9.—All Thrace was divided in this manner. Xenophon, Anab.

VER. 18. Blind: or, according to the Rabbins and Grotius, those who are on a journey, and do not know the road. "Cursed, said Diphilia, is the man who does not tell the right road." Those who lead the simple astray, are no less blameable. Lev. xiv. 14. C.

of his father, or of his mother: and all the people shall say: Amen.

23 Cursed be he that lieth with his mother-in-law: and all the people shall say: Amen.

24 Cursed be he that secretly killeth his neighbour: and all the people shall say: Amen.

25 Cursed be he that taketh gifts, to slay an innocent person: and all the people shall say: Amen.

26 Cursed be he that abideth not in the words of this law, and fulfilleth them not in work: and all the people shall say: Amen.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Many blessings are promised to the observers of God's commandments: and curses threatened to transgressors.

NOW *if thou wilt hear the voice of the Lord thy God, to do and keep all his commandments, which I command thee this day, the Lord thy God will make thee higher than all the nations that are on the earth.

2 And all these blessings shall come upon thee, and overtake thee: yet so if thou hear his precepts.

3 Blessed shalt thou be in the city, and blessed in the field.

4 Blessed shall be the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattle, the droves of thy herds, and the folds of thy sheep.

5 Blessed shall be thy barns, and blessed thy stores.

6 Blessed shalt thou be coming in and going out.

7 The Lord shall cause thy enemies, that rise up against thee, to fall down before thy face: one way shall they come out against thee, and seven ways shall they flee before thee.

8 The Lord will send forth a blessing upon thy storehouses, and upon all the works of thy hands: and will bless thee in the land that thou shalt receive.

9 The Lord will raise thee up to be a holy people to himself, as he swore to thee: if thou keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways.

10 And all the people of the earth shall see that the name of the Lord is invoked upon thee, and they shall fear thee.

11 The Lord will make thee abound with all goods, with the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy cattle, with the fruit of thy land, which the Lord swore to thy fathers that he would give thee.

12 The Lord will open his excellent treasure, the heaven, that it may give rain in due season: and he will bless all the works of thy hands. And thou shalt lend to many nations, and shalt not borrow of any one.

13 And the Lord shall make thee the head, and not the tail: and thou shalt be always above, and not beneath: yet so if thou wilt hear the commandments of the Lord thy God, which I command thee this day, and keep and do them, 14 And turn not away from them, neither to the right hand, nor to the left, nor follow strange gods, nor worship them.

15 ^bBut if thou wilt not hear the voice of the Lord thy God, to keep, and to do all his commandments and ceremonies, which I command thee this day, all these curses shall come upon thee, and overtake thee.

16 Cursed shalt thou be in the city, cursed in the field.

17 Cursed shall be thy barn, and cursed thy stores.

18 Cursed shall be the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy ground, the herds of thy oxen, and the flocks of thy sheep.

19 Cursed shalt thou be coming in, and cursed going out.

20 The Lord shall send upon thee famine and hunger, and a rebuke upon all the works which thou shalt do: until he consume and destroy thee quickly, for thy most wicked inventions, by which thou hast forsaken me.

21 May the Lord set the pestilence upon thee, until he consume thee out of the land, which thou shalt go in to possess.

22 May the Lord afflict thee with miserable want, with the fever and with cold, with burning and with

* A. M. 2553.—^b Lev. xxvi. 14.

VER. 23. Mother. Some copies of the Sept. have "daughter-in-law;" and some Latin MSS. add, "Cursed is he who sleepeth with his neighbour's wife; and all the people shall say, Amen." C.

VER. 24. Secretly, as is commonly the case; though such as committed murder in public, were equally if not more guilty. H.—Assassins, traitors, and those guilty of calumny, &c. are to be abhorred.

VER. 26. In the. The Sam. Sept. and S. Paul (Gal. iii. 10.) read, in all the words, &c. which must probably be understood of the principal points of the law, specified in the preceding verses. C. See v. 4.—The Jews could derive no advantage from the omission of the word all, as the general proposition would be equivalent. Capellus.—Some are of opinion, that the blessings which Moses ordered to be proclaimed, were the reverse of these curses, v. 12. But, is that man truly blessed who observes one point of the law, while he perhaps is transgressing the rest? At this rate, the same man might be blessed and cursed at the same time. Kennicott.—They are more probably, therefore, expressed in the following chapter, where the observance of all the commandments is previously required. The curses are denounced indefinitely, to imply that those who transgress the law, must stand before an unerring Judge, to receive an adequate punishment in eternity for their crying sins against the law, which was given on Mount Horeb. C. xxix. 1. Against such criminals the preceding curses are levelled. But those recorded in the ensuing chapter, are of a temporary nature, and to be publicly inflicted without delay upon those who refuse to adhere to the service of the Lord. "God had made such a covenant with the Israelites, says Houbigant, that he would so long uphold their republic as they should worship the true God." H.—The foregoing curses may thus refer to the ten commandments; v. 15, denounces vengeance against all who transgress the first table of the law, which relates to God; v. 16, sanctions the honour due to parents; v. 18, 24, and 25, condemn those who injure or kill; as v. 20-1-2-8, do those who are guilty of impurity; v. 17, curseth those who steal; and v. 19, those who bear false witness; v. 26, is intended as a general sanction of the law, as the two last commandments secure the observance of it most effectually, by forbidding even the thought or desire of doing evil. See Kennicott, Dis. ii. p. 66. H.

CHAP. XXVIII. VER. 1. Earth. Similar denunciations are made. Lev. xxvi. 1.

VER. 2. All these blessings, &c. In the Old Testament, God promised temporal blessings to the keepers of his law, heaven not being opened as yet; and that gross and sensual people being more moved with present and sensible things. But in the New Testament, the goods that are promised us are spiritual and eternal: and temporal evils are turned into blessings.

VER. 3. Field. Wherever thou art, all thy undertakings shall prosper. C.

VER. 4. Womb. This was most fully verified in the birth of the Messiah, as the Holy Ghost insinuated, by causing S. Elizabeth to address these words to the mother of Jesus Christ. Luc. i. 42. C.

VER. 5. Barns. Heb. tene, is translated (C. xxvi. 2.) basket, in which bread was kept, and served up at table. Loaves were placed thus in baskets, near the altar of holocausts.—Stores. What thou hast laid up for thy provisions in corn, fruit, &c. C.

VER. 6. Out, in all thy actions and affairs, (M.) at home and abroad; in peace and war.

VER. 7. Down. Heb. "dead." Sept. "bruised to pieces," v. 25. C.—Seven. This denotes the confusion and hurry with which the enemy shall endeavour to escape. M.

VER. 10. Upon thee; so that thou art called God's people (C.) with truth. M.—He has taken thee under his protection, and defended them against every attack. H.

VER. 12. Lend. To do this with usury, is far from being a blessing; but to be able to assist those who are in distress, is a happiness; particularly for that nation which as yet does not know the merit of evangelical poverty. C.

VER. 13. Tail, as he had promised, v. 1. M.—You shall have dominion over others. C.—So Isaiah (ix. 14.) says, the Lord shall destroy the head, (the magistrate) and the tail, or (v. 15,) the lying prophet. H.

VER. 15. All these curses, &c. Thus God dealt with the transgressors of his law in the Old Testament; but now he often suffers sinners to prosper in this world, rewarding them for some little good they have done, and reserving their punishment for the other world.

VER. 20. Rebuke, or "curse." Sept. the pestilence, (C.) or destruction, (analosin.) H.

VER. 22. Cold. The word occurs no where else. The Chal. Syr. &c. have the heat, and with corrupted air, and with blasting, and pursue thee till thou perish.

23 Be the heaven, that is over thee, of brass: and the ground, thou treadest on, of iron.

24 The Lord give thee dust for rain upon thy land, and let ashes come down from heaven upon thee, till thou be consumed.

25 The Lord make thee to fall down before thy enemies; one way mayst thou go out against them, and flee seven ways, and be scattered throughout all the kingdoms of the earth:

26 And be thy carcass meat for all the fowls of the air, and the beasts of the earth, and be there none to drive them away.

27 The Lord strike thee with the ulcer of Egypt, and the part of thy body by which the dung is cast out, with the scab and with the itch: so that thou canst not be healed.

28 The Lord strike thee with madness, and blindness, and fury of mind, 29 And mayst thou grope at mid-day as the blind is wont to grope in the dark, and not make straight thy ways. And mayst thou at all times suffer wrong, and be oppressed with violence, and mayst thou have no one to deliver thee.

30 Mayst thou take a wife, and another sleep with her. Mayst thou build a house and not dwell therein. Mayst thou plant a vineyard, and not gather the vintage thereof.

31 May thy ox be slain before thee, and thou not eat thereof. May thy ass be taken away in thy sight, and not restored to thee. May thy sheep be given to thy enemies, and may there be none to help thee.

32 May thy sons and thy daughters be given to another people, thy eyes looking on, and languishing at the sight of them all the day, and may there be no strength in thy hand.

33 May a people which thou knowest not, eat the fruits of thy land, and all thy labours: and mayst thou always suffer oppression, and be crushed at all times, 34 And be astonished at the terror of those things, which thy eyes shall see.

35 May the Lord strike thee with a very sore ulcer in the knees and in the legs, and be thou incurable from the sole of the foot to the top of thy head.

36 The Lord shall bring thee, and thy king, whom thou shalt have appointed over thee, into a nation, which thou and thy fathers know not: and there thou shalt serve strange gods, wood, and stone.

37 And thou shalt be lost, as a proverb and a byword to all people, among whom the Lord shall bring thee in.

38 *Thou shalt cast much seed into the ground, and gather little: because the locusts shall consume all.

39 Thou shalt plant a vineyard, and dig it, and shalt not drink the wine, nor gather any thing thereof: because it shall be wasted with worms.

40 Thou shalt have olive-trees in all thy borders, and shalt not be anointed with the oil: for the olives shall fall off, and perish.

41 Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, and shalt not enjoy them: because they shall be led into captivity.

42 The blast shall consume all the trees and the fruits of thy ground.

43 The stranger that liveth with thee in the land, shall rise up over thee, and shall be higher: and thou shalt go down, and be lower.

44 He shall lend to thee, and thou shalt not lend to him. He shall be as the head, and thou shalt be the tail.

45 And all these curses shall come upon thee, and shall pursue and overtake thee, till thou perish: because thou heardst not the voice of the Lord thy God, and didst not keep his commandments and ceremonies, which he commanded thee.

reverse, "heat."—Blasting. In the original, either the mildew destroying the corn, (H.) or the jaundice, which attacks the human body, may be meant. C.

VER. 23. Of brass, and yield no rain. M.—Pindar says, (Pyth. x.) "The heaven of brass they never can ascend." See Lev. xxvi. 19.

VER. 24. Consumed. Prot. "The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon thee, till thou be destroyed." H.—The dust coming instead of rain, shall render the land more barren. C.—In those dreary regions, where clouds of sand and of dust overwhelm the poor traveller, the Israelites would have a good idea what inconveniences would attend such a state of the atmosphere, if it were only for a short continuance. But when it was intended for destruction, how could they possibly support life!

VER. 25. Scattered, as they are at present. The real import of the Heb. is doubtful. Some agree with the Vulg. and Sept.; (H.) others translate, Thou shalt be trembling, an object of astonishment and horror. Others, All who see thee shall quake; they shall insult over thee, wagging their head. C.

VER. 26. Away. No threat could be more terrible to the Jews. They did not refuse burial to those who had been hung on the gibbet. C. xxi. 23. Even the high priest, if he should find a corpse in the field, was obliged to bury it; though he was not allowed, on other occasions, to attend the funeral of his relations. God threatens the impious king (C.) Joachin, that he shall be buried with the burial of an ass. Jer. xxii. 19. H.—The ancient Christians allowed the sacred vessels to be sold, in order to bury the dead. "For we shall not suffer the figure and the work of God to be exposed a prey to the wild beasts and birds." Lactant. 6.

VER. 27. Egypt. See C. vi. 15, and xxviii. 60. Ex. ix. 9, and xv. 25; or with such diseases as those with which he afflicted Egypt. C.—Out. Heb. "with the emerods, scab, and itch." H. 1 K. v. 6. 12.

VER. 28. Madness, folly, or phrensy; with such Saul was attacked, and David feigned himself (1 K. xxi. 13,) to be in a similar condition at the court of Achis.

VER. 29. Ways. Is not this visibly the present condition of the Jews, amid the blaze of the gospel light, the miracles and divine conduct of the Son of God! They shut their eyes, and will not acknowledge him for the Messiah. C.

VER. 30. Her. Job makes use of the same imprecation. C. xxxi. 10. Let my wife be the harlot of another. But he immediately subjoins, For this is a heinous crime, &c. which may be applied, both to him who seeks to commit an impure action, (v. 9,) and to those who attempt to punish it by a similar abomination.

No person is allowed to wish that a sin may be committed. The Hebrew and Sept. very properly render all these imprecations in the future tense. "Thou shalt marry (or betroth) a wife, and another man shall," which, no doubt, would be an intolerable provocation. H.

VER. 31. Slain, (immoletur,) for a feast, and not for a sacrifice. M.

VER. 32. Hand. Heb. also, "thy hand shall not be lifted up towards God." Targ. of Jerusalem says, Thou shalt possess nothing, wherewith thou mayst render God propitious. C.—Thou shalt not be able to rescue, (M.) or to assist thy distressed children.

VER. 33. A people. The Gentiles, whom the Jews so much despised, and whom the Scripture styles, not a nation, have supplanted the Israelites, and entered into the inheritance, which they had lost by their prevarications. Rom. x. 19. H.

VER. 34. Astonished. Heb. "go mad," become stupified at such a scene of misfortunes.

VER. 36. Thy king. Nabuchodonosor thus led Joachin and Sedecias, with almost all their people, captives to Babylon, 4 K. xxiv. and xxv. 7.—Stone. The ten tribes mixed with other nations, (C.) and for the most part followed their idolatrous worship. Only some few returned with the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Levi, and became more careful than before not to irritate God by that hateful sin. H.

VER. 37. Lost. Heb. "an object of desolation, a fable and a mockery." Sept. "thou shalt be a riddle, a parable, and an example," to employ the thoughts and tongues of all nations, who will not be able to comprehend the greatness of thy distress. C.

VER. 38. All: so that the little which thou mayst gather will not be worth mentioning. H.—Heb. also may signify, "Thy field shall produce a great deal, and give thee abundant expectations, but the locusts shall consume it," to mortify thee the more.

VER. 42. Blast. This is a different word from that mentioned, v. 22. Locusts may here probably denote a grasshopper, which delights in the shade, and has a shrill note. In hot countries it does great hurt to trees, &c. C.

VER. 48. Lower. Heb. repeats this word, to signify the utmost abjection. H.—The Fathers gather hence the glorious superiority to which the Christian Church is raised. Orig. Rom. ii. Theod. q. 34.

46 And they shall be as signs and wonders on thee, and on thy seed for ever.

47 Because thou didst not serve the Lord thy God with joy and gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things:

48 Thou shalt serve thy enemy, whom the Lord will send upon thee, in hunger, and thirst, and nakedness, and in want of all things: and he shall put an iron yoke upon thy neck, till he consume thee.

49 The Lord will bring upon thee a nation from afar, and from the uttermost ends of the earth, like an eagle that flieth swiftly: whose tongue thou canst not understand:

50 A most insolent nation, that will shew no regard to the ancient, nor have pity on the infant,

51 And will devour the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruits of thy land: until thou be destroyed, and will leave thee no wheat, nor wine, nor oil, nor herds of oxen, nor flocks of sheep: until he destroy thee,

52 And consume thee in all thy cities, and thy strong and high walls be brought down, wherein thou trustedst in all thy land. Thou shalt be besieged within thy gates in all thy land, which the Lord thy God will give thee:

53 * And thou shalt eat the fruit of thy womb, and the flesh of thy sons, and of thy daughters, which the Lord thy God shall give thee, in the distress and extremity wherewith thy enemy shall oppress thee.

54 The man that is nice among you, and very delicate, shall envy his own brother, and his wife that lieth in his bosom, 55 So that he will not give them of the flesh of his children, which he shall eat: because he hath nothing else in the siege and the want, wherewith thy enemies shall distress thee within all thy gates.

56 The tender and delicate woman that could not go upon the ground, nor set down her foot for overmuch niceness, and tenderness, will envy her husband

* Lament. iv. 10. Baruch ii. 2. and 8.

VER. 46. For ever. The nations which were employed by God to scourge the Jews, recognized that they were the instruments of his indignation. We are accustomed to consider many evils as the necessary appendages of human nature; but the surprising misfortune, with which God visited his people, subjecting them to the Babylonians, Greeks, and Romans, could not be taken in this light. C.

VER. 47. Things: as in gratitude thou oughtest to have done. On the contrary, the more the Jews were cherished by God, the more insolent they became. C. xxxii. 15.

VER. 49. Swiftly. The Chaldees are designated in the same manner. Jer. v. 15. Ezech. xvii. 3. 12. The Romans also carried an eagle, as their chief standard, and the rapidity of their conquests astonished all the world.

VER. 50. Insolent. Heb. "of a fierce countenance." It is well known how the Babylonians treated the princes of the Jews. C.

VER. 51. Until thou be destroyed. This was not expressed in the Sept.

VER. 53. Womb; a cruelty which the Jews were guilty of in the sieges of Samaria and of Jerusalem. See Bar. ii. 2. 13. Lament. ii. 20. and iv. 4 K. vi. 28. Joseph. Bel. vii. 8. C.

VER. 54. Delicate, (luxurious), abandoned to his pleasures. Josephus (Bel. vi. 11.) seems to have had this passage in view, when he informs us, that parents and children snatched from each other's mouths the wretched food, with which they endeavoured to support themselves. C.

VER. 56. Envy. Heb. "her eye shall be evil towards the husband of her bosom," &c. H.

VER. 57. And the filth, &c. They will eat the child just born, through extreme hunger. Lament. ii. 20. The Chal. Sept. &c. agree with the Vulg. which conveys an idea of the most horrible distress. C.—Indeed it is so horrible and disgusting, that we find no vestiges in history of the completion of the prophecy, taken in this sense. Some, therefore, explain the original: "And her feast, or dressed meat, (shall be) between her feet, even of her own children, which she shall bring forth." Bate, p. 71. Parkhurst on tsotth. Others believe that the Hebrew is corrupted by the insertion of b before another b, in children; and by the transposition or addition of i in the first word; so that to translate, with the generality of interpreters, "She shall grudge every bit, or her eye shall be evil towards her who lieth in her bosom, the flesh of her son, and of her daughter.

57 And the filth of the after-births, that come forth from between her thighs, and the children that are born the same hour. For they shall eat them secretly, for the want of all things, in the siege and distress wherewith thy enemy shall oppress thee within thy gates.

58 If thou wilt not keep, and fulfil all the words of this law, that are written in this volume, and fear his glorious and terrible name, that is: The Lord thy God:

59 The Lord shall increase thy plagues, and the plagues of thy seed, plagues great and lasting, infirmities grievous and perpetual.

60 And he shall bring back on thee all the afflictions of Egypt, which thou wast afraid of, and they shall stick fast to thee.

61 Moreover the Lord will bring upon thee all the diseases, and plagues, that are not written in the volume of this law, till he consume thee:

62 And you shall remain few in number, who before were as the stars of heaven for multitude, because thou heardst not the voice of the Lord thy God.

63 And as the Lord rejoiced upon you before, doing good to you, and multiplying you: so he shall rejoice, destroying and bringing you to nought, so that you shall be taken away from the land which thou shalt go in to possess.

64 The Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the farthest parts of the earth to the ends thereof: and there thou shalt serve strange gods, which both thou art ignorant of, and thy fathers, wood and stone.

65 Neither shalt thou be quiet, even in those nations, nor shall there be any rest for the soul of thy foot. For the Lord will give thee a fearful heart, and languishing eyes, and a soul consumed with pensiveness:

66 And thy life shall be as it were hanging before thee. Thou shalt fear night and day, neither shalt thou trust thy life.

husband, and towards her son, and towards her daughter, and towards her after-birth . . . and towards her sons which she shall have brought forth," seems absurd enough. For if the woman's eye be evil towards her son, and towards her after-birth, (which, however, is incapable of depriving her of food) what need of repeating, and towards her sons? Yet the present construction requires this translation; though it is obvious that the woman must have been actuated in a different manner, with respect to these different things, as all allow that she was afraid lest those who were grown up, how dear soever to her, might deprive her of her abominable food, while her eye was evil towards her afterbirth, (or secundines, if the word asolithe can have this meaning) because she was designing to eat it privately. The Sept. translate Korion, "the skin," or Chorion, "a little girl," (Houbigant) unless (H.) the former word may rather have this signification. Hill.—The Arab. deviates a little from the Heb. "She will deny her husband, her son, and her daughter, her secundines, which fall from her." If, therefore, the two corrections proposed by Houbigant, and approved by Kennicott, (who produces for one of them (ubnie) the authority of the oldest Heb. MS. in England) be admitted, all will be clear and conformable to the event. "56. Her eye shall be evil towards . . . her son, and towards her daughter. 57. And she shall boil (ubossithe, instead of ubossolithe) that which cometh out from between her feet even her children, (ubnie, not ubolnie) which she shall bear; for she shall eat them, for want of all things, secretly." This prophetic and terrible denunciation was realized in the siege of Samaria, when two women agreed to eat their own children, one of whom was actually boiled, and the very word here in dispute is used, 4 K. vi. 29. Kennicott.—And in the last siege of Jerusalem, we read (Joseph. vii. 8.) of a mother killing her own child, to satisfy the cravings of hunger and rage against the rioters who had repeatedly plundered her house. Her name was Mary. She also boiled her suckling infant, and actually devoured a part of it. H.

VER. 59. Increase. Heb. distinguish, or render thy plagues wonderful. C.—Perpetual. Heb. "lasting." H. See v. 27.

VER. 65. Fearful, dejected, distrustful. The Jews are under continual alarms. C.

VER. 66. Thy life, being in danger from all sides. The Fathers explain this verse of the behaviour of the Jews towards their Messias, who was crucified before 67 In the morning thou shalt say: Who will grant me evening? and at evening: Who will grant me morning? for the fearfulness of thy heart, wherewith thou shalt be terrified, and for those things, which thou shalt see with thy eyes.

68 The Lord shall bring thee again with ships into Egypt, by the way whereof he said to thee, that thou shouldst see it no more. There shalt thou be set to sale to thy enemies for bond-men and bond-women, and no man shall buy you.

CHAP. XXIX.

The covenant is solemnly confirmed between God and his people. Threats against those that shall break it.

THESE *are the words of the covenant, which the Lord commanded Moses to make with the children of Israel, in the land of Moab: beside that covenant which he made with them in Horeb.

2 And Moses called all Israel, and said to them: *You have seen all the things that the Lord did before you in the land of Egypt to Pharaoh, and to all his servants, and to his whole land.

3 The great temptations, which thy eyes have seen, those mighty signs, and wonders.

4 And the Lord hath not given you a heart to understand, and eyes to see, and ears that may hear, unto this present day.

5 *He hath brought you forty years through the desert: your garments are not worn out, neither are the shoes of your feet consumed with age.

6 You have not eaten bread, nor have you drunk wine or strong drink: that you might know that I am the Lord your God.

their eyes; and still they will not believe in him, though he is their life, (C. xxx. 20.) the way, the truth, and the life. Jo. xiv. 6. and i. 4. S. Leo. S. Aug. c. Faust. xvi. 22, &c. II.

VER. 68. With ships, so that thou wilt have no means of escaping by flight. M.—The Romans had a fleet in the Mediterranean, with which they would probably convey the captives into Egypt. Josephus (Ant. xii. 2, &c. Bel. vii. 16,) informs us, that many of the Jews had been conveyed into that country after Jerusalem had been ruined by the Chaldees; (C.) and after it was at last destroyed by the Romans, some of "those who were above 17 years of age, were sent thither in chains to work at the public works;" others were reserved to grace the victor's triumph, or "to be destroyed by the sword, or by wild beasts in the theatres, while those who were under 17, were sold." During the time that Fronto was making the selection, 12,000 were starved to death, either by the cruelty of their keepers, or because they refused food; the multitudes causing it to be very scarce. In the course of the war 97,000 were taken prisoners, and in the siege 1,100,000 perished. For then the whole nation was shut up in prison, as it were by fate, and the city was besieged when full of inhabitants, at the feast of the Passover; "so that the number of those whom the Romans slew publicly, or took prisoners, was greater than ever was destroyed," at once, "by the fury of man, or by the wrath of God." ib. C. xvii. Pompey had carried away many captives into Egypt about 120 years before. Pharaoh Sesao took and pillaged the city, under Roboam, 2 Par. xii. 2.—That. Heb. "by the way concerning which I spoke to thee, (that is, by returning back, through this wilderness, as thou formerly desiredst) thou shalt see it no more." Set to sale, (vendideris), lit. "shalt be sold." After the Jews had been sold, their new masters could not find any to take them off their hands. H.—Buy you. Prot. "there ye shall be sold. . . and no man shall buy you." Can a man be sold without being bought? Whereas if the verb hithamaccartem was rendered, and ye shall offer yourselves for sale, the sense would be proper, and expressive of the most bitter sufferings." Kennicott.—Hegesippus (v. 47,) says, "there were many to be sold, but few purchasers; because the Romans disdained receiving the Jews as slaves, nor were there any Jews left to redeem their countrymen."

CHAP. XXIX. VER. 1. Covenant renewed, and confirmed with an oath, v. 12. M.—Horeb. Thus the speech of Moses is concluded, (C.) and consequently this verse should be at the end of the last chapter, as it is placed in the celebrated edition of Michaelis and Houbigant. The latter observes that, beside that covenant, &c. shows, that the curses there recorded, are not by way of explication of those mentioned in the preceding 27th chapter, "but of a quite different kind. The former are denounced against those who violate the law of the decalogue, which was given at Horeb; neither do they threaten that the chastisements shall be inflicted in this life: the latter maledictions threaten present punishments, and those of a public nature." See C. xxvii. 26. H.—Josue put in execution in a 8 And took their land and delivered it for a possession to *Ruben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasses.

9 Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and fulfil them: that you may understand all that you do.

10 You all stand this day before the Lord your God, your princes, and tribes, and ancients, and doctors, all the people of Israel,

11 Your children and your wives, and the stranger that abideth with thee in the camp, besides the hewers of wood, and them that bring water:

12 That thou mayst pass in the covenant of the Lord thy God, and in the oath which this day the Lord thy God maketh with thee:

13 That he may raise thee up a people to himself; and he may be thy God, as he hath spoken to thee, and as he swore to thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

14 Neither with you only do I make this covenant, and confirm these oaths, 15 But with all that are present and that are absent.

16 For you know how we dwelt in the land of Egypt, and how we have passed through the midst of nations; and passing through them, 17 You have seen their abominations and filth, that is to say, their idols, wood and stone, silver and gold, which they worshipped.

18 Lest perhaps there should be among you a man or a woman, a family or a tribe, whose heart is turned away this day from the Lord our God, to go and serve more solemn manner, what Moses here describes, (Jos. viii. 30,) to intimate that Jesus would give the last finishing to the outlines of the old covenant.

VER. 8. Seon. Many who were present had seen the plagues of Egypt, and what the Israelites themselves had suffered in the wilderness. C.

VER. 4. Hath not given you, &c. Through your own fault, and because you resisted his grace. Ch.—If they had not been guilty, Moses would never have made them this reproach. "But he shews that they could not understand or obey, without God's assistance. . . and yet if . . . it be wanting, si adjutorium Dei desit, the vice of man is not on that account, deserving of excuse, since the judgments of God are just, though they be hidden." S. Aug. q. 50.—Others explain it thus: Hitherto you have not been able to discern the designs of God in your regard; but now, being on the point of crossing the Jordan, to take possession of the land which God had promised to your fathers, you ought to place an unbounded confidence in him. Others read with an interrogation, which entirely removes the evil interpretation of the wicked, who pretend that God requires impossibilities. "Hath not the Lord?" &c. C.—God sometimes delivers people over to a reprobate sense, and to their own will. Theo. i. q. 37. W.

VER. 6. Bread, &c. as your ordinary food, (M.) though they might have both bread and wine on some occasions; as when they adored the calf, &c. S. Aug. q. 51. See C. viii. 4. C.—Your God, by providing a miraculous food for you. M.

VER. 9. Understand. Heb. "succeed in all your undertakings." C.

VER. 10. Doctors. Heb. Shoterim. Sept. Grammateisagogois, (C.) 'officers, heralds,' &c. C. i. 15. 19. 18, they are translated magistros, "masters or magistrates." H.

VER. 11. Besides, (exceptis), which may signify that all were present; or rather that the strangers of Egypt, &c. who were employed in servile offices, were alone excluded, as having no part in the covenant made with the Israelites. C.—S. Jerom seems to have rendered min, præter, in the latter sense; but the Chal. Sept. &c. take it in the former, as if none at all were absent, from the highest to the lowest. M.

VER. 12. Pass; alluding to the custom of people who pass between the victims, when they engage in a solemn covenant, as Abraham did, Gen. xv. 10.—Oath. Sept. "imprecations," specified in the preceding chapters, v. 14. C.

VER. 15. Absent. Heb. "with him that standeth here this day before the Lord, and with him that is not here with us this day." If all were present, (v. 11,) the absent must here denote the posterity of the Israelites yet unborn. H.—God made the covenant with Abraham and with his seed, before he had any children in the world.

VER. 17. Idols. Heb. "you have seen their abominations and their filth, (or idols) wood," &c. Sept. "their abominations and their idols."

VER. 18. Bitterness; an Israelite, who cherishes now in his heart any idol, (H.) and who may draw God's judgments upon the people, (C.) or induce them the gods of those nations: and there should be among you a root bringing forth gall and bitterness.

19 And when he shall hear the words of this oath, he should bless himself in his heart, saying: I shall have peace, and will walk on in the naughtiness of my heart: and the drunken may consume the thirsty.

20 And the Lord should not forgive him: but his wrath and jealousy against that man should be exceedingly enkindled at that time, and all the curses that are written in this volume should light upon him: and the Lord should blot out his name from under heaven,

21 And utterly destroy him out of all the tribes of Israel, according to the curses that are contained in the book of this law and covenant:

22 And the following generation shall say, and the children that shall be born hereafter, and the strangers that shall come from afar, seeing the plagues of that land, and the evils wherewith the Lord hath afflicted it,

23 Burning it with brimstone, and the heat of salt, so that it cannot be sown any more, nor any green thing grow therein, *after the example of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, Adama and Seboim, which the Lord destroyed in his wrath and indignation:

to follow his wicked example. H.—Let all watch over their children, lest they fall off. Chaldee, "Let there be none among you now, whose heart may be filled with the sin of pride." See Acts viii. 18. and Heb. xii. 15, where this text is cited. The Heb. seems to allude to some very bitter herbs. Rass is mentioned as growing in the ground, and the juice of it is often alluded to. Ose. x. 4. Jer. viii. 13. Ps. lxxviii. 22. Lane is generally joined with the former term, and God threatens to make the faithless Israelites eat of it. Jer. ix. 15. Prov. v. 4. It may denote a poisonous bitter herb, as well as rass, which signifies "the head, gall, wormwood, acornite," &c. C.—The root designates a mind secretly infected with idolatry, and the appetite, being once drunken with pleasures, thirsteth still more. W.

VER. 19. The drunken, &c.: assumat ebria silentem. It is a proverbial expression, which may either be understood as spoken by the sinner, blessing, that is, flattering himself in his sins with the imagination of peace, and so great an abundance as may satisfy, and as it were, consume all thirst and want; or it may be referred to the root of bitterness, spoken of before, which being drunken with sin may attract, and by that means consume such as thirst after the like evils. Ch.—S. Jerom seems to have translated sophoth by assumat, as the MSS. and interpreters read, before the correction of Sixtus V. who adopted the other signification of the Heb. assumat. C.—The sense however seems to be the same, as evil communications corrupt good manners, the wicked draw on those who before were dry, or thirsty, and superior to the allurements of pleasure, but not quite so sincere and constant as to shut out from their hearts the desire of tasting, what the man of the world so highly extols, and thus the just give way to the temptation, and become the companion of the libertine and of the idolater, and of course share in his destruction. The feasts of the idols were generally celebrated with the most dissolute mirth, which seemed more congenial to the depraved heart of man, than the sober feasts, which the Lord allowed his people. The drunken revellings in honour of Baechus, who was worshipped in Arabia, &c. were a disgrace to human nature. Yet it is well known with what eagerness the deluded pagans joined in these religious sports. How prone to such excesses the Israelites also were, sacred history too plainly shews, so that they might well be described as thirsty, and willing to imitate those who were already drunk with dissolute pleasures; and this proverbial warning was not unnecessary to remind them what they had to expect from such conduct, at least if the people should become generally addicted to the service of idols. The most terrible chastisements mentioned below, (v. 20, &c. and in the preceding chapters, and still greater, C. xxviii. 61.) hung over their guilty heads. But the man who should give occasion to such a defection from the Lord, and, like Jeroboam, cause Israel to sin, must remember that he will have to suffer for the sins of all those whom he has perverted. Hence this cutting remark almost always accompanies the mention of Jeroboam's name, He made Israel to sin. Such a one walked in the way, or imitated the sins of the house of Jeroboam, &c. A similar infamy and destruction attend arch-heretics and impostors. H.—Chal. translates, "Let him not say . . . lest he should add sins of ignorance to sins of pride." C.—Sept. "lest the innocent be involved in the destruction of the sinner." Cornelius a Lapide would leave out the negation, and translate, "that the innocent may be," &c. M.—Bonfrere believes that the earth is to be understood; "and the earth drunken or deluged with rain, may take away its former dryness, yet so as to be rendered unfit for cultivation." The proverb affects those who wish for things which will prove destructive to them: as the man who expects to derive great pleasure and advantage from the practice of idolatry, will be miserably deceived, and will only bring on his own ruin; or, if his passions be gratified for a moment, he must, if he die in that state, endure eternal torments in destruction from the Lord done thus to this land? what meaneth this exceeding great heat of his wrath?

25 And they shall answer: Because they forsook the covenant of the Lord, which he made with their fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt:

26 And they have served strange gods, and adored them, whom they knew not, and for whom they had not been assigned:

27 Therefore the wrath of the Lord was kindled against this land, to bring upon it all the curses that are written in this volume:

28 And he hath cast them out of their land, in anger and in wrath, and in very great indignation, and hath thrown them into a strange land, as it is seen this day.

29 Secret things to the Lord our God: things that are manifest, to us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.

face of the Lord. Homer (Odys.) says, "Crimes prosper not; the slow outstrips the quick." Festina lentè. Hasten slowly, is an old and useful admonition. Ebria, a drunken woman, is a very indifferent partner for one that is sober at a dance. H.—The flesh being indulged, presently perverts the understanding. D.

VER. 20. Enkindled, (furnet.) Lit. "smoke." H.—Heb. "the anger (lit. nose) . . . smoke." The Greeks and Romans adopt similar expressions, to denote the wrath and eagerness with which a person is actuated. "Fierce anger always sits upon his nose." Theocrit. So Persius says, Disce, sed ira cadat naso, rugosaque sanqua.

VER. 28. Of salt. This salt was of a bituminous or sulphureous nature, which would burn like oil, and was sometimes used in lamps. Herod. ii. 62. Plin. ii. 104. It dried up the moisture of the earth, and rendered it barren. For which reason, it was scattered upon such places as were no longer to be cultivated, or inhabited. Abimelech sowed some on the ruins of Sichem. Jud. ix. 45. It seems that Palestine now feels the effects of this curse; as, for the most part, it is uncultivated, and a desert, though once so flourishing. C.

VER. 26. Knew not, as their gods. M.—Indeed the gods of the heathens, were for the most part more recent than the days of Abraham, or of Moses, and only newly come up; (C. xxxii. 17.) which was a sufficient proof that they were not gods. H.—Assigned. It seems, as if God had in a manner abandoned other nations to the dominion of idols, while he chose Israel for his peculiar people. Hence, if they followed another god, they were to be treated as rebels. Heb. may have another sense, "and from whom they have received nothing." Chal. Syr. C.—Sept. "gods to whom they were not faithful, (or whom they did not believe) and whom I did not appoint for them." Even while the people pretended to follow the worship of idols, they could surely place no confidence in them, knowing that they were either mere creatures, or even the work of their own hands. H.

VER. 29. Secret things, &c. As much as to say, secret things belong to, and are known to God alone; our business must be to observe what he has revealed and manifested to us, and to direct our lives accordingly. Ch.—The nations full of surprise, at the miseries, which were inflicted upon the Jews, and upon their country, could not comprehend what might have brought on so severe a chastisement, as they little suspected that it was their worshipping those gods, which they themselves adored, v. 2. But those who had been converted, and had been able to penetrate the secrets of God, by means of his gracious revelation, answered (v. 25, &c.) that idolatry had been the chief cause of such inconceivable distress, and a crime of no less enormity, the refusing to acknowledge the true God, in the person of the Messiah, and the putting him even to a disgraceful death, when he came unto his own, (Jo. i.) had served to complete their misery. H.—Moses resumes his discourse, and says that these chastisements had been reserved in the treasury of God's wrath, and he had not denounced them to their father; but now, since he had told them so plainly, what they had to expect, they would be inexcusable if they ran into the danger. Heb. may signify, "The secrets of the Lord . . . are manifest to us." He has shewn us this favour, in preference to other nations. Ps. cxlvi. 20. Vatab.—Secret things are known to God, while those only which are manifest can be discerned by men. Theod. q. 38. W.—Amama wonders at the negligence of B. Luther's version; and observes, that his commentators illustrate "the word of Luther, not of God," in this place, p. 378. H.

CHAP. XXX. VER. 1. Or the curse. The sequel shews that this would prove their portion, and that they would have to do penance among all the nations. H.

pentance of thy heart among all the nations, into which the Lord thy God shall have scattered thee,

2 And shalt return to him, and obey his commandments, as I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul:

3 The Lord thy God will bring back again thy captivity, and will have mercy on thee, and gather thee again out of all the nations, into which he scattered thee before.

4 If thou be driven as far as the poles of heaven, the Lord thy God will fetch thee back from thence,

5 *And will take thee to himself, and bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it: and blessing thee, he will make thee more numerous than were thy fathers.

6 The Lord thy God will circumcise thy heart, and the heart of thy seed: that thou mayst love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayst live.

7 And he will turn all these curses upon thy enemies, and upon them that hate and persecute thee.

8 But thou shalt return, and hear the voice of the Lord thy God, and shalt do all the commandments which I command thee this day:

9 And the Lord will make thee abound in all the works of thy hands, in the fruit of thy womb, and in the fruit of thy cattle, in the fruitfulness of thy land, and in the plenty of all things. For the Lord will return to rejoice over thee in all good things, as he rejoiced in thy fathers:

10 Yet so, if thou hear the voice of the Lord thy God, and keep his precepts and ceremonies, which are written in this law: and return to the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul.

11 This commandment, that I command thee this day, is not above thee, nor far off from thee:

12 Nor is it in heaven, that thou shouldst say: Which of us can go up to heaven, to bring it unto us, and we may hear and fulfil it in work?

* 2 Mac. i. 29.—^b Rom. x. 6.

VER. 3. Before. The Jews are still in expectation of this deliverance, as they say this prediction does not relate to the captivity at Babylon. But Nehemias understood it in this sense, (2 Esd. i. 8,) though it will not have its perfect accomplishment till the latter days, when the Israelites will embrace the true faith. Rom. xi. 25.

VER. 4. Poles. The arctic and antarctic, the northern and southern poles; that is, into the most distant regions. M.—Heb. “the end of heaven,” where it seems to rest upon the earth. C.

VER. 5. Fathers. Some sinners have risen to greater eminence by sincere repentance, than others who have offended less. W. See Luc. vii. 47.

VER. 6. Circumcise. Sept. “purify.” Chal. “take away the folly from.” After the captivity, idolatry was never very prevalent among the Jews. H.—But this prediction will not be fulfilled till the Jews acknowledge the Messiah. C.—Those whose hearts are circumcised, as God here promises, are enabled to love him above all things; and no doubt he will fulfil what he has thus engaged to do, with regard to some. W. S. Aug. q. 53.

VER. 9. Fathers. He will again take pleasure in bestowing favours upon thee, (C.) of a spiritual and more lasting nature. Hence the Jews may understand that they have not yet repented, as they ought to do; since they have been under the wrath of God for above 1500 years. Salien. H.

VER. 11. Above. Heb. “separated, unknown,” &c. Sept. “too heavy.” S. Paul (Rom. x. 6,) adapts this to the Christian law, which is the perfection of that given by Moses. The precepts of Jesus Christ are well known, and easily accomplished (C.) by the sincere lover of justice, (H.) assisted by powerful grace. S. Aug. q. 54. S. Peter (Acts xv.) insinuates, that it was very difficult under the old law, to comply with all the regulations, at a time when the sacraments did not convey such great graces. D.

VER. 12. Work. There is no need of studying the mysteries of astrology, as the Magi do, to understand the will of God. Grot.—S. Paul adds (v. 7.) or who shall descend into the deep? which is not in Heb. C.—But he probably alludes to the following verse, as the sea is often styled the deep. It was not necessary

13 Nor is it beyond the sea: that thou mayst excuse thyself, and say: “Which of us can cross the sea, and bring it unto us that we may hear, and do that which is commanded?”

14 But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayst do it.

15 Consider that I have set before thee this day life and good; and on the other hand, death and evil:

16 That thou mayst love the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways, and keep his commandments and ceremonies, and judgments; and thou mayst live, and he may multiply thee, and bless thee in the land, which thou shalt go in to possess.

17 But if thy heart be turned away, so that thou wilt not hear, and being deceived with error, thou adore strange gods, and serve them:

18 I foretell thee this day that thou shalt perish, and shalt remain but a short time in the land, to which thou shalt pass over the Jordan, and shalt go in to possess it.

19 I call heaven and earth to witness this day, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing. Choose therefore life, that both thou, and thy seed may live:

20 And that thou mayst love the Lord thy God, and obey his voice, and adhere to him (for he is thy life, and the length of thy days), that thou mayst dwell in the land, for which the Lord swore to thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that he would give it them.

CHAP. XXXI.

Moses encourageth the people, and Josue, who is appointed to succeed him. He delivereth the law to the priests. God foretelleth, that the people will often forsake him, and that he will punish them. He commandeth Moses to write a canticle, as a constant remembrancer of the law.

AND *Moses went, and spoke all these words to all Israel,

2 And he said to them: I am this day a hundred and twenty years old, I can no longer go out and come in, especially as the Lord also hath said to me: “Thou shalt not pass over this Jordan.

3 The Lord thy God then will pass over before thee:

for the Jews, or for Christians, (H.) to undertake long voyages, to discover the true God, as the ancient philosophers were obliged to do; and after they had obtained some idea of the truth, they were afraid to declare it, on account of the prejudices of the people. C.—But the most illiterate among us, may easily obtain sufficient knowledge to regulate his life. H.

VER. 14. Heart. Sept. add, “and in thy hands.” Thou art often obliged to talk about the law, and to learn it by heart. Nothing hinders thee, with the grace of God, from putting it in practice. C.—No teacher could more plainly inculcate the liberty of the human will. Theod. q. 38. S. Aug. de Nat. 69. S. Amb. &c. W.

VER. 15. Evil. Obedience will insure eternal life; but if thou give the preference to evil, the second death must be thy portion, v. 19. H. Eccli. xv. 17. M.—It may also refer to the goods and evils of the present life, of which Moses has been speaking. C.

VER. 19. I call. He begins his canticle in the same emphatical manner, (C. xxii.) as Isaiah does his prophecy. H.

VER. 20. He is. From God all advantages are derived. We may render the Heb. with the Sept. “Because this is thy life (C.) . . . to dwell,” &c. By observing the law of God, long life and possession of the promised land can be alone attained. H.

CHAP. XXXI. VER. 1. Went. Began. M.—“Concluded.” Sept. continued, or just before he dismissed the audience, he spoke to them as follows. Josephus (iv. 8,) thinks that this took place the day after his first harangue. C.

VER. 2. Come in, to conduct you. M.—Especially. Heb. “and the Lord.” It was not the want of strength, which hindered Moses from continuing to perform his arduous functions, as he was still full of vigour both in soul and body; (C. xxxiv. 7. C.) but it was his submission to the will of God, who had resolved thus to punish his former diffidence. H.

VER. 3. Then. This word is not in Heb. or the Sept.; neither does Moses mean to insinuate, that God would take his place in conducting the people; but only that after he should be no more, the divine Providence would no less watch he will destroy all these nations in thy sight, and thou shalt possess them: and this Josue shall go over before thee, as the Lord hath spoken.

4 And the Lord shall do to them *as he did to Sehon and Og, the kings of the Amorrites, and to their land, and shall destroy them.

5 Therefore when the Lord shall have delivered these also to you, *you shall do in like manner to them as I have commanded you.

6 Do manfully, and be of good heart: fear not, nor be ye dismayed at their sight: for the Lord thy God he himself is thy leader, and will not leave thee, nor forsake thee.

7 And Moses called Josue, and said to him before all Israel: *Take courage, and be valiant: for thou shalt bring this people into the land which the Lord swore he would give to their fathers, and thou shalt divide it by lot.

8 And the Lord who is your leader, he himself will be with thee: he will not leave thee, nor forsake thee: fear not, neither be dismayed.

9 And Moses wrote this law, and delivered it to the priests, the sons of Levi, who carried the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and to all the ancients of Israel.

10 And he commanded them, saying: After seven years, in the year of remission, in the feast of tabernacles,

11 When all Israel come together, to appear in the sight of the Lord thy God, in the place which the Lord shall choose, thou shalt read the words of this law before all Israel, in their hearing,

12 And the people being all assembled together, both men and women, children and strangers, that are within thy gates: that hearing they may learn, and fear the Lord your God, and keep, and fulfil all the words of this law:

* Num. xxi. 24.—b Supra vii. 2.

over his people, and direct the counsels of Josue, who stood beside him. H.—The ark preceded the army, (Jos. iii.) and God invisibly put the enemies of Israel to flight. M.

VER. 7. Called. Heb. "unto Josue." He did this publicly, that no dispute might arise after his death, respecting the choice of a successor. H.—Lot. Heb. and Chal. "thou shalt put them in possession of it." C.

VER. 9. This law of Deuteronomy. M.—Some think that he had written so far before he came to the assembly, as well as the Canticle; because God commanded him the same day to ascend the mount. C. xxxii. 48. C.—But Moses did not speak the discourses recorded in this book, at one time. After he had, therefore, dismissed the people with his blessing, and with an assurance that God would be with their newly appointed leader, he committed to writing what he had delivered by God's order, at different times, and gave a copy of the Pentateuch to the priests, who were to keep it carefully on the side of the ark, and explain it to the people, particularly every seventh year. The Jews understand this law to mean the whole Pentateuch. It may denote also, more particularly (H.) Deuteronomy, as far as this place, or the 27th, and three subsequent chapters to it. He gave two copies; one to be deposited beside the ark, and the other (v. 26,) to be kept by the priests. In all contracts of consequence, this method is observed, one copy being laid carefully by, and the other left in the hands of those who may be concerned. Jer. xxxii. 12. The Rabbins say that 18 copies were taken; one for each of the 12 tribes, and one to be placed on the side of the ark. But of this new assertion we must not expect to hear any proof.—Priests, whose duty it is to instruct the people. Mat. ii. 7. C.—Ancients, or magistrates, who must put the law in execution, and guide their decisions by it. H.—The mention of the ark in this place, is to insinuate, that the book was to be deposited on one side of it, v. 26. The priests might carry the ark, if they thought proper, (M) as they did sometimes on the more solemn occasions; (Jos. iii. and vi. 1 K. v. 4,) though the duty belonged to the Levites. Num. iii. and iv. The pagans placed their sacred books in their temples, under the care of the priests, who were obliged to transcribe them. C.

VER. 10. Years commenced. Heb. "at the extremity of seven years." The sabbatical years began at the expiration of every six years, (H.) after the land of Canaan was conquered, (C.) or perhaps after the passage of the Jordan, which took place soon after this discourse was made. Josue spent above six years in the conquest of the country, and then divided it among the tribes. The seventh year was the first year of remission; as the Israelites, particularly on the east side of the Jordan, had already enjoyed the benefits of the country for a considerable 13 That their children also, who now are ignorant, may hear, and fear the Lord their God, all the days that they live in the land whither you are going over the Jordan to possess it.

14 And the Lord said to Moses: Behold the days of thy death are nigh: call Josue, and stand ye in the tabernacle of the testimony, that I may give him a charge. So Moses and Josue went, and stood in the tabernacle of the testimony:

15 And the Lord appeared there in the pillar of a cloud, which stood in the entry of the tabernacle.

16 And the Lord said to Moses: Behold thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, and this people rising up, will go a whoring after strange gods in the land to which it goeth in to dwell: there will they forsake me, and will make void the covenant, which I have made with them:

17 And my wrath shall be kindled against them in that day: and I will forsake them, and will hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured: all evils and afflictions shall find them, so that they shall say in that day: in truth it is because God is not with me, that these evils have found me.

18 But I will hide, and cover my face in that day, for all the evils which they have done, because they have followed strange gods.

19 Now therefore write you this canticle, and teach the children of Israel: that they may know it by heart, and sing it by mouth, and this song may be unto me for a testimony among the children of Israel.

20 For I will bring them into the land, for which I swore to their fathers, that floweth with milk and honey. And when they have eaten, and are full, and fat, they will turn away after strange gods, and will serve them: and will despise me, and make void my covenant.

* Jos. i. 6. 3 Kings ii. 2.

time. If they had been required to wait till the whole had been conquered, no sabbatical year would have been of obligation before the reign of Solomon, as he had still some of the devoted nations to subdue. See Ex. xxiii. Lev. xxv. Sallen. A. C. 1463. At this time, the ark was removed from Gulgala to Silo, where it remained about 350 years. Jos. xviii. H.

VER. 11. Thou shalt. Sept. "you shall read." Josephus says, the high priest had to perform this office; while the Rabbins assert, that the chief magistrate, Moses, and his successors, the kings of Juda, had to read the law publicly. The princes did this in the court of the temple, designed for the women, as they also were bound to hear it. We find that Josias read aloud in the temple the words of the covenant, which had been lately discovered, 4 K. xxiii. 2. C.—But Esdras, a Levite, did the like; (1 Esd. viii. 2,) and the command seems to be directed chiefly to the priests, from whose number Moses was not excluded. Pa. xcviii. 6. H.

VER. 12. Children, (parvulis.) Those who were above 12 years of age, attended the festivals as much as possible, particularly the three great ones. Even little children came to the temple, when they did not live at too great a distance. The lawgiver knew of what importance it was to inspire their tender minds with a love and respect for religion, and for the laws. C.

VER. 14. In the court, as none but priests were allowed to enter the tabernacle. M.

VER. 17. My face, as one indignant and much displeased. C.—I will withdraw my special protection and favours from them. M.

VER. 19. This canticle, which will be given in the following chapter. Hence this law, (v. 9,) may comprise not only what had gone before, but also the remaining part of the book of Deuteronomy. This Moses would write before his death, and deliver entire, with the preceding books, to be kept with the utmost care, by the priests, as a testimony to remind all of what had happened in past ages, and what would befall the transgressors of God's law. H.—The canticle, containing an abridgment of the book of Deuteronomy, (C.) as the latter did of the whole law, was to be copied out more frequently, (H.) and committed to memory. Some suppose, that Moses and Josue are here ordered to see this put in execution. Others think that Moses gives this commission to the priests.—That they. Heb. "put it in their mouths, (C.) that this song may be a witness for me against," &c. God foresaw that the Israelites would prove rebellious; but he leaves them without excuse, as they could not plead ignorance. H.—This testimony against them was written in the form of a canticle, that it might be more easily remembered. W.

VER. 20. Despise, (detrahent,) detract, (H.) and represent me as an unjust 21 And after many evils and afflictions shall have come upon them, this canticle shall answer them for a testimony, which no oblivion shall take away out of the mouth of their seed. For I know their thoughts, and what they are about to do this day, before that I bring them into the land which I have promised them.

22 Moses therefore wrote the canticle, and taught it the children of Israel.

23 And the Lord commanded Josue, the son of Nun, and said: Take courage, and be valiant: for thou shalt bring the children of Israel into the land which I have promised, and I will be with thee.

24 Therefore after Moses had wrote the words of this law in a volume, and finished it:

25 He commanded the Levites, who carried the ark of the covenant of the Lord, saying:

26 Take this book, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God: that it may be there for a testimony against thee.

27 For I know thy obstinacy, and thy most stiff neck. While I am yet living, and going in with you, you have always been rebellious against the Lord: how much more when I shall be dead?

28 Gather unto me all the ancients of your tribes, and your doctors, and I will speak these words in their hearing, and will call heaven and earth to witness against them.

29 For I know that, after my death, you will do wickedly, and will quickly turn aside from the way that I have commanded you: and evils shall come upon you in and weak God. Heb. "they will despise, or blaspheme," &c. Sept. "they will irritate me." C.

VER. 21. Thoughts. Heb. "imagination." Sept. "wickedness."—Them. Heb. "concerning which I swore." Sept. add "to their fathers." H.

VER. 23. The Lord. Heb. has not this word, so that it would seem as if Moses had given this charge to Josue; but the context shews (C.) that it was the Lord; (v. 14.) for he swore to give the land to Israel. The Sept. insert the words Moses and the Lord. "And Moses commanded Josue . . . the land which the Lord swore." H.—This is the first time that God addresses Josue, in order to confirm his authority. M.

VER. 26. Side. But not within, (M.) according to the generality of interpreters, whom Calnet follows. Ex. xxv. 10. But here he adopts the contrary opinion of Jonathan and Grotius, and asserts that this writing, containing the 29th, 30th, and 31st chapters, on thin boards, was placed in the ark, beside the tables of the law, in the same manner as the Philistines placed it in a coffer of gold, 1 K. vi. 8. We read (3 K. viii. 9.) that there was nothing in the ark except the two tables, which might be true at the time that book was written; though S. Paul (Heb. ix. 4.) tells us, that the golden pot, and the rod of Aaron, were in the ark. If they were there in the days when the author of the first book of Kings lived, the passage in question must be understood with these exceptions. C.—This difficulty cannot, however, be now easily decided, as the Scripture often uses the word in, to denote near to, &c. v. 14. The coffer of the Philistines might also be on the outside of the ark. H.—Thee. This act of the ratification of the covenant, which had been made at Horeb, 39 years before, (C.) was placed in or near the ark. H.—The three chapters, of which it probably consisted, seem to have been what was discovered in the reign of Josias; as the threats and blessings which they contain, would naturally tend to make a strong impression upon all, 4 K. xxii. 8. C.—Kennicott thinks that Helcias discovered the very MS. which Moses had written with his own hand, and which he deposited neither in, nor fastened to any side of the ark, but only placed by the side (mitsad, juxta, Noldius) of it, or upon the same table; so that it might not be taken by the Philistines, but kept in some suitable place. Dis. ii. It is surprising that Huet cites Jonathan as delivering this sentiment, in caput ad latus dextrum. H.

CHAP. XXXII. VER. 1. Speak. Heb. and Sept. "Heaven attend, and I will speak." H.—Never was there an exordium more pompous, or better adapted to the subject. Moses calls those who never die to witness what he asserts, as if to insinuate that these truths ought never to be forgotten. See Num. iv. 6. Virgil (xii.) imitates this style, Esto nunc nol testis & hoc mihi terra precanti, (C.) which he puts in the mouth of Æneas, to whom Latinus replies, Hæc eadem Ænea, terram, mare, sidera juro.

VER. 2. Gather, as rain does from vapours; (M.) so let the sum of what I have taught you be collected into this short canticle, and penetrate your hearts. H.—Chal. "may my discourse be as delightful as the rain." Sept. "may my apophthegm (or sententious discourse, C.) be expected with earnestness, like rain," when the soil is thirsty. H.—Preachers are compared to clouds, and their speech to rain. Is. lx. 8. Eccli. xxxix. 4.—Drops. Some explain this and the former the latter times, when you shall do evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him by the works of your hands.

30 Moses therefore spoke, in the hearing of the whole assembly of Israel, the words of this canticle, and finished it even to the end.

CHAP. XXXII.

A canticle for the remembrance of the law. Moses is commanded to go up into a mountain, from whence he shall see the promised land, but not enter into it.

HEAR, O ye heavens, the things I speak, let the earth give ear to the words of my mouth.

2 Let my doctrine gather as the rain, let my speech distil as the dew, as a shower upon the herb, and as drops upon the grass.

3 Because I will invoke the name of the Lord: give ye magnificence to our God.

4 The works of God are perfect, and all his ways are judgments: God is faithful, and without any iniquity, he is just and right.

5 They have sinned against him, and are none of his children, in their filth: they are a wicked and perverse generation.

6 Is this the return thou makest to the Lord, O foolish and senseless people? Is not he thy father, that hath possessed thee, and made thee, and created thee?

7 Remember the days of old, think upon every generation: ask thy father, and he will declare to thee: thy elders, and they will tell thee.

8 When the Most High divided the nations: when he appointed the bounds term in the original, of "a stormy and vehement shower," while others attach this idea only to the last part of the sentence. C.—The lawgiver wishes to engage the hearts of his audience by mildness, though he is forced also to thunder, in order to rouse their attention, v. 15. H.—Sound doctrine produces much fruit in good dispositions, as rain causeth the seed to push forth which has been sown in an excellent soil. W.

VER. 3. Invoke, or praise. Vatab.—Magnificence; admire and fear his greatness. C.—The first duty of men is to praise God, the next to confess their sin. v. 5. W.

VER. 4. Right. You cannot complain of having been first abandoned by God. All his works and proceedings are entitled to praise. Heb. "This rock, (hatsur) his works are perfect." C.—Sept. "God, his works are true." H.—God is often styled a rock, to denote his strength. v. 18. Ps. lxii. 8.

VER. 5. Filth, or idolatry. The fidelity of God is contrasted with the infidelity of his people, who deserve not to be called his children. The Sept. Chal. Syr. and Arab. seem to have read in a different manner from what the Hebrew does at present. C.—As it stands it is quite unintelligible: Corrupti, non filii ejus, macula eorum. Two letters have been carelessly inserted, and la has been placed after lu, contrary to the Sam. text, which is perfectly clear: "They are corrupted, they are not his, but filii macula, children defiled." Houbigant, prol. 75.—Capellus (p. 288.) condemns the Sept. as he follows a wrong punctuation, and translates, "they did not sin against him, reprehensible children;" whereas, it more properly signifies, "they sinned, not his, but children deserving reprehension, (or children of blame, they did not belong or stick close to him) being a crooked and perverse generation." H.—Their wickedness cannot be attributed to God. He is no less powerful and holy, though they have given themselves up to the service of idols. S. Aug. q. 55. C.—He had given them all necessary instructions and assistance; so that, finding them always prone to evil, the more favours he heaped upon them, he was on the point of exterminating all the guilty at once, v. 26. H.

VER. 6. Possessed thee, as his peculiar inheritance. M.—Heb. "has purchased thee, made thee, and established thee." The Sept. render this last word like the Vulg. as they seem to have read, ibnoc. C.

VER. 8. Israel. He suffered the people of Chanaan to occupy as much land as would be requisite for the Israelites. Sept. "according to the number of the angels of God." Hence many of the ancients gathered that there were seventy angel guardians of provinces, and as many languages; while others did not pretend to determine the exact number. But the version which they have followed, is in opposition to all the rest. C.—They have also disputed on this occasion, whether the elect will be equal in number to the good angels, as S. Greg. thinks; (hom. 34. in Luc. xv.) or they will only fill up the places of those who have fallen. See Mag. Sent. ii. 9. Abenezra observes, that interpreters understand this text as alluding to the dispersion of nations, (Gen. xi.) when God decreed that the land of the seven nations should belong to and be sufficient for the Israelites. Amama. H.—The Heb. may be rendered, "He fixed the limits of each people. At that time the children of Israel were few in number, (9) when the Lord chose (253) of people according to the number of the children of Israel.

9 But the Lord's portion is his people: Jacob the lot of his inheritance.

10 He found him in a desert land, in a place of horror, and of waste wilderness: he led him about, and taught him: and he kept him as the apple of his eye.

11 As the eagle enticing her young to fly, and hovering over them, he spread his wings, and hath taken him, and carried him on his shoulders.

12 The Lord alone was his leader: and there was no strange god with him.

13 He set him upon high land: that he might eat the fruits of the field, that he might suck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the hardest stone.

14 Butter of the herd, and milk of the sheep, with the fat of lambs, and of the rams of the breed of Basan: and goats with the marrow of wheat, and might drink the purest blood of the grape.

15 The beloved grew fat, and kicked: he grew fat, and thick and gross, he forsook God who made him, and departed from God his Saviour.

16 They provoked him by strange gods, and stirred him up to anger with their abominations.

17 They sacrificed to devils and not to God, to gods whom they knew not: that were newly come up, whom their fathers worshipped not.

18 Thou hast forsaken the God that begot thee, and hast forgotten the Lord that created thee.

19 The Lord saw, and was moved to wrath: because his own sons and daughters provoked him.

20 And he said: I will hide my face from them, and will consider what their last end shall be: for it is a perverse generation, and unfaithful children.

21 They have provoked me with that which was no god, and have angered me with their vanities: *and I will provoke them with that, which is no people, and will vex them with a foolish nation.

22 A fire is kindled in my wrath, and shall burn even to the lowest hell: and shall devour the earth with her increase, and shall burn the foundations of the mountains.

23 I will heap evils upon them, and will spend my arrows among them.

24 They shall be consumed with famine, and birds shall devour them with a most bitter bite: I will send the teeth of beasts upon them, with the fury of creatures that trail upon the ground, and of serpents.

25 Without, the sword shall lay them waste, and terror within, both the young man and the virgin, the sucking child with the man in years.

* Jer. xv. 14. Rom. x. 19.

his people," &c. Long after the division of the earth, (which the Lord had ordered, Acts xvii. 26,) the Israelites were very few in number, as Jacob observes, Gen. xxxiv. 30. See C. xxvi. 5. Pa. civ. 9. 12. C.—But this explication does not satisfy Houbigant, (p. 76, Prol.) no more than that of Le Clerc. He is convinced that a word has been transposed, and another left out, as the Sam. copy has Israel twice, and he would therefore translate, "He divided his people according to the number of the sons of Israel." In his eternal decrees, He allotted twelve portions of land in Chanaan to the descendants of Jacob, and these Josue was ordered to mark out for them. See Jos. iv. 5. H.

VER. 9. Lot. Heb. lit. "the cord," in allusion to the ancient method of dividing lands with a cord. Herodotus (ii. 6,) observes, that the length of one, in Upper Egypt, was 60 stadia, or 7700 paces, while it was only half as much in Lower Egypt.

VER. 10. He found. Sept. and Chal. "he gave him what was sufficient, in the desert land." God made choice of a nation destitute of every thing, that they might confess with gratitude that they had received all from him. C.—"Taught him" both by "instructions," and by various "chastisements." Sept. spai-deusen. H.—The space of forty years was necessary (C.) to eradicate the propensity to evil, and the corrupt manners of the Hebrews, who were therefore conducted through a wilderness, where they might not be contaminated by the company of other nations, (H.) but might have leisure to meditate on the law of God. C.—Eye, with the utmost care. M.—He protected those whom he had chosen out of pure mercy. W.

VER. 11. Shoulders, as (Ex. xix. 4,) upon the wings of eagles. It is said that the eagle hovers over the nest, to encourage her young ones to fly, and when she sees them exhausted, she takes them upon her back. This similitude shews the extreme affection of God towards his people. Heb. and Chal. may also be, "as an eagle makes (C. or stirs up) her nest, hatches her young, spreads her wings over them, and bears them upon her wings, so the Lord alone was his leader." H.

VER. 12. With him, to stand up in their defence, though the Israelites adored but too many others in the desert.

VER. 13. High land, in a place of safety, both against the enemy, and the inundations of water. The Nile renders Egypt like one continued sea for about 80 days, in the summer season. C.—God had already begun to put the Israelites in possession of the fertile countries east of the Jordan, where there were several high mountains. H.—But when this canticle should be recited, in after ages, they would also enjoy the other regions, which had been promised unto them, on the west. Moses speaks, like a prophet, of things to come, as if they were already past. M.—Stone. Bees make honey in such places, and olive trees flourish on the side of a hill. Vestiges still remain of the industry with which the Jews have formerly cultivated their territory, supporting the earth with walls (C.) when it was in danger of falling down, or of becoming barren, for want of moisture. H.

VER. 14. Butter or "cream," as the former article was probably not yet discovered. Gen. xviii. 8. C.—The proofs of this assertion, from the original, chemath, and from the Scripture, frequently representing butter as a liquid, seem not, however, very solid. See Judg. v. 25. Prov. xxx. 33. The Sept. have lit. "the butter of oxen," but the latter name includes all of the species. H.—Basan. The Sept. have "the young of bulls and of he-goats;" though they generally translate "fat sheep." See S. Jer. in Isai. liii.—Wheat. Heb. "fat of the kidneys of wheat."—Grape. See Gen. xlix. 11. Androcles wrote to Alexander, who loved wine too much, "when thou art about to drink wine, remember, O king, that thou art drinking the blood of the earth." Plin. xiv. 15.

VER. 15. Beloved. Heb. yeshurun, is supposed to be a diminutive of Israel. C. xxxiii. 5. and 26. C.—Prot. "Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked; thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatness; then he forsook God, which made him, and lightly esteemed the rock of his salvation." This sudden change of persons is not found in the Sept. "And Jacob eat, and was filled, and the beloved kicked; he grew fat, thick, and broad, and he abandoned God . . and revolted from God his Saviour." H.—Temporal prosperity occasioned the revolt of the Jews against their benefactor. W.

VER. 17. Devils. Heb. "to the destroyers, or to those of the fields." See Lev. xvii. 7. Baruc. iv. 7. 35. C.—Knew not. Sept. "revered not." H.—Heb. may be "who knew them not," who had bestowed nothing upon them. C. xxix. 26.—Come up. Heb. "of the neighbourhood," gods whose origin they knew, (C.) as well as the people who had given them that title; (H.) gods of human invention. M.—Novelty allureth to the worship of idols and to heresy. W.

VER. 18. Created. Sept. "gave thee food." Heb. "of the rock that begat thee, thou art unmindful, and hast forgotten God that formed thee, (H.) or praises thee," the source of thy felicity. C.—Calvin (Instit. i. 11. 9,) to insinuate that Catholics adore pictures, as the Israelites did the golden calf, pretends that they could not have forgotten that God delivered them out of Egypt. Thus he contradicts the Scriptures! W.

VER. 19. Daughters. The women of Israel, who were not less addicted to idolatry than the men. H.

VER. 20. From them. The Jews themselves acknowledged, in the siege of Jerusalem, that God had abandoned and given up to destruction his once beloved people. Joseph. Bel. vii. 8. C.—Consider, or look on their utter ruin with indifference, or rather with complacency. H.—I will laugh at your destruction. Prov. i. 16. C.—God loves without seeing any preceding merit in his creatures, but he never abandons them till they have first proved unfaithful. W.

VER. 21. Vanities. Sept. "idols." H.—Nation. The Gentiles were of this description, when they were called to the true faith. This excited the indignation of the Jews, as they would neither enter heaven themselves, nor suffer others to obtain that happiness. Rom. i. 19. Theod. q. 41. "An association bound together by law, constitutes a nation. A multitude which has no laws, or bad ones, is unworthy of the name." Grot.—The Jews looked upon all others with sovereign contempt. C.—Now, in their turn, they are despised. W.

VER. 22. A fire. He alludes to the destruction of Sodom, (C.) which may be considered as a figure of that which will overtake the whole world at the last day, and excruciate both the souls and the bodies of the reprobate in the flames of hell. H.—Fire also denotes war, the horrors of which overwhelmed the Jews both at the first and the last sieges of Jerusalem. C.

VER. 23. Arrows. Pestilence, famine, war, sickness, and death, are termed the arrows of God.

VER. 24. Birds. This refers in a particular manner to those who are deprived of sepulture, and hung on a gibbet. C. xxvii. 26. Josephus (Bel. vi. 12,) informs us, that the multitude of Jews who were to be crucified, was so great, that sufficient wood could not be procured to make crosses for them, nor was there place for them to stand. Heb. "they shall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with burning heat;" (H.) or with the disease called the carbuncle. C.—But the Sept. and Chal. explain it of "birds." H.—Bite. Sept. "with a painful contraction of the nerves." Chald. "infested with evil spirits."—Beasts. Thus God forced the people of Samaria to obey his law, 4 K. xvii. 25.—Fury, "venom." Pag. tin. M.

26 I said: Where are they? I will make the memory of them to cease from among men.

27 But for the wrath of the enemies, I have deferred it: lest perhaps their enemies might be proud, and should say: Our mighty hand, and not the Lord, hath done all these things.

28 They are a nation without counsel, and without wisdom.

29 "O that they would be wise, and would understand, and would provide for their last end.

30 How should one pursue after a thousand, and two chase ten thousand? Was it not because their God had sold them, and the Lord had shut them up?

31 For our God is not as their gods: our enemies themselves are judges.

32 Their vines are of the vineyard of Sodom, and of the suburbs of Gomorrha: their grapes are grapes of gall, and their clusters most bitter.

33 Their wine is the gall of dragons, and the venom of asps, which is incurable.

34 Are not these things stored up with me, and sealed up in my treasures?

35 "Revenge is mine, and I will repay them in due time, that their foot may slide: the day of destruction is at hand, and the time makes haste to come.

36 The Lord will judge his people,* and will have mercy on his servants: he shall see that their hand is weakened, and that they who were shut up have also failed, and they that remained are consumed.

37 And he shall say: "Where are their gods, in whom they trusted?

38 Of whose victims they ate the fat, and drank the wine of their drink-offerings: Let them arise and help you, and protect you in your distress.

39 See ye that I alone am, and there is no other God besides me: "I will kill, and I will make to live: I will strike, and I will heal, 'and there is none that can deliver out of my hand.

40 I will lift up my hand to heaven, and I will say: I live for ever.

41 If I shall whet my sword as the lightning, and my hand take hold on judgment: I will render vengeance to my enemies, and repay them that hate me.

42 I will make my arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh, of the blood of the slain and of the captivity, of the bare head of the enemies.

43 "Praise his people, ye nations, for he will revenge the blood of his servants: and will render vengeance to their enemies, and he will be merciful to the land of his people.

44 So Moses came and spoke all the words of this canticle, in the ears of the people, and Josue, the son of Nun.

45 And he ended all these words, speaking to all Israel.

VER. 26. Men. Heb. "I said I will disperse or exterminate them." Samar. "my fury shall consume them." We may translate, "I had resolved to destroy them; 27. Bell." &c. (C.) or Prot. "I said I would scatter them into corners, and would . . . were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy," &c.—Where are they? in the mouth of God, shews an utter destruction, so that no vestiges of them remain. Their memory is perished. H.—God sometimes defers punishing the sinner for just reasons. W.

VER. 27. Wrath. The enemies of the Israelites wished nothing more than their destruction. If therefore God had gratified this desire, by punishing his people, as they deserved, the enemy would have presently insinuated, that He had not been able to drive them out, or that (H.) he was fickle, &c.—Mighty, (ex-celsa;) "lifted up." This expression shews the pride and insolence of those who make use of it, as if they despised God and all his laws. Procopius mentions this wicked inscription, to be still seen at Rome, "I lift up my hands to (or against) God, who destroyed me, though innocent, in the 20th year of my age." Pos. Procius, (C.) who seems to have been a woman, quæ viri, &c. H.

VER. 28. Wisdom. Interpreters generally explain this and the eight following verses, of those nations whom God employed to scourge his people, though some understand it all of the Israelites. C.—The words may be applied to all who transgress the law of God, as this is a sure mark of folly and impiety, and the Lord earnestly wishes that all should be converted, v. 29. True wisdom reflects on the past, present, and future, (W.) in order to make provision for the last, ardent conflict. H.

VER. 30. Thousand. In the battles which the Israelites had fought, the hand of God had appeared so visibly in their defence, giving them the victory over nations much more numerous, (C.) that all must confess their defeat must be in punishment of some former transgression, and that it is not the mighty hand of the enemy, but God himself, who chastises his people, as he had foretold. C. xxviii. 7. 25. 49. H.—Of this the neighbouring nations were convinced, as Achior declared to Holofernes. Judit. v. 17. When the Hebrews neglected the law of God they were oppressed, and their conversion was presently rewarded with liberty, (C.) and a profusion of blessings.

VER. 31. Judges. The Egyptians, Amalecites, &c. had witnessed the miracles which God had now wrought for 40 years' time, in favour of his people. II.—They knew also how the Israelites had been punished for their sins. M.—Though they followed a false religion themselves, they could discern the beauty of the true one. W.—Videò meliora proboque—Deteriora sequor. Ovid.

VER. 32. Bitter. The enemies of Israel, were of an accursed progeny. H.—They imitated the vices of those wicked cities. Moses cautioned his people to beware of the root of bitterness. C. xxix. 18. C.—If they should neglect the admonition, and become like the Chanaanites, they knew what they had to expect. H.—Their works being hateful to the Lord, (M.) he would surely punish them. The fruits which grow near the lake of Sodom, though sometimes fair to the eye, (H.) are full of dust, "black and empty, they fall to ashes," in cinerem vane-scunt. Tacit. v. Jos. Bel. v. 5. Growing on a bituminous soil, they could not but have a disagreeable taste. C.—The authors of the Universal History call in question what the ancients have reported concerning the fruits of Sodom. H.

VER. 34. Treasures. Whether we refer the preceding remarks to the faithless Israelites, whose corruption was less pardonable, as they had received so many favours from above, or to their proud and cruel enemies, who exceeded the bounds of moderation in their wars, God keeps an exact account of all, and will shortly punish both, according to their deserts. H.

VER. 35. Time. Men are eager to punish their enemies, for fear lest they should escape. But God defers his chastisements frequently in this world, designing to make his enemies feel the weight of his indignation for all eternity. How consoling it is for the just, to think that they have God for an avenger. "If thou, says Tertullian, remit the injury, which thou hast received, into his hands, he is the avenger . . . How much ought patience to endure, in order to make God a debtor." Adeo satis idoneus patientiæ sequester Deus.—That. Sept. "when" (C) they shall fall and come to ruin. M.

VER. 36. People who have been guilty, that he may spare them, when they repent. M.—"He will give judgment in favour of his people," &c. Houbig.—Servants. He will not involve the innocent in the ruin of the rebellious. M.—But, at the same time, he will have them to be convinced that their salvation came not from themselves. He will assist them when all human aid has proved abortive, (H.) and when they are reduced to the utmost distress. See Isai. xxxv. 3. 3 K. xxi. 21. Those who may have thought themselves secure in their sins, will not escape punishment. W.

VER. 38. Wine. Hence the Jews abhor the wine of Christians, whom they consider as the greatest enemies of God. The pagans were accustomed to make libations to their idols, even in their ordinary repasts. C.—The fat was always sacred to God. Lev. iii. 17. M.

VER. 40. For ever. God can swear by no one greater than himself. Heb. vi. 13.

VER. 41. Lightning, equally terrible and penetrating: fulminis acta modo. En. ix. C.—Judgment, to punish with rigour my declared enemies. H.—These verses seem to regard the idolatrous nations, (M.) though God will not fail to punish the guilty, wherever they may be found. H.

VER. 42. Enemies. I will tear the crown from off their head. Chal. I will destroy the king, as well as the meanest captives. Prot. "from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy." At the very first I will completely destroy them. H.—I will punish them for the slaughter and captivity of my people, whom they have shaved, as a mark of their servile condition. M.—Their bare head, or vain counsels, will be detected and punished. W.

VER. 43. People. Though God afflicted the Israelites for a time, he was always disposed to receive them to his favour again, upon their repentance; and he will even receive them into his Church, before the day of judgment. Rom. xi. 25. C.—This decided predilection for them, would naturally induce other nations to praise them. Grabe's Sept. reads, "Rejoice ye heavens with him, and let all the sons of God adore him, and let all the angels of God strengthen them, because He revegeth the blood of his sons; and he will continue to do so, and he will punish his enemies, and will render to those who hate him; and the Lord will purify the land of his people." H.—In some editions, after Let all the angels of God adore him, (cited Heb. i. 6. Cappel.) they read, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people, which S. Paul quotes, Rom. xv. 10; and then they add, "And Moses wrote this canticle on that day, and he taught it to the children of Israel; (C.) 44. and Moses came forth to the people, and spoke all the words of this law, in the ears of the people, he and Jesus, the son of Nave," by which name they designate Josue, the son of Nun. H.—He assisted Moses in singing the canticle, as his colleague in office, to whom the obligation of withdrawing the people from idolatry

46 And he said to them: Set your hearts on all the words which I testify to you this day: which you shall command your children to observe and to do, and to fulfil all that is written in this law:

47 For they are not commanded you in vain, but that every one should live in them: and that doing them, you may continue a long time in the land whither you are going over the Jordan to possess it.

48 And the Lord spoke to Moses the same day, saying:

49 Go up into this mountain Abarim, (that is to say, of passages) unto Mount Nebo, which is in the land of Moab, over-against Jericho: and see the land of Chanaan, which I will deliver to the children of Israel to possess, and die thou in the mountain.

50 When thou art gone up into it, thou shalt be gathered to thy people, *as Aaron thy brother died in Mount Hor, and was gathered to his people:

51 ^b Because you trespassed against me, in the midst of the children of Israel, at the waters of contradiction, in Cades, of the desert of Sin: and you did not sanctify me among the children of Israel.

* Num. xx. 26. and xxvii. 13.—^b Num. xx. 12. and xxvii. 14.

would henceforth devolve. M.—God always preserved some of the Jews from the general corruption, till the time of the Messias. W.

VER. 47. Live. Heb. "it is your life." They were to cherish the law as their own lives; for their prosperity and length of days depended on their observance of it.

VER. 49. Passages. The author of the Vulgate has given this explication of Abarim. C.

VER. 51. Cades. Heb. "at the waters of Meriba-Cadesh," &c.

VER. 52. Into it. By repeating this reproach and judgment, God excited in his servant the most lively sentiments of repentance for his fault. Num. xx. H.—Aaron had been deprived of the sight of this delightful country. If they had been labouring for its acquisition alone, the reflection must have been very cutting. But they had a better country in view, though they had greatly desired to enter into that land which was to be ennobled and purified by the birth and blood of the Son of God. H.—Having received the order from God in the evening, after Moses had taught his canticle to the people, he immediately set his house in order, and on the following morning he gave his last blessing to the tribes of Israel, and was attended by the chiefs to the foot of the mountain. Salien.

CHAP. XXXIII. VER. 1. Blessing. The Fathers, S. Aug. (q. 56,) &c. explain this of the Christian Church, rather than of the Synagogue. Theod.—Man of God. A title given to a prophet, 1 K. ii. 27. and ix. 6. The prophets often speak of things to come, as if they were past, as we have seen in the conduct of Balaam. Num. xxiv. 3. Moses here delivers his last testament, and speaks as one no longer in the world, so that there is no reason to affirm that this chapter has been added by another hand; (C.) though Kennicott thinks it probable. He suggests, that the first verses of this blessing have been corrupted in the Heb. and should be translated: 2. He, Jehovah, came from Sinai, and he arose upon them from Seir; (Judg. v. 4.) 3. He shone forth from Mount Pharan, and he came from Meriba-Cadesh. (Num. xx. 1. 13.) From his right hand a fire shone forth upon them. 4. Truly he loved the people, and he blessed all his saints. 5. For they fell down at his feet, and they received of his words. 6. He commanded us a law, the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob. 7. And He became king of Jeshurun, when the heads of the people were assembled, together with the tribes of Israel. See (Dia. i. p. 423,) the arguments which he produces in favour of this version. H.

VER. 2. Pharan. Habacuc iii. 3. mentions this apparition. See also Pa. lxvii. 9.—Saints. God was accompanied by legions of angels, when he delivered the law to the Israelites, who are styled a nation of saints. Num. xvi. 3. Sept. "he hastened from Mount Pharan, with ten thousands to Cades. At his right hand are his angels attending." H.—Kodesh does not mean saints, but holiness, or the city of Cades; and the preceding word, which Prot. translate, with ten thousands, more probably refers to another title of the city, as it is specified Meriba-Cadesh. C. xxxii. 51. Ezeo. xlviii. 28. Ken.—Laa. Chal. "from the midst of the fire he has given us a law, written with his own hand." We may translate, "He hath shone from Mount Pharan, and multitudes accompanied him. The Holy One, who hath in his hand fire and the law." See Isai. vi. 3. God conducted his people, like a victorious general, through the wilderness, frequently appearing to them to strike terror into the rebellious. C.—When he first descended upon Sinai, his glory shone on Pharan and Seir, as it were in its progress thither. M.—The law is styled fiery, not only because it was given from the midst of flames, but also because it was to be put in execution with the utmost rigour. H.—But deth is Chaldee, and no where else used for the law, in the books written before the captivity, nor is it acknowledged by the Sept. Syr. &c. Perhaps it was originally aur, as it is in the Sam. version, "shone forth," conformably to a similar passage, Hab. iii. 4. "His brightness was as the sun, horns, or rather splendours (issuing forth) from his hand," &c. Ken.

VER. 3. People, (populus). God loves and watches over all, but particularly (C.) over the nation which he has chosen. Chal. See Wis. iii. 1. Isai. xlix. 16. (256)

52 Thou shalt see the land before thee, which I will give to the children of Israel, but thou shalt not enter into it.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Moses, before his death, blesteth the tribes of Israel.

THIS is the blessing wherewith the man of God, Moses, blessed the children of Israel, before his death.

2 And he said: The Lord came from Sinai, and from Seir he rose up to us: he hath appeared from Mount Pharan, and with him thousands of saints. In his right hand a fiery law.

3 He hath loved the people, *all the saints are in his hand: and they that approach to his feet, shall receive of his doctrine.

4 Moses commanded us a law, the inheritance of the multitude of Jacob.

5 He shall be king with the most right, the princes of the people being assembled with the tribes of Israel.

6 Let Ruben live, and not die, and be he small in number.

* Wisd. iii. 1. and v. 5.

—Doctrine. It was formerly the custom for disciples to sit at their master's feet, (Act. xxii. 3,) as it is still in the eastern countries. Bellon. iii. 12. Sept. "and these are under thee;" (H.) subject to thy orders. C.—Heb. is here extremely confused: "Yea, he loved the people; all his saints are in thy hand, and they sat down at thy feet; every one shall receive of thy words." Moses here addresses the Lord. How could he say therefore, all his, &c. † whose saints, and in whose hand! The Vulg. and Chal. have not the same difficulty, as they read, in his hand, bidu. But the Syriac has, "and he blessed all his saints." Boroc is not very unlike the present Heb. bidoc, (Ken.) r and d being frequently mistaken for each other, and i as often neglected by the Hebrew copyists. H.—The Sam. version confirms this alteration; and the text also has the v, and, at the beginning, which makes the whole to be clearly connected, particularly if we allow that c, which stands for thy, has been substituted for v, his, in the following words, thy feet and thy words, which ought to be his, as all the context speaks of God in the third person. This is agreeable to the Vulg. and to the Sept. also, in the last instance. In the former, the Heb. is printed thy foot, though the Sam. and several MSS. read thy feet. Instead of yissa, "he shall receive," (H.) the plural ought to be substituted, v being omitted both at the beginning and end, as it is in the name of Benaihu, 1 Par. xi. 22. See 2 K. xxiii. 20. The Sam. Syr. and Arab. read, and they received, (Ken.) and the Vulg. they shall receive. The Sept. seem to refer this to Moses, "And Moses received from his words, the law which he enjoined to us." H.—That Moses should speak of himself, in this manner, seems very unaccountable, and therefore a word may perhaps have crept in, on account of its resemblance with the following term, Murase. If it has not, Moses must have assumed the title of king, (v. 5,) which he seems nevertheless to have disclaimed; (C. xvii. 14,) and there was none in Israel before Saul. 1 K. vii. 7. Ken.—We may, however, suppose that he puts these words in the mouths of the people, who would repeat this blessing after he was dead, and mention with gratitude, how Moses had delivered to them so excellent a law, and administered the affairs of state with all the power and dignity of a king. H.

VER. 4. Moses. He expresses himself as if the people were speaking. The change of persons is very frequent in this discourse.—Inheritance. So the psalmist (cxviii. 111,) says, I have purchased thy testimonies for an inheritance for ever. C.

VER. 5. He shall, &c. Erit rex, may perhaps be as well rendered indefinitely, "There shall be a king;" or, with the Sept. "And there shall be over the beloved a ruler," as (H.) some understand this of Moses, others of Saul, though it most probably refers to God himself, who gave the law, and was acknowledged, in the most solemn manner, for the king of Israel.—Right. Heb. yishurun, a term which S. Jerom translates, with the Sept. (C.) C. xxxii. 15, the beloved, as it is supposed to be a diminutive of Israel, to express greater tenderness. Thus Cicero called his daughter Tulliola. H.

VER. 6. Number. This is conformable to the prophecy of Jacob, who deprived Ruben of his birth-right, on account of incest. He is even treated with indulgence, in being permitted to form one of the tribes. Yet some copies of the Sept. Syr. (Theod. q. 42,) and many interpreters, take this in a quite contrary sense, "let him be numerous, or not few;" the negation being supplied from the former part of the verse, which is not unusual in Hebrew. See Gen. ii. 6. Pa. ix. 19. Prov. xxxi. 1, &c. The tribe of Ruben was in effect more numerous than those of Gad, Joseph, or Benjamin. Simeon receives no blessing, probably on account of the crimes for which so many of that tribe were exterminated, (Num. i. 23. and xxvi. 14. C.) and particularly Zambri, one of the chief princes. ib. C. xxv. W.—But Grabe's Sept. applies to Simeon what the rest attribute to Ruben, "And let Simeon be many in number." No solid reason can be given why he should be passed over entirely, as, notwithstanding the infidelity of some of his children, and his own cruelty in not endeavouring to rescue Joseph, &c. he was to form a tribe among his brethren. H.—Some, therefore, imagine that he was to share in the blessings of Ruben, or of Levi, (with whom he is joined by Jacob, Gen. xlix. 5,) or of Juda, near whom he had his allotment of the promised land

7 This is the blessing of Juda. Hear, O Lord, the voice of Juda, and bring him in unto his people: his hands shall fight for him, and he shall be his helper against his enemies.

8 To Levi also he said: Thy perfection and thy doctrine be to thy holy man, whom thou hast proved in the temptation, and judged at the waters of contradiction:

9 "Who hath said to his father, and to his mother: I do not know you; and to his brethren: I know you not: and their own children they have not known. These have kept thy word, and observed thy covenant, 10 Thy judgments, O Jacob, and thy law, O Israel: they shall put incense in thy wrath, and holocaust upon thy altar.

11 Bless, O Lord, his strength, and receive the works of his hands. Strike the backs of his enemies, and let not them that hate him rise.

12 And to Benjamin he said: The best beloved of the Lord shall dwell confidently in him: as in a bride-chamber shall he abide all the day long, and between his shoulders shall he rest.

* Exod. xxxii. 27. Levit. x. 5.

Part of the tribe of Simeon afterwards dwelt in the territories of Juda. Jos. xix. 1. 1 Par. iv. 42. Judg. i. 3. But (C.) it is more likely that the name has been omitted or changed in the original, by the mistake of some early transcriber, in like manner as the tribe of Manasses, included in that of Joseph, seems to have been placed for that of Dan, which otherwise would be omitted. Apoc. vii. 6. 8. Some have recourse to a mystery in both these places. H.

VER. 7. Of Juda, "when he goes to war, and bring him back in peace to his people." Onkelos.—The general made a solemn prayer on such occasions; and the Ps. xix. was composed, and is still used, to draw down God's blessing in times of war. Moses thus clearly insinuates that the tribe of Juda should obtain the sovereign authority, though it would not be without opposition, that Israel would submit to David. He begs that God would remove all obstacles. This tribe was always distinguished for its valour. It was directed by God to attack the Chanaanites, under Othoniel. Judg. i. 2. But its chief glory appeared under the reigns of David and Solomon. The other tribes were scarcely a match for the single tribe of Juda. C.—And he, God. M.—If God be for us, who is against us? Rom. viii. 31. II.

VER. 8. Holy man. Aaron and his successors in the priesthood. Ch.—They were adorned with the Urim and Thummin, which are here rendered perfection and doctrine. C.—Sept. "give to Levi his insignia, (delous) and his truth, to the holy man, the same whom they tried at the temptation, they spoke ill of him at the waters," &c. It was in consequence of the seditious conduct of the Israelites that the two brothers betrayed a want of confidence in God, and were excluded from the land of promise, as Moses often reminds them. C. iii. 26. H.—Temptation. The place which goes by this name is at Raphidim, near Horeb. Ex. xvii. 6. But the word here probably includes all the other places, where the Hebrews tempted God, and particularly that, where so holy a man as Aaron was permitted to fall. C. Num. xxi. 12.—The priesthood is the peculiar blessing and honour of the tribe of Levi. M.

VER. 9. Who hath said, &c. It is the duty of the priestly tribe to prefer God's honour and service before all considerations of flesh and blood: in such manner as to behave as strangers to their nearest akin, when these would withdraw them from the business of their calling. Ch.—The Levites shewed no mercy to such of their brethren as had adored the golden calf. Ex. xxxii. 28. 29. The Chaldee, and many able interpreters, consider them here as judges, who must not be biased in passing sentence, by any natural affection. Vatab.—Others think they must not assist at the funerals of their relations. Lev. xxi. 10. C.—But the two former opinions seem much better. H.—Covenant. Priests ought to be more exemplary in their conduct than other men. W.—It is their duty also to instruct others, and to inculcate the observance of the law, as Heb. and Sept. more clearly specify. "They shall teach thy judgments to Jacob, and thy law to Israel." H.—They were appointed judges (C. xvii. 8. and xix. 17.) and monitors. Ose. iv. 6. &c.

VER. 10. Wrath. He seems to allude to the action of Aaron. Num. xvi. 46. C.—Heb. has, "incense before thee," (H.) as it is explained by the Chal. Sept. &c.—Holocaust, of flour, &c. cail; that of beasts, was styled auile. See C. xiii. 16. C.

VER. 11. Rise. The martial prowess of the Machabees, who were of this tribe, was conspicuous. M.—As the Levites had no portion with the rest, but were to live by tithes, &c. Moses begs that God would bless their labours, (C.) and suffer none to defraud them of their right. H.

VER. 12. Shall dwell, &c. This seems to allude to the temple being built in the confines of the tribe of Benjamin, (Ch.) on the northern part of Jerusalem. The southern division of the city was in the territory of Juda; and hence Jerusalem is attributed to both. Jos. xv. 63. and Judg. i. 21. C.—He rest. The temple was situated on Mount Moria, which was higher than the rest of the city, as the head is above the shoulders. M.—Chal. "The majesty of the Lord shall dwell in his land." This was the sure ground of confidence to Benjamin. As long as God continued with his people, they had nothing to fear, no more than in a bride-chamber, being under the protection of the most High. H.—As Benjamin had 13 To Joseph also he said: Of the blessing of the Lord be his land, of the fruits of heaven and of the dew, and of the deep that lieth beneath.

14 Of the fruits brought forth by the sun and by the moon:

15 Of the tops of the ancient mountains, of the fruits of the everlasting hills:

16 And of the fruits of the earth, and of the fulness thereof. The blessing of him ^b that appeared in the bush, come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the crown of the Nazarite, among his brethren.

17 His beauty as of the firstling of a bullock, his horns as the horns of a rhinoceros: with them shall he push the nations even to the ends of the earth. These are the multitudes of Ephraim, and these the thousands of Manasses.

18 And to Zabulon he said: Rejoice, O Zabulon, in thy going out: and Issachar, in thy tabernacles.

19 They shall call the people to the mountain: there shall they sacrifice the victims of justice. Who shall suck as milk the abundance of the sea, and the hidden treasures of the sands.

been the object of his father's love, so God chose the first king out of his tribe; (M.) and by protecting his temple in a more particular manner, secured him. W.

VER. 13. Fruits. Heb. "for the precious things of heaven, for the dew," &c. so also it has precious, v. 14, &c.

VER. 14. Moon; both those which are annual, as wheat, and those which come every month. Chal. The sun and moon greatly contribute to nourish (H.) and to bring fruit to maturity. Plin. ii. 100. C.—Both the tribes of Ephraim and of Manasses inhabited a fertile region. M.

VER. 15. Everlasting hills. Chal. "which never fail" to produce an abundant crop. H.—The hills of the Israelites were very productive. But when they rebelled against their God, in very deed the hills were liars, and yielded little or nothing. Jer. iii. 23.

VER. 16. Thereof, whatever the earth can produce, particularly wheat, &c. The fruits of heaven, (v. 13.) may denote such as grew on trees. C.—Bush; God, who appeared to Moses. H.—Nazarite. See the note on Gen. xlix. 26. Ch.—Joseph was distinguished by God, by his father, and by the king of Egypt, in a particular manner. The high priest was the Nasir in the house of God, (Lev. xxi. 12.) as Joseph was the chief officer, at the court of Pharaoh. The eastern kings still give this title to their prime minister. Chardin. Perse. T. ii. 5, p. 136.

VER. 17. Bullock, or cow. Shor, denotes all the species. C. xv. 19.—Firstling, is likewise often put for the most excellent. Thus "his beauty, like the finest bullock." The Egyptians had a high esteem for bulls; and Elian (ii. 10.) informs us that Muevis, one of their kings, ordered the people to adore the bull, as the most beautiful of animals. Moses points at the kingdom of Israel, which was chiefly governed by the tribe of Ephraim; or perhaps he alludes to Josue, (C.) who was to succeed him, and to conquer the nations on the other side of the Jordan, with so much resolution and ability. H.—Rhinoceros, as stronger and more penetrating. See Num. xxxii. 22. C.—Horns, designate strength and beauty. Ps. lxxiv. M.—Push, alluding to the manner in which bulls attack their opponents, and hurl them into the air, sparsa ad pugnam proludivit arenâ. Georg. iii. C.—Some of the Fathers have explained this passage of Jesus Christ, the first-born of the creation, who is possessed of all the treasures of wisdom (H.) and beauty whose strength drew all things to himself, after he had lifted up the nations on his cross, as it were with horns, and rescued them from the power of the devil. S. Aug. q. ult. C.—Manasses. To these two tribes, the blessings of their father, Joseph, belong; and their multitudes shall render them very formidable to the nations around them, as long as they obey their God. H.—The younger brother Ephraim, is preferred before the elder. Gen. xlviii. W.

VER. 18. Out to sea. C.—The territory of Zabulon had the Mediterranean sea on the west, and the lake of Tiberias, into which the Jordan flowed, on the east. H.—By the advantages of their situation, and by the example of the Tyrians, the people were induced to engage in commerce, and to study the art of navigation.—Tabernacles. Issachar preferred staying at home to cultivate his rich soil. Gen. xlix. 13. C.

VER. 19. Mountain. Full of gratitude to God, who has bestowed such advantages upon them, these tribes shall go with zeal to the place which the Lord shall choose, (H.) and invite the people, on the road, to go along with them, to offer sacrifice. M.—Perhaps this may allude also to their conduct in the war against Jabin, in which they were particularly active, appointing the place of rendezvous at Mount Thabor, where, though the Scripture be silent, it is probable they would offer a sacrifice of thanks, as they had the prophethess, Debora, along with them, (C.) in like manner as Samuel immolated a calf at Bethlehem, (1 K. xvi.) and Elias a bullock on Mount Carmel, 3 K. xviii. H. See 1 K. xiii. 12.—Sands. This blessing chiefly regarded Zabulon, who received the riches of the sea by commerce, bringing home the gold dust which is found among the sand of some rivers. The river Behus, near Ptolemais, was particularly famous for a sort of sand, of which glass was made. Josephus (Bel. ii. 17.) says, that near the tomb of Memnon, a bed of such sand is found, about 100 cubits long, which, though many vessels

20 And to Gad he said: Blessed be Gad in his breadth: he hath rested as a lion, and hath seized upon the arm and the top of the head.

21 And he saw his pre-eminence, that in his portion the teacher was laid up: who was with the princes of the people, and did the justices of the Lord, and his judgment with Israel.

22 To Dan also he said: Dan is a young lion, he shall flow plentifully from Basan.

23 And to Nephthali he said: Nephthali shall enjoy abundance, and shall be full of the blessings of the Lord: he shall possess the sea and the south.

24 To Aser also he said: Let Aser be blessed with children, let him be acceptable to his brethren, and let him dip his foot in oil.

25 His shoe shall be iron and brass. As the days of thy youth, so also shall thy old age be.

26 There is no other god like the God of the rightest: he that is mounted upon the heaven, is thy helper. By his magnificence the clouds run hither and thither.

have been filled from it, has never been exhausted. See Plin. v. 19. Strabo xvi.—The discovery of glass is supposed to have been the effect of chance; some merchants having placed a nitrous stone under their pot, as soon as it grew hot, and mixed with the sand, which is found near the shore of Tyre, a transparent substance was formed, which the Greeks called uialos, "glass," perhaps in imitation of the Heb. enl, or "sand," of which it was chiefly composed. C.—The Sept. render this verse, "They shall destroy the nations, and you shall call thither, and there you shall sacrifice, . . . because the riches of the sea shall suckle thee, and the merchandise of those who inhabit the sea shore." These tribes greatly contributed to overthrow the army of Sisara beside the torrent of Cisson, which divides their territories. Judg. iv. and v. H.

VER. 20. Breadth. The tribe of Gad, &c. slew or drove the Agarites from their neighbourhood, and seized their country, 1 Par. v. 18. 22. Heb. Sept. and Chal. "Blessed be he that enlargeth Gad," which was verified in Jephth. Jos. xi. 38. C.

VER. 21. He saw, &c. The pre-eminence of the tribe of Gad, to which this alludes, was their having the lawgiver, Moses, buried in their borders; though the particular place was not known. Ch. Prot. "and he provided the first part for himself; because there, in a portion of the lawgiver, was he seated, and he came with the heads of the people," &c. Sept. "And he saw his first-fruits, (the first conquered country of Sehon and of Og) because there the land of the princes was divided, the leaders of the people being assembled, or who were assembled with the leaders. H.—Gad and the two other tribes petitioned for that part of the country, and obtained their request of Moses. Num. xxxii. 27.—Israel. This is generally understood of Moses; but it may be explained of the tribe of Gad, which complied with the conditions imposed on him, and on his brethren, by the Lord, when he allotted the land of Galaad to them. C. iii. 18. C.—Heb. "he executed the justice of the Lord," &c. Sept. "the Lord did justice and his judgment with Israel," approving his choice. H.

VER. 22. Basan. As the Jordan rushes with impetuosity (H.) from Laish, which was seized by some of this tribe; (Judg. xviii.) and as a lion falls on its prey from the mountains of Basan, so shall this tribe give birth to Samson, who was stronger than a lion, (C.) and terribly harassed the Philistines. Judg. xiv. 5. 14, &c. When the Danites found themselves straitened for room, they sent a colony, (H.) which took possession of Laish, and called it after their own name: one of the fountains of the Jordan was in this place, the other was called Jor, (M.) though the river may have a more distant and obscure source in the lake of Phiala, whence Josephus says (H.) it runs by a subterraneous passage, to the fountain of Dan. As it then takes its course through the promised land, of which it is the principal river, Dan may thus be said to supply waters abundantly for the whole country. M.—But the Heb. and Sept. have, "he shall leap from Basan," which must be understood of the lion, since the territory of Dan was very remote from that mountain. H.

VER. 23. The sea. The lake of Genesareth. Ch.—South. That lake forms the southern extremity of the tribe of Nephthali. H.—The Mediterranean, and the countries south of Palestine, are commonly understood in this manner, but they cannot be understood here. C.—By means of their neighbours of Tyre and Sidon, (M.) and of Zabulon, who lay on the west, (H.) they would be supplied with all the luxuries of the sea and of the south. M.

VER. 24. Blessed. He alludes to the name of Aser, which has this signification. H.—This tribe had been upon the increase in the desert, (C.) and now comprised 53,000 warriors. H.—The province of Galilee, where Aser dwelt, was one of the most fertile of all Chanaan, and noted for abundance of oil. Gen. xlix. 20. Joseph. Bel. iii. 2. and ii. 22. C.—Oil. So Job (xxix. 6.) says, When I washed my feet with butter. M.

VER. 25. Iron and brass, to denote the warlike disposition of this tribe. Goliath, and the heroes before Troy, wore boots of brass. 1 K. xvii. 6. Homer—The (258) everlasting arms: he shall cast out the enemy from before thee, and shall say: Be thou brought to nought.

28 Israel shall dwell in safety, and alone. The eye of Jacob in a land of corn and wine, and the heavens shall be misty with dew.

29 Blessed art thou, Israel: who is like to thee, O people, that art saved by the Lord? the shield of thy help, and the sword of thy glory: thy enemies shall deny thee, and thou shalt tread upon their necks.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Moses seeth the promised land, but is not suffered to go into it. He dieth at the age of 120 years. God burieth his body secretly, and all Israel mourn for him thirty days. Josue, replenished (by the imposition of Moses's hands) with the spirit of God, succeedeth. But Moses, for his special familiarity with God and for most wonderful miracles, is commended above all other prophets.

THEN "Moses went up from the plains of Moab, upon Mount Nebo, to the top of Phasga, over-against Jericho: and the Lord shewed him all the land of Galaad, as far as Dan, greatest part of the army of Antiochus had even golden nails in their shoe soles, (Val. Max.) while the Romans contented themselves with iron. Joseph. Bel. vii. 3.—But this custom was not peculiar to the soldiers. People of all descriptions did the like, either for ornament, or to make their sandals last longer. Empedocles wore brass at the bottom of his sandals; (Laert. viii.) and as one of them was thrown out from the top of Mount Etna, it was discovered that he had destroyed himself in that volcano, to make people suppose (C.) that he was a god, and had gone up to heaven. H.—S. Clement (Prod. ii.) complains, that some wore such gaudy ornaments in his days. C.—This passage is interpreted in a figurative sense by some, as if Aser would trample under his feet and despise the instruments of war, (Jans.) and would turn those metals to the purposes of agriculture. Others render the Heb. "Thy bars shall be of iron and brass, and thy reputation (strength, repose, or sorrow,) shall endure as long as thy life; or, May they," &c. in the form of a wish. Moses desires that Aser may be secure against his enemies, as if he had a mind to insinuate, that this tribe would be led captive among the first by Teglatphalasar, 4 K. xv. 29. Many of the cities of this tribe were strongly fortified. Joseph.—If we adopt thy sorrow shall, &c. we must observe, that the neighbourhood of the Phœnicians exposed the people to continual incursions, (C.) and the king of Assyria at last came to complete their ruin. H.

VER. 26. Rightest, (rectissimi). Heb. yeshurun, "the beloved" Israel. H.—Thither, as messengers. Heb. "the clouds are in his elevation," like so many steps to his throne. Who makest the clouds thy chariot, (ascensum tuum) who walkest upon the wings of the winds. Ps. ciii. 3. C.—Sept. "He is the great ornament of the firmament." None is like to him in power and majesty. H.

VER. 27. Underneath are the everlasting arms. Though the dwelling of God be above in heaven, his arms are always stretched out to help us here below. Ch.—Heb. "The eternal God is thy refuge; or, From eternity is the abode of God, or, in fine, the protection of the Lord is before, and his eternal arms underneath," so that nothing can hurt you. C.

VER. 28. Alone, without standing in need of the assistance of any other but God. See Num. xxiii. 9. H.—Some of the ancient Germans would have no communication with any other nation; and they depopulated the country around, to keep all at a distance. C.—The Chinese seem to be at present nearly of the same disposition, as well as those who inhabit Japan, &c.—The eye of Jacob. His posterity, by whom he sees the transactions of the world. H.—Heb. the fountain, is taken in the same sense. The country which his descendants enjoyed, was well watered with springs. Num. xxiv. 7.—Dew, it will be so abundant. Chuld The heavens will drop down dew. C. xxxii. 2.

VER. 29. Deny thee. Break their word and most solemn treaties. Heb. "shall lie unto thee," which will afford thee a just reason to seize their effects. H.—Some translate, "the efforts of thy enemies shall be frustrated."—Necks. Thus Josue ordered the five kings to be treated, (Jos. x. 24.) and Tamerlane used Bajazet as a footstool, when he had to mount his horse. C.—This fierce Tartarian conqueror, the enemy of the Christian name, humbled the pride of the Turkish emperor, by confining him in a cage of iron, A. D. 1403. H.

CHAP. XXXIV. VER. 1. Phasga was the highest part of Nebo, which was a summit of the Abarim mountains.—Dan. All the conquered countries east of the Jordan, as far as the source of that river. C. xxxiii. 22. Gen. xiv. 14. C.—God miraculously enabled Moses to see so far. W.

VER. 2. Nephthali, from Libanus to the lake of Genesareth. C.—The other three tribes occupied the greatest part of the country southward, as far as Idumea. H.—Sea. Heb. "the sea behind," or to the west; as, in determining the situation of places, the Jews looked towards the east. Moses took a view of all the countries which the people should possess, as far as the Mediterranean.

VER. 3. South part: the mountains of Judea. C.—Trees. Jericho, (H.) or Engaddi.—Segor was on the south of the Dead Sea. C.

4 And the Lord said to him: "This is the land, for which I swore to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, saying: I will give it to thy seed. Thou hast seen it with thy eyes, and shalt not pass over to it.

5 And Moses, the servant of the Lord, died there, in the land of Moab, by the commandment of the Lord:

6 And he buried him in the valley of the land of Moab, over-against Phogor: and no man hath known of his sepulchre until this present day.

7 Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eye was not dim, neither were his teeth moved.

8 And the children of Israel mourned for him, in the

* Gen. xii. 7. and xv. 18.

VER. 4. This land, which has been just described, is what God chiefly promised to the Patriarchs, comprising the countries on the east, as well as those on the western side of the Jordan. H.—To it. But thou shalt be translated to a better land, the land of the living. Moses was now perfectly resigned to the will of God. Salien.—He no longer cherished those ardent desires of introducing the people into Chanaan, which he had not long before expressed; as he found that God had decreed that he should be deprived of the honour. He received this refusal as a just punishment of his transgression, and calmly reposed in the Lord. There seems no reason why Moses might not have written the preceding verses at least, though the names of some of the tribes are mentioned, who obtained possession only after his death. As he knew the limits of the promised land, so by the prophetic spirit, he might know that these tribes would be settled in the country; and he does not mark out their divisions with any degree of precision. In a word, there seems to be hardly a single passage in the Pentateuch, which may not have Moses for its author. H.

VER. 5. Died there. This last chapter of Deuteronomy, in which the death of Moses is related, was written by Josue, or by some of the prophets. Ch.—Josephus, (iv. 9,) Philo, and Origen (c. Cels. ii. p. 95,) believe, however, that Moses wrote the account of his own death. See pref. to Deut. H.—Moab, which had formerly belonged to that nation. M.—Commandment. Heb. lit. "the mouth." The Rabbins say God kissed him, and thus released his soul. Some have nevertheless pretended that Moses was translated, like Elias, without dying. Chal. Catharin. &c. But his death and burial are too clearly mentioned in Scripture. S. Jerom (in Amos viii.) seems, at first view, to countenance the former opinion: but he only speaks of a spiritual translation, and not of the body. C.—Josephus thinks that it was to prevent this mistake, that Moses wrote this chapter.

VER. 6. He buried him, viz. by the ministry of angels, and would have the place of his burial to be unknown, lest the Israelites, who were so prone to idolatry, might worship him with divine honours. Ch.—S. Michael therefore contended with satan about his body. Jude 9. Some have maintained that Josue and Eleazar performed these last rites to their deceased lawgiver. C.—But then some men would have known where he was buried. H.—Day. It is pretended that Jeremias discovered the place, 2 Mac. ii. 4. 5: He found indeed a hollow cave . . . and so stopped the door. Yet this does not prove that he found the sepulchre of Moses, (C.) who was buried in some valley over-against Phogor, but it is not said in a cave. H.—Cajetan infers from the body of Moses not being buried in plains of Moab, thirty days: and the days of their mourning, in which they mourned for Moses, were ended.

9 And Josue, the son of Nun, was filled with the spirit of wisdom, because Moses had laid his hands upon him. And the children of Israel obeyed him, and did as the Lord commanded Moses.

10 And there arose no more a prophet in Israel, like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face,

11 In all the signs and wonders which he sent by him, to do in the land of Egypt to Pharaoh, and to all his servants, and to his whole land, the mountain, that it was conveyed by angels to some vale, where his attendants could not see him.

12 And all the mighty hand, and great miracles, which Moses did before all Israel.

VER. 7. Eye. Heb. also, "colour." His sight and complexion were as good as in his youth, though he was 120 years old.—Moved. The rays "of glory never changed," but attended him to the grave. Chal. Heb. "his natural force (and vigour) never left him; or his cheeks did not fall in." C.—The Rom. Martyrology places the death of Moses on the 4th of September, though the Rabbins say he died in the 12th month. Salien.

VER. 8. Days, as they had done for Mary and for Aaron: (Joseph.) the usual term was only seven days. C.—The Jews would probably have prolonged their mourning for Moses forty days, in honour of the years of his government, if they had not been ordered to cross the Jordan. Salien.

VER. 9. Because. God was pleased to accompany this exterior sign with his blessing. H.

VER. 10. Moses. No prophet ever appeared with greater dignity, in the old law, than Moses. He behaved in all respects as the envoy of God, who has been pleased to give his character and eulogium. Num. xii. 6. Eccli. xlv. 1. His miracles were most astonishing, performed in the presence both of friends and of enemies, not for a short time, but for a continuance of many years. C.—But when we compare Moses with the Messias, his person and law must be regarded indeed as illustrious figures, but infinitely beneath the reality. Moses was liable to failings, which caused him to be debarred from entering the land of promise; and he wore a veil, to shew that his law was only the shadow of a better, and that it could bring nothing to perfection. He works miracles in the name of the Lord, and with a rod: Jesus performs all by the word of his own power, (Heb. i. 3,) as the sovereign of the world. But though Moses must sink in a comparison with Christ, yet no other personage sustained a more exalted character, or shone with greater splendour, as lawgiver, priest, prophet, ruler of a great and ungovernable people, and a sacred writer of the highest antiquity. Hence the Jews almost adore him. The Mahometans place him next to Jesus and their false prophet. H.—The pagans have very probably ascribed many parts of his history to their idols, Bacchus, Mercury, and Typhon; and their greatest philosophers, Pythagoras, Plato, &c. have borrowed many things from his writings. "What, said Numenius, is Plato, but Moses in the Attic language!" See Ex. xxxiv. 29. Clem. Strom. 1. and 5. Joseph. c. Ap. i. Bochart, &c. C.—In a word, S. Gregory of Nyssa, S. Ambrose, (de Cain 2,) and Philo, represent Moses as the most perfect example of a great and pious leader and legislator. Salien. A. 2583. H.

THE BOOK OF JOSUE.

THIS BOOK is called JOSUE, because it contains the history of what passed under him, and, according to the common opinion, was written by him. The Greeks call him Jesus; for Josue and Jesus, in the Hebrew, are the same name, and have the same signification, viz. A Saviour. And it was not without a mystery, that he who was to bring the people into the land of promise, should have his name changed from Osee (for so he was called before, Num. xiii. 17,) to Josue, or Jesus, to give us to understand, that Moses, by his law, could only bring the people within sight of the promised inheritance, but that our Saviour, Jesus, was to bring us into it. Ch.—The Hebrews who had been so rebellious under Moses, behaved with remarkable fidelity and respect towards his successor; who, by these means, more forcibly represented the Christian Church, (D.) which will be ever obedient to her divine head and observe his directions. Josue had been trained up a long time under the hand of Moses, and God had given him the commission to govern his people, in so public a manner, that no one offered to claim that high and arduous office. In effect, the whole conduct of Josue before and after his exaltation, shewed him to be the most deserving of command. H.—Josue, says the Holy Ghost, (Eech. xvi. 1.) was successor of Moses among the prophets, or, according to the Greek, "in prophecies." Many explain this of the obligation incumbent on him, to continue the sacred history (C.) and revelations where Moses had left off. The last chapter of this book informs us that he did so. Perhaps some additions, by way of farther explication, have been made by subsequent inspired writers, though most of the passages which are adduced to prove this assertion, seem to be of little force. Respecting the death of Josue, we may make the same observations as on that of Moses. It may have been written by the author of the Book of Judges. Theodoret seems to have thought that the work before us, was compiled out of the public registers, which are quoted C. x. under the name of the book of the Lord See Num. xxi. 14. The Samaritans have a book or chronicle of Josue, which relates in 39 or 47 chapters, many facts of scriptural history, (H.) down to the reign of Adrian, intermingled with a variety of fables. It seems to be of modern date. Hottinger undertook to publish it in Latin, but was prevented by death. C.—The true history of Josue sets before us the passage of the Jordan, the conquest of Chanaan, and the distribution of the country. After the pious general had performed all that could be expected from him, after he had twice ratified the covenant between God and his people, and exhorted the latter, with his last breath, to observe an inviolable fidelity to their only Lord, he departed this life in peace, in the 110th year of his age, and was buried at Thamnath Sare, which he had built for the place of his abode. H.—As the five books of Moses contain the law, intermixed with history, so this first of the historical books exhibits a variety of useful precepts and predictions. The prophetic and sapiential books must be considered in the same light. W.—They all tend to promote true wisdom and the salvation of men, provided they be perused in the same spirit with which they were written. H.

CHAP. I.

Josue, encouraged by the Lord, admonisheth the people to prepare themselves to pass over the Jordan.

NOW ^ait came to pass after the death of Moses, the servant of the Lord, that the Lord spoke to Josue, the son of Nun, the minister of Moses, and said to him:

2 Moses my servant is dead: arise, and pass over this Jordan, thou and thy people with thee, into the land which I will give to the children of Israel.

3 ^bI will deliver to you every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, as I have said to Moses.

4 From the desert, and from Libanus unto the great river Euphrates, all the land of the Hethites, unto the great sea toward the going down of the sun, shall be your border.

5 No man shall be able to resist you all the days of thy life: ^aas I have been with Moses, so will I be with thee: I will not leave thee, nor forsake thee.

CHAP. I. VER. 1. Now: lit. And. Thus the sacred history is connected, the last chapter of Deuteronomy being, in the opinion of many, a part of the work of Josue. H.—Moses died on the 1st of the 12th month, Adar, and as soon as that month of mourning had expired, and the spies had returned on the 4th of Nisan, God ordered the people to prepare for their departure.—Minister. This was by no means degrading. He was designed for the successor of Moses, as Eliseus was to succeed Elias. The heroes at Troy had servants of the same high character as themselves, attached to their persons by the ties of friendship. See Ex. xvii. 10.

VER. 2. Jordan, a river well known, which rises in Antilibanus, not from Panion, but from the lake Phinla, as Herod the Tetrarch discovered by throwing some straw into the latter, which passed by a subterraneous passage into Panion. Thence it proceeds to the Semonite lake and to Daphne, where it begins to be called the Great Jordan. Joseph. Bel. iii. 33. Having traversed the land of Palestine in a southern direction, it loses itself in the lake of Sodom. C.—It is a very rapid river, and hence its appellation from irod, or jord, descendit, is very probably derived. H.—The Arabs call it Zacchar, "overflowing," because the snows and rains caused it formerly to overflow about Easter. Univ. Hist.—When Maundrell travelled through this country, the stream was too rapid for a person to swim against it. Parkhurst.—Hence the miracle of the Hebrews passing through the Jordan on dry land, when its waters were the most copious and violent, would be the more observable. H.

VER. 3. Moses. Thus the preceding permission, which the Jews extend, as if God had authorized them to conquer the whole world, is limited. H. See Deut. xi. 24.—Their right to the land of Chanaan depends on this grant of God, who is the Lord of all things, and who thus took away all the privileges of the former inhabitants. But the warrant of destruction only regarded the people of Chanaan. Those who lived towards the Euphrates, were obliged only to pay vide by lot to this people the land for which I swore to their fathers, that I would deliver it to them.

7 Take courage therefore, and be very valiant: that thou mayst observe and do all the law, which Moses my servant hath commanded thee: turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayst understand all things which thou dost.

8 Let not the book of this law depart from thy mouth: but thou shalt meditate on it day and night, that thou mayst observe and do all things that are written in it: then shalt thou direct thy way, and understand it.

9 Behold I command thee, take courage, and be strong. Fear not, and be not dismayed: because the Lord thy God is with thee in all things whatsoever thou shalt go to.

10 And Josue commanded the princes of the people, saying: Pass through the midst of the camp, and command the people, and say:

11 Prepare your victuals: for after the third day you tribute by David and Solomon, though their country formed part of what had been promised to the Israelites. They might have possessed all that region, if they had proved faithful. The limits of the promised land vary, as they are considered under various lights. C.—The desert of Arabia Petrea and Antilibanus formed the boundaries on the south and on the north, the Euphrates and Mediterranean were on the east and west, when the territories of the Israelites were considered in their utmost extent. VER. 10. Princes. Shoterim may denote both judges and heralds, such as those mentioned in Homer, the messengers of gods and men, whose persons were deemed sacred. They bore a wand or sceptre, as a mark of their authority.

VER. 11. Victuals. The manna still supplied the army after they had passed the Jordan. C. v. 12. But Josue might fear lest the people might not have liberty to gather it in the midst of the enemy's country, or he might perhaps suppose that this miraculous food would be withdrawn, as soon as they had entered Chanaan. He therefore takes all necessary precautions, and gets other sorts of provisions in the neighbourhood. C.—This might foreshew, that in the primitive Church the ceremonies and privileges of the old law would not be abrogated immediately, but they might be used for a time along with the rites of the gospel, till the old law should be buried with honour. shall pass over the Jordan, and shall go in to possess the land, which the Lord your God will give you.

12 And he said to the Rubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasses:

13 Remember the word, which Moses the servant of the Lord commanded you, saying: The Lord your God hath given you rest, and all this land.

14 * Your wives, and children, and cattle, shall remain in the land which Moses gave you on this side of the Jordan: but pass you over armed before your brethren, all of you that are strong of hand, and fight for them, 15 Until the Lord give rest to your brethren, as he hath given you, and they also possess the land which the Lord your God will give them: and so you shall return into the land of your possession, and you shall dwell in it, which Moses the servant of the Lord gave you beyond the Jordan, toward the rising of the sun.

16 And they made answer to Josue, and said: All that thou hast commanded us, we will do: and whithersoever thou shalt send us, we will go.

17 As we obeyed Moses in all things, so will we obey thee also: only be the Lord thy God with thee, as he was with Moses.

18 He that shall gainsay thy mouth, and not obey all thy words, that thou shalt command him, let him die: only take thou courage, and do manfully.

CHAP. II.

Two spies are sent to Jericho, who are received and concealed by Rahab.

AND Josue, * the son of Nun, sent from Setim two men, to spy secretly: and said to them: Go, and

VER. 14. Armed before, in order of battle, at the head of the army, and not according to the disposition of the tribes, which was observed in the desert. Only 40,000 men were selected out of 110,550, the rest were very prudently left to guard the new conquered country. See Num. xxxii. 17.—For them. Heb. "help them."

VER. 15. Beyond. The same expression is translated on this side, v. 14. Heb. beheber means also, "in the passage." If we have regard to Josue, when he spoke this, he was beyond, that is on the east side of the river, though perhaps (H.) he might be on the other side when he wrote the history. Deut. i. 1. C.

VER. 17. Moses. Thus they express their ardent wish, that God would extend his protection to Josue. M.—They do not mean to insinuate, that they will obey him only as long as he complies with God's law. C.

VER. 18. Die, as guilty of high treason. The person's goods were confiscated, and became the property of the king. Thus David disposed of the effects of Saul, (2 K. xvi. 4.) and Achab seized the vineyard of Naboth, 3 K. xxi. 15. C.

CHAP. II. VER. 1. Sent, or as many translate, "had sent," as if Josue had dismissed the spies immediately after the mourning for Moses was ended, (C.) on the 1st of Nisan. On the second day they examined the city, and were obliged to flee in the night. But they only returned to their brethren on the 6th. On the following day Josue gave orders to make all necessary preparations for their departure, and crossed the Jordan on the 10th of the month. Salien. B. C. 1469.—Setim was about eight or nine miles from the river, "or sixty stadia." Joseph. v. 1.—Two men. Sept. intimate that they were young. See C. vi. 23. H.—The Rabbins assert, without reason, that Caleb and Phinees were chosen, and that they pretended that they were deaf, (eross) a word which the Vulg. translates, secretly. C.—Jericho. Josue had himself examined the country some time before. But there might have been many changes, and he might not know the present disposition of the people of Jericho. H.—This city was built in a delightful plain, surrounded by mountains, (C.) except on the east side. C. iv. 13. H.—Harlot. Heb. zona may also signify an "ink-keeper," as such places were under the direction of women, who were commonly of a very loose character. Hence the Greeks deemed it a dishonour to enter into a public house. Isocrates says, that "even an honest servant will not dare to enter into an ale-house, to eat or drink." Athen. Dipn. 13.—Rahab might have been formerly addicted to pleasure, as the Scripture and the Fathers agree; (Heb. xi. 31. Jam. ii. 25. C.) though she might at this time be very discreet, being awakened by the account of the miracles which God had wrought in favour of his people, who, she knew, were approaching to take possession of the country. The spies might, therefore, take shelter in her house with the least suspicion, and without danger of injuring her character. H.—The woman was not very old, as she was afterwards married to Salmon. S. Mat. i. 5.—With her. They spent the first night in her house, entering the city in the dusk of the evening, so that they had not time to make any observations till the following day. Salien.—Others think that they were suspected by the people of the town almost immediately, and denounced to the king. Hence they were forced to flee that same night, without having accomplished view the land, and the city of Jericho.* They went, and entered into the house of a woman that was a harlot, named Rahab, and lodged with her.

2 And it was told the king of Jericho, and was said: Behold there are men come in hither, by night, of the children of Israel, to spy the land.

3 And the king of Jericho sent to Rahab, saying: Bring forth the men that came to thee, and are entered into thy house: for they are spies, and are come to view all the land.

4 ^d And the woman taking the men, hid them, and said: I confess they came to me, but I knew not whence they were:

5 And at the time of shutting the gate in the dark, they also went out together. I know not whither they are gone: pursue after them quickly, and you will overtake them.

6 But she made the men go up to the top of her house, and covered them with the stalks of flax, which was there.

7 Now they that were sent, pursued after them, by the way that leadeth to the fords of the Jordan: and as soon as they were gone out, the gate was presently shut.

8 The men that were hid were not yet asleep, when behold the woman went up to them, and said:

9 I know that the Lord hath given this land to you: for the dread of you is fallen upon us, and all the inhabitants of the land have lost all strength.

10 We have heard that * the Lord dried up the water their design, and were only informed by Rahab of the dismay which had seized the inhabitants, v. 11.

VER. 2. By night. Heb. "this night." C.

VER. 3. House. She spoke to them through a window. The messengers did not enter into her house; whence Serarius infers, that Rahab was a person consecrated to some impure deity, and therefore held in some estimation among the people of Jericho, as this was a city of the moon, in whose honour such consecrations were generally made. But these arguments are not very convincing. C.

VER. 4. Hid, or "had hidden," as (v. 6.) she had made the men retire before she spoke to the messengers, and probably before they came to demand them. As soon as she was informed of their design, she took all prudent precautions both for her own and their safety, as she could not have escaped death, if she had been discovered affording shelter to the enemies of her country. She felt herself authorized by God on this occasion, to abandon those upon whom he had declared war, and who could have derived no benefit from the spies being betrayed to them. H.

VER. 5. At the time, not precisely, as otherwise the men who shut the gates must have seen them, but about that time, (C.) Rahab pretends that the spies had left her house, and had directed their course towards the gate, so that she made no doubt but they might easily overtake them. H.—Notwithstanding this officious lie, which is a venial sin, S. Paul and S. James testify that she was justified by her faith in God, and by good works towards these men. See S. Aug. c. Mend. 17. and note on James ii. 25. W.—Rahab might suppose that an officious lie was not a sin, (M.) as many great and learned men seemed to have maintained this doctrine. See Grotius Jur. iii. 1. 9. Orig. c. Cels. iv. p. 171. S. Chrys. hom. 53. Gen. She was so far from intending to do an injury to any one that she consulted the welfare both of her guests and of her countrymen, who, if they had detected the spies and committed murder, would have thus brought greater destruction upon themselves, as they could not escape the wrath of God. C.

VER. 6. There. The roofs were flat in that country, and consequently very proper to dry flax, or "cotton," as Masius understands.

VER. 7. Jordan, where they had probably come over, though perhaps in a boat, (M.) and where the messengers concluded they would have the best chance of finding them, as the Israelites were on the opposite side of the river. H.—As soon as they were gone out of the city, the guards shut the gate, that if the spies should still be lurking within, they might be hindered from making their escape. M.

VER. 8. Asleep. It seems as if the spies had been ignorant of the danger to which they had been just exposed, and had gone to the roof of the house with a design to pass the night in greater security. Rahab perceives, however, that it would be extremely rash for them to continue with her any longer, and therefore she gives them the best advice, to secure their safety by fleeing in the dead of the night, and without further delay. H.

VER. 9. Strength. Heb. "they faint or melt away," deprived both of strength and counsel.

of the Red Sea, at your going in, when you came out of Egypt: *and what things you did to the two kings of the Amorrites, that were beyond the Jordan, Sehon and Og, whom you slew.

11 And at the hearing these things, we were affrighted, and our heart fainted away, neither did there remain any spirit in us, at your coming in: for the Lord your God he is God in heaven above, and in the earth beneath.

12 ^b Now, therefore, swear ye to me by the Lord, that as I have shewed mercy to you, so you also will shew mercy to my father's house: and give me a true token, 13 That you will save my father and mother, my brethren and sisters, and all things that are theirs, and deliver our souls from death.

14 They answered her: Be our lives for you unto death, only if thou betray us not. And when the Lord shall have delivered us the land, we will shew thee mercy and truth.

15 Then she let them down with a cord out of a window: for her house joined close to the wall.

16 And she said to them: Get ye up to the mountains, lest perhaps they meet you as they return: and there lie ye hid three days, till they come back, and so you shall go on your way.

17 And they said to her: We shall be blameless of this oath, which thou hast made us swear, 18 If, when we come into the land, this scarlet cord be a sign, and thou tie it in the window, by which thou hast let us down: and gather together thy father and mother, and brethren, and all thy kindred into thy house.

19 Whosoever shall go out of the door of thy house, his blood shall be upon his own head, and we shall be quit. But the blood of all that shall be with thee in the house, shall light upon our head, if any man touch them.

20 But if thou wilt betray us, and utter this word abroad, we shall be quit of this oath, which thou hast made us swear.

* Num. xxi. 24.—^b Infra vi. 22.

VER. 11. Beneath. This is the confession of a true convert, (C.) inspired by God. H.—For S. Paul commends her faith. Heb. xi. 31. M.—The pagans confined the power of their idols to certain districts; the power of the true God is infinite. C.

VER. 12. True token, such a one as, when I shew it to the Israelites, they may preserve me and mine. She is not content with a verbal promise, she requires something permanent and sensible, as a mark of their mutual engagements, (C.) a token of their sincerity. They afterwards appointed a piece of scarlet to be hung out of the house, where those were to be collected who should be entitled to protection. Rahab was bound not to divulge their secret, nor to betray them. If she had instructed others of her fellow-citizens to hang out the same mark, she would have forfeited all her privileges, v. 20. H.

VER. 14. Death. We are willing to die instead of you, if we do not fulfil our promises.—Truth, a real and effectual mercy.

VER. 16. Days; the remainder of this night, and the day and night following. It is probable that they would travel only in the night time. C.—If they had gone by the high road, they might easily have been discovered by the messengers, who would be on their return. H.—But retiring to the mountains south of Jericho, till they had re-entered the city, the spies made their escape. C.

VER. 18. By which window or cord. C.—The cord was left as a signal. M.

VER. 24. Fear, as Rahab had testified. They might also have been witnesses of the people's consternation, which gave them the most assured hopes of victory, as the Lord had given this sign, among others, that he would be with them. Deut. xxviii. 10. H.

CHAP. III. VER. 1. Days, in part, as they arrived on the 8th of Nisan, staid there the following day, and crossed the Jordan on the 10th, on Friday the 30th of our April. Thus Christ is said to have remained three days in the tomb, (C.) though he was there only a small part of Friday and of Sunday, and the whole of Saturday. Heb. "they lodged there before they passed over, (2) and it came to pass after three days that he," &c.

VER. 2. Heralds. Shoterim. C. i. 10. Prot. "the officers went through the host." H.

VER. 3. Levi. Sigonius thinks that the Canaanites performed this office on this (262)

21 And she answered: As you have spoken, so be it done: and sending them on their way, she hung the scarlet cord in the window.

22 But they went and came to the mountains, and stayed there three days, till they that pursued them were returned. For having sought them through all the way, they found them not.

23 And when they were gone back into the city, the spies returned, and came down from the mountain: and passing over the Jordan, they came to Josue, the son of Nun, and told him all that befel them, 24 And said: the Lord hath delivered all this land into our hands, and all the inhabitants thereof are overthrown with fear.

CHAP. III.

The river Jordan is miraculously dried up, for the passage of the children of Israel.

AND *Josue rose before day-light, and removed the camp: and they departed from Setim, and came to the Jordan: he, and all the children of Israel, and they abode there for three days.

2 After which, the heralds went through the midst of the camp,

3 And began to proclaim: When you shall see the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, and the priests of the race of Levi carrying it, rise you up also, and follow them as they go before:

4 And let there be between you and the ark the space of two thousand cubits: that you may see it afar off, and know which way you must go: for you have not gone this way before: and take care you come not near the ark.

5 And Josue said to the people: Be ye sanctified: for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you.

6 And he said to the priests: Take up the ark of the covenant, and go before the people. And they obeyed his commands, and took it up, and walked before them.

* A. M. 2553.

as on other occasions. But the Vulgate shews that the priests sometimes carried the ark, perhaps because it was uncovered. C. vi. 6. 2 K. xv. 25. At this period the number of priests was but small. Some of the sons of Eleazar and of Ithamar might be old enough to assist their parents: only two would be necessary at a time, though the Rabbins assign four, (which is not improbable. Theodoret) and pretend that the two who went first were obliged to go backwards, in order that their faces might be turned towards the ark, out of respect. The ark now marked the way for the people, as the cloud had disappeared on the death of Moses. S. Aug. q. 8. Masius. C.—It had been carried at the head of the army in the desert. H.

VER. 4. Space of. Heb. adds, "about . . by measure." It was not easy to observe the exact distance in a march. This was prescribed both to keep the people at a respectful distance, and also to enable them to see which way they were to proceed. When the priests stood in the bed of the river, the waters rose up like a firm wall on the north side, while those to the south flowed away into the lake of Sodom, leaving about 16 miles open for the army of Israel to pass on dry land. The soldiers did not approach within 600 paces of the ark.—Before. This insinuated that they would pass over in a miraculous manner; though perhaps Josue did not know by what means God would enable them to cross (C.) the overflowing waters. Josephus only seems to intimate that they abated suddenly, so that they might be forded, &c. He also greatly diminishes or destroys the miracle performed at the passage of the Red Sea. Yet here he acknowledges a sort of "prodigy in the waters being restrained," and resuming their usual course as soon as the priests had left the channel of the river.—And take, &c. Heb. places these words at the beginning of the sentence, after cubits. H.

VER. 5. Sanctified, as Moses had required at Mount Sinai, (Ex. xix. 10. 15.) ordering the people to wash their garments, and to abstain from their wives, that by this exterior purity, they might be reminded not to neglect that of the soul, without which they would derive but small benefit or instruction from the greatest miracles.

VER. 6. Commands. Josue was only the organ of God, (C.) whose orders he announces to the sacred ministers; (v. 8. M.) though as a civil magistrate, he was bound to hear and to obey them in matters of religion. C.—When he ordered 7 And the Lord said to Josue: This day will I begin to exalt thee before Israel: that they may know that as I was with *Moses, so I am with thee also.

8 And do thou command the priests, that carry the ark of the covenant, and say to them: When you shall have entered into part of the water of the Jordan, stand in it.

9 And Josue said to the children of Israel: Come hither, and hear the word of the Lord your God.

10 And again he said: By this you shall know, that the Lord, the living God, is in the midst of you, and that he shall destroy, before your sight, the Chanaanite and the Hethite, the Hevite and the Pherezite, the Gergesite also, and the Jebusite, and the Amorhite.

11 *Behold, the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth shall go before you into the Jordan.

circumcision to be administered, when he blessed the multitude, and ratified the covenant between God and the people, (C. v. and xxiv. &c.) he did nothing but what a virtuous governor ought to do; yet he did not these things by virtue of his civil jurisdiction, or in opposition to the spiritual authority of Eleazar. Moses had been the supreme head, being both priest and king. But only part of his glory was communicated to Josue, while Eleazar was directed to consult the Lord for him, (Num. xxvii. 21. Theod. q. 48. in Num.) Josue was to govern at his word, so that he was bound to consider the high priest as his superior. What he therefore did, was in subordination and conformity to the will of Eleazar and of God, and not designed to shew that the priestly authority belonged to himself, as English Protestants would hence infer. The best of princes, both in the Old and New Testament, have always looked upon it as a part of their duty to promote the true religion. W.—Isaias (xlix) foretold that kings and queens would esteem it their glory to guard and to advance the prosperity of the Church. H.—Hence they may enact laws for this purpose. S. Aug. c. Crescon. iii. 51. Constantine ratified the judgment passed already by the bishops in the cause of Cecilian, though he confessed at the same time that the determination did not belong to his tribunal; (W.) and he greatly disapproved of the conduct of the Donatists, who appealed to him, as the heathens might have done to an emperor, who was at the same time one of their high priests. H.—O rabida furoris audacia, said he, sicut in causis gentilium fieri solet, appellationem interposuerunt. 1. Optat. c. Parm. i. S. Aug. ep. 166. Other emperors and kings have acquired great fame, on account of their labours and zeal in defence of the Church. Thus the kings of Spain and of France have obtained the titles of Catholic and Most Christian, and our Henry VIII. was honoured by Pope Leo X. with the title of Defender of the Faith, in 1521, (W.) on account of the book which he presented to that pontiff, while he was yet an obedient son of the Catholic Church, and undertook to defend her faith on the sacraments, against the objections of Luther. Is this the faith which the kings of England defend at present? Whatever the princes might do in the old law in spiritual matters, no inference can be drawn for the same right being now exercised by civil magistrates, how supreme soever in their own sphere. Those princes, Josue, &c. might be considered not only in the light of civil governors, but also in that of prophets, who had a great share in the administration of affairs under the Jewish theocracy. If God chose to make known his will by the mouth of a king, or by that of a shepherd, his mandates were to be put in execution with equal exactitude. But now the distinctive limits of the ecclesiastical and of the civil power are more clearly ascertained. Render therefore to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. Mat. xxii. 21. The kingdom of Christ is not of this world; neither did he appoint kings to be the pastors of his Church. H.

VER. 7. Also. Grotius remarks that God made known his choice of the governors of his people by miracles, till the days of Saul. In effect, we hardly find any, before that time, whose public authority was not sanctioned by some prodigy. C.

VER. 8. R. Heb. "when you shall have come to the brink (or extremity) of the water of the Jordan, you shall stand still in the Jordan." (H.) which some explain by saying that they were to stop on the eastern bank, as soon as they had wet their feet, (Serarius) while others say they crossed quite over, and stood at the other side. Masius.—But it is more probable, that as soon as they had touched the waters, the priests halted till the bed of the river was presently dried up, and then they placed themselves in the middle of it, close to the raging billows, which, rising up like mountains, were stopped in their career, (H.) and forced to retire backwards to their source, v. 15. 17. C. iv. 9. Bonfrere. A. Lap.—Some translate, "into the division," instead of part, or extremity. C.

VER. 9. Hither, probably to the door of the tabernacle, where the assemblies were held.

VER. 10. Living God, in opposition to the idols of the Gentiles, who were dead men, or at least incapable of affording any assistance to their votaries. Josue gives the people two signs of the divine protection, the destruction of the devoted nations, and the miraculous division of the Jordan, or rather the latter prodigy would be an earnest of the former event; and all, both friends and enemies, might be convinced, that the Lord was with his people, and their present leader, as he had been with Moses. No miracle could have been more suitable for the Lord the God of the whole earth, shall set the soles of their feet in the waters of the Jordan, the waters that are beneath shall run down and go off: and those that come from above, shall stand together upon a heap.

14 So the people went out of their tents, to pass over the Jordan: and the priests that carried the ark of the covenant, went on before them.

15 And as soon as they came into the Jordan, and their feet were dipped in part of the water, (now the Jordan, *it being harvest time, had filled the banks of its channel,)

16 The waters that came down from above stood in one place, and swelling up like a mountain, were seen afar off, from the city that is called Adom, to the place of Sarthan: but those that were beneath, ran down into the sea of the wilderness, (which now is called the Dead Sea) until they wholly failed.

17 And the people marched over-against Jericho: and the priests that carried the ark of the covenant of occasion, none more convincing or useful. C.—It would naturally inspire the Israelites with confidence, at the revival of the miracles wrought 40 years before, when their fathers and some of themselves had passed the Red Sea, in a similar manner. At the same time, it would fill the Chanaanites with still greater dismay and teach them that all resistance would prove fruitless. Some have wondered that they did not oppose the passage of the Israelites on this occasion. But it is a greater matter of surprise that they should have ventured on the dangerous expedient of encountering them in war, after what they had seen and heard. It can be attributed to nothing but their infatuation, and that blindness with which God punished them, that they might draw on a more speedy and merited destruction for their crimes. H.—Destroy. Heb. "dispossess, or drive out before you the Chanaanite," &c. These seven nations comprised the ten which are mentioned, Gen. xv. 19. The Chanaanite occupied the countries chiefly about Tyre, while the Hethites dwelt in the southern part of Palestine. The Hevites possessed Mount Hermon, Garizim, &c. The Pherezite were not perhaps a separate people, but employed in cultivating the country. The Gergesite were fixed to the east of the lake of Genesareth, the Jebusite at Jerusalem, and the Amorhite about the Dead Sea. C.—But they were often mixed with one another, so that their limits cannot be ascertained with any degree of precision. H.

VER. 12. Prepare. Heb. "take." But they must have been selected from the tribes, either to carry twelve stones out of the bed of the Jordan, and to place twelve others in their stead, as monuments of this stupendous miracle; (C.) or to accompany the priests and the ark, out of respect. Cajetan. M.

VER. 13. Heap. Heb. "the waters of the Jordan shall be cut off: the waters that come down from above, even they shall stand as upon a heap," like mountains of ice. The Vulg. informs us what became of the waters (H.) below this division. Where it took place we do not find recorded, so that we cannot know exactly how large a space would be left dry. Calmet allows, "near six leagues," v. 4. and 16. But here, supposing that the Jordan was divided over-against Jericho, he says, that "the waters running off into the Dead Sea, would, in all probability, leave not less than two or three thousand paces of the channel dry."

Interruptus aquis fluxit prior amnis in æquor;

Ad molem stetit unda fluens.—Lucan. Phar. ii.

VER. 15. Water. Thus they manifested the strength of their faith. C.—Immediately the obedient waters divided, and the gravel or sand was left dry. v. 17. H.—Channel. The barley harvest was ready about the 30th of April. Lev. xxiii. 10. On other occasions this overflowing of the Jordan is noticed, I Par. xii. 15. Eccli. xxiv. 36. Doubdan says that when he visited these parts, at the same season of the year, the Jordan was quite full, on account of the melted snow, and ready to leave its banks. It was about a stone throw across, and very rapid. See C. i. 2. The rains which fall in spring, serve to increase the inundation, (Deut. xi. 14.) as well as the snow which melts at that time on Libanus, though a great part resists the violent heats. Mirum dictu, says Tacitus v. tantos inter ardores opacum fidusque nivibus. Jer. xviii. 14. and xlix. 19.

VER. 16. Mountain. Heb. "heap or bottle." The billows were forced to roll back almost as far as the lake of Genesareth, where Sarthan stands, about twenty leagues above Jericho.—Sarthan. Heb. "rose up on a heap, very far from (or to) the city of Adom, that is beside Sarthan." The situation of Adom can only be ascertained by that of Sarthan, which was near Bethsan, or Seythopolis, (8 K. iv. 12.) in the vale of Jezrahel, on the Jordan. Many copies of the Sept. read Carithiarim, though it was six or seven leagues up the country, west of Jericho. C.—The swelling billows might perhaps be seen from this place. H.—But it could not properly determine how far the waters rolled back. C.—Failed. Heb. "and those that came down towards the sea of the plain, (or of Araba, which means a desert, fit only for pasturage) the salt sea, failed, were cut off" from the waters above Jericho. The Jordan after running three miles in the lake of Sodom, without mixing its waters, becomes at last reluctantly conformed with it. Pelut in vitus . . postremo ebibitur, aquasque laudatas perdit, pestilentibus mixtus. Plin. v. 15.

VER. 17. Jericho, at Bethabara, which was five or six leagues from the Dead Sea, all which space was left dry. Jericho was three leagues from the Jordan. C.—Girded. Sept. "ready," preparing the way for all the army. Heb. "firm," and undaunted. H.—A great part of the day must have been spent in crossing the river, and erecting the two monuments. M.

the Lord, stood girded upon the dry ground in the midst of the Jordan, and all the people passed over, through the channel that was dried up.

CHAP. IV.

Twelve stones are taken out of the river, to be set up for a monument of the miracle: and other twelve are placed in the midst of the river.

AND when they were passed over, the Lord said to Josue:

2 Choose twelve men, one of every tribe:

3 And command them to take out of the midst of the Jordan, where the feet of the priests stood, twelve very hard stones, which you shall set in the place of the camp, where you shall pitch your tents this night.

4 And Josue called twelve men, whom he had chosen out of the children of Israel, one out of every tribe,

5 And he said to them: Go before the ark of the Lord your God to the midst of the Jordan, and carry from thence every man a stone on your shoulders, according to the number of the children of Israel,

6 That it may be a sign among you: and when your children shall ask you to-morrow, saying: What mean these stones?

7 You shall answer them: The waters of the Jordan ran off before the ark of the covenant of the Lord, when it passed over the same: therefore were these stones set for a monument of the children of Israel for ever.

8 The children of Israel therefore did as Josue commanded them, carrying out of the channel of the Jordan twelve stones, as the Lord had commanded him, according to the number of the children of Israel, unto the place wherein they camped, and there they set them.

9 And Josue put other twelve stones in the midst of the channel of the Jordan, where the priests stood, that carried the ark of the covenant: and they are there until this present day.

10 Now the priests that carried the ark, stood in the midst of the Jordan, till all things were accomplished, which the Lord had commanded Josue to speak to the people, and Moses had said to him. And the people made haste, and passed over.

11 And when they had all passed over, the ark also of the Lord passed over, and the priests went before the people.

12 The children of Ruben also, and Gad, and half the tribe of Manasses, went armed before the children of Israel, *as Moses had commanded them.

13 And forty thousand fighting men by their troops and bands, marched through the plains and fields of the city of Jericho.

14 In that day the Lord magnified Josue in the sight of all Israel, that they should fear him, as they had feared Moses, while he lived.

15 And he said to him:

16 Command the priests, that carry the ark of the covenant, to come up out of the Jordan.

17 And he commanded them, saying: Come ye up out of the Jordan.

18 And when they that carried the ark of the covenant of the Lord, were come up, and began to tread on the dry ground, the waters returned into their channel, and ran as they were wont before.

19 And the people came up out of the Jordan, the tenth day of the first month, and camped in Galgal, over-against the east side of the city of Jericho.

20 And the twelve stones, which they had taken out of the channel of the Jordan, Josue pitched in Galgal, 21 And said to the children of Israel: When your children shall ask their fathers to-morrow, and shall say to them: What mean these stones?

22 You shall teach them, and say: Israel passed over this Jordan through the dry channel, 23 The Lord your God drying up the waters thereof in your sight, until you passed over:

24 *As he had done before in the Red Sea, which he dried up till we passed through:

25 That all the people of the earth may learn the most mighty hand of the Lord, that you also may fear the Lord your God for ever.

* Num. xxxii. 28.

CHAP. IV. VER. 1. Over. Heb. and Sept. "clean, or entirely;" perhaps two million people, with all their possessions, had crossed the river on that day, the 10th of Nisan, leaving many of their brethren to cultivate and defend the eastern parts of the Jordan. II.

VER. 2. Choose. Heb. "take," as C. iii. 12. Those twelve men were ordered to attend the ark, and to observe the miracle with care: these are chosen to carry the stones for the monuments. Salien.—Calmet supposes that they are the same people, and that the former verse might be translated, "the Lord had said." But this does not agree with the context. Heb. "and it came to pass, when all the people were clean passed over the Jordan, that the Lord spake." The former injunction was given before they entered the river. Heb. "The ark passeth. . . Now therefore take," &c. H.—One was selected from the tribe of Levi, and one from that of Joseph, so that all the twelve tribes were represented. M.

VER. 3. Hard. The Heb. term is referred by some to the priests, "from the station of the priests, prepared, or standing firm," (C. iii. 17,) by others to the stones, which were to be prepared, hard, or exactly twelve. C.—The Sept. have taken it in the latter sense, "twelve stones ready," or such as they might easily find, in the place where the priests had stood. They were of a flinty nature, (II.) that they might perpetuate the memory of this event. M.

VER. 5. Of Israel, who had twelve sons. The same expression occurs Deut. xxxii. 8, and must be explained of the immediate sons of Jacob, without including those grandchildren who might be born before his death. H.

VER. 9. Day. Some hence infer that Josue did not write this book. But surely if he wrote it towards the end of his life, he might well use this expression, (M.) as S. Matthew does to denote a shorter term. The twelve stones at Galgal, and in the bed of the Jordan, at Bethabara, (H.) were probably each placed apart. See Ex. xxiv. 4. M.—They were still to be seen in the days of S. Jerom. Such monuments were formerly very common, and very useful, to make a lasting impression upon the minds of a gross people. See Gen. xxviii. 18. Lev. xxvi. 1.

VER. 10. To him. Moses had been dead forty days. But it seems this miraculous division of the Jordan had been revealed to him, and he had cautioned Josue (264) to let slip no opportunity of attaching the people to God's service, by erecting monuments of religion, as he did on this occasion. C.—Haste. Though they were assured by the divine promise, they experienced a certain fear. Salien.—Even the most constant are liable to such impressions. Mat. xiv. 30.

VER. 11. People, who passed over 2000 cubits lower down, and always kept the same distance, till they arrived at Galgal. C.

VER. 12. Them. C. i. 14. Num. xxxii. 28. Forty thousand were only chosen. H.

VER. 13. Bands. Heb. "prepared for war passed over, before the Lord, unto battle, to the plains of Jericho." H.—These formed the van-guard.—Plains Heb. harboth, which is translated desert. Jer. lii. 8. A large plain, fit for pasturage, extended from the city to the Jordan, on the east side. C.

VER. 14. In, &c. Josue recapitulates how this miracle established his authority, and how he was ordered to command the priests to come up from the midst of the Jordan, after the people had all got to the other side, and the stones were fixed, to denote where the ark had stood, like a wall, to hinder the waters from rushing down. H.

VER. 15. Month of the ecclesiastical year. They had left Egypt on the 15th of Nisan, so that they had spent forty years, within five days, on their journey. C.

VER. 20. Galgal. It received this name afterwards. C. v. 9. It lay in a direct line from Jericho to the Jordan eastwards, being ten stadia from the former, and fifty from the latter place. Josue had his camp here while he subdued the kings of Chanaan, (C.) as it had plenty of water and wood in its environs; (M.) though perhaps at this time, there were no houses. Saul was here recognized king of all Israel. 1 K. xi. 14. Tertullian (c. Marc. iv.) supposes, that the twelve stones were placed on the ark, in arcam, which is not at all probable. C.—But they might be erected in its vicinity, and that may perhaps be the meaning of the author. H.—R. Levi says the stones were placed near the ark, that all Israel might see them thrice a year. Josephus believes that an altar was formed of them.

VER. 25. Earth, particularly of Chanaan. This miracle tended to inspire the enemy with fear and consternation, and to confirm the faith and hope of the Israelites. The obstinacy of the former was thus rendered more inexcusable. C.

HERCULES

CHAP. V.

The people are circumcised: they keep the Pasch. The manna ceaseth. An angel appeareth to Josue.

NOW when all the kings of the Amorrites, who dwelt beyond the Jordan, westward, and all the kings of Chanaan, who possessed the places near the great sea, had heard that the Lord had dried up the waters of the Jordan before the children of Israel, till they passed over, their heart failed them, and there remained no spirit in them, fearing the coming in of the children of Israel.

2 At that time the Lord said to Josue: Make thee knives of stone, and circumcise the second time the children of Israel.

3 He did what the Lord had commanded, and he circumcised the children of Israel in the hill of the foreskins.

4 Now this is the cause of the second circumcision: All the people that came out of Egypt that were males, all the men fit for war, died in the desert, during the time of the long going about in the way:

5 Now these were all circumcised. But the people that were born in the desert,

6 During the forty years of the journey in the wide wilderness, were uncircumcised: till all they were consumed that had not heard the voice of the Lord, and to whom he had sworn before, that he would not shew them the land flowing with milk and honey.

CHAP. V. VER. 1. Chanaan. These occupied the countries situated on the Mediterranean sea, as far as Egypt: the Amorrites dwelt nearer to the lake of Sodom. The whole country is divided between these two nations, including that territory which the Philistines had seized, and which belonged also to Israel. Almost every city had its respective king, according to the ancient custom in the east, intra suam cuique patriam, regna jubeantur. Just. l. i. Strabo (xvi.) says this was particularly verified in the cities of Phœnicia. C.—Till they. Heb. "we . . . their heart melted, neither was there spirit in them any more, because of the children of Israel." They fainted as it were through fear, and could not take their breath, or according to the Sept. adopt any thing rational; "they had no prudence," phronesis. H.

VER. 2. Time. While the enemy was rendered incapable of attacking the Israelites by excessive fear (C.) and consternation, Josue was commanded to renew the sign of the covenant, by which they were to take possession of the land, and it is supposed that he complied the day after he arrived at Galgal; (H.) so that the wound would be healing, when the feast of the Passover commenced four days after. On the third day it is most painful. Gen. xxxiv. 25.—Of stone. Heb. tearim, which some translate, "sharp;" but the Sept. and the best interpreters agree, that the word indicates a stone. Such a knife was used by Sephora. Ex. ii. 25. It was supposed that sharp stones would cause less inflammation or danger. Samid test. . . . amputabant, nec aliter citra perniciem. Plin. xxv. 12. Herodotus (ii. 86.) observes, that the Egyptian embalmers opened the body of the deceased with a "sharp Ethiopian stone." The people of Africa, and of America, have frequently used stone to cut wood, &c. Some of the Fathers assert, that Christ was circumcised with a knife of stone. But any other sharp instrument might be used for the purpose. Any person might perform the operation. Izates, king of the Adiabians, received circumcision from the hand of a surgeon. Joseph. xx. 2. C.—Time. Not that such as had been circumcised before were to be circumcised again; but that they were now to renew, and take up again the practice of circumcision; which had been omitted during their 40 years' sojourning in the wilderness; by reason of their being always uncertain when they should be obliged to march. Ch.—S. Augustine (q. 6.) seems to think that the Israelites despised this ceremony in the desert. Theodoret (q. 2.) supposes it was disused because it was not then necessary, to distinguish the Israelites from other nations. Masius is of opinion that God would not allow them to employ it, after their revolt at Cades-barne, when they would not take possession of the land of Chanaan; and hence they could not resume that privilege, till God had authorized them again, v. 7. Num. xiv. 33. The covenant with God, of which circumcision was the seal, had been, in the mean time, suspended. But as the Israelites are no where blamed, in Scripture, on account of this omission, it seems that God dispensed with them during the 38 years after they left Sinai, that the children might not be exposed to the evident danger of perishing, as the people knew not how soon the cloud would give notice for an immediate departure. C.—Since they were now in the midst of the nations of Chanaan, this distinctive mark (M.) was to be henceforth diligently observed. H.

VER. 3. Hill, at Galgal. Josue took care to have this ceremony performed. C.—Perhaps he circumcised some himself, as Abraham did those of his own house. Gen. xvii. 23. M.

VER. 4. Second. Heb. "this is the thing, (the cause why) Josue gave circumcision."

VER. 5. Desert. After the departure from Sinai, where the Passover was celebrated, and where, of course, the people must have been circumcised. C.

7 The children of these succeeded in the place of their fathers, and were circumcised by Josue: for they were uncircumcised even as they were born, and no one had circumcised them in the way.

8 Now after they were all circumcised, they remained in the same place of the camp, until they were healed.

9 And the Lord said to Josue: This day have I taken away from you the reproach of Egypt. And the name of that place was called Galgal, until this present day.

10 And the children of Israel abode in Galgal, and they kept the Phase, on the fourteenth day of the month at evening, in the plains of Jericho:

11 And they ate on the next day unleavened bread of the corn of the land, and frumenty of the same year.

12 "And the manna ceased after they ate of the corn of the land, neither did the children of Israel use that food any more, but they ate of the corn of the present year of the land of Chanaan.

13 And when Josue was in the field of the city of Jericho, he lifted up his eyes, and saw a man standing over-against him, holding a drawn sword, and he went to him, and said: Art thou one of ours, or of our adversaries?

14 And he answered: No; but I am prince of the host of the Lord, and now I am come.

"A. M. 2558.

VER. 6. Forty. Some copies of the Sept. add, "two," as if the 40 years' wandering in the desert, were to be dated from the time that the spies discouraged the people, in the second year of their departure from Egypt. But the Heb. and the best chronologers allow only 40 years in the whole. C.—Heb. "For the children of Israel walked 40 years in the wilderness, till all the men fit for war who came out of Egypt, were consumed, because they obeyed not the voice of the Lord, unto whom the Lord swore that he would not shew them the land, which the Lord swore unto their fathers that he would give us, a land flowing with milk and honey; (7) and their children he raised up in their stead, them Josue circumcised." H.—The Sept. is also rather fuller than the Vulg. but gives the same sense. These children who receive, what their rebellious fathers had been refused, are a sensible figure of the Christian Church; as that second circumcision under Josue, represents the spiritual cleansing of the heart, which Jesus Christ has enjoined. Rom. ii. 28. 1 Cor. vii. 19.

VER. 8. Healed. The Passover lasted eight days: after which they proceeded to attack Jericho. Yet the people, unfit for war, remained at Galgal; where the camp continued a long time afterwards.

VER. 9. Egypt. The people of that country adopted circumcision only after this period, (C.) and it never became general among them. They were therefore held in abhorrence, like the rest of the uncircumcised nations, among the Jews. Gen. xxxiv. 14. 1 K. xiv. 6. Theodoret (q. 4.) looks upon circumcision as a symbol of the liberation from the servitude of Egypt, where, he says, history informs us, that many of the Hebrews had neglected this rite.—Galgal is interpreted liberty, by Josephus; but moderns render it "a rolling away," (C.) or revolution. Heb. "I have rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you." H.—Those Israelites who remained at the other side of the river, were ordered to be circumcised at the same time with their brethren. But they could not partake in the solemnity of the Passover, as they were at a distance from the ark. Salen.

VER. 10. Phase. This was the third. The first was celebrated in Egypt. Ex. 12. The second at Sinai. Num. ix. M.—Afterwards it was disused till the Israelites took possession of Chanaan, as it was chiefly designed for that country. Ex. xii. 25.

VER. 11. Corn. Some pretend that the Heb. means "old corn." But the ancient interpreters take no notice of this restriction. The offering of corn was probably omitted on this occasion, as the Israelites had not cultivated the land.—Frumenty. Sept. "new corn." Heb. "parched, on that same day." These last words are taken by the Sept. as a part of the next sentence.

VER. 12. Land. The Sept. intimate on the 15th. The Heb. seems to say the 16th, Nisan, "on the morrow after they had eaten of the (old) corn." C.—Grabe's Septuagint agrees with the Vulgate and Heb. and specifies that the Israelites "eat of the corn of the country on the day after the Passover, unleavened and new. On that day, the morrow, manna ceased." All depends on the determination of the first day of the festival. If we date from the eating of the paschal lamb on the 14th, or from the solemn day, which was the 15th, manna must have been withdrawn either on the 15th or 16th of the month; though Salen thinks that it ceased as soon as the Israelites had begun to eat of the fruit of the country, on the eastern side of the Jordan. This miraculous food was withheld as soon as the Israelites entered the land of promise; and so the blessed Eucharist, of which it was a figure, and all the sacraments, will cease, when the Christian people shall have taken possession of their heavenly country. H.

VER. 13. Adversaries? Dost thou bear arms for or against us? C.

VER. 14. Prince of the host of the Lord, &c. S. Michael, who is called prince (265)

15 Josue fell on his face to the ground. And worshipping, said: What saith my lord to his servant?

16 "Loose, saith he, thy shoes from off thy feet: for the place whereon thou standest is holy. And Josue did as was commanded him.

CHAP. VI.

After seven days' processions, the priests sounding the trumpets, the walls of Jericho fall down: and the city is taken and destroyed.

NOW ^bJericho was close shut up and fenced, for fear of the children of Israel, and no man durst go out or come in.

2 And the Lord said to Josue: Behold I have given into thy hands Jericho, and the king thereof, and all the valiant men.

3 Go round about the city all ye fighting men once a day: so shall ye do for six days.

4 And on the seventh day the priests shall take the seven trumpets, which are used in the jubilee, and shall go before the ark of the covenant: and you shall go about the city seven times, and the priests shall sound the trumpets.

5 And when the voice of the trumpet shall give a longer and broken tune, and shall sound in your ears, all the people shall shout together with a very great shout, and the walls of the city shall fall to the ground, and they shall enter in every one at the place against which they shall stand.

6 Then Josue, the son of Nun, called the priests, and said to them: Take the ark of the covenant: and let seven other priests take the seven trumpets of the jubilee, and march before the ark of the Lord.

7 And he said to the people: Go, and compass the city, armed, marching before the ark of the Lord.

8 And when Josue had ended his words, and the seven priests blew the seven trumpets before the ark of the covenant of the Lord, of the people of Israel. Daniel x. 21. Ch.—Some of the Fathers explain it of the Son of God. Orig. hom. 6. But S. Aug. C. D. xi. 13. S. Jerom in Gal. iii. and interpreters in general agree, that the person who here appeared to Josue, was the archangel Michael. He came, in the name of God, to assure Josue of success, as the angel had appeared to Moses in the burning bush, as if to denote the distress of the Hebrews, and to encourage Moses to undertake their liberation. C.—Chal. "I am an angel sent by God." In that character he is called the Lord. H.

9 And all the armed men went before, the rest of the common people followed the ark, and the sound of the trumpets was heard on all sides.

VER. 15. Worshipping. Not with divine honour, but with a religious veneration of an inferior kind, suitable to the dignity of his person. Ch.—He styles the angel Adonai, which is a title frequently given to men; and hence he does not seem to have designed to give him supreme worship. C.—If he did, (H.) it was referred to God. C. See Ex. xx.

VER. 16. Loose. The angel did not only accept of the honour done to him, but also required more, shewing that the field near Jericho was rendered holy, by his presence. W.—Hence he ordered Josue to put off his shoes, as Moses had done at the bush. Ex. iii. 5. The Turks leave their shoes at the doors of their mosques, and do not dare to tread on the bare floor. Formerly the pagans would not spit in their temples. Arrian. "If, says Porphyrius, in the sacrifices instituted by men, in honour of the gods, people be careful to have their shoes clean, with how much greater attention ought we to preserve our bodies, which are, as it were, the garments of the soul, free from every impurity and corruption!" Abstin. 2. C.

CHAP. VI. VER. 2. The Lord, in the person of the angel, who appeared to Josue, as he was praying in silent meditation, or reconnoitring the city of Jericho. C. v. 13. H.—Men. People of the different nations had come to defend the city. C. xxiv. 11.

VER. 3. Men. These went first. Afterwards the priests bore the ark, which was followed by all the people. C.—The procession began on a Sunday. Rabbins.

VER. 4. Jubilee. Num. x. 2. The number seven, is often used to express an indefinite number. But here a particular stress is laid upon it. See Masius. As, in the 7th year the Hebrews regained the possessions which they had sold: so 10 But Josue had commanded the people, saying: You shall not shout, nor shall your voice be heard, nor any word go out of your mouth: until the day come wherein I shall say to you: Cry and shout.

11 So the ark of the Lord went about the city once a day, and returning into the camp, abode there.

12 And Josue rising before day, the priests took the ark of the Lord, 13 And seven of them seven trumpets, which are used in the jubilee: and they went before the ark of the Lord, walking and sounding the trumpets: and the armed men went before them, and the rest of the common people followed the ark, and they blew the trumpets.

14 And they went round about the city the second day once, and returned into the camp. So they did six days.

15 But the seventh day, rising up early, they went about the city, as it was ordered, seven times.

16 And when in the seventh going about the priests sounded with the trumpets, Josue said to all Israel: Shout: for the Lord hath delivered the city to you:

17 And let this city be an anathema, and all things that are in it, to the Lord. Let only Rahab, the harlot, live, with all that are with her in the house: *for she hid the messengers whom we sent.

18 But beware ye lest you touch ought of those things that are forbidden, and you be guilty of transgression, and all the camp of Israel be under sin, and be troubled.

19 But whatsoever gold or silver there shall be, or vessels of brass and iron, let it be consecrated to the Lord, laid up in his treasures.

20 "So all the people making a shout, and the trumpets sounding, when the voice and the sound thundered in the ears of the multitude, the walls forthwith fell down: and every man went up by the place that was over-against him: *and they took the city,

21 And killed all that were in it, man and woman, now they assert their right to the land of Chanaan. The sound of the trumpets announced joyful tidings to them. M.

VER. 5. Tune, with certain modulations, continued for a long time. Num. x. 5. H.—Ground. The Rabbins say they sunk in, so that the ruins might not impede the march of the army. Some think only a large breach was made, opposite to the Israelites, as the house of Rahab upon the walls was preserved. C.

VER. 7. He said. Some MSS. and Heb. editions have, "they said," though the points shew it must be singular, whatever Michaelis may object in favour of the Masora. Leusden foolishly admits here a double literal sense. Ken. II.

VER. 11. Thera. This singular procession served to exercise the obedience of the people, and to teach them to despise the enemy, who durst not come out to attack them, though many were unarmed. C.

VER. 15. Seventh day. The Jews say it was the sabbath; but of this there is no proof. Marcion hence took occasion to accuse God of inconsistency, as he forbade all working, and yet ordered the people to go round Jericho on a sabbath day. But Tertullian (iv. 12.) answers very well, that servile work is forbidden, and not the works of God or of religion, and God may change the ceremonial law as he thinks proper. C.—Sabbato opera humana prohibentur non divina. D.

VER. 16. Said, or "had said," when he gave the people the sound of the trumpet for a sign (H.) when they were to shout, v. 5. He probably gave the regulations respecting the plunder of the city, before the army left the camp. C.

VER. 17. An anathema. That is, a thing accursed and devoted to utter destruction. Ch.—Only the metal that was found, was consecrated to the Lord, (v. 19.) and the family of Rahab saved. In devoting things, the person who laid on the curse, might extend its operation as he pleased. On some occasions, all was to be destroyed; on others, some things were preserved. Deut. ii. 34. Lev. xxvii. 21. C.—This first city, which the Israelites attacked, was treated with peculiar severity, to terrify the rest.

VER. 18. Forbidden, transgression, sin. Heb. has always anathema. H.

VER. 19. Treasures, probably in the tabernacle. See Num. xxxi. 48. God claims the first-fruits of the booty, as an acknowledgment that he granted the victory, (C.) and all the riches of the country, to his people. H.

young and old. The oxen also, and the sheep, and the asses, they slew with the edge of the sword.

22 *But Josue said to the two men that had been sent for spies: Go into the harlot's house, and bring her out, and all things that are hers, as you assured her by oath.

23 *And the young men went in, and brought out Rahab, and her parents, her brethren also, and all her goods, and her kindred, and made them to stay without the camp.

24 *But they burned the city, and all things that were therein; except the gold and silver, and vessels of brass and iron, which they consecrated unto the treasury of the Lord.

25 But Josue saved Rahab the harlot, and her father's house, and all she had, and they dwelt in the midst of Israel until this present day: because she hid the messengers whom he had sent to spy out Jericho. At that time, Josue made an imprecation, saying:

26 *Cursed be the man before the Lord, that shall raise up and build the city of Jericho. In his first-born may he lay the foundation thereof, and in the last of his children set up its gates.

27 And the Lord was with Josue, and his name was noised throughout all the land.

CHAP. VII.

For the sin of Achan, the Israelites are defeated at Hai. The offender is found out, and stoned to death; and God's wrath is turned from them.

BUT *the children of Israel transgressed the commandment, and took to their own use of that which was accursed. *For Achan, the son of Charmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zare, of the tribe of Juda, took something of the anathema: and the Lord was angry against the children of Israel.

2 And when Josue sent men from Jericho against Hai, which is beside Bethaven, on the east side of the town of Bethel, he said to them: Go up, and view the country: and they fulfilled his command, and viewed Hai.

* Supra ii. 1. and 14.—Heb. xi. 31.—Infra viii. 2.
* 4 Kings xvi. 34.

VER. 23. Men. Heb. "boys;" a name given to people advanced in years.—Camp. A respect for the majesty of God, would not permit the Israelites to introduce unbelievers into the camp. They were first instructed, and then the men were circumcised, and the women received baptism. C.

VER. 25. Day. Rahab prefigured the wild olive tree, which S. Paul says was engrafted on the good olive tree, (Rom. xi. 24,) and which will remain till the end of the world. Theod. q. 8. She married Salmon, of the tribe of Juda, and became the ancestor of David and of the Messias. C.

VER. 26. Cursed, &c. Jericho, in the mystical sense, signifies iniquity; the sounding of the trumpets by the priests, signifies the preaching of the word of God; by which the walls of Jericho are thrown down, when sinners are converted: and a dreadful curse will light on them who build them up again. Ch.—Gates. Some copies of the Sept. insert here that the curse fell upon Azan (Hiel) of Bethel, 3 K. xvi. 34. Before his time, there was a city of palm-trees, or Jericho, built in the neighbourhood. Joseph. Bel. v. 4. Though Hiel was so severely punished, no one made any scruple to live there. Elias and Jesus Christ himself honoured the place with their presence. The city is now almost in ruins, and the territory uncultivated. Ancient history mentions similar imprecations against obnoxious cities. Thus the Romans cursed the rebuilders of Carthage, and Agamemnon followed "the ancient custom," says Strabo, (xiii.) laying a curse upon those who should rebuild the city of Troy. The Ionians and Greeks forbade those temples to be re-established, which the Persians had destroyed, that they might remain eternal monuments of the impiety of the latter, and of the hatred which subsisted between the two nations. Pausanias in Phoc. C.

CHAP. VII. VER. 1. Children. Achan was guilty of theft: some of the rest might have connived at his fault. He had taken what was reserved for the Lord. The offender was discovered, to inspire all with a horror for his conduct. Some of his brethren were punished, (v. 5.) but they suffered for their own secret transgressions, or death might be no real punishment to them; while the Israelites were awakened to a sense of their own inability to conquer without the divine protection, and were forced to humble themselves. H.—Chastisements are the marks of God's displeasure, though they frequently proceed also from his clemency.—Achan is called Achan, 1 Par. ii. 7. These five persons occupy the 3 And returning, they said to him: Let not all the people go up, but let two or three thousand men go, and destroy the city: why should all the people be troubled in vain, against enemies that are very few?

4 There went up therefore three thousand fighting men: who immediately turned their backs,

5 And were defeated by the men of the city of Hai, and there fell of them six and thirty men: and the enemies pursued them from the gate as far as Sabarim, and they slew them as they fled by the descent: and the heart of the people was struck with fear, and melted like water.

6 But Josue rent his garments, and fell flat on the ground, before the ark of the Lord, until the evening, both he and all the ancients of Israel: and they put dust upon their heads.

7 And Josue said: Alas, O Lord God, why wouldst thou bring this people over the river Jordan, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorrite, and to destroy us? would God we had stayed beyond the Jordan, as we began.

8 My Lord God, what shall I say, seeing Israel turning their backs to their enemies?

9 The Chanaanites, and all the inhabitants of the land, will hear of it, and being gathered together will surround us, and cut off our name from the earth: and what wilt thou do to thy great name?

10 And the Lord said to Josue: Arise, why liest thou flat on the ground?

11 Israel hath sinned, and transgressed my covenant: and they have taken of the anathema, and have stolen and lied, and have hid it among their goods.

12 Neither can Israel stand before his enemies, but he shall flee from them: because he is defiled with the anathema. I will be no more with you, till you destroy him that is guilty of this wickedness.

13 Arise, *sanctify the people, and say to them: Be ye sanctified against to-morrow: for thus saith the Lord space of 265 years; so that they must have been 50 or 55 years old, when they had children.

VER. 2. Against Hai, to see the situation and strength of that city, which was about 10 miles west, or rather north, of Jericho. It was afterwards rebuilt, 1 Esd. ii. 28.—Bethaven and Bethel are the same place; (S. Jerom. C.) though many distinguish them, with Cellarius. The former name means "the house of iniquity," because Jeroboam there set up a golden calf. Bethel was its former appellation, in consequence of the vision of Jacob. Gen. xxviii.

VER. 3. Few. It appears, however, that the city contained 12,000 fighting men; so that these spies must have formed a false notion of its strength. C. viii. 25.

VER. 5. Sabarim, which means people "broken and defeated," Sept. "they pursued them from the gate, till they had entirely broken them," destroying 86, and putting the rest to flight. C.—This small disaster filled the whole camp with dismay, as the Lord generally caused the victories of his people to be complete, and without any loss, as long as they continued in his favour. None were found wanting of those who attacked and destroyed so many of the Madianites. Num. xxxi. 49. H.

VER. 6. Heads. These marks of grief were very common. Achilles covered his head with ashes, tore his garments and face, when he received news of the death of his friend, Patroclus. Homer and Virgil, (xii.) speaking of Latinus, the king, says, It scissa veste Latinus—Canitiem immundo perfusam pulvere turpans.

VER. 7. Began. Some had established themselves in the land of Galaad. M.—Heb. "would to God we had been content, and dwelt on the other side of the Jordan." Josue speaks in this animated manner, through zeal for the glory of God, (C.) more than for any personal inconvenience. He was grieved that any one should have merited God's displeasure. He was afraid that the Chanaanites would blaspheme the great name of the Lord, v. 9.

VER. 11. Lied. Each one, on delivering up what he had taken, made profession, at least by his behaviour, (H) that he retained nothing. Achan did like the rest, but he kept back part of the plunder. C.—He lied, and did not comply with the promise made by all Israel, which he was bound to observe, as much as if he had made it with his own mouth.

God of Israel: The curse is in the midst of thee, O Israel: thou canst not stand before thy enemies, till he be destroyed out of thee, that is defiled with this wickedness.

14 And you shall come in the morning, every one by your tribes: and what tribe soever the lot shall find, it shall come by its kindreds, and the kindred by its houses, and the house by the men.

15 And whosoever he be that shall be found guilty of this fact, he shall be burnt with fire, with all his substance, because he hath transgressed the covenant of the Lord, and hath done wickedness in Israel.

16 Josue, therefore, when he rose in the morning, made Israel to come by their tribes, and the tribe of Juda was found.

17 Which being brought by its families, it was found to be the family of Zare. Bringing that also by the houses, he found it to be Zabdi:

18 And bringing his house man by man, he found Achan, the son of Charmi, the son of Zabdi, the son of Zare, of the tribe of Juda.

19 And Josue said to Achan: My son, give glory to the Lord God of Israel, and confess, and tell me what thou hast done, hide it not.

20 And Achan answered Josue, and said to him: Indeed I have sinned against the Lord, the God of Israel, and thus and thus have I done.

21 For I saw among the spoils a scarlet garment, exceeding good, and two hundred sicles of silver, and a golden rule of fifty sicles: and I coveted them, and I took them away, and hid them in the ground in the midst of my tent, and the silver I covered with the earth that I dug up.

22 Josue therefore sent ministers: who running to his tent, found all hid in the same place, together with the silver.

23 And taking them away out of the tent, they brought them to Josue, and to all the children of Israel, and threw them down before the Lord.

24 Then Josue, and all Israel with him, took Achan, the son of Zare, and the silver, and the garment, and ernacle, and to see the event. Sept. "purify the people." Chal. "call an assembly."

VER. 14. Find. Heb. "it shall be the tribe which the Lord taketh." H.—This was done by lots, as on similar occasions, 1 K. x. 20. and xiv. 41. When God authorized this method, there could be no danger in it. But to have recourse to lots without such authority, would be often tempting God. The apostles chose an apostle by lot: but they had first taken every precaution (C.) to select two persons, both fit for the important charge. H.—To commit the choice of sacred ministers to chance would be extremely improper. "We forbid the use of lots in the elections," said Honorius. C.

VER. 18. Juda. The dignity of this tribe enhanced the fault of Achan. M.

VER. 19. My son. Clemency is the virtue of great souls.—Give glory. Confess candidly. Jo. ix. 24.

VER. 21. Garment. Heb. "a robe of Sannaar, or of Babylon." This city was famous for embroidered, or painted robes, such as were worn by kings. Jonas iii. 6. Plin. viii. 48.—Rule, or linnet. No coin was yet used. C.

VER. 24. His sons, &c. Probably conscious to, or accomplices of the crime of their father, (Ch.) as he could hardly have concealed these things in the midst of his tent without their knowledge. M.—But granting, with S. Aug. (q. 8.) that they were innocent of this crime, God, who is the sovereign arbiter of life and death, might order them out of the world, on this occasion, without injustice.

VER. 25. Day. Hence some have drawn a very weak argument, to prove the repentance of Achan, as if he had only to undergo a temporary punishment. It is probable, however, that his sincere confession, proceeding from a penitent heart, might influence God to shew him mercy.—Fire. Children, as well as his other effects; though some have supposed that the former were spared, as they are not here specified. Heb. seems to include them; "and burnt them with fire after they had stoned them with stones." Chaldee says they were stoned first. C.

VER. 26. Achor. That is, trouble; (Ch.) in allusion to the name of Achar, as he is called in the Sept. invariably, and in the Heb. and Vulg. in the Book of Chronicles. H.—This heap of stones was thrown upon the ashes of the deceased, (268) the golden rule, his sons also, and his daughters, his oxen, and asses, and sheep, the tent also, and all the goods: and brought them to the valley of Achor:

25 Where Josue said: Because thou hast troubled us, the Lord trouble thee this day. And all Israel stoned him: and all things that were his, were consumed with fire.

26 *And they gathered together upon him a great heap of stones, which remaineth until this present day. And the wrath of the Lord was turned away from them. And the name of that place was called the Valley of Achor, until this day.

CHAP. VIII.

Hai is taken and burnt, and all the inhabitants slain. An altar is built, and sacrifices offered. The law is written on stones, and the blessings and cursings are read before all the people.

AND the Lord said to Josue: ^bFear not, nor be thou dismayed: take with thee all the multitude of fighting men, arise, and go up to the town of Hai: Behold I have delivered into thy hand the king thereof, and the people, and the city, and the land.

2 And thou shalt do to the city of Hai, and to the king thereof, ^cas thou hast done to Jericho, and to the king thereof: but the spoils, and all the cattle, you shall take for a prey to yourselves: lay an ambush for the city behind it.

3 And Josue arose, and all the army of the fighting men with him, to go up against Hai: and he sent thirty thousand chosen valiant men, in the night.

4 And commanded them, saying: Lay an ambush behind the city: and go not very far from it: and be ye all ready.

5 But I, and the rest of the multitude which is with me, will approach on the contrary side against the city. And when they shall come out against us, ^dwe will flee, and turn our backs, as we did before:

6 Till they pursuing us be drawn farther from the city: for they will think that we flee as before.

The valle of Achor was on the road between Jerusalem and Jericho, where a small castle, at Adommim, was built to protect travellers from the insults of robbers, who infested that part. Lu. x. 30. C. xv. 7.

CHAP. VIII. VER. 1. Men. Masius and Salien (H.) suppose that Josue selected out of them 30,000; 5000 of whom were to be placed in ambush, and the rest were to pretend that they were terrified at the approach of the king of Hai, and to flee with Josue. But the text seems to assert that all accompanied their general, (C.) excepting such as were left to guard the camp. H.

VER. 2. King. There was this difference, that the king of Hai was to be gibbeted, and his corpse stoned, while the city was to be plundered by the Israelites.—R. This mode of warfare is equally just, as if the enemy was attacked in the open field. Dolus an virtus quis in hoste requirit? Virg.—God was pleased to authorize it on this occasion, that his people might be less exposed, being under some apprehensions on account of the former defeat. Some nations have preferred to encounter the enemy openly. Grot. Jur. iii. 1. 20. But their example is no law for others. "When the war is just, it matters not whether a person gain the victory by open fighting or by stratagem." S. Aug. q. 10. "It is often prudent to conceal the truth." c. Mend. x. People engaged in warfare, allow each other to take such advantages. God could easily have routed these few men by means of the army of Israel, or by a miracle, as he did at Jericho. H.—But he is at liberty to act as he thinks proper. The ambush was laid on the south-west side of Hai, so that those of Bethel might not perceive it, as they came out to the assistance of their countrymen, v. 17. Five thousand were placed in one place, and 25,000 in another, while the main body of the army, under Josue, took a circuit by the east, and came to attack the city on the north side. C.

VER. 4. Ready to enter the city, when its soldiers are all in pursuit of us. H.

city: and the Lord your God will deliver it into your hands.

8 And when you shall have taken it, set it on fire, and you shall do all things so as I have commanded.

9 And he sent them away, and they went on to the place of the ambush, and abode between Bethel and Hai, on the west side of the city of Hai. But Josue staid that night in the midst of the people,

10 And rising early in the morning, he mustered his soldiers, and went up with the ancients in the front of the army, environed with the aid of the fighting men.

11 And when they were come, and were gone up over-against the city, they stood on the north side of the city, between which and them there was a valley in the midst.

12 And he had chosen five thousand men, and set them to lie in ambush between Bethel and Hai, on the west side of the same city:

13. But all the rest of the army went in battle array on the north side, so that the last of that multitude reached to the west side of the city. So Josue went that night, and stood in the midst of the valley.

14 And when the king of Hai saw this, he made haste in the morning, and went out with all the army of the city, and set it in battle array, toward the desert, not knowing that there lay an ambush behind his back.

15 But Josue, and all Israel gave back, making as if they were afraid, and fleeing by the way of the wilderness.

16 But they shouting together, and encouraging one another, pursued them. And when they were come from the city,

17 And not one remained in the city of Hai and of Bethel, that did not pursue after Israel, leaving the towns open as they had rushed out,

18 The Lord said to Josue: Lift up the shield that is in thy hand, towards the city of Hai, for I will deliver it to thee.

19 And when he had lifted up his shield towards the city, the ambush, that lay hid, rose up immediately: and going to the city, took it, and set it on fire.

20 And the men of the city, that pursued after Josue, looking back, and seeing the smoke of the city rise up to heaven, had no more power to flee this way or that way: especially as they that had counterfeited flight, and were going toward the wilderness, turned back most valiantly against them that pursued.

21 So Josue, and all Israel, seeing that the city was taken, and that the smoke of the city rose up, returned, and slew the men of Hai.

22 And they also that had taken and set the city on fire, issuing out of the city to meet their own men, began to cut off the enemies who were surrounded by them. So that the enemies being cut off on both sides, not one of so great a multitude was saved.

23 And they took the king of the city of Hai alive, and brought him to Josue.

24 So all being slain that had pursued after Israel, in his flight to the wilderness, and falling by the sword in the same place, the children of Israel returned and laid waste the city.

25 And the number of them that fell that day, both of men and women, was twelve thousand persons, all of the city of Hai.

26 But Josue drew not back his hand, which he had stretched out on high, holding the shield, till all the inhabitants of Hai were slain.

27 And the children of Israel divided among them, the cattle and the prey of the city, as the Lord had commanded Josue.

28 And he burnt the city, and made it a heap for ever:

29 And he hung the king thereof on a gibbet, until the evening and the going down of the sun. Then Josue commanded, and they took down his carcass from the gibbet: and threw it in the very entrance of the city, heaping upon it a great heap of stones, which remaineth until this present day.

30 Then Josue built an altar to the Lord, the God of Israel, in Mount Hebal,

31 *As Moses, the servant of the Lord, had commanded the children of Israel, and it is written in the book of the law of Moses: an altar of unhewed stones, which

VER. 13. Night. He spent the forepart of it at Galgal, to prevent any suspicion, v. 9. But setting out very early, (v. 10.) he arrived at Hai before sun-rise.

VER. 17. Not one fit to bear arms. W.—Bethel. As soon as the people of this city perceived the Israelites fleeing, they rushed out to assist the king of Hai in the pursuit. But when they saw the former rally, before they had joined their friends, (C.) they very prudently retired, and left the unhappy citizens of Hai to their fate. H.—Hence all who were slain, belonged to the latter city, v. 25.

VER. 18. Shield, as Moses lifted up his hands, Ex. xvii. 11. Some translate, 'dart, spear,' or 'sword.' Sept. and Eccli. xvi. 3. C.—The buckler might be suspended on a spear, (M.) that it might be seen afar off (W.) by some appointed to keep watch on purpose. H.

VER. 23. Josue. This king was reserved for greater torments and ignominy. It was the ancient custom to present kings and chief commanders to the victorious general, who rewarded those who brought them. Grotius.

VER. 28. For ever, or for a long time. It was rebuilt before the captivity. 2 Esd. vii. 31.

VER. 29. Gibbet. Sept. "a cross." Some say that the king was first killed, but that assertion is destitute of proof. The corpse was taken down before night. Deut. xxi. 22.

VER. 30. Hebal. The Sam. Chronicle says, on Mount Garizim. No doubt Josue complied with the injunctions of Moses: but we have seen that there are reasons to doubt which mountain he pitched upon. Deut. xxvii. 4. H.—It seems more probable that the altar would be upon Garizim, where the blessings were proclaimed, if the texts of Moses and Josue did not formally assert the contrary. C.—But if they have been interpolated, nothing certain can be deduced from those passages. Josephus (iv. 8.) says that the altar was between the two mountains, not far from Sichem, which was built at the foot of Garizim; and it is not probable that this historian, the mortal enemy of the Samaritans, would have hesitated to assert that the altar was upon Hebal, if the texts had been so positive, in his time. It is undeniable that the tribes of Levi, and of Ephraim were upon Garizim; and consequently Josue and the priests must have been there; and who would then officiate at the altar on Hebal? See Kennicott, who ably refutes the insinuations of the infidel Collins, against the character of the Samaritans. When this altar was erected the learned are not agreed. H.—Some say, immediately after the passage of the Jordan, and that the 12 stones taken from the bed of the river, were used for that purpose. Josephus says five years elapsed, and R. Ismael supposes that the altar was not built during the 14 years after the passage of the Jordan. But it is most probable that Josue complied with the command of God as soon as he had procured a sort of peace, (H.) by the conquest of these two cities, and was thus enabled to penetrate into the heart of the country, where Garizim was situated, not in the plain of Jericho, as Eusebius imagined, but near Sichem, (C.) about 30 or 40 miles to the north-west of Jericho. H.

VER. 31. Iron. Spencer complains that the Prot. have not translated barzel, "iron tool," as Deut. xxvii. 5. This translation is found in their more ancient editions of 1857–49, &c. Ken.—But the difference is very unimportant. The iron had not touched: and he offered upon it holocausts to the Lord, and immolated victims of peace-offerings.

32 And he wrote upon stones, the Deuteronomy of the law of Moses, which he had ordered before the children of Israel.

33 And all the people, and the ancients, and the princes, and judges, stood on both sides of the ark, before the priests that carried the ark of the covenant of the Lord, both the stranger and he that was born among them, half of them by Mount Garizim, and half by Mount Hebal, as Moses, the servant of the Lord, had commanded. And first he blessed the people of Israel.

34 After this, he read all the words of the blessing and the cursing, and all things that were written in the book of the law.

35 He left out nothing of those things which Moses had commanded, but he repeated all before all the people of Israel, with the women and children, and strangers, that dwelt among them.

reason of this prohibition is given, Ex. xx. 25.—He offered; so we read that he wrote, blessed and cursed, &c. because these things were done at least by his authority. It is not necessary to suppose that he engraved the words of the law with his own hands, or that he passed from Garizim, where he had been pronouncing the blessings, to Hebal, in order to denounce the curses. H.—He probably commissioned some of the princes on Hebal to perform the office of cursing, after he had repeated the blessings himself from Garizim; and the select company of Levites before the ark, having answered or repeated the words, the whole multitude stationed at the foot of each mountain, testified their entire approbation by shouting Amen; the six tribes near Garizim thus ratifying the blessings; and the rest, at the foot of Hebal, giving their consent that the transgressors should be cursed. Ken.—Hence Josue must have sacrificed by the hands of the priests. H.—Various instances are produced, to shew that princes and prophets have, on extraordinary occasions, performed this office themselves, 1 K. vi. 15. and vii. 9. 3 K. xviii. 32. C.—But these must have either received a dispensation from God, or they must have employed the ministry of the legal priests; or, in fine, their actions, like that of Saul, (1 K. xiii. 9,) of Absalom, (ib. i. 9,) Herod, &c. may have been deserving of blame. H.—The Jews assert that in the desert no one was permitted to sacrifice, except in the tabernacle; but that this prohibition ceased at Galgal, as the ark had no fixed abode, and thus Josue might offer sacrifice himself. Afterwards the law was enforced, while the ark was at Silo. But upon its being removed to Nobe, Maspha, and Gabaon, people resumed their former liberty; and hence there was nothing to hinder Samuel, Saul, and David from offering sacrifice, till the temple was erected. Outram de Sac. i. 2. Grot. in Deut. xii. 8. VER. 32. Stones, of which the altar was formed, (C.) or on a separate monument, (Masius) consisting of two stones of black marble, so as to leave the letters prominent, and to fill up the vacancies with white plaster, that they might be seen more plainly, and might, at the same time, be more durable than if they had been only written on the cement, whatever some may have said of the tenacity of the ancient plaster.—Deuteronomy, &c. or copy of the Decalogue, which, by way of eminence, is called the law. Act. vii. 53. It is distinguished from the blessings and the curses; (v. 34.) and Moses referred to it, as already existing, (Deut. xxvii. 3. 8,) though the Book of Deuteronomy was not finished till afterwards. He might point to the very tables contained in the ark. "This law, consisting of only 16 verses, might easily be engraven on this solemn day; whereas to engrave the 80 verses of blessings and cursings, would be improbable; and engraving the Pentateuch, or indeed the Book of Deuteronomy, had been impossible." That the Decalogue was to be thus solemnly proclaimed is evident, from the Sam. text. Ex. xx. 18. Kennicott.—This was the covenant which God had made with his people, (Deut. iv. 13,) and which Moses cautions the Israelites to observe; as upon their fidelity, their present and future happiness entirely depended. It was on this title alone that they could hold the land of Chanaan; and therefore Josue takes care thus publicly to admonish them of their duty. H.—The Rabbins say that the whole Pentateuch was written on this occasion in 70 languages, that no nation might plead ignorance. But we can hardly believe that even the Book of Deuteronomy could be written, and read, and explained to the people, as that would require many days. C.

VER. 33. Hebal. "Gerizim and Ebal, says Maundrell, p. 59, are separated by a narrow valley, not above a furlong broad; and Naplosa, (the ancient Sychem),

6 And they went to Josue, who then abode in the camp at Galgal, and said to him, and to all Israel with him: We are come from a far country, desiring to make peace with you. And the children of Israel answered them, and said:

7 Perhaps you dwell in the land which falls to our lot; if so, we can make no league with you.

8 But they said to Josue: We are thy servants. Josue said to them: Who are you? and whence came you?

9 They answered: From a very far country thy servants are come, in the name of the Lord thy God. For

The princes, representing the different tribes, were stationed on these mountains, and the crowd at the foot of them, while a select company of Levites attended the ark in the midst, and repeated what the princes proclaimed, that the multitude might answer Amen, as they turned successively to them; (Kennicott) or the princes might answer Amen, from the top of the two hills. VER. 35. Repeated. Coverdale's Bible has "Josua caused it to be proclaimed." "It is very common in Scripture to represent a person as doing that which is done by another, in his name and by his authority." Kennicott.—Josue might be in the midst to preside, (C.) or rather he would be along with the princes of the six tribes on Mount Garizim, v. 30. H.—Thus the covenant entered into between God and the Israelites, was solemnly ratified when the latter first entered the promised land. The greatest part of those who had been present at Horeb had perished in the wilderness. C.

They resolved, therefore, to form a general league, offensive and defensive. H.—Beyond. Heb. "on the side of"—Mountains, on the south of Judea.—Sea. All the nations of Phœnicia, and the country of the Philistines, (C.) who had seized a part of the country, which belonged to the Israelites. Josue divided their territory among the people, though he did not live to make the conquest of it. H.—Libanus. Heb. "and in all the coasts of the great sea, over-against Libanus," as if the Phœnicians were alone meant. C.

VER. 4. Provisions. By the alteration of a single letter, Heb. means, "they feigned themselves to be ambassadors." But the Chal. Syr. and Sept. agree with the Vulgate. C.—The Gabaonites were Hevites, though they are called by the more general name of Amorrhites, 2 K. xxi. 2. S. Jerom says that their city stood in the tribe of Benjamin; according to Josephus, 40 or 50 stadia north of Jerusalem. M.—They alone had the prudence to submit, (C.) being terrified and converted by the miracles of God. H.—Again. In the East, goat skins with the hair inwards, are used to carry wine.

VER. 5. Patches. Heb. "spotted," or of different colours, like shoes worn out and spoiled with dirt.—Pieces. Heb. is translated, "dry, burnt, eaten, mouldy," &c. But it means fine thin bread, or wafers, (3 K. xiv. 3,) full of holes. The Israelites partook of this bread, which they would hardly have done if it had been mouldy. C.

VER. 7. You. The Gabaonites addressed themselves to the first whom they met in the camp; and these made this remark to them before they were brought into the presence of Josue. The Israelites could make no league with the Chanaanites, as with equals, but only on condition that the latter should embrace the true religion, and acknowledge the dominion of the former. Grot. Ex. xxiii. 32. Deut. vii. 2.

VER. 8. Servants. They did not mean to submit to servitude, but to make a league; otherwise they would not have needed to have recourse to such artifices. C.—But finding that no other terms could be procured, they were willing, at any rate, to save their lives. H.

we have heard the fame of his power, all the things that he did in Egypt,

11 And our ancients, and all the inhabitants of our country, said to us: Take with you victuals for a long way, and go meet them, and say: We are your servants, make ye a league with us

12 Behold, these loaves we took hot, when we set out from our houses to come to you, now they are become dry, and broken in pieces by being exceeding old.

13 These bottles of wine when we filled them were new, now they are rent and burst. These garments we have on, and the shoes we have on our feet, by reason of the very long journey, are worn out, and almost consumed.

14 They took therefore of their victuals, and consulted not the mouth of the Lord.

15 *And Josue made peace with them, and entering into a league, promised that they should not be slain: the princes also of the multitude swore to them.

16 Now three days after the league was made, they heard that they dwelt nigh, and they should be among them.

17 And the children of Israel removed the camp, and came into their cities on the third day, the names of which are, Gabaon, and Caphira, and Beroth, and Cariathiarim.

18 And they slew them not, because the princes of the multitude had sworn in the name of the Lord, the

VER. 9. God. So the queen of Saba came to Solomon, 3 K. x. The people of Gabaon being convinced that the God of Israel was the only true God, came to join themselves to his people, and to worship him. Serarius.

VER. 10. Astaroth. They take care not to mention what had happened so recently at Jericho, lest they might be detected. C.

VER. 13. And almost. This is added by way of farther explanation of the Heb. "are become old." H.

VER. 14. Victuals; to examine whether they were as old as they pretended; or they eat of them in sign of friendship. M.—Thus we find a feast generally accompanied the making of a league. Gen. xxvi. 30. and xxxi. 54. To betray a guest was deemed a heinous injury. Pa. li. 15. Euripides.—Lord. By the high priest, clothed with the Urim and Thummim. C.—This remark shews that the Israelites had been guilty of some negligence. H.—Hence they were so easily deceived, being perhaps overjoyed that their friendship should be courted by so distant a nation. M.—The high priest was ordered to consult the Lord for Josue, at the door of the tabernacle. Ex. xxix. 42. Num. xxvii. 21. W.

VER. 15. Them. Were they bound to keep this promise! Some maintain the negative, as it was obtained by fraud, and therefore the Gabaonites leave themselves to the mercy of Josue, (v. 25,) who condemns them to perpetual servitude in the house of the Lord. He could not, however, have taken away their lives after what had passed. The error was not essential, but the people might have obtained the same conditions, if they had frankly told the truth. If we make a contract with a person who pretends to be of a nation to which he does not belong, the contract will hold good. The deceit of the Gabaonites was punished as it deserved. But God required that the conditions which were granted to them, should be diligently observed; and the family of Saul was severely punished, because he had slain some of them. 3 K. xxi. If the rest of the Chanaanites had changed their religion, and submitted to the Israelites, they might have been preserved, as Rahab, and so many others were, with whom the pious king scrupled not to form alliances. C. xi. 19. Deut. xx. 10, &c. Masius. Bonfrere. C.—They were, however, obliged to yield possession of the land to the Israelites, and to renounce idolatry. The Gabaonites were willing to accede to these conditions, and therefore Josue might justly make a peace with them. M.

VER. 16. Nova. The five kings coming to attack the Gabaonites, these were forced to confess the truth, and to implore the assistance of the Israelites; (C.) or perhaps Rahab had given information who they really were. M.—Josue flew to their assistance in the night, and arrived the day following. C. x. 9.

VER. 18. Israel. This is one reason why their lives were spared. But we have seen that they could not, with justice, have treated them as enemies, on their submitting to the conditions required, even if they had not engaged themselves by oath. The Gabaonites knew with what respect oaths were then kept by the Hebrews, even when they might have some specious pretext for dispensing themselves from their obligation. "People had not yet begun to neglect God, as they do in the present age: nor did they allow themselves the liberty of interpreting an oath, God of Israel. Then all the common people murmured against the princes.

19 And they answered them: We have sworn to them in the name of the Lord, the God of Israel, and therefore we may not touch them.

20 But this we will do to them: Let their lives be saved, lest the wrath of the Lord be stirred up against us, if we should be forsworn:

21 But so let them live, as to serve the whole multitude in hewing wood, and bringing in water. As they were speaking these things, 22 Josue called the Gabaonites, and said to them: Why would you impose upon us, saying: We dwell very far off from you, whereas you are in the midst of us?

23 Therefore you shall be under a curse, and your race shall always be hewers of wood, and carriers of water, into the house of my God.

24 They answered: It was told us, thy servants, that the Lord thy God had promised his servant Moses, to give you all the land, and to destroy all the inhabitants thereof. Therefore we feared exceedingly, and provided for our lives, compelled by the dread we had of you, and we took this counsel.

25 And now we are in thy hand: deal with us as it seemeth good and right unto thee.

26 So Josue did as he had said, and delivered them from the hand of the children of Israel, that they should not be slain.

27 And he gave orders in that day, that they should be in the service of all the people, and of the altar of the and accommodating the laws to their own humour, but they rather regulated their morals by their prescription." Nondum hæc quæ nunc tenet sæculum, negli gentia Dei venerat, &c. Livy iii.

VER. 21. Multitude. The common people, only considering their own private advantage, murmured at the conduct of their leaders, as they supposed that they were thus deprived of the plunder (C.) of many cities, and engaged in a dangerous war, with the five confederate kings. But this war was in no degree detrimental to them, as they knew they had to subdue the whole country; and as for the Gabaonites, they eased the people of Israel of a great burden, by doing the drudgery of the tabernacle, which otherwise must have fallen upon them. H.—These people were dispersed through the country, particularly in the cities of the priests and Levites, whose servants they were forced to be. Gabaon was allotted to the priests. In latter ages, many of these poor people being slain by Saul, &c. David was obliged to select some others, called Nathineans, or "people given," to supply their place, (C.) unless these were the remnants of the Gabaonites. M.—Josephus (Bel. ii. 17,) speaks of the feast of Xylophoria, or "wood carrying," for the uses of the temple; and we read, (2 Esd. x. 34,) that lots were cast among the priests and the Levites, and the people, for the offering of wood, &c. which seems to insinuate that the ancient institution was then altered. Many authors speak of a fountain which furnished the temple with water, after the captivity, so that the service of the Gabaonites was not much wanted. We find no mention of them after that time.

VER. 23. Curse. Heb. "you are cursed, and there shall be none of you freed from being bondmen;" (H.) you are a part of those nations which are under an anathema, and you deserve to be severely punished. C.—But we shall fulfil our engagements with you, only in punishment for your craftiness: (H.) you must submit to change your religion, (C.) which will be your greatest blessing, (H.) and to perform the meanest offices, which may be considered as a sort of curse. It is thought that some recompense was allowed the Gabaonites for their labour. Serarius, q. 17.—This sentence was probably pronounced at Galgal, (C.) though we might as well conclude that Josue would wait till he came to Gabaon, before he arraigned the people, as no doubt they would make the best of their way out of the camp, as soon as they had obtained their request. H.—Water. Slaves of the meanest condition were employed in these offices. Deut. xxix. 11. Athen. x. 22.

VER. 24. Thereof. It seems they knew not that any conditions would be admitted; and many interpreters have supposed, that none could be offered by the Israelites. See Deut. xx. 15.

VER. 25. Thee. They acknowledge not only that Josue is too strong for them, but also that he has a right to punish them for their deceit. They accept, therefore, of whatever terms he is pleased to allow them. C.

VER. 27. Chosen in the tabernacle and temple. M.—In these Gabaonites, of the race of Chanaan, the prediction of Noe, that he should serve Sem, was fulfilled Gen. ix. W.

CHAP. X.

Five kings war against Gabaon. Josue defeateth them: many are slain with hail-stones. At the prayer of Josue, the sun and moon stand still the space of one day. The five kings are hanged. Divers cities are taken.

WHEN Adonisedec, king of Jerusalem, had heard these things, to wit, that Josue had taken Hai, and had destroyed it, (for as he had done to Jericho and the king thereof, so did he to Hai and its king) and that the Gabaonites were gone over to Israel, and were their confederates,

2 He was exceedingly afraid. For Gabaon was a great city, and one of the royal cities, and greater than the town of Hai, and all its fighting men were most valiant.

3 Therefore Adonisedec, king of Jerusalem, sent to Oham, king of Hebron, and to Pharam, king of Jerimoth, and to Japhia, king of Lachis, and to Dabir, king of Eglon, saying:

4 Come up to me, and bring help, that we may take Gabaon, because it hath gone over to Josue, and to the children of Israel.

5 So the five kings of the Amorrites being assembled together, went up: the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jerimoth, the king of Lachis, the king of Eglon, they and their armies, and camped about Gabaon, laying siege to it.

6 But the inhabitants of the city of Gabaon, which was besieged, sent to Josue, who then abode in the camp at Galgal, and said to him: Withdraw not thy

* A. M. 2553.—b 1 Kings vii. 10.

CHAP. X. VER. 1. Adonisedec means, "Lord of justice," as Melchisedec denotes "the king of justice;" perhaps Salem was originally styled Zedec. Masius.—This king had probably some control over the neighbouring cities. M.—He was also in the greatest danger; and not daring to attack the Israelites, he resolves to fall upon the Gabaonites unawares, that other cities might be deterred from following their example.—Confederates. Heb. "and were among them," which may signify either that the Israelites were to dwell in the towns belonging to the Gabaonites, or that the latter should live along with them, as one and the same people, following the same religion, and bound together by the same interests.

VER. 2. Cities. Yet we read not of its king. C. ix. 11. C.—Sept. "It was like a royal metropolis." H.—Valiant. Prudence therefore, and not fear, had influenced them to take this step.

VER. 3. Hebron was about 24 miles south of Jerusalem, and Jerimoth 16. Lachis was a very famous city, (4 K. xiv. and xviii. 14.) about nine miles south of Eleutheropolis, which was itself situated about 20,000 paces towards the south of Jerusalem; (Itin. Anton.) though some assert it was 22 or 32 miles distant. Eusebius and S. Jerom generally fix the situation of places by this city. Eglon was twelve miles to the eastward of it. The Sept. read Odollam, (C.) which was either the same city, (Euseb.) or one probably near it. C. xii. 12. 5. and v. 35. 9.

VER. 5. Amorrites is a general term, as well as Chanaanites, to denote the people of the country. The other kings did not come to the assistance (C.) of these five, v. 40. H.—Yet the people of Gabaon might suspect the worst, or exaggerate, in order to make Josue come with greater expedition. He was then at Galgal, above twenty miles distant, and set off the next night, coming unexpectedly upon the confederate kings early in the morning, v. 9.

VER. 10. Troubled them. Sept. "filled them with consternation;" so that they knew not what to do. Ex. xxiii. 17.—Bethoron. There were two cities of this name in the tribe of Ephraim, rebuilt by Sara. 1 Par. vii. 24. The lower was twelve miles from Jerusalem. Maceda was eight from Eleutheropolis to the east, as Azecca was about the same distance west of Jerusalem, and not far from Socco. 1 K. xvii. 1. Thus Josue proceeded westward to Gabaon and Bethoron, where he defeated the confederates, and pursued them, as they fled to their respective cities in the south, on the road between Jerusalem and the country of the Philistines, as far as Maceda. H.

VER. 11. Azecca, for the space of twelve miles.—Hailstones, of an uncommon size, accompanied with thunder and lightning. Hab. iii. 11. Joseph. v. 1. C. Eccli. xvi. 6.—Of the same nature was the seventh plague of Egypt. Ex. ix. 23 M.—Real stones may very probably have been hurled against the enemy, by means of some hurricane or volcano, which God directed against the Chanaanites. Several instances of showers of stones are recorded in history. C. Dissert.—Even quantities of stone and earth, sufficient to form new islands, have been thus thrown up. Montfaucon.—The Isle of Santorin, in the Archipelago, appeared in 1707.

VER. 12. Them. This may be considered as a canticle of victory, containing a fervent prayer, which was presently followed with the desired effect.—Aialon.

hands from helping thy servants: come up quickly, and save us, and bring us succour: for all the kings of the Amorrites, who dwell in the mountains, are gathered together against us.

7 And Josue went up from Galgal, and all the army of the warriors with him, most valiant men.

8 But the Lord said to Josue: Fear them not: for I have delivered them into thy hands: none of them shall be able to stand against thee.

9 So Josue going up from Galgal all the night, came upon them suddenly.

10 And the Lord troubled them, at the sight of Israel: and he slew them with a great slaughter, in Gabaon, and pursued them by the way of the ascent to Bethoron, and cut them off all the way to Azeca and Maceda.

11 And when they were fleeing from the children of Israel, and were in the descent of Bethoron, the Lord cast down upon them great stones from heaven, as far as Azeca: and many more were killed with the hailstones, than were slain by the swords of the children of Israel.

12 Then Josue spoke to the Lord, in the day that he delivered the Amorrite in the sight of the children of Israel, and he said before them: Move not, O sun, toward Gabaon, nor thou, O moon, toward the valley of Aialon.

13 And the sun and the moon stood still, till the people revenged themselves of their enemies. Is not this written in the book of the just? So the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down the space of one day.

* Eccli. xlv. 5. Isai. xxviii. 21.

Heb. "Sun, in Gabaon, be silent; (move not) and thou, moon, in the valley of Aialon," or "of the wood," which was probably not far from Gabaon. Josue had pursued the enemy at mid-day, to the west of that city, when turning round, he addressed this wonderful command to the sun. It is supposed that the moon appeared at the same time. But the meaning may only be, that the sun and the course of the stars should be interrupted for a time. C.—The sun and the moon stood still in their habitation. Heb. iii. 11. M.—Many have called in question this miracle, with Maimonides, or have devised various means to explain it away, by having recourse to a parhelion or reflection of the sun by a cloud, or to a light which was reverberated by the mountains, after the sun was set, &c. Prodan iv. 6. Spinosa, Grotius, Le Clerc.—But if these authors believe the Scriptures, they may spare themselves the trouble of devising such improbable explanations, as this fact is constantly represented as a most striking miracle. If S. Paul (Heb. xi. 30.) make no mention of it, he did not engage to specify every miracle that had occurred. He does not so much as mention Josue, nor the passage of the Jordan, &c. so that it is a matter of surprise that Grotius should adduce this negative argument, to disprove the reality of the miracle. C.—The pretended impossibility of it, or the inconvenience arising to the fatigued soldiers from the long continuance of the day, will make but small impression upon those who consider, that God was the chief agent; and that he who made all out of nothing, might easily stop the whole machinery of the world for a time, and afterwards put it in motion again, without causing any derangement in the different parts. C.—It is not material whether the sun turn round the earth, or the contrary. H.—The Hebrews generally supposed that the earth was immovable; and on this idea Josue addresses the sun. Philosophers have devised various intricate systems; but the Scripture is expressed in words suitable to the conceptions of the people. The exterior effect would be the same, whether the sun or the earth stood still. Pagan authors have not mentioned this miracle, because none of the works of that age have come down to us. We find, however, that they acknowledged a power in magic capable of effecting such a change.

Lucan. Phars. vi. See Ody. xii. 382. and xxiii. 242.

This miracle would not render Josue superior to Moses, as some have argued. For all miracles are equally impossible to man, and equally easy to God: the greatness of a miracle is not a proof of greater sanctity. C.—Aialon lay to the south-west of Gabaon. H.—Josue ordered the moon to stop, as a necessary consequence of the sun's standing still. God condescended to grant his request. W.

VER. 13. The book of the just. In Hebrew Sepher hayashar; an ancient book long since lost. Ch.—It was probably of the same nature with that of the wars of the Lord, (Num. xxi. 4.) containing an account of the most memorable occurrences which concerned the people of Israel, the just, or Ischuron. Deut. xxxiii. 6. Josephus, (v. 2.) says, such "records were kept in the archives of the temple." They were 14 There was not before, nor after, so long a day, the Lord obeying the voice of a man, and fighting for Israel.

15 And Josue returned, with all Israel, into the camp of Galgal.

16 For the five kings were fled, and had hid themselves in a cave of the city of Maceda.

17 And it was told Josue, that the five kings were found hid in a cave of the city of Maceda.

18 And he commanded them that were with him, saying: Roll great stones to the mouth of the cave, and set careful men to keep them shut up:

19 And stay you not, but pursue after the enemies, and kill all the hindermost of them as they flee, and do not suffer them whom the Lord God hath delivered into your hands, to shelter themselves in their cities.

20 So the enemies being slain with a great slaughter, and almost utterly consumed, they that were able to escape from Israel, entered into fenced cities.

21 And all the army returned to Josue, in Maceda, where the camp then was, in good health, and without the loss of any one: and no man durst move his tongue against the children of Israel.

22 And Josue gave orders, saying: Open the mouth of the cave, and bring forth to me the five kings that lie hid therein.

23 And the ministers did as they were commanded: and they brought out to him the five kings out of the cave: the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jerimoth, the king of Lachis, the king of Eglon.

24 And when they were brought out to him, he called all the men of Israel, and said to the chiefs of the army that were with him: Go, and set your feet on the necks of these kings. And when they had gone, and put their feet upon the necks of them lying under them,

25 He said again to them: Fear not, neither be ye dismayed, take courage, and be strong: for so will the Lord do to all your enemies, against whom you fight.

26 And Josue struck, and slew them, and hanged them upon five gibbets; and they hung until the evening.

27 And when the sun was down, he commanded the soldiers to take them down from the gibbets. And after they were taken down, they cast them into the cave, where they had lain hid, and put great stones at the mouth thereof, which remain until this day.

28 The same day Josue took Maceda, and destroyed it with the edge of the sword, and killed the king and all the inhabitants thereof: he left not in it the least remains. And he did to the king of Maceda, as he had done to the king of Jericho.

29 And he passed from Maceda with all Israel to Lebna, and fought against it:

30 And the Lord delivered it with the king thereof into the hands of Israel: and they destroyed the city with the edge of the sword, and all the inhabitants thereof. They left not in it any remains. And they did to the king of Lebna, as they had done to the king of Jericho.

31 From Lebna he passed unto Lachis, with all Israel: and investing it with his army, besieged it.

32 And the Lord delivered Lachis into the hands of Israel, and he took it the following day, and put it to the sword, and every soul that was in it, as he had done to Lebna.

33 At that time Horem, king of Gazer, came up to succour Lachis: and Josue slew him with all his people, so as to leave none alive.

drawn up by people of character. The quotations inserted are in a poetical style, as the book might contain various canticles, though the rest was written in prose. See 2 K. i. 18. It might appear unnecessary for Josue to appeal to this work, as the fact in question was known to all. C.—But too great precaution could not be taken to prevent the danger of people calling in question the reality of the miracle. If the book of the just was a more detailed history of facts, out of which this work of Josue has been compiled, as Theodoret supposes, the author might very well remit the more inquisitive reader to that authentic source. H.—Midst. It was then almost noon. C.—Josue was nevertheless afraid lest the day should not allow them time to destroy their fleeing enemies completely. H.—If the evening had been at hand, he would have said, return sun towards Gabaon, as it would have been on the west of his army. The battle had begun early in the morning, and the pursuit had lasted perhaps four or five hours. C.—Day. Heb. "about a whole day." Many think that a day here comprises 24 hours; and as the sun had been above the horizon six hours, and continued other six, it must have been visible for the space of 36 hours, as the Jews believe, and as it is specified in S. Justin. Dial. The author of Eccli. xlv. 5, says, Was not the sun stopped in his anger, and one day made as two? that is, 24 hours long, allowing 12 unequal ones to form a day, according to the reckoning of those times. Others suppose that the day of Josue might consist of 18 (C.) or of 48 hours. But how would the soldiers be able to support such a fatigue? They had been marching all the preceding night from Galgal. H.—If they had stopped to take refreshment, their enemies would have escaped. Hence some of the Fathers imagine, that God enabled his people to pursue them without taking any food. S. Jer. c. Jov. ii. They might, however, take some along with them, as it was then customary; and eat as they pursued, whenever they could find an opportunity. Josue had given no prohibition; and Jonathan observed that his father, Saul, had troubled Israel, by following a different plan. 1 K. xiv. 24. C.

VER. 14. Long. This word is not found in Heb. "and there was no day like that, before it or after it, that the Lord hearkened unto," &c. But God had often wrought miracles before, at the prayer of his servants. The difference between this day and all others, must be therefore in the length, or in the stopping of the heavenly bodies. H.—The long day which the prayer of Ezechias procured, (4 K. xx. and Isai. xxxviii.) consisted of 82 hours; or, supposing that the retrograde motion of the sun was instantaneous on the dial, it might only be 22 hours in length. C.—But if the day of Ezechias had been even longer, the words of this text may be verified, that neither in times past, nor while the author lived, had any such day been known. See Amama, p. 383. H.—Obeying. God is ready to grant the requests of his servants. Isai. lviii. 2. "We remark something still stronger, in the power which he has given to priests, to consecrate the body and blood of Jesus Christ in the sacrament of the eucharist." C.

VER. 15. Galgal. Masius supposes, that here the quotation from the book of the just terminates. The Roman and Alex. Sept. place this verse at the end of the chapter. C.—Grabe has it in both places with a star, to shew that it is taken from Theodotion. H.—In effect, Josue did not return to his camp till he had completed the business of the day, by destroying the five kings. After which, he proceeded to conquer that part of the country. He might have designed to return, (C.) and even have begun his march, (D.) when he was diverted from proceeding, by the news that the kings had been discovered. So we often say, that a person does what he is on the point of doing. See Gen. xxxvii. 21. Num. xxxiv. 25.

VER. 17. City, or territory. C.—The kings had sought their own safety in flight, leaving their people to make their escape as well as they could. But their cowardly behaviour only brought upon them a more dishonourable death. Josue and some of the forces stopped in the environs of Maceda, while the rest pursued after the fugitives, and slew all that had not strength to enter the fenced cities. H.—Then all the army assembled round their leader, took Maceda, and completed the victory of that most memorable day, by the ignominious death of the five kings. C.—God permitted some to escape, lest the land should be overrun with wild beasts; (Ex. xxiii. 29.) and to instruct us that his children must suffer tribulation, to prevent the growth of vice. W.

VER. 21. No man, (nullus.) Some supply canis, "dog," alluding to the proverbial expression. Ex. xi. 7. Masius, &c.—Sept. "not one of the Israelites moved his tongue." C.—All was profound silence, in expectation of what would be determined respecting the unfortunate kings. H.

VER. 24. Feet, as Moses had foretold. Deut. xxxiii. 29. The conduct of Josue would appear cruel, if we did not reflect that he was only the executioner of the divine justice, which was pleased thus to punish these proud and impious princes, that others might not imitate their example.

VER. 27. Down. Deut. xxi. The victorious army had returned some time before the evening, and had time to take the city of Maceda; though some, without reason, believe that this took place the day following.

VER. 28. Remains of inhabitants. C.—The king was gibbeted and stoned. H.

VER. 30. Lebna, not far from Eleutheropolis. From before this city Sennacherib dispatched his menacing orders to Ezechias, 4 K. xix. 8. C.

VER. 32. Lachis was still farther south. Josue took it the second day of the siege.

VER. 33. Gazer, near Azotus, in the country of the Philistines. It is not said (273)

34 And he passed from Lachis to Eglon, and surrounded it,

35 And took it the same day: and put to the sword all the souls that were in it, according to all that he had done to Lachis.

36 He went up also with all Israel from Eglon to Hebron, and fought against it:

37 Took it, and destroyed it with the edge of the sword: the king also thereof, and all the towns of that country, and all the souls that dwelt in it: he left not therein any remains: as he had done to Eglon, so did he also to Hebron, putting to the sword all that he found in it.

38 Returning from thence to Dabir,

39 He took it, and destroyed it: the king also thereof, and all the towns round about, he destroyed with the edge of the sword: he left not in it any remains: as he had done to Hebron and Lebna, and to their kings, so did he to Dabir, and to the king thereof.

40 So Josue conquered all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the plain, and of Asedoth, with their kings: he left not any remains therein, but slew all that breathed, as the Lord, the God of Israel, had commanded him.

41 From Cades-barne even to Gaza. All the land of Gosen even to Gabaon, 42 And all their kings, and their lands he took and wasted at one onset: for the Lord the God of Israel fought for him.

43 And he returned with all Israel to the place of the camp in Galgal.

CHAP. XI.

The kings of the north are overthrown: the whole country is taken.

AND when Jabin king of Asor had heard these things, he sent to Jobab, king of Madon, and to the king of Semeron, and to the king of Achsaph:

2 And to the kings of the north, that dwelt in the mountains and in the plains over-against the south side of Ceneroth, and in the levels and the countries of Dor by the sea side:

3 To the Chanaanite also, on the east and on the west, and the Amorrite, and the Hethite, and the Pherezite, and the Jebusite, in the mountains: to the Hevite also who dwelt at the foot of Hermon, in the land of Maspha.

4 And they all came out with their troops, a people exceeding numerous as the sand that is on the sea-shore, their horses also and chariots, a very great multitude.

5 And all these kings assembled together at the waters of Merom, to fight against Israel.

6 And the Lord said to Josue: Fear them not: for to-morrow at this same hour I will deliver all these to be slain in the sight of Israel: thou shalt hamstring their horses, and thou shalt burn their chariots with fire.

7 And Josue came, and all the army with him, against them, to the waters of Merom, on a sudden, and fell upon them,

8 And the Lord delivered them into the hands of Israel. And they defeated them, and chased them as far as the great Sidon, and the waters of Maserephoth, and the field of Masphe, which is on the east side thereof. He slew them all, so as to leave no remains of them:

9 And he did as the Lord had commanded him, he hamstrunged their horses, and burnt their chariots.

10 And presently turning back, he took Asor, and slew the king thereof with the sword. Now Asor, of old, was the head of all these kingdoms.

11 And he cut off all the souls that abode there: he left not in it any remains, but utterly destroyed all, and burned the city itself with fire.

12 And he took and put to the sword and destroyed all the cities round about, and their kings, *as Moses, the servant of God, had commanded him:

that Josue took this city. It was given long after to Solomon by the king of Egypt, 3 K. ix. 15. Josue xvi. 10. C.

VER. 37. The king, viz. the new king, who succeeded him that was slain, v. 26. Ch.—Caleb afterwards took Hebron, which, it seems, the Chanaanites had seized again and fortified, while Josue was conquering other parts of the country. He could not leave garrisons in all the cities which he took, and hence he set many of them on fire. After the strength of the country was broken, he knew that the Israelites might easily subdue the few isolated cities which he was forced to leave behind. But they proved so negligent, that many places were left in the possession of the Chanaanites, which proved a stumbling block to God's people.

VER. 38. Dabir, which was formerly called Cariath sepher, "the city of the book," (C. xv. 15,) or of Senna, (ib. 45,) near Hebron. It was taken again by Othniel and Caleb.

VER. 40. Hills of Judea.—South of the promised land.—Plain. Heb. Sephela, a flat country near Eleutheropolis. S. Jer. in Abd. i. 19. 1 Mac. xii. 38.—Asedoth, "of the springs."—Remains. God ordered these people to be utterly destroyed, in punishment of their manifold abominations; and that they might not draw the Israelites into the like sins. Ch.

VER. 41. Gaza. These cities were on the southern limits of the land of Chanaan, and of the Philistines.—Gosen, or Gessen, where the Hebrews had formerly dwelt. It was then very fertile. C. xiii. 3. The territory of Juda extended as far as the Nile; (C.) or this country may have resembled the country of Gessen. Gen. xlv. M.—It seems indeed rather wonderful, that if this was a part of the promised land, God should order his people to leave it, as it were, to the Egyptians; and after they had occupied another part of the country, should seize it again. But he might have secret reasons for this order. H.

CHAP. XI. VER. 1. Jabin, "the intelligent," was perhaps the common name of the kings of Asor, the most powerful city in the northern parts of the country, (v. 10. C.) not far from the Cæsarea, (M.) which was built by Philip, where Lais stood before. H.—Josue burnt Asor to the ground; but it was rebuilt by the Chanaanites, and a powerful king reigned here, and subjugated the Israelites, about 180 years after the death of Josue. Judg. iv. 1. C.—Being the most interested in this warfare, Jabin assembled all the petty kings of the country as far as Dor, to resist the common enemy. H.—He was the generalissimo, (Grot.) and went to stop the progress of Josue, who had conquered the southern parts, and was making ready to march against the north.

VER. 2. Ceneroth, or having the lake of Genesareth on the south. The city of Ceneroth, or of Tiberias, was situated on the southern borders of the lake. S. Jerom.—Sidon. Dor lay on the Mediterranean, the last of the cities of Phœnicia. All below was in a manner subdued. The Philistines did not enter into this league, nor were they invited, as they bore a certain antipathy to the people of Chanaan.

VER. 3. Chanaanite. Some lived near the Jordan, others upon the Mediterranean.—Maspha. Probably where Laban and Jacob had met. Gen. xxxi. 48. Hermon lay to the east of Libanus. C.—There was another Hermon near the torrent Cisson. M.

VER. 4. Shore. The Scripture sometimes uses an hyperbole, as well as the other figures of speech. S. Aug. C. D. xvi. 21. Josephus says they had 300,000 foot, 10,000 horse, and 20,000 chariots. These were frequently armed with scythes. The ancient heroes often fought on chariots of a different kind. C.

VER. 5. Merom, or the lake of Semechon, according to most interpreters, though it is more probable, that the confederates would advance to meet Josue near the lake of Cisson, to the important pass 12 miles north of Samaria, in the canton of Meron, or Merone. Judg. iv. 10. and v. 18. This place was famous for the victory of Barac, and for the defeat of king Josias.

VER. 6. Hamstring their horses, &c. God so ordained, that his people might not trust in chariots and horses, but in him. Ch.—He mentions the very time, when the victory will be obtained, to inspire the Israelites with greater confidence. Josue had proceeded from Galgal to Meron, about 90 miles; or if he had to go to the Semonite lake, 120 miles. Josephus says he had marched five days.

VER. 8. Thereof. Josue divided his forces, and sent some to pursue the fugitives to Sidon and Sarepta, and others he dispatched to the east side of the Jordan.—Sidon was famous for its commerce, and for its glass works. Plin. v. 19.

VER. 10. King. Jabin had thrown himself into the city, or perhaps a new king had been appointed, according to the custom of Persia, &c. when the former went to battle. Hence we find so many kings of Israel were chosen very young, and while their fathers were living.

VER. 12. Him. Deut. vii. 22. All the Chanaanites in arms, are ordered to be slain. C.—Josue took the greatest part of the strong cities, and indeed all which he attacked. M.

13 Except the cities that were on hills and high places, the rest Israel burnt: only Asor, that was very strong, he consumed with fire.

14 And the children of Israel divided among themselves all the spoil of these cities, and the cattle, killing all the men.

15 *As the Lord had commanded Moses, his servant, so did Moses command Josue, and he accomplished all: he left not one thing undone, of all the commandments which the Lord had commanded Moses.

16 So Josue took all the country of the hills, and of the south, and the land of Gosen, and the plains, and the west country, and the mountain of Israel, and the plains thereof:

17 And part of the mountain that goeth up to Seir, as far as Baalgad, by the plain of Libanus, under Mount Hermon: all their kings he took, smote, and slew.

18 Josue made war a long time against these kings.

19 There was not a city that delivered itself to the children of Israel, except the Hevite, who dwelt in Gabaon: for he took all by fight.

20 For it was the sentence of the Lord, that their hearts should be hardened, and they should fight against Israel, and fall, and should not deserve any clemency, and should be destroyed, as the Lord had commanded Moses.

21 At that time Josue came, and cut off the Enacims from the mountains, from Hebron, and Dabir, and Anab, and from all the mountain of Juda and Israel, and destroyed their cities;

22 He left not any of the stock of the Enacims, in the land of the children of Israel: except the cities of Gaza, and Geth, and Azotus, in which alone they were left.

23 So Josue took all the land, as the Lord spoke to

* Exod. xxxiv. 11. Deut. vii. 1.

VER. 13. Fire. Several towns built on eminences, were reserved to keep the country in subjection. But it was thought proper to destroy Asor. Heb. may be, "He burnt not the towns which remained standing, with their fortifications," &c. or such as had opened their gates to the Israelites. Chal. Sept. &c.

VER. 14. Spoil. excepting what was found on the idols, which was burnt. Deut. vii. 25. C.

VER. 15. Moses. It is not to be doubted but that the lawgiver would communicate many instructions, by word of mouth, to his successor. He would also tell him, in general, to observe whatever laws had been given to regulate the conduct of the leader, (C.) as they were given not only to Moses, but to all who should afterwards occupy his post. H.

VER. 16. So. Here follows a recapitulation of the victories of Josue.—Israel, or of Ephraim, which was the chief tribe of the kingdom of Israel: after the commencement of which, this seems to have been inserted; (C.) or having designated the southern parts by the name of Juda, (v. 21,) the more northern countries are called the mountain of Israel, which refers particularly to Samaria, or Bethel, which might receive the appellation of Israel, among his descendants, from the vision of the ladder, with which that patriarch was favoured. H.

VER. 17. And part. Heb. "from Mount Halak, (H. or the bald mountain, destitute of wood) going up to Seir, (which is very shady; that is, from the southern parts of Chanaan, by Seir) as far as Baalgad," on the east side of the Jordan, perhaps unto Coelosyria. C.

VER. 18. A long time. Seven years, as appears from chap. xiv. 10. (Ch.) where Caleb informs us that he was 85 years old. He was 40 when he went to explore the country, and 38 years were spent in the wilderness. God was pleased to allow the Chanaanites time to repent, and he would not render the country desolate all at once, lest wild beasts should overrun it. Ex. xxiii. 19. Wisd. xii. 10. C.

VER. 20. Hardened. This hardening of their hearts, was their having no thought of yielding or submitting: which was a sentence or judgment of God upon them, in punishment of their enormous crimes. Ch.—God might indeed by his all-powerful grace have changed their hearts, but their crimes caused him to withhold that grace; and thus they were suffered to shut their eyes to their true interest. C.—They alone therefore were the cause of their own obduracy, which God only did not prevent. Ex. vii. W.

VER. 21. Time. Among his other conquests, after the victory of Gabaon, Josue defeated the Enacim at Hebron, &c. Many of them fled into the country of the Philistines, and afterwards seized an opportunity of re-establishing them-

Moses, and delivered it in possession to the children of Israel, according to their divisions and tribes.* And the land rested from wars.

CHAP. XII.

A list of the kings slain by Moses and Josue.

THESE are the kings whom the children of Israel slew, and possessed their land, beyond the Jordan, towards the rising of the sun, from the torrent Arnon unto Mount Hermon, and all the east country that looketh towards the wilderness.

2 Schon, king of the Amorrites, who dwelt in Hesebon, and had dominion from Aroer, which is seated upon the bank of the torrent Arnon, and of the middle part in the valley, and of half Galaad, as far as the torrent Jaboc, which is the border of the children of Ammon.

3 And from the wilderness to the sea of Ceneroth, towards the east, and to the sea of the wilderness, which is the most salt sea, on the east side, by the way that leadeth to Bethsimoth: and on the south side, that lieth under Asedoth, Phasga.

4 The border of Og, the king of Basan, of the remnant of the Raphaims, who dwelt in Astaroth, and in Edrai, and had dominion in Mount Hermon, and in Salecha, and in all Basan, unto the borders

5 Of Gessuri, and Machati, and of half Galaad: the borders of Schon, the king of Hesebon.

6 Moses, the servant of the Lord, and the children of Israel slew them, and Moses delivered their land in possession to the Rubenites, and Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasses.

7 These are the kings of the land, whom Josue and the children of Israel slew, beyond the Jordan, on the west side, from Baalgad, in the field of Libanus, unto the mount, part of which goeth up into Seir: and Josue selves, so that Caleb had to drive them out afresh. C. xv. 14.—Cities, or inhabitants. We have seen that he did not demolish all the cities, which were built on a commanding situation, v. 13.—Enacim. Goliath is supposed to have been of this family, being six cubits and a span high, 1 K. xvii. 4. C.—The Phœnicians probably took their name from Enak, bene anak, "sons of Enak;" whence Phoenix might easily be formed. Bochart.—Carthage was founded by them, and styled Chadre-Anak, "the dwelling of Anak," (Plautus) as they chose to pass for descendants of that giant, though they were not in reality. Anak means "a chain;" and some have asserted that he wore one, as the kings of the Madianites did when they were vanquished by Gedeon, and the Torquati at Rome, as a mark of honour. But this is uncertain. C.

VER. 22. Gaza, the most southern city of the Philistines, was afterwards taken by the tribe of Juda, but lost again in a short time. It was particularly addicted to the worship of Jupiter, Marnas, or "the Lord."—Geth was probably taken by David, who found a refuge with its king, 1 K. xxi. After the reign of Solomon, it returned to its former masters.—Azotus, or as the Heb. writes, Asdod, on the Mediterranean, was noted for the temple of Dagon, (1 K. v. 1,) which Jonathan destroyed. Joseph. xxii. 8. C.—Wars, of a general nature. The different tribes had only to take some cities. C. xv. 1. W.

CHAP. XII. VER. 1. Wilderness. Heb. "all the plain country (Araba) on the east."

VER. 2. Galaad. Schon occupied from the middle of the torrent Arnon, as far as half of the mountains of Galaad, and the torrent Jaboc. C.—Og possessed the other half of the mountains northward, while the Ammonites had the eastern parts. H.

VER. 3. Bethsimoth is ten miles from Jericho, (Eus.) near the Dead Sea, in the plains of Moab. C.—Phasga. Asedoth lay at the foot of this mountain, being well supplied with water. Subjacet Acedoth usque Phasga, the southern limits of Schon's dominions had "abundance of springs, as far as Phasga." H.

VER. 4. Og. See Num. xxi. 33. Deut. iii. 11.

VER. 7. Seir. The same expression occurs, C. xi. 17. Heb. "from Baalgad, in the vale of Libanus, even unto Mount Halak, that goeth up to Seir." H.—Halak means, "bald or naked." It is not known what mountain it denotes, Josue, (C.) or the Israelites, (H.) conquered "all the country beyond the Jordan, on the north from Baalgad, at the foot of Libanus, and from Hermon, where these mountains meet, as far as the mountains of separation," which divide the country of Chanaan from that of Seir, on the south of Judea. C.—Baalgad was situated on the north western borders of this territory, not of the Jordan. H.

delivered it in possession to the tribes of Israel, to every one their divisions, 8 As well in the mountains as in the plains, and the champaign countries. In Asedoth, and in the wilderness, and in the south, was the Hethite and the Amorhite, the Chanaanite and the Pherezite, the Hevite and the Jebusite.

9 The king of Jericho, one; the king of Hai, which is on the side of Bethel, one;

10 The king of Jerusalem, one; the king of Hebron, one;

11 The king of Jerimoth, one; the king of Lachis, one;

12 The king of Eglon, one; the king of Gazer, one;

13 The king of Dabir, one; the king of Gader, one;

14 The king of Herma, one; the king of Hered, one;

15 The king of Lebna, one; the king of Odullam, one;

16 The king of Maceda, one; the king of Bethel, one;

17 The king of Taphua, one; the king of Opher, one;

18 The king of Aphec, one; the king of Saron, one;

19 The king of Madon, one; the king of Asor, one;

20 The king of Semeron, one; the king of Achsaph, one;

21 The king of Thenac, one; the king of Mageddo, one;

22 The king of Cades, one; the king of Jachanan, of Carmel, one;

23 The king of Dor, and of the province of Dor, one; the king of the nations of Galgal, one;

24 The king of Thersa, one: all the kings, thirty and one.

God commandeth Josue to divide the land: the possessions of Ruben, Gad, and half the tribe of Manasses, beyond the Jordan.

JOSUE was old, and far advanced in years, and the Lord said to him: Thou art grown old, and ad-

VER. 8. Asedoth, or "in the springs," or valleys, v. 3.

VER. 14. Herma, "a curse," where the Israelites defeated king Arad. Num. xiv. 45. and xxi. 3.

VER. 15. Odullam, ten miles east of Eleutheropolis, and famous for the retreat of David. C.

VER. 16. Bethel. Josue perhaps slew the king, but did not take the city. Judg. i. 22. M.

VER. 18. Aphec. A place of this name was in the tribe of Aser, another in that of Juda.—Saron. Heb. "Lasharon;" probably Sarona, (Acts ix. 35,) or a canton near Joppe. Euseb.

VER. 19. Madon, or Maron. Sept. C. xi. 1. This place is joined with Semeron, in Heb. (v. 20,) improperly. Perhaps it may be the Meros, (Judg. v. 23,) or Maronia, a city of Phoenicia.

VER. 21. Thenac, a city of the Levites, but seized afterwards by the Chanaanites. Judg. i. 27. It was near the town of Legion, built by the Romans.—Mageddo, where Josias was overcome, 2 Par. xxxv. 22. C.

VER. 22. Jachanan was near Mount Carmel. Sometimes Josue specifies both the city and the canton, where it was situated; at other times he only mentions the latter, as in the following verse.

VER. 23. Galgal, not where the Israelites had encamped, but that part which was afterwards called the Galilee of the Gentiles, in some corner of which the king in question had fixed his residence. For we cannot suppose that he ruled over all that country, extending from Tyre to beyond the Jordan. His people might probably be a mixed multitude of various nations, as Strabo (xvi.) observes, that many parts of Palestine were peopled by men of this description.

VER. 24. Thersa. Here the kings of Israel kept their court, till Amri built Samaria, (C.) about nine miles more to the north. Brocard.—Ona. The two kings slain by Moses (W.) are not included. M.

CHAP. XIII. VER. 1. Age. Josue was now 100 years old. He lived ten more, (C.) having governed the people in all 17. H.—During the first seven years, he had performed all that could be expected from an able general, and he probably designed to conquer the whole country before he divided it. But God, who chose to leave some of the ancient inhabitants in the country, to try the fidelity of his people, &c. ordered him to proceed to the distribution, that the different tribes might take care to exterminate those idolaters, who might be found in their territory.—Lot. Heb. "to be possessed." Only the country east of the Jordan was yet divided.

VER. 2. Galilee. As Josue had been making such conquests in that part lately, some would translate Geliioth, "the confines" of the Philistines, in which sense it seems to be taken C. xviii. 18. and xxii. 10. C—Bonfrere suspects that S.

vanced in age, and there is a very large country left, which is not yet divided by lot,

2 To wit, all Galilee, Philistia, and all Gessuri.

3 From the troubled river, that watereth Egypt, unto the borders of Accaron northward: the land of Chanaan, which is divided among the lords of the Philistines, the Gazites, the Azotians, the Ascalonites, the Gethites, and the Accaronites.

4 And on the south side are the Hevites, all the land of Chanaan, and Maara of the Sidonians, as far as Apheca, and the borders of the Amorrhite,

5 And his confines. The country also of Libanus toward the east, from Baalgad under Mount Hermon, to the entering into Emath.

6 Of all that dwell in the mountains, from Libanus to the waters of Maserephoth, and all the Sidonians. I am he that will cut them off from before the face of the children of Israel. So let their land come in as a part of the inheritance of Israel, as I have commanded thee.

7 And now divide the land in possession to the nine tribes, and to the half tribe of Manasses,

8 With whom Ruben and Gad have possessed the land, which Moses, the servant of the Lord, delivered to them beyond the river Jordan, on the east side.

9 From Aroer, which is upon the bank of the torrent Arnon, and in the midst of the valley, and all the plains of Medaba, as far as Dibon:

10 And all the cities of Schon, king of the Amorhites, who reigned in Hesebon, unto the borders of the children of Ammon.

11 And Galaad, and the borders of Gessuri and Machati, and all Mount Hermon, and all Basan, as far as Salecha,

12 All the kingdom of Og, in Basan, who reigned

Jerom wrote Galila.—Gessuri, either near Mount Hermon, (M.) or bordering upon Arabia. 1 K. xv. and xvii. 10.

VER. 3. Egypt. Heb. "from the Shicor, (or Sichor) which is on the face, (or over-against) Egypt." Jeremias (ii. 18,) informs us that this river was in Egypt which is not true of the torrent of Rhinocorure; which the Sept. and many commentators, understand in this place to be the boundary fixed for the promised land. Strabo, &c. attribute that torrent to Phoenicia; which they extend as far as Pelusium. S. Jerom (in Amos vi.) seems dubious whether the branch of the Nile passes by that city, or the aforesaid torrent be meant. David collected all his forces from the Sichor, or the torrent of Egypt, to the entrance of Emath, Par. xiii. 5. Epiphanes constituted Lysanias governor of all the countries between the Euphrates and the river of Egypt, (2 Mac. iii. 32,) and he undoubtedly had extended his conquests as far as the Nile. Though the country beyond Gaza be now mostly barren, and therefore little inhabited or noticed, yet the Israelites were entitled to assert their right to it, as they seem to have done by taking possession of Gosen. C. x. 41. Some parts were formerly well peopled, 1 K. xxvii. 8. It is not unusual for the Nile, and other great rivers, to be styled torrents. The Heb. nel, is often applied to rivers. Eccl. i. 7. The troubled state in which the waters of the Nile generally appear, is very remarkable, as their taste is most excellent. The natives have discovered a method of rendering them clear, by the mixture of almond powder. The names of this river bear some relation to the Heb. term which is here used. It was formerly called Siris; and the star, which rose when it overflowed, received the name of Sirius. The Ethiopians style it Schichri. Another name was Melas, or Egyptus, denoting "blackness." The people of the country idolized this river, because it supplied the want of rain. Tibul. i. 8. C.—Accaron, the most northern city of the Philistian principalities, (H.) attributed to Juda or Dan, though neither held it for any length of time. Beelzebub was chiefly adored here, 4 K. i. 2.—Lords, who seem to have been independent. They are styled Sornim, as the next in dignity to the king of Persia was a Surena. Marcellin. 24. The Philistines took this country from the Chanaanites, or Evians, (C.) who are a different people from the Hevites. Bochart.

VER. 4. Chanaan. From the south to Sidon was yet undivided, and thence eastward (H.) to Apheca of Syria, where was the capital of the kings of that country, and a famous temple of Venus, 3 K. xx. 26. Sozom. i. 58.—Amorrhite, or perhaps Aramean, (C.) though we may understand that all the country of the Amorrhite on the south, as well as the northern parts of Chanaan, were to be divided, (H.) as far as Emesa.—Will, &c. provided the Israelites observe their part of the covenant. 13 And the children of Israel would not destroy Gessuri and Machati: and they have dwelt in the midst of Israel, until this present day.

14 *But to the tribe of Levi he gave no possession: but the sacrifices and victims of the Lord God of Israel, are his inheritance, as he spoke to him.

15 And Moses gave a possession to the children of Ruben, according to their kindreds.

16 And their border was from Aroer, which is on the bank of the torrent Arnon, and in the midst of the valley of the same torrent: all the plain that leadeth to Medaba,

17 And Hesebon, and all their villages, which are in the plains. Dibon also, and Bamothbaal, and the town of Baalmaon,

18 And Jassa, and Cedimoth, and Mephaath,

19 And Cariathaim, and Sabama, and Sarathasar in the mountain of the valley.

21 And all the cities of the plain, and all the kingdoms of Sehon, king of the Amorrites, that reigned in Hesebon, *whom Moses slew, with the princes of Madian: Hevi, and Recem, and Sur, and Hur, and Rebe, dukes of Sehon, inhabitants of the land.

22 Balaam also, the son of Beor, the soothsayer, the children of Israel slew with the sword, among the rest that were slain.

23 And the river Jordan was the border of the children of Ruben. This is the possession of the Rubenites, by their kindreds, of cities and villages.

24 And Moses gave to the tribe of Gad, and to his children, by their kindreds, a possession, of which this is the division.

Ch.—After the death of their sovereign, they looked upon themselves as independent. They had reigned before as the viceroys of Sehon, being natives of the country, and not come from some other part, like the Amorrites. C.

VER. 22. Slain. Sept. "they slew Balaam . . with the sword in the moment." Num. xxii. 5 and xxxi. 8. H.

VER. 25. Rabba, "the great," being a title of Ar, the capital of the Moabites. The Israelites thought themselves justified in keeping what had been taken from the children of Ammon, by Sehon, (Judg. xi. 13. C.) and the Amorrites. W.

Jordan, as far as the uttermost part of the sea of Cene-reth, beyond the Jordan, on the east side.

28 This is the possession of the children of Gad, by their families, their cities, and villages.

29 He gave also to the half tribe of Manasses, and his children, possession according to their kindreds,

30 The beginning whereof is this: from Manaim, all Basan, and all the kingdoms of Og, king of Basan, and all the villages of Jair, which are in Basan, threescore towns:

31 And half Galaad, and Astaroth, and Edrai, cities of the kingdom of Og, in Basan: to the children of Machir, the son of Manasses, to one half of the children of Machir, according to their kindreds.

32 This possession Moses divided in the plains of Moab, beyond the Jordan, over-against Jericho, on the east side.

33 *But to the tribe of Levi he gave no possession: because the Lord, the God of Israel, himself is their possession, as he spoke to them.

CHAP. XIV.

Caleb's petition. Hebron is given to him, and to his seed.

THIS is what the children of Israel possessed in the land of Chanaan, which Eleazar the priest, and Josue, the son of Nun, and the princes of the families, by the tribes of Israel, gave to them:

2 Dividing all by lot, *as the Lord had commanded by the hand of Moses, to the nine tribes, and the half tribe.

3 For to two tribes and a half, Moses had given possession beyond the Jordan: besides the Levites, who received no land among their brethren:

4 But in their place succeeded the children of Joseph, divided into two tribes, of Manasses and Ephraim: neither did the Levites receive other portion of land, but cities to dwell in, and their suburbs to feed their beasts and flocks.

5 As the Lord had commanded Moses, so did the children of Israel, and they divided the land.

6 Then the children of Juda came to Josue, in Galgal; and Caleb, the son of Jephone, the Cenezite, spoke to him: *Thou knowest what the Lord spoke to Moses, the man of God, concerning me and thee in Cades-barne.

7 I was forty years old when Moses, the servant of CHAP. XIV. VER. 1. Princes, whose names are given. Num. xxxiv. 17. There were 12, including Josue and Eleazar. The tribes of Ruben and Gad sent none of their princes, as they were not concerned in this distribution.

VER. 2. Tribe. God regulated the lots, as he had authorized Jacob and Moses to foretell how the country should be divided. By this method, he precluded every pretence of discontent among the tribes. Each of them drew a ticket, on which a certain portion of land was described; or perhaps in one urn the names of the tribes, and in another the lands were specified, (C.) and the tickets were drawn by two persons of irreproachable character, probably by Eleazar and Josue. H. Num. xxvi. 54.—Only the tribes of Juda and of Joseph received their portions at Galgal. C. xviii.

VER. 4. Suburbs. A certain quantity of ground, which the Levites were not allowed to till or plant with vines. Grot. Num. xxxv. 4.—The tribe of Manasses, which was divided, fell heir to the portion which would have been allotted to Levi, who was also scattered among his brethren. H.—Thus Joseph obtained the birth-right of Ruben. C.—Twelve portions were made, as Jacob had adopted Ephraim and Manasses. Gen. xlviii. W.

VER. 5. Land: or they were making all necessary preparations for the work, when Caleb came to remind Josue of what had been promised to him. No doubt land-measurers would be sent through the country.

VER. 6. Jephone was the father of Caleb. Eeron and Cenez probably some of his ancestors, 1 Par. ii. 18. Num. xxxiii. 12. What Caleb here asserts, must have been delivered by word of mouth, in the hearing of the people. Deut. i. 36. Moses declared not that Caleb was to have the whole country but that he should enter into it, and possess the environs of Hebron. C.

the Lord, sent me ^a from Cades-barne, to view the land, and I brought him word again as to me seemed true.

8 But my brethren, that had gone up with me, discouraged the heart of the people: and I nevertheless followed the Lord my God.

9 And Moses swore in that day, saying: The land which thy foot hath trodden upon, shall be thy possession, and thy children's, for ever, because thou hast followed the Lord my God.

10 The Lord therefore hath granted me life, as he promised, until this present day. It is forty and five years since the Lord spoke this word to Moses, when Israel journeyed through the wilderness: this day I am eighty-five years old.

11 As strong as I was at that time when I was sent to view the land: ^b the strength of that time continueth in me until this day, as well to fight, as to march.

12 Give me therefore this mountain, which the Lord promised, in thy hearing also, wherein are the Enacims, and cities great and strong: if so be the Lord will be with me, and I shall be able to destroy them, as he promised me.

13 And Josue blessed him, and gave him Hebron in possession.

14 And from that time Hebron belonged to Caleb, the son of Jephone, the Cenezite, until this present day: because he followed the Lord, the God of Israel.

15 The name of Hebron before was called Cariath Arbe: Adam, the greatest among the Enacims, was laid there: ^c and the land rested from wars.

^a Deut. ii. 14.—^b Eccl. xvi. 11.—^c Supra xi. 28.

VER. 11. March. Heb. "to enter and to go out." Sept. add, "to war."

VER. 12. Me. He trusts not in his own strength, but in the assistance of God, which he modestly acknowledges is not due to him. C.—God's promises are indeed sure on his part; but being conditional, and the will of man being free, he adds perhaps. W.

VER. 13. Blessed him, wishing him all success.—Gave him. Some think that Josue himself attacked the giants of that country with all the forces, as it is mentioned by anticipation. C. x. 28. But there seems to be no need of this, as Caleb might attack them a second time with his own family and the assistance of the tribe of Juda, after they had seized those places again, while Josue was in the north. Hebron was granted to him without drawing lots. When he was besieging Cariath Sepher, he promised his daughter to the person who should first enter; and Othniel, his brother, or nephew, obtained her in marriage. C. xv. 17. Judg. i. 10. It seems, therefore, that this family carried on this war, as the Fabii did at Rome, without the interference of the commonwealth, though Grotius asserts the contrary. C.

VER. 14. Hebron belonged, &c. All the country thereabouts, depending on Hebron, was given to Caleb; but the city itself, with the suburbs, was one of those that were given to the priests to dwell in. Ch.—Caleb might also dwell, (C.) and be lord of the city, (Salien) though the profits (II.) or the town belonged to the priests. C. xxi. 11. W.

VER. 15. Cariath Arbe, "the city of Arbe," an ancient giant; or "of four," which the Jews explain of four great patriarchs, who were buried there.—Adam, &c. S. Jerom seems to favour the opinion that Adam was one of those, whose tomb ennobled Hebron, though many of the Fathers think he was buried on Mount Calvary. Others think that his body, or skull at least, was translated thither. But we cannot depend on any of these traditions. Most commentators explain the Heb. "The ancient name of Hebron was Cariath Arbe; (C.) he was a man great among the Enacim." H.—Adam is often put for a man in general, 2 K. vii. 19. Ose. xi. 4. C. Amamn.—Sept. "the city of Arbo. This was the metropolis of the Enacim." H.—Wars, for a time, particularly from such wars as engaged the attention of all Israel. The different tribes had to encounter and drive out the Chanaanites who might be left in their respective districts. C.

CHAP. XV VER. 1. Sin, or Sina, (v. 3.) bordering upon Idumea, where the city of Cades-barne was situated. Num. xiii. 22. It is now impossible to ascertain the precise situation of all the places mentioned in Scripture, as the land of Chanaan has been subject to so many changes. But this inconvenience attends the desert of Sin, southward, and to the uttermost part of the south coast.

2 Its beginning was from the top of the most salt sea, and from the bay thereof, that looketh to the south:

3 And it goeth out towards the ascent of the Scorpion, and passeth on to Sinai: and ascendeth into Cades-barne, and reacheth into Esron, going up to Addar, and compassing Carcaa,

4 And from thence passing along into Asemona, and reaching the torrent of Egypt: and the bounds thereof shall be the great sea: this shall be the limit of the south coast.

5 But on the east side, the beginning shall be the most salt sea, even to the end of the Jordan: and towards the north, from the bay of the sea unto the same river Jordan.

6 And the border goeth up into Beth-Hagla, and passeth by the north into Beth-Araba: going up to the stone of Boen, the son of Ruben:

7 And reaching as far as the borders of Debara, from the valley of Achor, and so northward, looking towards Galgal, which is opposite to the ascent of Adommim, on the south side of the torrent: and the border passeth the waters that are called the fountain of the sun: and the goings out thereof shall be at the fountain Rogel.

8 And it goeth up by the valley of the son of Ennom, on the side of the Jebusite towards the south, the same is Jerusalem: and thence ascending to the top of the mountain, which is over-against Geennom to the west, in the end of the valley of Raphaim, northward.

9 And it passeth on from the top of the mountain, to the fountain of the water of Nephtoa: and reacheth to the towns of Mount Ephron: and it bendeth towards Baala, which is Cariathiarim, that is to say, the city of the woods.

10 And it compasseth from Baala westward, unto Mount Seir: and passeth by the side of Mount Jarim to all ancient geography. If those who attempt to unravel such labyrinths in profane authors, deserve praise, much more do those who do their utmost to explain the difficulties of sacred history. It was once very necessary to have the limits of the tribes marked out with precision, that, at the return from captivity, they might occupy their own. Now we may be satisfied if we can point out some of the places of the greatest importance. The limits of the tribe of Juda are specified with particular care, on account of the dignity and power of that tribe, which was to give kings to all the land, and a Messias to the world, as well as to preserve the true religion. The greatest part of the southern regions of Chanaan fell to their share, from the Dead Sea, by Idumea, to the Nile, and as far north as Jerusalem and the torrent of Cedron. C.

VER. 2. Bay, (lingua,) tongue. Chal. "a promontory," or rather a gulph. C. VER. 3. Scorpion. A mountain infested with those creatures, by which people travelled from Idumea into Chanaan, leaving Sina on the left.

VER. 4. Asemona, which lies nearest to the river of Egypt of all the cities of Juda. Num. xxxiv. 4. C. xiii. 3.

VER. 5. Jordan, where it discharges itself into the Dead Sea, or mixes its waters with the latter; which, as we observed, (C. v. 16.) does not take place for three miles. H.—The north-western part of this sea belonged to Benjamin.

VER. 6. Stone. It is not certain that this was a city.

VER. 7. Galgal. Heb. Gilgal, may designate "the limits." The valley of Achor lay south of Galgal.—Sun. Heb. "Hen-Shemesh." It was not "a city."—Rogel, "of the fuller." This fountain was in the king's gardens, running eastward from Zion into the torrent of Cedron. Joseph. vii. 11. It was used to wash linen. Rogel, signifies "to trample on," as they formerly washed their linen with their feet. Nausierae is represented in Homer doing so, in holes or basins, prepared for the purpose. Odys. 2.

VER. 8. Ennom. Heb. Ge-ben-Hinnom, or simply Ge-enom, whence Gehenua has probably been formed. In this vale, children were immolated to Moloe: the beating of drums, to hinder their lamentations from being heard, caused it perhaps to be called Tophet. It was to the east of Jerusalem, (C.) inclining to the south. H.—Northward. The valley extends south to Bethlehem. Joseph. vii. 10. Here David gained a great victory, 2 K. v. 23. C.—Woods. This explanation is added by S. Jerom. H.—The ark remained at this city for some time, 1 K. xv. 6. It was 10 miles north of Jerusalem.

VER. 10. Bethsames, "the house of the sun," was at the same distance west-the north into Cheslon: and goeth down into Bethsames, and passeth into Thamna.

11 And it reacheth northward to a part of Accaron, at the side: and bendeth to Sechrona, and passeth Mount Baala: and cometh into Jebneel, and is bounded westward with the great sea.

12 These are the borders round about of the children of Juda, in their kindreds.

13 But to Caleb, the son of Jephone, he gave a portion in the midst of the children of Juda, as the Lord had commanded him; Cariath Arbe, the father of Enac, which is Hebron.

14 And Caleb destroyed out of it the three sons of Enac, Sesai, and Ahiman, and Tholmai, of the race of Enac.

15 And going up from thence, he came to the inhabitants of Dabir, which before was called Cariath Sepher, that is to say, the city of letters.

16 And Caleb said: He that shall smite Cariath Sepher, and take it, I will give him Axa, my daughter, to wife.

17 And Othoniel, the son of Cenez, the younger brother of Caleb, took it: and he gave him Axa, his daughter, to wife.

18 And as they were going together, she was moved by her husband to ask a field of her father, and she sighed as she sat on her ass. And Caleb said to her: What aileth thee?

19 But she answered: Give me a blessing: thou hast given me a southern and dry land, give me also a land that is watered. And Caleb gave her the upper and the nether watery ground.

ward. Here the sight of the ark proved so fatal to 50,070 of the inhabitants, 1 K. vi. 19. C.

VER. 13. Arbe, who was the father, and the greatest man of the race of Enac. C. xiv. 15. H.

VER. 14. Enac. These three giants were at Hebron when the spies came thither. Num. xiii.

VER. 15. Letters, as the Sept. render it. S. Jerom adds this interpretation. H.—It means literally "the city of the book." Senna, may also mean "instruction," v. 49. Here probably a famous school was kept, before the arrival of the Israelites; or the archives of the nation might be deposited among these giants, as the Chal. Kiriat-arche, "the city of the library, or archives," insinuates. Bochart. Phalug. ii. 17.

VER. 16. Wife. Parents had full authority to do this. Saul promised his daughter to the person who should overcome Goliath. Something was required by way of dowry for the lady. Grot. 1 K. xvii. 25.

VER. 17. Brother. It is not clear in the original whether this relates to Cenez or to Othoniel, (H.) as younger is not found in Heb. but it is in the Syr. Sept. and Judg. i. 13. Many think that Cenez was the brother of Caleb. If Othoniel had been brother of the latter, they say he could not have legally married his niece. C.—But though Moses forbids a nephew to marry his aunt, it does not follow that uncles could not take their nieces to wife, as they would be still the head; (W.) whereas there would be a sort of indecency for a nephew to command his aunt. The Jews allow these marriages, while the Samaritans condemn them. Lev. xviii.

14. In confirmation of the Vulg. we may remark, that Cenez is never (C.) clearly (H.) represented as the brother of Caleb; and there is no inconvenience in asserting that Othoniel was the brother of the latter, whether we take this word to denote a near relation, or strictly. In the former supposition, Othoniel might marry his cousin, Axa, the daughter of Caleb, while he himself was descended from Cenez, the brother of Jephone. C.—But if we take the word strictly, as the remark of his being younger brother, both here and Judg. i. 13. may seem to imply, we must then allow that Othoniel followed the custom of his nation, (H.) in marrying his niece. M.—Sept. here make him "the younger son of Cenez, who was brother of Caleb;" and in the Book of Judges, they say, "Gothoniel, the son of Cenez, (and) the younger brother of Caleb, first made himself master of it, under him;" as if Othoniel and Caleb had been born of the same mother, but of a different father, unless we suppose that they were only nearly related, and the former much less advanced in years; so that he might well marry the daughter of Caleb and afterwards become a judge and deliverer of Israel. Judg. iii. 9. See Masins. Bonf. H.

VER. 18. Was moved; as the Syr. Arab. Junius, &c. represent the matter. Others render the Heb. in a different sense; "she moved him to ask of her father a field, and she lighted off her ass, and Caleb said unto her," &c. which seems very abrupt, as she herself is represented as soliciting for the favour in the next verse, instead of her husband. The Chaldeæ suppose that she was restrained by natural modesty, from preferring the petition; but when Othoniel refused to do it, or was denied what he requested, she took courage and asked herself. The sense of the Vulgate seems more natural, (C.) as the husband might easily suppose that she would have greater influence with her father. H.—Sighed. The original term is found only in this history, and in that of the death of Sisara. Judg. iv. 21. Sept. "she cried out." Others translate, "she remained fixed," (M.) or "she waited sitting on the ass," till she had obtained her request.

VER. 19. Blessing, or "favour, present," &c. 1 K. xxv. 27. C.—And dry. This is a farther explanation of southern; as the lands in that situation being exposed to the sun-beams, in Palestine, are often destitute of sufficient moisture, which is the cause of the sterility of Mount Hebal, &c.—Watery ground. Heb. "springs of water, and he gave her the upper springs and the lower springs." Aquila leaves springs untranslated. H.—Golgot. Sept. "Goluthmaim, and the upper Goluth," &c. Sym. translates "possession on the high places." Judg. i. C.—Caleb had probably given his daughter a part of the mountain. He now grants her also some field that lay lower down, and was better supplied with water on all sides (H.) by springs above, and cisterns below.

VER. 25. New Asor, to distinguish it from the capital of Jabin, in the north. This was dependent on Ascalon. Euseb.—Heb. "and Hazor, Hadatt, and (or) Keroth ("the towns") of Hebron, which is Hazor." The Sept. only specify the same town of Asor by different names. There was one towards Arabia. Num. xi. 35.

VER. 28. Bersabee, noted for the residence of Abraham, &c. It is attributed to Simeon, (C. xix. 2.) with some other of these towns, as the two tribes lived intermixed, and some changes might be made in the first regulation, to bring things to a greater equality, and as circumstances might require.

VER. 31. Siceleg. The Philistines kept possession of it till king Achis gave it to David; and it continued afterwards the property of the kings of Juda.

VER. 32. Villages. Twenty-nine of the former cities were of greater note; the six, or taking in the three belonging to Caleb, the nine others which are mentioned, (C.) were only villages. M.—Others think that these nine towns are not numbered here, because they were allotted to the tribe of Simeon. C. xix. 2. &c.

VER. 33. Plains. Heb. Schephela, near Eleutheropolis. Chap. x. 40.—Estaol was afterwards given to Dan. Samson was buried near it and Sarea. Judg. xvi.

VER. 36. Fourteen. One of those mentioned above, may have been a village. M.—Others think that Enaim may be the name of a fountain, near which perhaps Juda met Thamar. Gen. xxxviii. 14.

VER. 44. Ceila, which David took from the Philistines, and where he was nearly betrayed into the hands of Saul, 1 K. xxiii. Habaneu was buried here, on the road between Eleutheropolis and Hebron.

52 Arab, and Ruma, and Esaan,

53 And Janum, and Bethaphua, and Apeca,

54 Athmatha, and Cariath Arbe, this is Hebron, and Sior: nine cities, and their villages.

55 Maon, and Carmel, and Ziph, and Jota,

56 Jezrael, and Jucadam, and Zanoë,

57 Accain, Gabaa, and Thamna: ten cities, and their villages.

58 Halhul, and Bessur, and Gedor,

59 Mareth, and Bethanoth, and Eltecon: six cities, and their villages.

60 Cariathbaal, the same is Cariathiarim, the city of woods, and Arebba: two cities, and their villages.

61 In the desert Betharaba, Meddin, and Sachacha,

62 And Nebsan, and the city of salt, and Engaddi: six cities, and their villages.

63 But the children of Juda could not destroy the Jebusite, that dwelt in Jerusalem: and the Jebusite dwelt with the children of Juda, in Jerusalem, until this present day.

VER. 55. Carmel. Not where Elias dwelt, but a city and mountain 10 miles east of Eleutheropolis. Nabal rendered it famous by his imprudence, (1 K. xxv.) and Saul by a triumphal arch, 1 K. xv. 12.

VER. 58. Bessur. About 20 miles from Jerusalem, fortified by Simon, 1 Mac. xiv. 33. It is there said to be only five stadia distant from that city. But the Alex. copy reads five schanus, or cords, each of which consisted of at least 30 stadia. Cellarius.

VER. 59. Eltecon: given afterwards to the tribe of Dan, (C. xix. 44.) and then to the Levites. C. xxi. 13. The Alex. Sept. here add many cities, which are omitted in Heb. C.—“Theos and Ephrata, (this is Bethlehem) and Phagor, and Artam, and Koulon, and Tutami, and Sores, and Kurem, and Gullim, and Baither, and Manocho, eleven cities and their villages.” H. See S. Jer. in Mic. v. 1. C. Deut. xxvii. 4.—Dr. Wall says, “these cities were doubtless in the Heb. copy of the Sept.” and “they are of such a nature, that it is scarcely possible to think them an interpolation.” The former critic thinks “the omission in the Heb. was occasioned by the word villages occurring immediately before, and at the end of the words thus omitted; and indeed the same word occurring in different places, has been the cause of many and great omissions in the Heb. MSS. He thinks it less likely that the Jews should have designedly omitted Bethlehem here, because that place is mentioned as belonging to Juda, in several other parts of Scripture.” But is Ephrata ever joined with it, except in this passage, and in the text of Micheas? “And, therefore, though this remarkable omission was probably owing, at first, to some transcriber’s mistake, its not being reinserted might be owing to the reason specified by S. Jerom, out of malice to Christianity.” Kennicott, 2 Diss. 56.—Reland is astonished to find a place which was to be rendered so famous by the birth of the Messias, not enumerated in this place among the cities of Juda. But he observes that it is found in the Alexandrian version, p. 643. Palest.—S. Jerom will not decide absolutely whether the Jews have erased these cities, or the Sept. have inserted them. As he undertook to translate the Hebrew as he found it, he has not admitted these cities into his translation, though there seems to be abundant reason for supposing that they are genuine. H.

VER. 62. Salt. Bonfrere supposes it is Segor, which was preserved for Lot’s sake.—Engaddi, which was famous for its balm and palm-trees, in the desert of Jericho. Solin. xxxv.—We may here remark that in the preceding catalogues, many towns are repeated like Zanoë, (v. 34. and 56.) and others are left out. Some are also afterwards attributed to other tribes. Hence some have inferred that alterations have been made in the original copies. But we may rather believe that the reason of these variations is, because the cities were parcelled out among the 10 families of Juda, (1 Par. ii. 3,) as was the case in the distribution of land to Manasses; (C. xvii. 2.) and hence the same cities were sometimes given to two different families. They are also attributed to different tribes, because many families of the respective tribes dwelt in them. The priests, for example, lived along with their brethren of other tribes. C.

VER. 63. Jerusalem. The Benjamites claimed the northern part of this city; (H.) and they did not drive out the Jebusites, but lived with them. Judg. i. 21.

The tribe of Juda had burnt a part of the city, ib. v. 8. But it seems the Jebusites kept their hold, (C.) at least in the citadel, (H.) and frequently in the lower town, till they were entirely banished by David, 2 K. v. 7. See Judg. xix. 11. In latter times, the Jews considered this place as the common city of all the nation, to which none of the tribes had an exclusive right; and hence, in the last siege, there was no head, and all the Jews were admitted without examination. Josephus. Bel. iv. 5, &c. C.—Day, and even till the reign of David. The author of this observation must have lived before that period. Josue might have made this and many other similar remarks, when he finished this work, towards the end of his life. H.

CHAP. XVI. VER. 1. Joseph. The double portion is given to him, as Ruben forfeited his birth-right. Chal. W.—Waters; or the celebrated fountain, which renders the territory so fruitful, and which was made sweet, by Eliseus casting salt into it, 4 K. ii. 19.—Wilderness of Bethaven. C. xviii. 12. and viii. 14. C.—Which, is not to be referred to wilderness, but to the word lot. Masius. M.

VER. 2. To Luza. The Vulg. reads Bethel Luza, which may be supposed to be two names, (C. xviii. 13. H.) for the same city. M. Gen. xxviii. 29.—Bethel was probably the country, (C.) or mountain, (H.) to the east of Luza, on the frontiers of Benjamin and of Ephraim; for which reason it is sometimes attributed to both.—To Atharoth. This city, and Archi, are supposed by some to be the same city. Archi seems, however, to have been a distinct place, where Chusai was born, 2 K. xv. 32. Atharoth is styled Addar, “the illustrious,” v. 5. It was 15 miles from Jericho.

VER. 3. Nether. See C. x. 11. The upper Bethoron was of much less note, near the Jordan.—Gazer was in the vicinity of Azotus, 1 Mac. xiv. 34. C. x. 33. C.

VER. 4. Possessed it, or divided the country between them. The territories of Ephraim are henceforward described, to the end of the chapter. M.

VER. 6. Looketh to the north, &c. The meaning is, that the border went towards the north, by Machmethath; and then turned eastward to Thanath-selo. Ch.—Borders. It should be terminus. “The border turneth eastward.” Sept. Bonfrere.—Janoe, twelve miles east of Sichem. Euseb. 4 K. xv. 29.

VER. 8. Reeds. Sept. “of Cana.” The vale belonged to Manasses, but the cities were ceded to Ephraim, v. 9. C. xvii. 19. The limits of these two tribes are very confused. C.—Most salt. This is the title generally applied to the lake of Sodom. But here the Mediterranean is meant, which, compared with many of the seas of Palestine, is certainly most salt. M.—The epithet is not, however, found in Heb. or Sept. (C.) and Serarius thinks it has crept in here by mistake. M.

VER. 10. Gazer. It is not certain when the Ephraimites rendered this city tributary, or when it threw off the yoke. The king of Egypt afterwards conquered it, and gave it with his daughter to Solomon. C. x. 33. C. See Judg. i. 29.—The negligence of Ephraim was contrary to God’s order. Ex. xx. M.—The Alex. Sept. here inserts after day, “till Pharaoh, king of Egypt, went up and took the city, and burnt it with fire, and the Chanaanites and Pheresites, and the inhabitants of Gazer, he slew; and Pharaoh gave it as a dowry to his daughter.” Grabe adds what seems deficient, “and they became tributary slaves.” H.

10 And the children of Ephraim slew not the Chanaanite, who dwelt in Gazer: and the Chanaanite dwelt in the midst of Ephraim until this day, paying tribute.

CHAP. XVII.

The lot of the half tribe of Manasses.

AND ^athis lot fell to the tribe of Manasses, (for he is the first-born of Joseph) to Machir, the first-born of Manasses, the father of Galaad, who was a warlike man, and had for possession Galaad and Basan:

2 ^bAnd to the rest of the children of Manasses, according to their families: to the children of Abiezer, and to the children of Helec, and to the children of Esriel, and to the children of Sechem, and to the children of Hephher, and to the children of Semida; these are the male children of Manasses, the son of Joseph, by their kindreds.

3 ^cBut Salphaad, the son of Hephher, the son of Galaad, the son of Machir, the son of Manasses, had no sons, but only daughters: whose names are these, Maala, and Noa, and Hegla, and Melcha, and Thersa.

4 And they came in the presence of Eleazar, the priest, and of Josue, the son of Nun, and of the princes, saying: The Lord commanded by the hand of Moses, that a possession should be given us in the midst of our brethren. And he gave them, according to the commandment of the Lord, a possession amongst the brethren of their father.

5 And there fell ten portions to Manasses, beside the land of Galaad and Basan, beyond the Jordan.

6 For the daughters of Manasses possessed inheritance in the midst of his sons. And the land of Galaad fell to the lot of the rest of the children of Manasses.

^a A. M. 2580.—^b Num. xxvi. 30.

CHAP. XVII. VER. 1. Born. Machir was the only son of Manassa. But the Scripture uses the word first-born for such, as it does for our Saviour. Mat. i. M.—If Machir was living when Moses assigned the territory to the half tribe of Manasses, he must have been 180 years old. C.—But he probably received the inheritance only in his posterity. H.—Galaad did not give his name to the country, as it was called so in the days of Jacob. Perhaps he took his name from the land, as many noblemen do, though he is styled Galaad before the war against Sehon commenced. Num. xxvi. 28. By giving Ephraim the preference before his elder brother, Jacob did not deprive the latter of his birth-right. C.—In effect, Manasses was partly (H.) provided for before Ephraim received any portion. C.—This, however, was a privilege, and not a right. He had also two allotments, because his numbers required so much land. H.

VER. 2. Children here comprises grandchildren, &c. These who are specified sprang from Galaad or from Jair, as they all dwelt on the east side of the Jordan, 1 Par. v. 23. and vii. 14. C.

VER. 4. Father, adjoining to Ephraim. See Num. xxvii. and xxxvi.

VER. 5. Jordan. Some of the families, which had possessions there already, were permitted to have a share on the west side also. Here Manasses had ten portions, schenua, or curds, which Herodotus (ii. 6.) reckons to contain each 60 stadia; so that he would have 600 stadia, (C.) or at least half of that quantity. C. xv. 68. Herod. ii. H.—There were six sons and five daughters to be provided for. But the portion of Hephher, the father of Salphaad, being given to his granddaughters, he is not counted. Masius.—The Jews say the five daughters had only four portions, two for their grandfather, who, they say, was the eldest of the family: one for their father, and another for their uncle, who died without children. Selden.—But of this no proof is adduced. C.—The five daughters would only have the one portion, which would have been enjoyed by their father. M. See 1 Par. v. 23.

VER. 7. Aser was contiguous to Machmethath, 15 miles from Sichem, towards Scythopolis. S. Jerom. C.—The limits of Manasses are described from the south, where he joins Ephraim. C. xvi. 6. C.

VER. 8. Taphua; which city, though situated in the territory of Manasses, belonged to Ephraim, (W.) as the Heb. intimates.

VER. 10. East. These two tribes are contiguous to the tribe of Joseph, taken all together, v. 14. M.—Aser extended as far as Mount Carmel, which was not far from Dor, a city of Manasses, v. 11. C. xix. 26. The tribes of Issachar and of Zabulon seem, indeed, to come between Manasses and Aser; so that we might say, that the tribe of Joseph finding itself too much straitened, was forced to seek for more room in the cities of the other tribes, which we find it really inhabited, 7 And the border of Manasses was from Aser, Machmethath, which looketh towards Sichem: and it goeth out on the right hand by the inhabitants of the fountain of Taphua.

8 For the lot of Manasses took in the land of Taphua, which is on the borders of Manasses, and belongs to the children of Ephraim.

9 And the border goeth down to the valley of the reeds, to the south of the torrent of the cities of Ephraim, which are in the midst of the cities of Manasses: the border of Manasses is on the north side of the torrent, and the outgoings of it are at the sea:

10 So that the possession of Ephraim is on the south, and on the north that of Manasses, and the sea is the border of both; and they are joined together in the tribe of Aser, on the north, and in the tribe of Issachar, on the east.

11 And the inheritance of Manasses, in Issachar and in Aser, was Bethsan and its villages, and Jeblaam with its villages, and the inhabitants of Dor, with the towns thereof: the inhabitants also of Endor, with the villages thereof: and in like manner the inhabitants of Thenac, with the villages thereof: and the inhabitants of Mageddo, with their villages: and the third part of the city of Nopheth.

12 Neither could the children of Manasses overthrow these cities, but the Chanaanite began to dwell in his land.

13 But after that the children of Israel were grown strong, they subdued the Chanaanites, and made them their tributaries, and they did not kill them.

14 And the children of Joseph spoke to Josue, and said: Why hast thou given me but one lot and one portion to possess, whereas I am of so great a multitude, and the Lord hath blessed me?

^c Num. xxvii. 1. and xi. 36.

v. 11. We might avoid all difficulties, by translating "they invaded (or made an irruption into) the tribe of Aser," &c. as the Heb. will allow. Thus Dan conquered Laish, which lies at so great a distance from his own portion, and the tribes of Juda and Simeon were frequently intermixed. C.—Aser and Manasses may, however, have been really united on the north-west, or Mediterranean point. M.

VER. 11. In Aser. The following towns were upon the frontiers of these two tribes, (M.) or they properly belonged to them respectively. But the children of Manasses took possession of them, after conquering by degrees, the former inhabitants, who were suffered to live among them, as the Jebusites were for some time, at Jerusalem. C. xv. 63. H.—Bethsan, or Scythopolis, as it was called by the Greeks, after the Scythians had invaded those countries, (Herod. i. 105, A. M. 3391, almost 100 years from the destruction of the kingdom of Israel. Unless these Scythians may rather be the Outheans, who were sent to people the kingdom of Samaria, most of whom embraced the Jewish religion, while those of Bethsan adhered to their ancient idolatry, and therefore retained their name. Even in the days of Josephus, most of the inhabitants were heathens: the kings of Juda were not able to subdue them entirely. Bethsan was situated to the south of the sea of Tiberias, 600 stadia from Jerusalem, (2 Mac. xii. 29.) that is, about 37 leagues, (C.) or 111 miles. H.—Dor, nine miles north of Cæsarea.—Endor, "the fountain of Dor," four miles south of Mount Thabor. Euseb.—Here Saul consulted the witch, 1 K. xxxviii. 7.—Thenac, near Legion, and the torrent of Cisson, where Barac gained a victory. Judg. v.—Nopheth, means "a canton," and thus Manasses may have had three portions of land round the three aforesaid cities, in which sense it is translated. C. xi. 2. C. Masius.—But Serrarius takes Nopheth to mean a city, (M.) agreeably to the Sept. "the third part of Naphetha, and its villages." H.—The other two parts of the city might be occupied by Zabulon. Bonfrere.—No mention is made of Nopheth, Judg. i. 27. H.

VER. 12. Could, because they would not. Judg. i. 27. The children of Manasses took these cities; but not putting the inhabitants to death, the latter got possession again, as was the case with respect to many other cities taken (C.) and destroyed (H.) by Josue. Heb. "the Chanaanite consented to dwell," &c. The Israelites spared their lives on their paying tribute; and this prevarication was the cause of their being afterwards reduced to submit to the yoke of these nations. C. Judg. ii. 20. Deut. xx. 16. M.—The Chanaanite dwelt with Manasses for a time; (W.) perhaps they were never wholly expelled. H.

VER. 14. Spoke. Sept. "contradicted Josue." In effect, they spoke with a good deal of emotion.—Portion. Heb. "cord." C.—They addressed themselves to the general, before their territory was divided. Masius.—Or they insinuate that the portion allotted to them both, would scarcely suffice for one tribe and 15 And Josue said to them: If thou be a great people, go up into the woodland, and cut down room for thyself, in the land of the Pherezite and the Raphaims: because the possession of Mount Ephraim is too narrow for thee.

16 And the children of Joseph answered him: We cannot go up to the mountains, for the Chanaanites that dwell in the low lands, (wherein are situate Bethsan, with its towns, and Jezrael, in the midst of the valley) have chariots of iron.

17 And Josue said to the house of Joseph, to Ephraim and Manasses: Thou art a great people, and of great strength, thou shalt not have one lot only:

18 But thou shalt pass to the mountain, and shalt cut down the wood, and make thyself room to dwell in: and mayst proceed farther, when thou hast destroyed the Chanaanite, who, as thou sayst, hath iron chariots, and is very strong.

Surveyors are sent to divide the rest of the land into seven parts, for the other seven tribes. The lot of Benjamin.

AND *all the children of Israel assembled together in Silo, and there they set up the tabernacle of the testimony, and the land was subdued before them.

2 But there remained seven tribes of the children of Israel, which as yet had not received their possessions.

3 *And Josue said to them: How long are you indolent and slack, and go not in to possess the land which the Lord, the God of your fathers, hath given you?

4 Choose of every tribe three men, that I may send them, and they may go and compass the land, and mark there was but little room for them to enlarge their dominions by subduing the Chanaanites, as the rest might do. Manasses was most concerned, as his numbers had increased 20,500 since he left Egypt, while his brother had diminished. Num. xxvi. 34. C.—But then he had an extensive country on the other side of the Jordan. H.

VER. 16. Thee. Destroy the Pherezite, &c. (M.) take their cities, and destroy the inhabitants, like so many trees, or cut down the wood to build houses, and in order to cultivate the land for the production of corn and grass.

VER. 17. Iron, armed with scythes, who will obstruct our passage to the mountains, as we dare not encounter them in the open field. H. 4 K. xx. 23.—Heb. "the hill is not enough for us, (or it will not be found, or be attacked by us) and all the Chanaanites," &c. C.—Sept. "the mountain of Ephraim will not contain us; all the Chanaanites who dwell in the land of Emek, (or of the valley) in Bethsan, and its villages, and in the vale of Jezrael, have chosen cavalry and iron." H.—They are invincible. C.—The slothful man saith there is a lion without. Prov. xxii. 13. Josue over-rules the cowardly objection, and argues, from their own boasting, that they were numerous enough to overcome all their opponents. He was himself of the tribe of Ephraim. H.—Valley, extending about 10,000 paces from Bethsan to Legion. Jezrael was in the middle of it, and is attributed to Issachar. C. xix. 18. But it was probably on the frontiers of Manasses, who seems to have spoken as if it would belong to the first who had driven out the Chanaanites. The kings of Israel had a palace at Jezrael, and the vineyard of Naboth being contiguous to it, gave occasion to the sin of Jezabel, and to the destruction of Ahab's family, 3 K. xxi. 1. In this vale, Gedeon routed the Madianites. Judg. vi. 33.

VER. 18. Mountain, probably of Gelboe, as that of Ephraim was not sufficient, v. 15. Gelboe extended almost as far as Bethsan, and it would afford a fine opportunity of attacking the nations below. Josue persists in his first resolution; and though of the same tribe, he is so little actuated by partiality towards his brethren, that they alone seem to have been dissatisfied with their portion. C.

CHAP. XVIII. VER. 1. Silo was delightfully situated, about the midst of the country, 12 miles south of Sichem. Hither the Isselites removed with the ark from Galgal after having had their camp in the latter place seven years at least; the Jews say 14. But Josue might reproach the Israelites for their indolence, (v. 3,) without waiting seven years after the country was divided.—Tabernacle. The Jews pretend that this was not the same as that set up by Moses; and others say that a house was built for the Lord at Silo, 1 K. i. 23. But there seems to be no reason for these assertions. David informs us that the ark of the Lord was covered with skins, 2 K. vii. 2. If any repairs were found necessary for the tabernacle erected by Moses, they might be made. It is supposed that this tabernacle continued at Silo till the days of Samuel. The ark was certainly in it till the Israelites unfortunately sent it into the camp, where it was taken by the Philistines. When they sent back the ark, it was deposited at Gaban, and not in the tabernacle, which was at Silo. Then it was sent to Nobe. We find that the it out according to the number of each multitude. and bring back to me what they have marked out.

5 Divide to yourselves the land into seven parts: let Juda be in his bounds on the south side, and the house of Joseph on the north.

6 The land in the midst between these, mark ye out into seven parts; and you shall come hither to me, that I may cast lots for you before the Lord your God.

7 For the Levites have no part among you; but the priesthood of the Lord is their inheritance. And Gad and Ruben, and the half tribe of Manasses, have already received their possessions beyond the Jordan eastward: which Moses, the servant of the Lord, gave them.

8 And when the men were risen up, to go to mark out the land, Josue commanded them, saying: Go round the land and mark it out, and return to me: that I may cast lots for you before the Lord, in Silo.

9 So they went: and surveying it, divided it into seven parts, writing them down in a book. And they returned to Josue, to the camp, in Silo.

10 And he cast lots before the Lord, in Silo, and divided the land to the children of Israel, into seven parts.

11 And first came up the lot of the children of Benjamin, by their families, to possess the land between the children of Juda and the children of Joseph.

12 And their border northward was from the Jordan: going along by the side of Jericho on the north side, and thence going up westward to the mountains, and reaching to the wilderness of Bethaven,

13 And passing along southward by *Luza, the same tabernacle was at Gabaon some time after the ark was translated to Jerusalem. C.—Them. They might, therefore, remove the ark into the interior, and measure the country without danger. M.—The greatest part of the country had submitted to Josue. C.

VER. 3. Slack. These seven tribes had been accustomed to live in indolence, having their food provided for them in a miraculous manner. They were perhaps afraid lest, if the army of Israel should be divided, the different tribes would be too weak to make head against the enemy. C.—Josue had, however, made all things easy, and they might at their leisure conquer the few towns which yet remained in the hands of the Chanaanites, if they had not cherished this indolent disposition, which was so displeasing to God, and brought upon them so many evils. H.

VER. 4. Tribe: it is not clear whether any but these seven were concerned.—Out. Josephus says, that people well skilled in geometry accompanied them. C.—They had to mark out seven portions of land, which might suffice for these remaining tribes, (H.) who would receive them by lot, to take away all cause of discontent. They still received according to their numbers. Num. xxvi. 54. W.

VER. 5. North, with respect to Silo. Juda had taken possession of his territory, as well as the tribes of Joseph.

VER. 6. The land in the midst, between these mark ye out into seven parts: that is to say the rest of the land, which is not already assigned to Juda or Joseph. Ch.—For we must not suppose that Joseph occupied the most northern parts of the country, so as, with Juda on the south, to enclose all the other tribes. H.—Heb. "As for you, you shall describe the land into seven parts." C.—Only the tribe of Benjamin was between these two tribes, (v. 11,) so that Serarius thinks that median has been substituted for aliem, "the other." M.—Lots. The deputies divided the country into seven portions, equal in goodness, though not in extent. After the lots were drawn, some alterations might be made by common consent, and those tribes which were too much straitened for room, received what was requisite among those who had too large a territory. Hence we find Joseph occupying the cities of Issachar, &c. C. xvii. 10. It was equally inconvenient to have too much or too little.

VER. 7. Priesthood, and the rights attached to it, tithes, &c. C.—It was therefore necessary to make eight portions. M.

VER. 9. Book. Heb. "described it, according to the cities, into seven parts, in a volume," (H.) or table, resembling a map. The ancients commonly wrote on boards covered with wax, and engraved on stone, lead, &c.

VER. 11. First. A person might proclaim that the tribe, whose name was drawn first out of the urn, should have the territory which was described in the book by the land surveyors; or the names of the seven tribes might be in one urn, and seven parcels of land in another. C.

VER. 12. Bethaven, or Bethel. Josephus says, (Ant. v. 3,) that the territory of Benjamin extended as far as the Mediterranean; but it only went to Ataroth, v. 13. M. is Bethel: and it goeth down into Ataroth-addar to the mountain, that is on the south of the nether Bethoron:

14 And it bendeth thence, going round towards the sea; south of the mountain that looketh towards Bethoron to the south-west: and the outgoings thereof, are into Cariathbaal, which is called also Cariathiarim, a city of the children of Juda. This is their coast towards the sea, westward.

15 But on the south side, the border goeth out from part of Cariathiarim, towards the sea, and cometh to the fountain of the waters of Nephtoa:

16 And it goeth down to that part of the mountain, that looketh on the valley of the children of Ennom: and is over-against the north quarter, in the furthestmost part of the valley of Raphaim, and it goeth down into Geennom, (that is the valley of Ennom) by the side of the Jebusite to the south: and cometh to the fountain of Rogel,

17 Passing thence to the north, and going out to Ensesmes, that is to say, the fountain of the sun:

18 And it passeth along to the hills that are over-against the ascent of Adommim: and it goeth down to Abenboen, that is, the stone of Boen, the son of Ruben: and it passeth on the north side to the champaign countries, and goeth down into the plain,

19 And it passeth by Bethhagla northward: and the outgoings thereof are towards the north of the most salt sea, at the south end of the Jordan, 20 Which is the border of it on the east side. This is the possession of the children of Benjamin by their borders round about, and their families.

21 And their cities were, Jericho, and Bethhagla, and Vale-Casis,

22 Betharaba, and Samaraim, and Bethel,

23 And Avim, and Aphara, and Ophera,

24 The town Emona, and Ophni, and Gabee: twelve cities, and their villages,

25 Gabaon, and Rama, and Beroth,

26 And Mesphe, and Caphara, and Amosa,

27 And Recem, Jarephel, and Tharela,

28 And Sela, Eleph, and Jebus, which is Jerusalem,

VER. 15. Sea, on the west. H.—The northern limits of Juda form the southern ones of Benjamin, only here Josue proceeds in a contrary direction, from west to east. M. See C. xv. 5. 8.

VER. 16. Part. Heb. "end, or summit." C.—That is, &c. an explication added by S. Jerom. Some say this dreadful vale (H.) was on the south of Jerusalem. Button.

VER. 18. Hills. Heb. Geliloth, "the limits," (C.) or Galgal, on the road to Jerusalem from Jericho, and different from that where the Israelites encamped, C. xv. 7.—Adommim is a narrow pass in the vicinity, much infested with robbers. —Abenboen. The explication is alone given. C. xv. 8.—Plain. Sept. "and it shall pass by Betharaba, on the south from the north, and it shall descend." Grabe supplies "to Araba;" or the plain desert country. H.—Betharaba is, in effect, mentioned as one of the cities of Benjamin, (v. 22.) as it had before been assigned to Juda, (C.) being inhabited by both tribes. H.

VER. 19. Towards, (contra linguam) "the bay on the north," &c. H.—There is another on the south. C. xv. 2.

VER. 21. Vale of Casis, "incision," so called, as some pretend, on account of the balm, which was extracted by cutting the bark with a stone, or with glass. But this etymology seems too far fetched, and there is no proof that balm was cultivated there in the days of Josue. C.—Some of the cities of Benjamin have been here omitted, as two others are mentioned, C. xxi. 18. M.

VER. 24. Ophni, the Gophna so celebrated in latter times, fifteen miles from Gabaon. S. Jerom attributes it to Ephraim, as perhaps it was chiefly inhabited by people of that tribe.—Gabee. The wickedness of its citizens almost involved the whole tribe in destruction. Judg. xix. It was twenty miles north of Jerusalem. Joseph. v. 2.

VER. 26. Mesphe, where Samuel assembled the people, 1 K. vii. 5. It was regarded as a place of devotion, while the temple was in the hands of the profane, 1 Mac. iii. 46.

VER. 28. Jebus. The city was called Salem in the days of Abraham. Gen.

The lots of the tribes of Simeon, Zabulon, Issachar, Aser, Nephthali, and Dan. A city is given to Josue.

AND the second lot came forth for the children of Simeon by their kindreds: and their inheritance was

2 In the midst of the possession of the children of Juda: Bersabee, and Sabee, and Molada,

3 And Hasersual, Bala, and Asem,

4 And Eltholan, Bethul, and Harma,

5 And Siceleg, and Bethmarchaboth, and Hasersusa,

6 And Bethlebaoth, and Sarohen: thirteen cities, and their villages:

7 Ain, and Remmon, and Athor, and Asan: four cities, and their villages:

8 And all the villages round about these cities to Baalath Beer Ramath, to the south quarter. This is the inheritance of the children of Simeon according to their kindreds, 9 In the possession and lot of the children of Juda: because it was too great, and therefore the children of Simeon had their possession in the midst of their inheritance.

10 And the third lot fell to the children of Zabulon by their kindreds: and the border of their possession was unto Sarid.

11 And it went up from the sea, and from Merala, and came to Debbaseth: as far as the torrent, which is over-against Jeconam.

12 And it returneth from Sarid eastward to the borders of Ceseleththabor: and it goeth out to Dabereth, and ascendeth towards Japhie.

13 And it passeth along from thence to the east side of Gethhepher and Thacasin: and goeth out to Remmon, Amthar and Noa.

14 And it turneth about to the north of Hanathon: and the outgoings thereof are the valley of Jephthabel, 15 And Cateth, and Naalol, and Semeron, and Jedala, and Bethlehem: twelve cities and their villages.

There seems to have been two cities of this name; one famous for the tomb of Habacuc, (S. Jer.) and the other in the tribe of Ephraim C. xxiv. 33. C.

CHAP. XIX. VER. 2. Juda. Thus was verified the prediction of Jacob, that Simeon and Levi, who had been too much united for the destruction of Sicheu, should be scattered among their brethren. Gen. xxxiv. and xlix. 6. The tribe of Simeon was not very numerous. Num. xxvi. 14. Yet all his cities are not here enumerated, but only such as served to point out the limits. The Jews suppose that this tribe occupied the cities of Juda only as long as the latter pleased, and that it was driven out of them in the days of David, (1 Par. iv. 31. Rabbins ap. Mas.) or at least under the reign of Ezechias, when it was forced to seek fresh settlements in Gador and Seir, ib. v. 39. It was, however, led into captivity by Salmanassar along with the other nine tribes, in the sixth year of Ezechias, 4 K. xvii. 6. The lot of Simeon was not in the centre of Juda, but only within his limits, (C.) either on the south, (Cellarius) or on the west side, (C.) or on both. H.—And Sabee. This is the same town with the preceding, otherwise there would be 14 instead of 13, v. 6. M.—If this be not the case, we may give the same solution as C. xv. 62.

VER. 4. Bethul. We shall see elsewhere whether this be the Bethulia of Judith. Some place a town of this name in Galilee, near Tiberias, (Brocard) of which, however, there is no proof. Cellar. iii. 31.

VER. 9. Great. The land measurers, it seems, had been under a mistake, (M.) which was corrected by the ancients. Distributive justice was to be observed.

VER. 11. From the sea. Heb. "towards the sea." Bonfrere asserts that Zabulon did not extend quite to the shore of the Mediterranean. C. xvii. 10. C.—Torrent, near Sidon, which some call the river Belus or Papia. Plin. v. 19.

VER. 13. Geth-hepher, the birth-place of Jonas, 4 K. xiv. 25. See C. xii. 17.

VER. 15. Bethlehem, very different from that of Juda.—Twelve. Nineteen are (283)

16 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Zabulon, by their kindreds, the cities and their villages.

17 The fourth lot came out to Issachar by their kindreds.

18 And his inheritance was Jezrael, and Casaloth, and Sunem,

19 And Hapharaim, and Seon, and Anaharath,

20 And Rabbeth, and Cesion, Abes,

21 And Rameth, and Engannim, and Enhadda, and Bethphases.

22 And the border thereof cometh to Thabor, and Schesima, and Bethsames: and the outgoings thereof shall be at the Jordan: sixteen cities, and their villages.

23 This is the possession of the sons of Issachar by their kindreds, the cities and their villages.

24 And the fifth lot fell to the tribe of the children of Aser by their kindreds:

25 And their border was Halcath, and Chali, and Beten, and Axaph,

26 And Elmelech, and Amaad, and Messal: and it reacheth to Carmel by the sea, and Sihor, and Labanath,

27 And it returneth towards the east to Bethdagon: and passeth along to Zabulon and to the valley of Jephthael towards the north to Bethemec and Nehiel. And it goeth out to the left side of Cabul, mentioned, but some of them belonged to other tribes, (C.) or were not properly cities. M.—All the towns of Zabulon are not specified. C.

VER. 17. Issachar. The reason why he has been placed after his younger brother, Zabulon, both here and in the blessing of Jacob, is not known.

VER. 18. Jezrael. This was a city of the first note, (M.) situated in the vale between Mount Hermon and Gelboe, having Bethsan on the east.—Sunem, where Eliseus raised the child to life, five miles south of Thabor. S. Jerom.—Here the Philistines were encamped the day before the battle, in which Saul was slain and Israel dispersed, 1 K. xxviii. 4. C.

VER. 20. Rabbath. These four cities formed the western boundary, though Serarius observes, this tribe extended as far as the Mediterranean, being in possession of Carmel, which lay close to the shore. M.

VER. 21. Engannim, called Enam, 1 Par. vi. 73.—Enhadda. There was another town of this name, 10 miles from Eleutheropolis. C.—This and the four following towns lay on the north of Issachar. M.—Bethsames, "the house of the sun." Juda and Nephthali had also a Bethsames.

VER. 26. Carmel, so famous for the miracles of Elias, 3 K. xviii. 20. Josephus (Bel. ii. 17,) places it 120 stadia south of Ptolemais. This range of mountains extended northward through the tribes of Issachar and of Zabulon. Pliny (v. 17,) speaks of a promontory and of a town of this name. Here also the god Carmel was adored, having an altar, but no temple or image, as the ancients had decreed. Nec simulacrum Deo aut templum, (sic tradidere majores) ara tantum et reverentia. Tacit. Hist. ii. 78.—Vespasian consulted the priest Basilides. Carmel means "the vineyard of the Lord," or the excellent vineyard, &c. It was so rich and beautiful as to become proverbial. The spouse compares the head of his beloved to Carmel. C. vii. 5. Isaias (xxxii. 15,) foretels that the deserts shall be equal to Carmel. It was covered with wood and fruit. S. Jerom in Isai. x. 18. Jer. iv. 26. The city, which was built upon this mountain, and which Pliny calls by the same name, was formerly styled Ecbatana. The oracle had denounced to Cambyzes that he should die at Ecbatana, and he concluded that the city of Media was meant; but it was "that of Syria," says Herodotus, (iii. 64,) where he died.—Labanath. Heb. leaves out the conjunction.—Sihor means a "troubled" river, (C. xiii. 3,) or brook, which probably ran near the white promontory mentioned by Pliny, (v. 19,) near Tyre. Labanath signifies "white."

VER. 27. Bethdagon. "The temple of Dagon, or of the fish," different from the town of Juda. C. xv. 41.—Zabulon, a city which took its name from the tribe, and separated Ptolemais from Judæa. Joseph. Bel. ii. 37.—Left; that is, the north side of Cabul, which means either the canton where the 20 cities of Hiram were situated, or a village which Josephus (Vita) calls Chabolo, which lies near the sea, and Ptolemais.

VER. 28. Rohob, on the northern extremity of the land. Num. xiii. 22. It was assigned to the Levites. But the tribe of Aser never drove out the Chanaanites. Judg. i. 31.—Cana, where Christ wrought his first miracle, about 23 miles west of Tiberias, as we may gather from Josephus. (Vita) Cellarius.—Some would admit another Cana nearer Sidon.

VER. 29. Horma. Heb. Sept. &c. Rama, "a height."—Of Tyre. When this city was founded, is wrapped up in obscurity. The Tyrian priests claim a very high antiquity; whereas Josephus (Ant. viii. 2) allows that the city was founded only 200 years after Josue, on which supposition this name must have been added by a subsequent writer. The matter, however, is so uncertain, that nothing can be concluded. It was a colony of Sidon. Isai. xxiii. 12. Old Tyre was on the continent; the new city was built in an island, where the temple of Jupiter

28 And to Abaran, and Rohob, and Hamon, and Cana, as far as the great Sidon.

29 And it returneth to Horma to the strong city of Tyre, and to Hosa: and the outgoings thereof shall be at the sea from the portion of Achziba:

30 And Amma, and Aphec, and Rohob: twenty-two cities and their villages.

31 This is the possession of the children of Aser by their kindreds, and the cities and their villages.

32 The sixth lot came out to the sons of Nephthali by their families:

33 And the border began from Heleph and Elon to Saananim, and Adami, which is Neceb, and Jebnael even to Lecum: and their outgoings unto the Jordan:

34 And the border returneth westward to Azanotthabor, and goeth out from thence to Hucuca, and passeth along to Zabulon southward, and to Aser westward, and to Juda upon the Jordan towards the rising of the sun.

35 And the strong cities are Assedim, Ser, and Emath and Reccath, and Cenereth,

36 And Edema, and Arama, Asor,

37 And Cedese, and Edrai, Enhazor,

38 And Jeron, and Magdalel, Horem, and Bethanath, and Bethsames: nineteen cities and their villages.

39 This is the possession of the tribe of the children of Nephthali, by their kindreds, the cities and their villages.

Olympius formerly stood. Alexander made a road between the two cities, when he besieged New Tyre: which, on that account, may be considered either as an island, or as a part of the continent. He used for this purpose the ruins of the old city, which he threw into the sea. Hiram had formed a similar road to the temple of Jupiter. Dios. ap. Joseph. c. Ap. 1. Whether Nabuchodonosor besieged the Old or the New Tyre, soon after he had taken Jerusalem, authors are not agreed. S. Jerom (in Eze. xxviii. Amos i. &c.) seems to think that he attacked the new city; whereas Marsham believes that it was built only after the other had fallen a prey to the arms of the Chaldees. It was only five or 700 paces from the continent. Tyrrus quondam insula præalto mari septingentia passibus divisa, nunc vero Alexandri oppugnantis operibus continens. Plin. v. 19.—Portion. Heb. "from the coast to Achzib," which is the same town as Ecdippe, south of Tyre, and nine miles from Ptolemais. C.

VER. 30. Amma; perhaps on mount Amara, a part of Libanus. Cant. iv. 8. For though the Israelites had possession of these parts only a short time, they had a right to them, and to the countries as far as the Euphrates and Pelusium. Sept. read, "Akum or Archob," (C.) in some copies, though the Alexandrian agrees with the Vul. H.—Perhaps Acco, the ancient name of Ptolemais, may be meant, as it is hardly probable that so famous a city should be omitted.—Aphec, beyond Antilibanus, from which city the Israelites could not drive the Chanaanites. Judg. i. 31. Here the kings of Syria assembled their forces to attack the people of God, 1 K. xx. 26. Profane authors speak of the temple of Venus Aphachitis, who appeared in the eyes of the superstitious to shed tears. The city lay between Biblus and Heliopolis. Zozimus, i. 58. Euseb. (laud. Const.) Macrobi. i. 21.—Twenty-two. More are mentioned above, but some might belong to other tribes.

VER. 33. Heleph seems to have been on the north-eastern limits of Nephthali. The cities on the Jordan southwards, as far as Genesareth, are specified. H.

VER. 34. Juda was in possession of the southern parts of the Jordan, as Nephthali had the northern, so that by means of navigation they might enjoy the riches (C.) of each other, and of the other tribes. H. Deut. xxxiii. 23.—Sept. do not read Juda, which forms all the difficulty, as five tribes lay between these two. They have "and the Jordan is towards the rising sun." C.—Grabe inserts, with a star, "to Juda, the Jordan," &c. intimating that Juda, was not a part of the Sept. version.

VER. 35. Ser. The Sept. seem to have read rather differently. "And the fortified, or walled cities of the Tyrians, Tyre and Emath, (an l) Rekkath," &c. H.—Assedim may be the name of a people. The situation of Ser is also unknown.—Emath is the famous Emesa. Num. xiii. 22. C.—Tyre, &c. belonged to Aser, and not to Nephthali, as the Sept. might insinuate. But Emesa would be within the borders of the latter. H.—Cenereth, the lake of that name, as S. Jerom says that the city of Cenereth was Tiberias, on the southern extremity of the lake whereas Nephthali possessed only the northern part. C.—Bonfrere supposes that Caphernaum, or some adjacent city, is meant; and indeed the first words of the verse indicate that a list is given of the strong cities, unless that should be restricted to those of the Assedim, which are not specified. H.

VER. 36. Arama. Heb. "Rama."—Asor, the capital of Jabin. C. xi. 1.

VER. 37. Enhazor, "the fountain of Asor," or Daphne, a delightful spot resembling the famous suburbs of Antioch. Joseph. Bel. iv. init.

VER. 38. Bethanath, "the house of poverty," is Betanea, 15 miles from Cæsarea. Eus.—Nineteen. Twenty-three places are mentioned. But some might only be villages, &c. C. xv. 62.

40 The seventh lot came out to the tribe of the children of Dan by their families:

41 And the border of their possession was Saraa, and Esthaol, and Hirsema, that is, the city of the sun.

42 Selebin, and Aialon, and Jethela,

43 Elon, and Themna, and Acron,

44 Elthece, Gebbethon, and Balaath,

45 And Jud, and Bane, and Barach, and Gethremmon:

46 And Mejarcon, and Arecon, with the border that looketh towards Joppe, 47 And is terminated there. And the children of Dan went up and fought against Lesem, and took it: and they put it to the sword, and possessed it, and dwelt in it, calling the name of it Lesem Dan, by the name of Dan their father.

48 This is the possession of the tribe of the sons of Dan, by their kindreds, the cities and their villages.

49 And when he had made an end of dividing the land by lot to each one by their tribes, the children of Israel gave a possession to Josue, the son of Nun, in the midst of them,

50 According to the commandment of the Lord, the city which he asked for, Thamnath Saraa in Mount Ephraim: and he built up the city, and dwelt in it.

51 These are the possessions, which Eleazar, the priest, and Josue, the son of Nun, and the princes of the families, and of the tribes of the children of Israel, distributed by lot in Silo, before the Lord at the door of the tabernacle of the testimony, and they divided the land.

CHAP. XX.

The cities of refuge are appointed for casual manslaughter.

AND ^athe Lord spoke to Josue, saying: Speak to the children of Israel, and say to them:

2 Appoint cities of refuge, ^bof which I spoke to you by the hand of Moses:

^a A. M. 2562, A. C. 1442.—^b Num. xxxv. 10. Deut. xix. 2.

VER. 41. Sun. Some suppose that it is the same with Bethsames of Juda, which was ceded to the Levites. C.—Dan lay on the west of Juda. H.—Selebin, where the Amorrites maintained themselves. Judg. i. 35.

VER. 43. Themna; the Thamma of the tribe of Juda. C. xv. 10.—Acron, or Accaron.

VER. 44. Elthece, or Elthecon of Juda, given to the Levites. All the three tribes might dwell in it.

VER. 45. Barach. Heb. "Bene-barac," or "Jud, of the sons of Barac."

VER. 46. Mejarcon, "the waters of Jarcon" and Arecon, were near Joppe. C.

VER. 47. There. Heb. "and the limits of Dan went out from them." They were not able to keep the cities in subjection; so that, finding themselves too much confined, they sought for fresh settlements at Lessem; or, their borders were known by these cities, through which they passed, (C.) though most of them had been already assigned to the tribe of Juda. M.—Dan. This city was not Peneas, or Casarea, but the utmost boundary of Palestine on the north, as Bersabee was on the south. This history is given more at large. Judg. xviii. 1. The Sept. vary from the Heb. in the 46. 7. and 8. verses, (C.) and add that "the children of Dan did not destroy the Amorrites, who afflicted them in the mountain, and would not suffer them to descend into the plain. . . But the hand of Ephraim lay heavy upon them, and they became tributary to them." (See C. xvii. 13.) 49. And they went to take possession of their limits, and the children of Israel," &c. H.

VER. 50. Lord, by the mouth of Eleazar. Josue was content with one of the most barren parts of the country. He waits till all are provided for, shewing throughout his life a pattern of moderation and disinterestedness, which render him worthy to be considered as a figure of Jesus Christ, who reduced himself to the lowest state of abjection for our sakes. C. Sed C. xiv. 6. M.—Ephraim. It was before called Gass; and the city, which Josue enlarged, lay on the north side of it. C. xxiv. 30. Judg. ii. 9.

CHAP. XX. VER. 3. Of blood, and authorized to kill the manslayer, (M.) if he find him out of one of these cities. See Num. xxxv. 6. Deut. xix. 4. Revenge was never lawful: but to prosecute offenders in the courts of justice, (C.) or agreeably to the law of God, can never deserve blame. H.—If some of the saints of the old law seem to have taken delight in revenge, their expressions must be explained in a favourable sense. David, who is accused of this crime,

3 That whosoever shall kill a person unawares may flee to them: and may escape the wrath of the kinsman, who is the avenger of blood:

4 And when he shall flee to one of these cities: he shall stand before the gate of the city, and shall speak to the ancients of that city, such things, as prove him innocent: and so they shall receive him, and give him a place to dwell in.

5 And when the avenger of blood shall pursue him, they shall not deliver him into his hands, because he slew his neighbour unawares, and is not proved to have been his enemy two or three days before.

6 And he shall dwell in that city, till he stand before judgment to give an account of his fact, and till the death of the high-priest, who shall be at that time: then shall the manslayer return, and go into his own city and house from whence he fled.

7 And they appointed Cedes in Galilee, of Mount Nephthali, and Sichem in Mount Ephraim, and Cariatharbe, the same is Hebron in the mountain of Juda.

8 And beyond the Jordan to the east of Jericho, ^athey appointed Bosor, which is upon the plain of the wilderness of the tribe of Ruben, and Ramoth in Galaad of the tribe of Gad, and Gaulon in Basan of the tribe of Manasses.

9 These cities were appointed for all the children of Israel, and for the strangers that dwelt among them: that whosoever had killed a person unawares might flee to them, and not die by the hand of the kinsman, coveting to revenge the blood that was shed, until he should stand before the people to lay open his cause.

CHAP. XXI.

Cities, with their suburbs, are assigned for the priests and Levites.

THEN ^athe princes of the families of Levi came to Eleazar, the priest, and to Josue, the son of Nun, and to the princes of the kindreds of all the tribes of the children of Israel:

^a Deut. iv. 48.—^a A. M. 2562.

(C.) repels the charge with horror. Ps. vii. 6. The evils which he denounces to his adversaries, were predictions of what they had reason to expect. Ps. lvii. 11 Jer. xi. 20. H.—If some of the Jews looked upon vengeance as lawful, it cannot be a matter of surprise, when we reflect that even some, who have been taught the mild law of the gospel, think themselves bound, in some cases, to revenge an affront. C.—So far have the maxims of the world supplanted Christianity in their breasts! How severely does Jacob rebuke his children for what they had done to the Schemites, though they falsely thought that the affront offered to their sister, would justify them! Gen. xxxiv. H.

VER. 4. Gate, where justice was administered. M.—Here the ancients heard what the manslayer had to say in his own defence; and if they thought his account plausible, they gave him a retreat till he might be safely brought to answer the charges of the avenger, who might endeavour to prove that the murder was wilful.

VER. 5. Before. This is generally taken literally. But if sufficient proof could be brought that the contending parties were at variance, or reconciled some time before the accident happened, the person who had taken refuge, would be judged accordingly. It might lawfully be presumed that they were enemies, if, after being at variance, they had given no signs of reconciliation. C.

VER. 6. Fact. Sept. "before the synagogue for judgment." H.—Whether this took place in the same city, or where the murder was committed, (see Num. xxxv. 12. and v. 25.) the reasons are given why the manslayer was released at the death of the high priest. C.—By the death of Christ, the greatest criminals are redeemed. M.

VER. 7. Cedes and Gaulon lay on the north, Sichem and Ramoth in the middle, Hebron and Bosor on the south of the country. H.

VER. 9. Strangers. The limitations of the Jews in favour of their own nation are rejected. The civil and criminal law should affect all alike, except God order it otherwise.—Stand. This was the posture of the people accused, while the judges sat. Drusius. C.

CHAP. XXI. VER. 1. The priest, who seems to have presided, as he is always placed first. A select number of the tribe of Levi came to represent the priests, and those of an inferior order; and to obtain what God had promised them. Num. xxxv. 2. There was one family of priests who sprang from Aaron, the son of Caath. The rest of Caath's family, with the children of Gerson and Merari, (285)

2 And they spoke to them in Silo, in the land of Chanaan, and said: "The Lord commanded by the hand of Moses, that cities should be given us to dwell in, and their suburbs to feed our cattle.

3 And the children of Israel gave out of their possessions, according to the commandment of the Lord, cities and their suburbs.

4 And the lot came out for the family of Caath, of the children of Aaron the priest, out of the tribes of Juda, and of Simeon, and of Benjamin, thirteen cities:

5 And to the rest of the children of Caath, that is, to the Levites who remained, out of the tribes of Ephraim, and of Dan, and the half tribe of Manasses, ten cities.

6 And the lot came out to the children of Gerson, that they should take of the tribes of Issachar, and of Aser, and of Nephthali, and of the half tribe of Manasses in Basan, thirteen cities.

7 And to the sons of Merari, by their kindreds, of the tribes of Ruben, and of Gad, and of Zabulon, twelve cities.

8 And the children of Israel gave to the Levites the cities and their suburbs, as the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses, giving to every one by lot.

9 Of the tribes of the children of Juda and of Simeon, Josue gave cities: "whose names are these,

10 To the sons of Aaron, of the families of Caath, of the race of Levi, (for the first lot came out for them)

11 The city of Arbe, the father of Enac, which is called Hebron, in the mountain of Juda, and the suburbs thereof round about.

* Num. xxxv. 2.—1 Par. vi. 2.

were simply Levites, constituting three other families. God was pleased that they should be dispersed through Israel, that they might instruct the people both by word and by example, 1 Par. xxvi. 29. C.—Josue would not have neglected them. M.—But they were naturally solicitous to know where they were to live, as the tribes had now all received their portions. H.

VER. 8. Gave, by lot, v. 4, &c. M.—Whether any changes were afterwards made, to grant more or less, in proportion to the numbers of the four families, (as seems to have been done with regard to the other tribes) or the cities were specified in four parcels, and the priests received the first lot, the text does not explain. C.—It is also uncertain what right the Levites had to these 48 cities. Some say that they had only the use of them, while others maintain that the cities were their property entirely, so that no other could live there without their consent. They could sell the houses, which returned to them in the year of jubilee, if not redeemed before; but the suburbs were a common property of all the Levites, and could not be sold by any. Lev. xxv. The cities, therefore, belonged to God, and he abandoned the property to his ministers. Other people might live among them, as they were not debarred from choosing their habitation in places which were not originally allotted to them. Thus we find that Gabaa was chiefly peopled by the tribe of Benjamin, when the outrage was offered to the Levite's wife, and no blame attached to the latter. Judg. xix. Saul and his family were of the same town, though it belonged to the Levites, and David kept his court at Hebron, a sacerdotal city, for the first seven years of his reign. C.—Here also Caleb had probably resided. C. xiv. 14. The priests and Levites were not indeed at this time sufficiently numerous to people all these cities; and Calmet supposes that they only received as many houses as they might occupy, being supplied with more by the magistrates as their numbers increased. But might not they let the houses, which they did not want to occupy, and receive the profits, so as to take possession of them when they had occasion? Were these 48 cities, which were the only part of the land to which the Levites had any claim, too many or too rich to compensate the labours of this most deserving tribe? It seems, therefore, unnecessary to call in the aid or interference of the magistrate, except any person were so bold as to refuse to give up what the law had so positively assigned to the Levites. Their rights were as well defined as those of any of the other tribes. H.—The land beyond the suburbs, was cultivated by the proprietors, who might either live in the town or country. Many of the priests and Levites chose to reside near the tabernacle, as Moses had encouraged them to do. Deut. xviii. 6. Thus Nobe became a sacerdotal city; (1 K. xxi. 1.) and after the temple was built, Jerusalem and its environs were the places of abode for most of the priests. C.

VER. 4. Thirteen. These three tribes give more cities than any of the others, because their territories were the largest. Num. xxxv. 8. Juda in particular, had a most extensive portion allotted to him at first; so that a part was afterwards taken away to accommodate Simeon and Dan, and now so many cities are appointed for the priests, (C.) who would thus have their residence near the temple, when it should be built. H.—God ordered the lots according to the designs of his 12 "But the fields and the villages thereof he had given to Caleb, the son of Jephone, for his possession.

13 He gave therefore to the children of Aaron the priest, Hebron a city of refuge, and the suburbs thereof: and Lobna with the suburbs thereof,

14 And Jether, and Estemo,

15 And Holon, and Dabir,

16 And Ain, and Jeta, and Bethsames, with their suburbs: nine cities out of the two tribes, as hath been said.

17 And out of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, Gabaon, and Gabae, 18 And Anathoth, and Almon, with their suburbs: four cities.

19 All the cities together of the children of Aaron the priest, were thirteen, with their suburbs.

20 And to the rest of the families of the children of Caath, of the race of Levi, was given this possession.

21 Of the tribe of Ephraim, Sichem one of the cities of refuge, with the suburbs thereof in Mount Ephraim, and Gazer, 22 And Cibsaim, and Beth-horon, with their suburbs, four cities.

23 And of the tribe of Dan, Eltheco and Gabathon,

24 And Aialon and Gethremmon, with their suburbs, four cities.

25 And of the half tribe of Manasses, Thanac and Gethremmon, with their suburbs, two cities.

26 All the cities were ten, with their suburbs, which were given to the children of Caath of the inferior degree.

c Supra xiv. 14. 1 Par. vi. 56.

providence; and gave the priests, though so few in number, more than what fell to the share of all the rest of the family of Caath. C.—This family had in all twenty-three cities, lying south of Dor and Bethsan, and leaving the tribe of Issachar on the north. Gerson had thirteen cities among the three other northern tribes, and that of Manasses on the east side of the Jordan; while Merari had twelve, more southward on the same side, in the tribes of Gad and of Ruben, and on the west of the Jordan, in the tribe of Zabulon. Thus these two families were more intermixed. H.

VER. 12. Possession. Only the houses which the priests occupied, were taken from him. C.—Caleb enjoyed all the dependencies of Hebron, and took the city, as he would not have been secure while the Chanaanites dwelt there. Magalian. —Serarius thinks that he abandoned the city to the priests, in which he follows Tostat, who supposes that they had to pay tribute to the tribes among whom they lived; and that mines, &c. belonged to the latter. M.

VER. 16. Ain and Jeta. Sept. of Grabe agrees with the Vulg. But the Vatican copy (H.) has, "Assa . . and Tannu." In 1 Par. vi. 59, only Assa and Bethsames are mentioned. Several other variations may also be observed, which may be attributed either to the changes which were afterwards made when the Chanaanites kept their hold, (Rabbins) or to the different places having two names, or to the mistakes of transcribers, &c. See C. xv. 62. Only eleven cities are specified in the Book of Paralipomenon, though it observes that there were thirteen. C.—As hath, &c. words added by S. Jerom, or rather expressing more fully the Heb. "those" two tribes. H.

VER. 21. One of, (urbes confugii Sichem . . and Gazer.) Lit. "cities of refuge, Sichem, . . Gazer," &c. as if all the Levitical cities had enjoyed this privilege, which we have seen (Num. xxxv. 6.) is the opinion of some. But the Heb. Sept. and Chal. read in the singular, "Sichem, a city of refuge;" and interpreters generally allow only six cities of this description. C.—Without extending this privilege to all the rest, we may observe that all the cities of refuge were given to the Levites, v. 11. 21-7-32-6-7. Prot. "For they gave them Sichem, with her suburbs in Mount Ephraim, to be a city of refuge for the slayer; and Gazer," &c. By inserting to be, they seem to countenance the opinion that all the subsequent towns were of the same nature as Sichem. The text would be clearer without the addition, to prove the contrary sentiment. H.—See Bonfrere how the Vulg. may be vindicated. M.

VER. 22. Beth-horon. Grabe's Sept. adds, "the upper," which is the received opinion. C.

VER. 23. And of, &c. This verse is omitted in Paralipomenon, (H.) whence we find Helon and Gethremmon (probably the same as Aialon and Bethremmon. v. 24, assigned to Ephraim.—Eltheco. See C. xv. 59. and xix. 44.—Gabathon continued a long time in the hands of the Philistines. 3 K. xv. 27.

VER. 25. Cities. Instead of these, Aner and Baleam are mentioned in Paralipomenon. C.

31 And Helcath, and Rohob, with their suburbs, four cities.

32 Of the tribe also of Nephthali, Cedec in Galilee, one of the cities of refuge: and Hammoth Dor, and Carthan, with their suburbs, three cities.

33 All the cities of the families of Gerson, were thirteen, with their suburbs.

37 Of the tribe of Gad, Ramoth in Galaad, one of the cities of refuge, and Manaim, and Hesebon, and Jaser, four cities, with their suburbs.

38 All the cities of the children of Merari by their families and kindreds, were twelve.

39 So all the cities of the Levites within the possession of the children of Israel were forty-eight,

* A. M. 2562, A. C. 1442.

VER. 27. Refuge. Lit. "the cities of refuge, Gaulon . . and Bosra." See v. 21. H.—The latter gives place to Asteroth, in Paral.

VER. 29. Cities. These are called Cedes and Daboreth, Ramoth and Anem, in Paralipomenon.

VER. 35. Suburbs. Paralipomenon only mentions two, Remmono and Thabor.

VER. 36. Four cities. There are no more, though there be five names: for Misor is the same city as Bosor, which is to be observed in some other places, where the number of names exceeds the number of cities. Ch.—With regard to the 36th and 37th verses, there seems to have been great confusion in the Hebrew MSS. both ancient and modern. In some they have been totally omitted, in others only a part. H.—The famous MS. of Hillel, and the Masorets, reject them, (C.) because they had reckoned only 556 verses in Josue, and these two verses would destroy their authority. Hence they erased them wherever they might be found; and Kimchi assures us, that he never could meet with them "in any MS. (thus) corrected." Yet the Paralipomena universally acknowledge them, (Ken.) as the context of Josue must also do, otherwise there will be only eight cities instead of twelve, and four will be wanting to complete the number of forty-eight. The Prot. version therefore is forced to admit them, (H.) as they are found in the Eng. Polyglot, on the authority of some ancient MSS. They do not, however, express them so fully as the Sept. have done. Ken.—These read, "And beyond the Jordan, over-against Jericho, out of the tribe of Ruben, the city of refuge for the slayer, Bosor, in the wilderness, (Misor) and her suburbs, and Jaser and her suburbs, (37) and Gedson and her suburbs, and Mapha (Alex. copy reads Maspha) and her suburbs, four cities." Grabe.—Prot. only admit, "And out of the tribe of Reuben, Bezer with her suburbs, and Jahazah . . Kedemoth . . and Mephaath with her suburbs, four cities." Kennicott finds in some Heb. MSS. "the city of refuge for the slayer, Bosor," one MS. has, "in the wilderness," &c. H.—These verses were not in the Heb. text of the Hexapla, as they are obelized in the Sept. and in the Syriac MS. of Masius; and yet, as they are found in the old Greek and Syriac versions, and in the Chal. paraphrase, they were probably omitted between the year 100 and 200. They are left out in several printed editions of the Heb. Bible, and even in that of Jablonski, (1699) though in opposition to his better judgment and all the MSS. which he had consulted: legunt omnia nostra MSS. Michaelis (1720) reprinted this text, with some few emendations, particularly with these two verses very laudably inserted. Kennicott, 2 Diss.—In the Bened. Edit. of S. Jerom, Martianay observes, that the Heb. MSS. of S. Jerom seem to have been mutilated, for if they had admitted this 36th verse, S. Jerom would have translated it, and it would have been found in the more ancient MSS. of the Latin edition, where it is wanting. Hence this editor leaves it out. He also remarks that other Heb. MSS. omit "a city of refuge for the slayer, in the desert." The last word, he says, occurs in several copies of the best note; and Houbigant inserts it on the authority of the oratorian MS. 54. H.—In some editions of the Vulg. this verse is transposed, and placed after the cities of Gad. Louvain, R. Steph. &c.—It is therefore, probable that S. Jerom found it not in Heb. but, if 41 And the Lord God gave to Israel all the land that he had sworn to give to their fathers: and they possessed it, and dwelt in it.

42 And he gave them peace from all nations round about: and none of their enemies durst stand against them, but all were brought under their dominion.

43 Not so much as one word, which he had promised to perform unto them, was made void, but all came to pass.

CHAP. XXII.

The tribes of Ruben and Gad, and half the tribe of Manasses, return to their possessions. They build an altar by the side of the Jordan, which alarms the other tribes. An embassy is sent to them, to which they give a satisfactory answer.

AT the same time Josue called the Rubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasses,

2 And said to them: You have done all that Moses the servant of the Lord commanded you: you have also obeyed me in all things,

3 Neither have you left your brethren this long time, until this present day, keeping the commandment of the Lord your God.

4 Therefore as the Lord your God hath given your brethren rest and peace, as he promised: return and go to your dwellings, and to the land of your possession, which Moses the servant of the Lord gave you beyond the Jordan:

5 Yet so that you observe attentively, and in work fulfil the commandment, and the law which Moses the servant of the Lord commanded you: that you love the Lord your God, and walk in all his ways, and keep all he inserted it, he borrowed it from the Sept. The Syriac version places these verses before the 34th and 35th. All this shews that the Heb. MSS. have not been kept with great care in this place. Some have surmised that the Sept. have inserted this necessary supplement from Paral. But they do not entirely agree with that book, so that it seems that they found these verses in their Heb. copies. C.—We have already given the Hebrew and Sept. as it is found in the common editions. In Paral. (vi. 78,) it is thus expressed: Beyond the Jordan also, over against Jericho, on the east side of the Jordan, out of the tribe of Ruben, Bosor in the wilderness, with its suburbs, and Jassa . . 79. Kedemoth also . . and Mephaath with its suburbs. The word Misor, which Grabe's Sept. and the Vulg. leave untranslated, is the Heb. word which denotes a plain, (H.) as Aquila and Sym. agree, and as appears C. xx. 8. Deut. iv. 48, where Bosor is said to have been upon the plain of the wilderness. This city was the famous Bosra, in the desert Arabia, between Philadelphia and Jazer, towards the east. C.—We might translate, "the cities of refuge, Bosor in the wilderness, which is also the plain" of Moab, v. 21. H.—Jaser, or Jassa, (C. xlii. 18,) different from that v. 37, which lay on the river of the same name in the tribe of Gad. C.

VER. 40. Families, the four great ones, which parcelled out the cities among the several branches. H.—The Levites were only 23,000, (Num. xxvi. 62,) yet they receive more cities than what are specified for any other tribe. It must be observed, however, that all the cities of the different tribes are not mentioned, and the Israelites might live along with those of the tribe of Levi, v. 3. Moreover, these had only the cities, with 2000 cubits of land round them. The Sept. here insert that Josue divided the land, and received the city of Thamnassarach; (Grabe substitutes Thamnassarach) where he deposited the knives of stone with which he had circumcised those who were born in the desert. H.—They farther remark, that they were buried in his tomb. C. xxiv. 33.

VER. 43. Pass. How then did the Chanaanites keep possession of so many places? S. Augustine (q. 21,) answers, that they were suffered to do it for the "utility and trial" of the Israelites. For the latter were not sufficiently numerous at first to cultivate all the land. God had therefore promised that the nations should not be driven out all at once, lest the country should fall a prey to wild beasts. Ex. xxiii. 29. Masius.—During the life-time of Josue, none of them durst make head against him; and if many of the tribes did not take possession of all their cities, it was owing to their own negligence. After this hero was no more, the natives took courage, and greatly harassed the Israelites; but it is plain that the latter were not straitened for room, while Josue lived, since they invited the other tribes east of the Jordan to come and reside with them on the west, if they thought proper. C. xvii. 19. C.

CHAP. XXII. VER. 1. Time: before the assembly broke up. The 40,000 had continued to fight along with their brethren, (C.) as long as there was occasion. Now peace being obtained, they are permitted to return to their families. H.

VER. 4. And peace. This is a farther explication of rest, (H.) which alone occurs in Heb. It may denote a fixed and permanent abode. Deut. iii. 20. Ruth i. 9. (287) his commandments, and cleave to him, and serve him with all your heart, and with all your soul.

6 And Josue blessed them, and sent them away, and they returned to their dwellings.

7 Now to half the tribe of Manasses, Moses had given a possession in Basan: and therefore to the half that remained, Josue gave a lot among the rest of their brethren, beyond the Jordan to the west. And when he sent them away to their dwellings, and had blessed them,

8 He said to them: With much substance and riches, you return to your settlements, with silver and gold, brass and iron, and variety of raiment: divide the prey of your enemies with your brethren.

9 So the children of Ruben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasses, returned, and parted from the children of Israel in Silo, which is in Chanaan, to go into Galaad, the land of their possession, which they had obtained according to the commandment of the Lord, by the hand of Moses.

10 And when they were come to the banks of the Jordan, in the land of Chanaan, they built an altar immensely great near the Jordan.

11 And when the children of Israel had heard of it, and certain messengers had brought them an account that the children of Ruben, and of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasses, had built an altar in the land of Chanaan, upon the banks of the Jordan over-against the children of Israel:

12 They all assembled in Silo, to go up and fight against them.

13 And in the mean time they sent to them, into the land of Galaad, Phinees the son of Eleazar the priest,

14 And ten princes with him, one of every tribe,

* Num. xxv. 3. Deut. iv. 3.

VER. 6. Blessed them, like a good magistrate, having given them a solemn admonition not to forget God, the source of all blessings. H.—This expression may also intimate that he loaded them with praises and with presents, and wished them all prosperity.—Dwellings. Lit. "tents," in which they had been accustomed to live, in the desert. Hence they gave the name to houses, temples, &c.

VER. 8. Riches. Heb. Sept. &c. "cattle."—Brethren. Grotius pretends that they were to keep what they had gotten. But his proofs rather shew that they were to follow the ancient custom and law, which prescribed that those who had remained at home to guard the country, should share the booty with those who had gone to battle, 1 K. xxx. 24. Num. xxxi. 27. Some suppose that the booty was divided into equal parts, and the 40,000 would retain as much as all the rest of their brethren, who had been less exposed. The Israelites, however, made all alike, as other nations seem to have done. Ex. xv. 9. &c.

VER. 9. Galaad here denotes all that country, (C.) as Chanaan does that on the west of the Jordan (H.) and Ephraim, the ten tribes. C.

VER. 10. Banks. Heb. Goliluth, which is (C. xiii. 2, &c.) rendered Galilee, Galgal, "limits," &c. H.—Chanaan, consequently on the western banks. Vatable, however, says that the eastern country went sometimes by this name, on account of the Amorrites having dwelt in it. Josephus (v. 1.) and the Jews affirm, that the altar was built on that side; and it seems natural that these tribes would erect it in their own territories, for the benefit of their children. C.—The effect would nevertheless have been equal, on which side soever it appeared, as the Jordan was not so broad but they might see over. H.—Immensely. Heb. "a great altar to be seen," like those heaps which Bacchus and Alexander raised to perpetuate the memory of their victories. Plin. vi. 16.

VER. 12. In Silo, without being called, as they were all fired with a holy zeal, (M.) to prevent the growth of idolatry among their brethren. H.—They knew that one altar was to be allowed (M.) in the place which the Lord should appoint. Lev. xvii. 8. Deut. xii. 5. &c. H.—God had ordered such cities as embraced idolatry among them, to be exterminated. Deut. xiii. 12. C.

VER. 14. Tribe. Another of the tribe of Levi, and deputies from the other nine tribes, accompanied Phinees on this important occasion. The Levites were most of all concerned, as their rights seemed to be particularly invaded. H.—The princes of the tribes did not (C.) perhaps (H.) go, but only men of high rank. Kimchi says, men set over a thousand. Heb. "ten princes with him of each chief house, a prince of all the tribes of Israel, and each one head of the house of his fathers, among the thousands of Israel." C.—These were commissioned by Eleazar, Josue, and all the congregation, to endeavour to bring back their brethren to a sense of their duty, if they had so soon forgotten God, (H.) or if they should persist in their rebellion, to denounce an eternal war against them. M.

15 Who came to the children of Ruben, and of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasses, into the land of Galaad, and said to them:

16 Thus saith all the people of the Lord: What meaneth this transgression? Why have you forsaken the Lord, the God of Israel, building a sacrilegious altar, and revolting from the worship of him?

17 Is it a small thing to you *that you sinned with Beelphegor, and the stain of that crime remaineth in us to this day? and many of the people perished.

18 And you have forsaken the Lord to-day, and to-morrow his wrath will rage against all Israel.

19 But if you think the land of your possession to be unclean, pass over to the land wherein is the tabernacle of the Lord, and dwell among us: only depart not from the Lord, and from our society, by building an altar beside the altar of the Lord our God.

20 ^bDid not Achan, the son of Zare, transgress the commandment of the Lord, and his wrath lay upon all the people of Israel? And he was but one man, and would to God he alone had perished in his wickedness.

21 And the children of Ruben, and of Gad, and of the half tribe of Manasses, answered the princes of the embassy of Israel:

22 The Lord the most mighty God, the Lord the most mighty God, he knoweth, and Israel also shall understand: If with the design of transgression we have set up this altar, let him not save us, but punish us immediately:

23 And if we did it with that mind, that we might lay upon it holocausts, and sacrifice, and victims of peace-offerings, let him require and judge:

24 And not rather with this thought and design, that we should say: To-morrow your children will say to our

^b Supra vii. 1.

VER. 16. Lord. Thus Phinees shews that he speaks in the name of those who still continued faithful to the Lord. He imputes the crime of apostacy to Ruben, &c. that they may declare more openly for what reason they had built this altar. M.

VER. 17. Beelphegor. As they lived in the country, where this idol had been adored, Phinees was afraid lest they might have built the altar in his honour. He reminds them what destruction that worship had brought upon all Israel. He had been particularly zealous in appeasing the wrath of God, and therefore speaks with more authority. Heb. "is not the crime of Phegor enough for us, that we should not wish to expiate it until this day?" (C.) or Prot. "is the iniquity of Peor too little for us, from which we are not cleansed until this day? (although there was a plague in the congregation of the Lord)." The stain of this impiety still remained upon Israel. They ought, therefore, to endeavour by sincere repentance, to obliterate it entirely, and not, by fresh provocations, enkindle the dreadful wrath of God. H.—There was reason to fear lest the Lord should punish this sin still more, as he is accustomed to do, when people relapse. C.—All must therefore shew their zeal to prevent such crimes, as the multitude sometimes suffers for the offence of one, when they do not take all possible care to prevent it, v. 20. H.

VER. 19. Unclean, as being destitute of the ark, &c. The Israelites had the greatest veneration for the land which God had chosen for their habitation. Naaman loaded two mules with some of the earth. We cannot help admiring the zeal and the disinterestedness of Phinees. He proposes to abandon some of the possessions on the other side of the Jordan, rather than that his brethren should forsake God, or offend him.

VER. 20. Wickedness. Heb. "he did not expire in his sin," (C.) but repented, (H.) or, Did he not? &c. Sept. "he did not alone die in his sin." Chal. "but this man alone did not die in his transgression." C.—All Israel was in consternation, and 36 were slain. If this secret offence was so severely punished, what judgments will not the public apostacy of so many thousands draw down upon our heads!

VER. 21. Israel. Sept. "answered the Chiliarchs of Israel," who had spoken by the mouth of their president. They repel the charge with earnestness. H.

VER. 22. God. In Heb. there are three terms, (C.) El, Elohim, Yehova, "the strong, the judge, the self-existent Being." To him they make their appeal. Him they acknowledge in the first place, as the only true God, as they had been accused of departing from him, v. 19. H.—They are willing to undergo any punishment, if they had any evil intention. M.

VER. 23. Sacrifice. Heb. intimates particularly "of flour or libations." C.

VER. 24. To-morrow. At any future period. H.—Israel. The same idea is children: What have you to do with the Lord the God of Israel?

25 The Lord hath put the river Jordan for a border between us and you, O ye children of Ruben, and ye children of Gad: and therefore you have no part in the Lord. And by this occasion your children shall turn away our children from the fear of the Lord. We therefore thought it best,

26 And said: Let us build us an altar, not for holocausts, nor to offer victims,

27 But for a testimony between us and you, and our posterity and yours, that we may serve the Lord, and that we may have a right to offer both holocausts, and victims and sacrifices of peace-offerings: and that your children to-morrow may not say to our children: You have no part in the Lord:

28 And if they will say so, they shall answer them: Behold the altar of the Lord, which our fathers made, not for holocausts, nor for sacrifice, but for a testimony between us and you.

29 God keep us from any such wickedness that we should revolt from the Lord, and leave off following his steps, by building an altar to offer holocausts, and sacrifices, and victims, beside the altar of the Lord our God, which is erected before his tabernacle.

30 And when Phinees the priest, and the princes of the embassy, which were with him, had heard this, they were satisfied: and they admitted, most willingly the words of the children of Ruben, and of Gad, and of the half tribe of Manasses.

31 And Phinees the priest, the son of Eleazar, said to them: Now we know that the Lord is with us, because you are not guilty of this revolt, and you have delivered the children of Israel from the hand of the Lord.

32 And he returned with the princes from the children of Ruben and Gad, out of the land of Galaad, into the land of Chanaan, to the children of Israel, and brought them word again.

33 And the saying pleased all that heard it. And the children of Israel praised God, and they no longer said that they would go up against them, and fight, and destroy the land of their possession.

34 And the children of Ruben, and the children of Gad, called the altar which they had built, Our testimony, that the Lord is God.

CHAP. XXIII.

Josue being old, admonisheth the people to keep God's commandments; and to avoid marriages, and all society, with the Gentiles, for fear of being brought to idolatry.

AND^a when a long time was passed, after that the Lord had given peace to Israel, all the nations round about being subdued, and Josue being now old, and far advanced in years:

2 Josue called for all Israel, and for the elders, and for the princes, and for the judges, and for the masters, and said to them: I am old, and far advanced in years:

3 And you see all that the Lord your God hath done to all the nations round about, how he himself hath fought for you:

4 And now since he hath divided to you by lot all the land, from the east of the Jordan unto the great sea, and many nations yet remain:

5 The Lord your God will destroy them, and take them away from before your face, and you shall possess the land, as he hath promised you.

6 Only take courage, and be careful to observe all things that are written in the book of the law of Moses: and turn not aside from them, neither to the right hand nor to the left:

7 Lest after that you are come in among the Gentiles, expressed, v. 27. You have no part in the Lord. You are not his peculiar people. Of this title the Israelites were always very jealous, even when they neglected the worship and covenant of the Lord. C.—Hence these tribes take these precautions, that they may not be excluded from the society and privileges of their brethren on the other side of the Jordan. They profess openly that they do not esteem it lawful to offer sacrifice in any other place, besides that which God had chosen. H.

VER. 31. Lord, who would not have failed to punish Israel for such a crime. C.—They rejoice, therefore, not only at the fidelity of their brethren, but also on their own account, because they may now confidently look up for protection to God, instead of being in continual apprehensions of feeling his avenging arm. H.

VER. 32. Into, &c. (finium Chanaan) "of the confines of Chanaan," which is ambiguous. H.—But the Heb. remov. e the difficulty in this manner.

VER. 34. God. Heb. seems rather defective; (C.) "called the altar, (Syriac supplies the altar of witness) for it shall be a witness between us, that the Lord is the God. Ed. "witness," is placed in the margin of Plantin's edit. (Kennic.) and the Prot. have inserted it in the text, though in a different character, (H.) as "it is confirmed by the Syr. Arab. and Vulg. versions." Kimchi quotes the Chal. paraphrase, as having the word seid, "witness," twice, which, if read in two places formerly, has been lately omitted in one, as many other alterations have perhaps been made in it, in conformity to the later copies of the Hebrew text. It is still found in one Chal. MS. and in that of Masius. Between the two last words of this verse, some Heb. MSS. read eua, "He." "The Lord, He is the God;" which not only gives an emphasis, but is expressly confirmed by the Chal.; and indeed this seems to have been a common form of confessing the belief of the one true God, 3 K. xviii. 39. Kennic. Diss. i.—Masius would translate, "They made an inscription upon the altar, declaring that it should be an eternal witness of their attachment to the Lord." Cora, in effect, sometimes means to write, as Alcoran, in the Arabic tongue, signifies "the scripture" (C.) of the Mahometans, which they hold in the utmost veneration, as containing the life and doctrine of their great prophet. The Sept. (Grabe) insinuate that Josue approved of what had been done, "and Jesus gave a name to the altar, . . . and said, it is a witness in the midst of them, that the Lord God is their God." Thus, instead of war and destruction, which seemed to threaten Israel on all sides, all ended in peace and harmony. If Christians would imitate the conduct of the Israelites, they would not so rashly condemn their neighbours on every idle report; and, if our adversaries would condescend to examine seriously into the grounds of charging idolatry upon us, and on that account waging an eternal war against us, it is to be hoped they would pronounce our doctrine innocent, and reform their own iniquitous proceedings. H.

CHAP. XXIII. VER. 1. Long time. Josue governed only ten years after the distribution of the land. Towards the close of his life, perceiving that the Israelites were too indolent in subduing the people of the country, and fearing lest they should by degrees begin to imitate their corrupt manners, he called a general assembly either at his own city, or at Silo, or more probably at Sichem, (as it is mentioned C. xxiv. 1, which seems to give farther particulars of this assembly) and laid before his people, in the strongest terms, the dangers to which they would be exposed, by entertaining a friendship for the enemies of God, and by abandoning him. C.—He called together all the heads of the people. M.

VER. 3. For you. God fought for his people three ways: 1. By destroying their enemies himself in a miraculous manner, as he did the Egyptians; 2. By assisting their endeavours, as at Jericho, and in the victory of Gabaon, when he caused the walls of the former town to fall down, and hurled stones upon the fleeing enemy near the latter; (C. x.) 3. By giving courage and strength to Israel, while he filled their opponents with dismay, and this was most frequently the case. He continues to assist his servants in their spiritual warfare against the world, the flesh, and the devil, in all these different ways. W.

VER. 4. And now. Heb. "Behold, I have divided unto you by lot these nations, which remain to be subdued, to be an inheritance for your tribes from the Jordan, (these two words are transposed, and should come after, C.) with all the nations that I have cut off—even unto the great sea westward." He mildly expostulates with them for not following up his victories, by reducing the few scattered nations whom he had abandoned to them as a prey. H.—They ought to be considered not only as the enemies of God, but also as unjust detainers of another's right, and Josue promises that nothing will be wanting on the part of God to render their reduction easy, if they will but do their duty to Him and to themselves. H.

VER. 7. Come in, an expression which may denote any familiarity, or marriage. M.—Heb. is in the form of a prohibition, "Come not among (have no connections with) these nations. . . Neither mention their gods, nor swear (or cause to swear by them.)" The psalmist (xv. 4.) says, speaking either of idols, (H.) or of sinners, Nor will I be mindful of their names by my lips. Osee (ii. 16.) says, She shall call me no more Baal, ("my lord," a term applied by wives to their husbands) on account of its reminding one of the idol Baal. Hence David calls Jerobaal, or Gedeon, Jerobosehot, 2 K. xi. 21. S. Paul would not have Christians so much as to name the sins of impurity. Ephes. v. 3. The more religious Jews will not even mention an idol, or an unclean animal; and they beg pardon before they who will remain among you, you should swear by the name of their gods, and serve them, and adore them:

8 But cleave ye unto the Lord your God: as you have done until this day.

9 And then the Lord God will take away before your eyes nations that are great and very strong, and no man shall be able to resist you.

10 One of you shall chase a thousand men of the enemies: because the Lord your God himself will fight for you, as he hath promised.

11 This only take care of with all diligence, that you love the Lord your God.

12. But if you will embrace the errors of these nations that dwell among you, and make marriages with them, and join friendships:

13 Know ye for a certainty that the Lord your God will not destroy them before your face, but they shall be a pit and a snare in your way, and a stumbling block at your side, and stakes in your eyes, till he take you away and destroy you from off this excellent land, which he hath given you.

14 *Behold this day I am going into the way of all the earth, and you shall know with all your mind, that of all the words which the Lord promised to perform for you, not one hath failed.

15 Therefore as he hath fulfilled in deed what he promised, and all things prosperous have come: so will he bring upon you all the evils he hath threatened, till he take you away and destroy you from off this excellent land, which he hath given you,

16 When you shall have transgressed the covenant of the Lord your God, which he hath made with you, and shall have served strange gods, and adored them: then shall the indignation of the Lord rise up quickly and speedily against you, and you shall be taken away from this excellent land which he hath delivered to you.

speaking of a heretic. Drusius.—Some understand that the worship of idols is meant by naming them, as those who invoked the name of Jesus Christ, were his disciples. Acts ix. 14. 1 Tim. ii. 19. Ex. xx. 24. To swear by idols is always sinful, (Ex. xxiii. 13,) while it is an act of religion to swear on proper occasions, by the name of God. Theophrastus (ap. Joseph. c. Ap. i.) observes, that the laws of the Tyrians prohibit the using of foreign oaths, such as that of the Corban, which was peculiar to the Jews. C.

VER. 8. Day. Those who had formerly given way to idolatry were all cut off, and all Israel had lately given a proof of their attachment unto the Lord. H.

VER. 10. Thousand. This Moses had repeatedly foretold. Lev. xxvi. 13. Deut. xxviii. 7.

VER. 13. Side. Heb. "snares and traps unto you, and scourges in your sides." Children and slaves were formerly beaten on this part. Eccli. xxx. 12. and xlii. 5. Horace (epod. iv.) says, Ibericis peruste funibus latus. The first word S. Jerom seems to have read with th at the end, as peth, means a hole, (C.) by which means it was customary to take wild beasts, and to annoy the enemy. H.—Sept. render side, "they shall be nails in your heels."

VER. 14. This day: shortly I must die. C.—Metam properamus ad unam. (Hor.) "We hasten to one common goal." H.—The pagans called death, or the grave, the common place; and Plautus says, in the same sense, Quin prius me ad plures penetraui. (C.) "Before I penetrate the receptacle of the many." H.—Mind. Heb. "you know in your hearts, and in all your souls;" you are convinced, you cannot be ignorant that God has fulfilled his engagements. C.—The Sept. read, "you shall know," &c. The experience of future ages will only establish this truth more fully. H.

VER. 16. And speedily. This word is added to express the force of the Heb. term. M.—"Punishment is seldom lame in overtaking the wicked." H.—This. He emphatically sets before them what labours they had sustained in making the acquisition, and what ingratitude they will be guilty of, if they ever forfeit so great a blessing. M.—The threat or prediction was verified during the captivity, and still more after the destruction of Jerusalem. C.

CHAP. XXIV. VER. 1. Of Israel. There seems no reason for restricting this to the ancients, &c. On this solemn occasion, when all Israel was probably assembled at one of the great festivals, Josue concluded his exhortation, by renewing the covenant (C.) in the place where he had formerly complied with the (290)

CHAP. XXIV.

Josue assembleth the people, and reneweth the covenant between them and God. His death and burial.

AND^b Josue gathered together all the tribes of Israel in Sichem, and called for the ancients, and the princes, and the judges, and the masters: and they stood in the sight of the Lord:

2 And he spoke thus to the people: Thus saith the Lord the God of Israel: Your fathers dwelt of old on the other side of the river, *Thare, the father of Abraham, and Nachor: and they served strange gods.

3 ^d And I took your father, Abraham, from the borders of Mesopotamia: and brought him into the land of Chanaan: and I multiplied his seed,

4 * And gave him Isaac: ^e and to him again I gave Jacob and Esau. ^f And I gave to Esau Mount Seir for his possession: ^g but Jacob and his children went down into Egypt.

5 ^h And I sent Moses and Aaron, and I struck Egypt with many signs and wonders.

6 ⁱ And I brought you and your fathers out of Egypt, and you came to the sea: ^j and the Egyptians pursued your fathers with chariots and horsemen, as far as the Red Sea.

7 And the children of Israel cried to the Lord: and he put darkness between you and the Egyptians, and brought the sea upon them, and covered them. Your eyes saw all that I did in Egypt, and you dwelt in the wilderness a long time.

8 And I brought you into the land of the Amorrhite, who dwelt beyond the Jordan. ^m And when they fought against you, I delivered them into your hands, and you possessed their land, and slew them.

9 And Balac, son of Sephor, king of Moab, arose and fought against Israel. ⁿ And he sent and called for Balaam, son of Beor, to curse you:

injunction of Moses. C. viii. 31. H.—In Sichem, in the field which Jacob had purchased, and where a great oak (v. 26,) was growing, that had been honoured, it is thought, with the presence of the patriarchs. It was near the two famous mountains of Garizim and Hebal. C.—Sichem was at the foot of the former mountain of blessings; and Josephus informs us, the altar was erected in its vicinity. No fitter place could therefore have been selected by the aged chief, to conclude the actions of his life, and to attach the people to the religion which they had once received, in the most signal manner. The Vat. and Alex. copies (H.) of the Sept. followed by S. Aug. (q. 30,) read Silo, where the tabernacle was fixed: but all the rest agree with the original, and with the ancient versions, in retaining Sichem, to which place the ark was removed on this occasion, (C.) the distance of ten (S. Jer.) or twelve miles. Eus.—It is not probable that an oak would be growing in the sanctuary, near the altar, contrary to the express prohibition of the Lord, v. 26. Deut. xvi. 21. C.—Many interpreters suppose that the assembly might be held at Silo, in the territory of Sichem. T. M. Serarius.—But the distance seems too great; and Bonfrere rather thinks that the copies of the Sept. have been altered. H.—Salien remarks, that they might go in solemn procession from Sichem to Silo. A. 2600.

VER. 2. Of the river. The Euphrates. Ch.—Gods. Some think that Abraham himself was in his youth engaged in the worship of idols, (though this is denied by S. Aug. C. D. xvi. 13. Theod. q. 18, &c. W.) as well as his father, &c. v. 14. Gen. xi. 31. Thare was the father of both Abraham and Nachor, (Gen. xi. 26,) unless (H.) the grandfather (M.) of Abraham be meant, who was also called Nachor, (H.) as well as Rebecca's grandfather. Gen. xxiv. W.

VER. 3. From the. Heb. and Sept. "other side of the flood or river," where Mesopotamia commences. H.

VER. 4. Isaac, the promised seed and heir of the blessings, (C.) after Ismael. was born. H.

VER. 6. You. Many still survived, and had seen these wonders, as God had only exterminated those who had murmured.

VER. 9. Fought, not perhaps with the sword, but by endeavouring to get Israel cursed, that so he might be unable to make any resistance. He had the will to fight, and in this sense princes are said to be at war, though they never come to an engagement. 3 K. xiv. 38. C.—Balac shut his gates against Israel. S. Aug. q. 26.

10 And I would not hear him, but on the contrary I blessed you by him, and I delivered you out of his hand.

11 * And you passed over the Jordan, and you came to Jericho. And the men of that city fought against you, the Amorrhite, and the Pherezite, and the Chanaanite, and the Hethite, and the Gergesite, and the Hevite, and the Jebusite: and I delivered them into your hands.

12 ^b And I sent before you hornets: and I drove them out from their places, the two kings of the Amorrites, not with thy sword, nor with thy bow.

13 And I gave you a land, in which you had not laboured, and cities to dwell in, which you built not, vineyards and olive-yards, which you planted not.

14 ^c Now therefore fear the Lord, and serve him with a perfect and most sincere heart: and put away the gods which your fathers served in Mesopotamia, and in Egypt, and serve the Lord.

15 But if it seem evil to you to serve the Lord, you have your choice: choose this day that which pleaseth you, whom you would rather serve, whether the gods which your fathers served in Mesopotamia, or the gods of the Amorrhites, in whose land you dwell: but as for me and my house we will serve the Lord.

16 And the people answered, and said: God forbid we should leave the Lord, and serve strange gods:

17 The Lord our God he brought us and our fathers out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage: and did very great signs in our sight, and preserved us in all the way by which we journeyed, and among all the people through whom we passed.

18 And he hath cast out all the nations, the Amorrite, the inhabitant of the land, into which we are come. Therefore we will serve the Lord, for he is our God.

19 And Josue said to the people: You will not be able to serve the Lord: for he is a holy God, and mighty and jealous, and will not forgive your wickedness and sins.

20 If you leave the Lord, and serve strange gods, he will turn, and will afflict you, and will destroy you, after all the good he hath done you.

21 And the people said to Josue: No, it shall not be so as thou sayest, but we will serve the Lord.

22 And Josue said to the people: You are witnesses, that you yourselves have chosen you the Lord to serve him. And they answered: We are witnesses.

23 Now therefore, said he, put away strange gods from among you, and incline your hearts to the Lord, the God of Israel.

24 And the people said to Josue: We will serve the Lord our God, and we will be obedient to his commandments.

25 Josue therefore on that day made a covenant,

VER. 11. Men. Heb. "the masters of Jericho," which may denote either the king or the inhabitants. It is thought that people of the different nations were come to defend the city, or the text may signify that not only Jericho, but these different people, (C.) fought successively against the people of God, but all in vain. H.—The fighting of the inhabitants of Jericho was only intentional; a miracle rendered all their efforts abortive. Yet this is called fighting in scripture (v. 9.) as well as in other authors. "We judge of actions by the intention," says S. Isidore (Pelus. ii. ep. 289.) the person who intended to murder is punished, though he only inflicted a wound; and on the other hand, he who kills undesignedly receives a pardon." So Orion was said to have violated Diana, because he wished to do it; and Virgil, (viii.) speaking of some who already thought they were in possession of the capital, says, Galli per dumos aderant, arcemque tenebant, "they seized the citadel," though they never entered it. C.—Yet it is probable that the inhabitants of Jericho would defend themselves. M.

VER. 12. Hornets. S. Aug. explains this of the rumours, or devils, which terrified the people of the country. But it is generally understood literally. Wisd. xii. 8. M. Ex. xxiii. 28. C.—The two, &c. not only the nations on the west, but also those on the east side of the Jordan, who fell, not so much by the valour of the Israelites, as by the terror and judgments of God. H.—The resistance which they made was hardly worth mentioning.

VER. 14. The gods. Some still retained in their hearts an affection for these idols, though privately; (C.) so that Josue could not convict them, or bring them to condign punishment; as no doubt he, and Moses before him, would have done, if they had been apprized of any overt act of idolatry. Amos (v. 26.) says, You carried a tabernacle for your Moloch and the image of your idols, &c. which is confirmed by Eze. xxiii. 3. 8. and Acts vii. 42. For these acts many of the people were punished, (Num. xxv. 3. 9.) and the rest were either sincerely converted, or took care to hide their impiety till after the death of Josue. Yet the secret inclination of many was still corrupt; and these no sooner found a proper opportunity than they relapsed repeatedly into the worship of idols, for which reason the prophets represent their disposition as criminal from their youth. H.—S. Augustine (q. 19.) cannot think that the people, who are so often praised for their fidelity during the administration of Josue and of the ancients, (C. xxii. 2. and xxiii. 3. 8. and xiv. 81.) and who had testified such zeal against every appearance of idolatry in Ruben, (C. xxii.) should be themselves infected with this deadly poison. He therefore supposes that Josue exhorts them to repent, if any of them should have retained a predilection for the worship of their ancestors in Mesopotamia, and in Egypt, (C.) which, by the prophetic light he saw, was secretly the case. W.—Yet, though the great majority was clear of this crime, it seems many concealed from their leaders their secret attachment to it, v. 23; (C.) or if they were sincere, for a time, their former bad habits soon gained the ascendancy, and involved them in perdition. H.—Fathers. He does not exempt Abraham, and the Jews acknowledge that he was once an idolater, which is the opinion of S. Epiphanius, of the author of the Recognitions, B. i., and of many moderns; some of whom think that S. Paul gives him the epithet of impious, or ungodly, on that account. Rom. iv. 5. The idolatry of the Hebrews in Egypt, is no less certain than that of their ancestors in Mesopotamia. Eze. xxiii. 2. S. 27. C.

VER. 15. Choice. Josue was persuaded that no restraint could bind the will; (H.) and that, if the Israelites did not freely adhere to the Lord, they would not serve him long, nor would their adoration have any merit. C.—Hence he endeavours by all means to draw from them a free and candid acknowledgment of his divinity; and he leads the way, by declaring that all his house will adhere to the true and only God. They answer his fullest expectations, and profess in the most cordial manner, that every tie of gratitude must bind them for ever to the service of the same Lord. H.—Elias makes a similar proposition; (8 K. xviii. 21. See Eccl. xv. 18. M.) not that it can be ever lawful to choose evil and to reject the sovereign good. But by this method the minds and hearts of the audience are stimulated to make the free and decided election of what alone can ensure their eternal happiness. H.—Thus we often set before the people hell or heaven for their choice. M.

VER. 19. You will not be able to serve the Lord, &c. This was not said by way of discouraging them; but rather to make them more earnest and resolute, by setting before them the greatness of the undertaking, and the courage and constancy necessary to go through with it. Ch.—Josue knew the fickle temper of his subjects. He insinuates, therefore, that if they do not lay that aside, they will not stand to their engagements, (C.) and will irritate God the more, if they enter into a covenant with him, and afterwards prove inconsistent. Heb. La thuelu, "you cannot," may perhaps have the first u redundant; (Ken.) as that is a letter which is often inserted or omitted at the transcriber's pleasure. Aben Ezra. Simon.—Hallet suggests that we ought to read lo thuelu, "you shall not cease," which would obviate the apparent difficulty of Josue's attempting, as it were, to cool the fervour of the people, by insinuating that they will not be able to stick to their resolutions, and that at a time when he is exerting every nerve to make them sensible of their duty, and to engage them to swear an inviolable fidelity to the Lord. "Cease not to serve the Lord, for he is a holy God, he is a jealous God, he will not forgive your rebellion," (Coppaacos. Job xxxiv. 27.) nor your sins; if you forsake the Lord, and serve strange gods, then he will turn and consume you." Ken. Dis. 2.—If we were to read with an interrogation, "Will you not be able?" &c. it might answer the same end. Josue may be considered as starting an objection, which is but too common in the mouth of the slothful, and of many of the pretended reformers, Luther, &c. who endeavour to persuade the world that they are not able to comply with the rigour of God's law, and even make his severity an encouragement for their despair. Josue replies that these pretences are groundless, and that God, who has already done so much for them, (v. 20.) will not abandon them in their wants, if they cry unto him; and that, instead of being dejected by the thought of his judgments, they ought to strive, with the utmost fervour, to comply with his divine will. H.—A general sometimes withholds the ardour of his soldiers, telling them that they are not a match for the enemy, in order to inflame their courage the more. M.—A torrent which has been long repressed, rushes forward with greater fury when the dam is broken down. H.

VER. 20. Turn, and alter his conduct in your regard, instead of being your protector, he will destroy you.

VER. 21. Lord. We shall not experience the chastisements with which thou hast threatened us, because we will adhere inviolably to the Lord. C.

VER. 25. Covenant. He renewed the one that had been formerly made, stipulating, on the part of God, that the people should serve Him alone, v. 23. After which he probably read some of the most striking passages of Deuteronomy, (C.) particularly the Decalogue, or ten commandments, with the blessings and curses (291) and set before the people commandments and judgments in Sichem.

26 And he wrote all these things in the volume of the law of the Lord: and he took a great stone, and set it under the oak that was in the sanctuary of the Lord:

27 And he said to all the people: Behold this stone shall be a testimony unto you, that it hath heard all the words of the Lord, which he hath spoken to you: lest perhaps hereafter you will deny it, and lie to the Lord your God.

28 And he sent the people away, every one to their own possession.

which enforced the observance of them. C. v. and xxvii. and xxviii. and xxx. H.—Then the people swore that they would observe the law, the customary sacrifices were offered, and a record of the whole was subjoined by Josue to that of Moses, in order that it might be deposited in or near the ark. Deut. xxxi. 26. C.—This renewal of the covenant prefigured the law of grace. S. Aug. q. 30. W.

VER. 26. Lord, particularly what related to the ratification of the covenant, which was the last public act of this great man. He placed it in its proper order in the continuation of the sacred history, which Moses had commenced. H.—Stone unpolished, except where there was an inscription, relating what had taken place. M.—This monument of religion was not forbidden. Deut. xvi. 22. C.—Oak. Heb. alla, is translated a turpentine tree, Gen. xxxv. 4. (II.) and by the Sept. here. But most people translate the oak. Chal. Aquila, &c. Under it Jacob buried the idols of Laban, and Abimelech was chosen king; (Judg. ix. 6,) as Abraham had entertained the angels under the same tree, Gen. xviii. 1, (C,) and had sat under it when he first came into Sichem. Gen. xii. 6. On which supposition it must have subsisted about 500 years. M.—It was even shewn some ages after Christ. But it is hardly credible that the same tree should have continued for such a length of time.—Sanctuary, or tent, where the ark was placed on this occasion under the oak. C. Bonfrere.—Some think it was at Silo. M. v. 1.—Kennicott denies that the ark was present, and supposes that they offered sacrifice upon the very altar which Josue had erected on Garizim, between 20 and 30 years before; and that this mountain is here called the sanctuary, or “holy place.” Upon it the oak might very well grow, and Josue might “with great propriety take some large stone, and set it up for a witness, making at the same time this striking remark, that this stone had heard all the words of the Lord, or had been present when his law was inscribed and read to the people at their former solemn convention.” Hence he infers against Collins, “that the Jews had thoughts of worshipping, and did worship at Garizim long before the separation of Israel from Juda;” and it was probably for fear of the Israelites returning to a sense of their duty, by the sight of these monuments of the old religion, that Jeroboam refrained from setting up his golden calves in the vicinity. Diss. ii. p. 119. H.

VER. 27. It hath heard. This is a figure of speech, by which sensation is attributed to inanimate things; and they are called upon, as it were, to bear witness in favour of the great Creator, whom they on their part constantly obey, (Ch.) which is the best manner of hearing. They rise up to our confusion. Theod. q. 19. W.—The oriental writers delight in these strong figurative expressions, which are not confined to poetry. Jesus Christ says, that if the children were silent, the stones would cry out. Luc. xix. 40. See Num. xiii. 33. Gen. iv. 10. C.—Lest. Heb. “it shall be therefore a witness unto you, lest you deny your God;” or lit. “lie unto your Elohim.” H.—The expression often means to revolt and prove faithless. Deut. xxxiii. 29. &c.

VER. 28. And after, &c. If Josue wrote this book, as is commonly believed, these last verses were added by Samuel, or some other prophet. Ch.—Scholastic Hist. W.—Josue had governed Israel 17 years with the greatest prudence and fidelity. C.—Some extend his administration to a longer period. H.—He paid the debt of nature probably not long after the ratification of the covenant. It does not appear that he was ever married. S. Jerom, c. Jov. 1. S. Chrys.—The Scripture does not mention that the people mourned for him, as they had done for Moses, &c. Yet we cannot doubt but they would shew this mark of respect to his memory, on account of the many benefits which they had received from him. The Holy Ghost has vouchsafed to be his panegyrist. Num. xxvii. 12. Eccli. xlv. 1. &c. Josephus (v. 1.) represents him as a most universal character, equally perfect in every thing that he took in hand. His greatest honour is to have been so striking a figure of Jesus, whose name he bore, (C.) and whose sacred office in administering a second circumcision after he had caused the people to cross the Jordan, he so well described. Like him he introduces the faithful into the land of promise, overthrows their enemies, and establishes them in peace, taking care both at the beginning and at the end of his administration, to set before their eyes the will of the heavenly Father, the God who is both holy and jealous, v. 19. Under Josue the Israelites are invincible, only as long as they continue faithful. C. vii. But Jesus secures his Church both from infidelity and from the attacks of all her enemies, by his all-powerful grace. H.—The Jews have attributed to Josue ten regulations, which are too trifling to have been made by him. Seld. Jur. vi. 2.—The Samaritan chronicle embellishes the account of this great man with many surprising and puerile fictions, as if the true history were not sufficient to excite our attention. See Basnage and Serarius. C.—The Jews say Josue died on the 26th of Nisan, unmarried. The Roman martyrology honours his memory on the 1st of Sept. Salien, A. C. 1453. It is probable that the Egyptian or Tyrene Hercules, who encountered so many giants and difficulties, was no other than Josue, whose history the pagans have obscured with fables. Vossius. H.

29 And after these things Josue, the son of Nun, the servant of the Lord, died, being a hundred and ten years old:

30 And they buried him in the border of his possession, in Thamnathsare, which is situate in Mount Ephraim, on the north side of Mount Gaas.

31 And Israel served the Lord all the days of Josue, and of the ancients that lived a long time after Josue, and that had known all the works of the Lord, which he had done in Israel.

^b Exod. xiii. 9. Gen. xxxiii. 19.

VER. 30. Thamnathsare. Judg. ii. 9. The last word is written hares (eros) the first and last letters being transposed in one of these places. It may probably be in this verse, as we read of Mount Hares, Jud. i. 35. Kennicott rather thinks that Sare is the proper reading, as it is found in the Syr. Arab. and Vulg. versions of the Book of Judges. He observes, that if we were to read in an English historian that the renowned Marlborough was buried at Blenheim, near Woodstock, and a few pages after that his remains were interred “at Blenmeik, &c. we should naturally conclude that two letters had exchanged their places. And may we not allow the same in this part of the sacred history, as it is universally printed” in Hebrew? Dis. i. Some, however, maintain that Thamnath hares was so called, on account of “the image of the sun” being placed in the tomb of Josue, along with the knives of stone used by him in circumcision, which last the Sept. and S. Aug. (q. 30,) admit. But these must be reckoned among the Jewish or Oriental fables, (C.) though it is not improbable but the circumcising knives might be thus preserved, as a monument of the covenant made with the Israelites. H.—Gaas. This was another name for Mount Sare, or Hares, a part of Mount Ephraim; where S. Jerom tells us S. Paula visited the tomb of Josue. It was shewn near Thamma in the days of Eusebius. C.—No mention is made of mourning, as for Moses, &c. to insinuate that under the law the saints descended into limbo, but are admitted into paradise under the gospel. S. Jer. mans. 34. W.

VER. 31. Long time; perhaps fifteen years. These ancients kept the people in order by their authority (C.) and good example, so great an influence have the manners of superiors upon those of the subjects. M.—Regis ad exemplar totius componitur orbis. See 2 Par. xxiv. 2. 16. After the death of these virtuous rulers, who had been formed in the school of Moses and of Josue, and had beheld the wonders of God, (II.) the people began to embrace the worship of Baalim. Judg. ii. 11.

VER. 32. Sichem. Joseph had charged his brethren to take his bones with them. Gen. l. 24. Ex. xiii. 19. Masius supposes that they were solemnly interred after the altar was erected near Sichem, and the covenant ratified, when all the people were together. Others think that they deferred doing this till the country was conquered and divided. Josue would lose no time unnecessarily in performing these last rites to the revered patriarch.—Field. Jacob had given this field to his son. He had first purchased it; (Gen. xxxiii. 19,) and when the Amorrite had taken possession again, after the unhappy affair at Sichem, he recovered it by the sword. Gen. xlviii. 22.—Funes. Heb. Kesita may denote also some species of money, though not perhaps marked with any figure of a lamb, &c. C.—Prot. “pieces of silver.” H.—The mausoleum of Joseph at Sichem, was to be seen in S. Jerom’s time. q. Heb. in Gen. W.

VER. 33. Eleazar, the second high priest, was succeeded by his son Phinees. They were both of a very unexceptionable character. The Holy Ghost says, (Eccli. xlv. 28,) Phinees, the son of Eleazar, is the third in glory, by imitating him (his father or grandfather) in the fear of the Lord, &c. The Jews seem to have adopted the doctrine of Pythagoras, with respect to Phinees, (II.) as they say that he was the man of God, (3 K. ii. 27,) who appeared to Heli, (Trad. Heb. in Reg.) and that he was consulted by Jephthah, and gave him advice to fulfil his vow; that he was the same person with Elias, and with one Phinees, who returned from the captivity with Esdras. 1 Par. ix. 20. They will even have him to be an incarnate angel. Ap. Munster, &c. But without dwelling any longer on these fabulous accounts, (C.) he was surely a man of the greatest zeal and piety. H.—In consideration of his extraordinary merit, the city of Gabaath was given to him, though it was not properly a sacerdotal city, and priests could not regularly possess any land as their inheritance. Grotius supposes that he obtained this city along with his wife, as she was an heiress of the tribe of Ephraim. But if that had been the case, must she not have married some of the same tribe? Num. xxvi. 8. C.—Sept. (Grabe) add, “In that day the children of Israel taking the ark of the covenant of God, carried it about among themselves, and Phinees was priest instead of his father, till he died, and he was buried in Gabaath, his own city. But the Israelites went each to his own place and city; and the children of Israel worshipped Astarte and Aseroth, and the gods of the surrounding nations, and the Lord delivered them into the hands of Eglon, the king of Moab, and he held them in subjection 18 years.” See Judg. iii. 12. 14. Why this is recorded in this place does not appear, unless it be to insinuate that the servitude under Eglon did not commence till after the death of Phinees, who had been high priest 40 years. Abisue, his son, entered upon the pontificate in the first year of the administration of Aod. 1 Par. vi. 4. 50. Salien, A. M. 2641, A. C. 1412. Josue and Eleazar had reigned nearly during the same period of time, and finished their course together. They had assisted each other in keeping the people of God under due restraint. Their successors in office acted with the like zeal and concord, though they were not quite so successful. It is probable that Phinees would have the chief sway in “the aristocracy” of the ancients, which Josephus says took place between Jesus the sons of Hemos, the father of Sichem, for a hundred young ewes, and it was in the possession of the sons of Joseph.

and Othniel. Their government is acknowledged by most authors, though Salien supposes that their authority, as distinct from the Sanhedrim, consisted in giving good example. Many assert that Phinees ruled the people twenty-three years. H.

THE BOOK OF JUDGES.

THIS Book is called JUDGES, because it contains the history of what passed under the government of the judges, who ruled Israel before they had kings. The writer of it, according to the more general opinion, was the prophet Samuel. Ch.—Some are of opinion, that the judges might have each left records of their respective administrations, (M.) which might be put in order by Samuel. The author of this book seems to have lived under the reign of Saul, before David had expelled the Jebusites. C. xviii. 31. D.—The captivity, which is mentioned v. 30, must be understood of that when the ark of God, as well as the idol Michah, and many of the people were taken by the Philistines. Huet.—Many passages of the Psalms, &c. are taken from this book, which shew its antiquity. Ps. lxxvii. 8. 2 K. xi. 21. The divine Providence is here displayed in a very striking manner. D.—The theocracy still subsisted: and God generally chose these judges to be his ministers, and to deliver the people, on their repentance, from some dreadful calamity. H.—They exercised a supreme power, yet without bearing the insignia of regal authority, or imposing taxes, or making any alteration in the established laws. The Suffetes, who were Carthaginian magistrates, seem to have taken their name from these Nsapim. D.—When God did not raise up judges, in an extraordinary manner, a kind of anarchy prevailed. H.—Each of the tribes regarded only their own affairs, and the republic was dissolved. Grotius.—Prosperous and unfortunate days succeeded each other, in proportion as the people gave themselves up to repentance or to dissolution. Sicut se habebunt peccata populi & misericordia Dei, alternaverunt prospera & adversa bellorum. S. Aug. C. D. xviii. 23. S. Jerom (ep. ad Eust. & ad Paulin.) exhorts us to penetrate the spiritual sense of the historical books, and he regards “the judges as so many figures” of the apostles, who established the church of Christ. Though some of them had been noted for their misconduct, they were reclaimed by the grace of God. Then all the judges, every one by name, whose heart was not corrupted, who turned not away from the Lord, that their memory might be blessed, &c. Eccli. xlv. 13. 14. W.—S. Paul mentions four of them, though the conduct of Jephthah and of Samson might have been regarded as more exceptionable than that of Othniel, who is said to have been filled with the spirit of the Lord. C. iii. 10. Serarius doubts not but they are all in heaven. Salien (A. 2640.) supposes that the transactions recorded in the five last chapters, took place before this 40th year from the death of Josue, which was the last of Othniel. With respect to the chronology of these times, there are many opinions. Houbigant endeavours to shew that the system of Usher is inadmissible, as well as that of Petau. Marsham maintains that many of the captivities, and of the Judges, related only to some tribes, so that the different years which are specified, must be referred to the same period of time. Thus while Jephthah ruled over those on the east side of the Jordan, and fought against the Ammonites, other judges endeavoured to repel the armies of the Philistines on the west. See 3 K. vi. 1. Judg. xi. 16. By this expedient, he finds no difficulty in shewing that 480 years elapsed from the departure out of Egypt till the building of the temple, and that the Israelites had occupied the country of the Ammonites during the space of 300 years. H.—Houbigant seems to adopt this system in some respects, and he thinks that errors have crept into some of the numbers, so that Aod procured a peace of only 20 instead of 80 years, &c. He observes that the name of judge here designates, 1. A warrior, like Samson; 2. a person who passes sentence according to the law, which was the office of Heli; 3. one divinely commissioned to exercise the sovereign authority, as Samuel did, even after Saul had been elected king. Proleg. Chronol. Others have compared the power of these judges with that of the Roman Dictators, or the Archontes of Athens. Serarius.—They were properly God’s lieutenants. Their revenue seems to have been very precarious, and their exterior deportment modest and unassuming. They were guided by the declarations of the high priests, when arrayed with the Urim and Thummim; and their business was to promote the observance of the true religion, and to defend the people of God. This book concludes with the history of Samson, describing the transactions of 317 years, (C.) according to the calculation of Usher, which has met with the approbation of many of the learned, and is therefore chiefly inserted in this edition, as it was in that which was published in 1791, at Dublin, by the care of the Rev. B. Mac Mahon, who seems to have made some alterations. It is not indeed free from many serious difficulties. But we have not leisure to examine them at present. See C. iii. 11. 30. We shall only subjoin the chronological table of Houbigant, which is not very common, that the reader may perceive where they are chiefly at variance. Moses governed 40 years, Josue 20, the Ancients 20, king of Mesopotamia 8, Othniel 40, Moadites 18, Aod 20, Sangar 0, the Chanaanites 20, Deborah and Barak 40, Madianites 7, Gideon 40, Abimelech 3, Thola 23, Ammonites 0, Jair 22, Jephthah 6, Abesah 7, Ahialon 10, Abdon 8, Philistines 0, Samson 20, and with Heli 20, Heli and Samuel 25, Samuel and Saul 20, David 40, Solomon 3. In the 4th year of his reign the temple was begun, 480 years after the liberation from Egypt. Those to whom no years are assigned, lived at the same time with others whose years enter into the calculation. Thus Sangar gained a victory over the Philistines, while the Chanaanites held the Israelites in subjection. C. iii. 31. For other particulars we must refer to the author. Chron. sacra. H.

CHAP. I.

The expedition and victory of Juda against the Chanaanites. who are tolerated in many places.

AFTER the death of Josue, the children of Israel consulted the Lord, saying: Who shall go up before us against the Chanaanite, and shall be the leader of the war?

2 And the Lord said: Juda shall go up: behold I have delivered the land into his hands.

* A. M. 2570, A. C. 1484.

CHAP. I. VER. 1. After. Heb. “And after,” as if this consultation had taken place immediately after the decease of their late victorious general, who had not pointed out his successor. But it is probable that the ancients who governed in their respective tribes, (C.) were only roused to this act of vigour some time after, on seeing the preparations of the Chanaanites, particularly of Adonibezec, whose power became very alarming. H.—Indeed it is wonderful how he had escaped the vigilance of Josue, if he had been king during the lifetime (C.) of that enterprising leader. It is therefore more likely that he took advantage of the lethargy of the Israelites after his death, and rose to a degree of eminence, which made the people of God consult the high priest, how they were to resist his efforts, (H.) who was to be their generalissimo, (C.) or which of the tribes was to make head against him. M.—God only gave answer to the last question, and it does not appear that all Israel was engaged in this war. After the defeat of the king, the different tribes might easily have subdued the enemies who held possession of part of their territory, if they had been vigorous.

3 And Juda said to Simeon, his brother: Come up with me into my lot, and fight against the Chanaanite, that I also may go along with thee into thy lot. And Simeon went with him.

4 And Juda went up, and the Lord delivered the Chanaanite, and the Pherezite into their hands: and they slew of them in Bezeck ten thousand men.

5 And they found Adonibezec in Bezeck, and fought against him, and they defeated the Chanaanite, and the Pherezite.

VER. 2. Said, by the mouth of Phinees, (Josephus v. 2.) who had succeeded Eleazar in the pontificate. The latter survived Josue some little time, so that this must have happened some time later. Le Clerc offers violence to the text, when he asserts that the war against Adonibezec took place under the government of Josue.—Juda. Some suppose that this is the name of the leader: but most people conclude from the sequel, that it designated the tribe. C.—The first judge was of this tribe, but not all of them. The manner of consulting the Lord was by the high priest praying before the tabernacle. Ex. xxix. W.

VER. 3. Brother. They had the same mother, Lia, and were intermixed in the same country. The two tribes unite both for the public and their own private advantage. The king whom they attacked first, did not dwell in the territory of Juda, as the others did, whom they defeated in this chapter.

VER. 4. Pherezite. This name denotes “a countryman,” as the former does “a merchant.” None of the children of Chanaan were of this appellation. Gen. x. 15. The people of the country assembled therefore at Bezeck, where Saul called 6 And Adonibezec fled: and they pursued after him and took him, and cut off his fingers and toes.

7 And Adonibezec said: Seventy kings, having their fingers and toes cut off, gathered up the leavings of the meat under my table: as I have done, so hath God requited me. And they brought him to Jerusalem, and he died there.

8 And the children of Juda besieging Jerusalem, took it, and put it to the sword, and set the whole city on fire.

9 And afterwards they went down and fought against the Chanaanite, who dwelt in the mountains, and in the south, and in the plains.

10 * And Juda going forward against the Chanaanite, that dwelt in Hebron, (the name whereof was in former times Cariatharbe) slew Sesai, and Ahiman, and Tholmai:

11 And departing from thence, he went to the inhabitants of Dabir, the ancient name of which was Cariath-sepher, that is, the city of letters.

12 And Caleb said: He that shall take Cariath-sepher, and lay it waste, to him will I give my daughter Axa to wife.

13 And Othoniel, the son of Cenez, the younger brother of Caleb, having taken it, he gave him Axa his daughter to wife.

14 And as she was going on her way, her husband admonished her to ask a field of her father. And as she sighed sitting on her ass, Caleb said to her: What wileth thee?

* Jos. xv. 14.

a rendezvous when he was going to attack Jaba, and which seems to have been near the Jordan, 17 miles from Sichem. Eus. S. Jer.—It signifies "lightning." A place of this name lies to the west of Bethlehem. M.

VER. 5. Adonibezec, "Lord of Beze." The cruelty of this tyrant, and the oppression which he probably made some of the Israelites suffer, roused their attention, and they treated him as he had treated others. He had perhaps recourse to such a cruel expedient, to disable his enemies from ever entering the lists against him afterwards, as the Athenians, who cut off the fingers of the inhabitants of Egina, that these islanders might not dispute with them the empire of the sea. Cic. Offic. 3. Some have thus waimed themselves that they might be exempted from going to war, a practice not unusual among the Romans; and the Italian word poltron, signifies one whose fingers are cut off, as it was supposed, out of cowardice. David ordered the hands and the feet of the murderers of Ishboeth to be cut off, and this sort of punishment is common in the eastern countries. Eight hundred Greeks who had been treated in this manner by the Persians, presented themselves to Alexander, at Persopolis, to implore his protection. Curt. &c.

VER. 7. Table, at different times. H.—These were probably princes of some cities of Chanaan, who had been conquered by the tyrant. He obliged them to feed, like dogs, of what he threw down from his splendid table. Thus Sesostris made the kings whom he had overcome, drag his chariot. Sapor forced the Emperor Valerian to serve as a footstool, when he got on horseback. Tamerlane fed Bajazet in a cage, like a wild beast. Jovius, &c. C.—Me. So true is that Wisd. (xi. 17), by what things a man sinneth, by the same also he is tormented. M.

VER. 8. Jerusalem. This city was divided into two; one part was called Jebus, the other Salem; the one was in the tribe of Juda, the other in the tribe of Benjamin. After it was taken and burnt by the men of Juda, it was quickly rebuilt again by the Jebusites, as we may gather from v. 21, and continued in their possession till it was taken by king David. Ch.—Fire. They treated it with such severity, because it seems to have revolted, (Serarius) though the text of Josue (x. 25), only says that the king was slain. But (C. xv. 63. and here) v. 21. it is said, that the children of Juda and of Benjamin dwelt along with the Jebusites.

VER. 9. Plains, towards the west, which were very fruitful. They did not expel all the inhabitants from this part, as they had done from the mountains, which lay on the south of the promised land, v. 19. C.

VER. 10. Hebron. This expedition against Hebron, &c. is the same as is related Jos. xv. 24. It is here repeated, to give the reader at once a short sketch of all the achievements of the tribe of Juda against the Chanaanites. Ch.—Josue had taken Hebron before: (Jos. x. 37.) and Caleb retakes it. C.

VER. 11. The city of letters. Perhaps so called, from some famous school or library kept there. Ch.—The explanation, that is, &c. is added by the Vulg. H.—Madrid, in Arabic, means "the mother of sciences." M.

VER. 13. Brother, or near relation, but much younger. See Jos. xv. 17. C.

VER. 16. The Cinite. Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, was called Cinicus, or the Cinite; and his children, who came along with the children of Israel, settled themselves among them in the land of Chanaan, embracing their worship and religion. From these the Rechabites sprang, of whom See Jerem. xxxv.—(294)

15 But she answered: Give me a blessing, for thou hast given me a dry land: give me also a watery land. So Caleb gave her the upper and the nether watery ground.

16 And the children of the Cinite, the kinsman of Moses, went up from the city of palms, with the children of Juda, into the wilderness of his lot, which is at the south side of Arad, and they dwelt with him.

17 And Juda went with Simeon, his brother, and they together defeated the Chanaanites that dwelt in Sephaath, and slew them. And the name of the city was called Horma, that is, Anathema.

18 And Juda took Gaza, with its confines, and Ascalon, and Accaron, with their confines, 19 And the Lord was with Juda, and he possessed the hill country: but was not able to destroy the inhabitants of the valley, because they had many chariots armed with scythes.

20 And they gave Hebron to Caleb, ^aas Moses had said, who destroyed out of it the three sons of Enac.

21 But the sons of Benjamin did not destroy the Jebusites that inhabited Jerusalem: and the Jebusite hath dwelt with the sons of Benjamin in Jerusalem until this present day.

22 The house of Joseph also went up against Bethel, and the Lord was with them.

23 For when they were besieging the city, which before was called Luza,

^b Num. xiv. 24. Jos. xv. 14.

The city of palms. Jericho, so called from the abundance of palm-trees, (Ch.) or rather Engaddi, which is sometimes called Hazazon-Thamar, on that account. It lies nearer to the Dead Sea. Jericho was not rebuilt till the reign of Ahab. See Jos. vi. 26.—Arad was one of the most southern towns of Juda, near the country of the Amalecites. Saul ordered the descendants of Jethro to depart from among them. 1 K. xv. 6. The Israelites had defeated the king of Arad long before. Num. xxi. 1. C.—With him. Heb. "the people" of Israel, (M.) or of Arad. C.

VER. 17. Sephaath, near Maresa, where Asa defeated the king of Arabia. 2 Par. xiv. 9. It was also called Sephata, and afterwards Horma. C.—Sept. "they anathematized it, and utterly destroyed it, and they called the city Ecclethreasis, "utter ruin." H.—Whether they had engaged themselves by vow to do so, or they treated the city in this manner in thanksgiving for the victory, is uncertain. M.

VER. 18. Gaza, &c. These were three of the principal cities of the Philistines, famous both in sacred and profane history. They were taken at this time by the Israelites; but as they took no care to put garrisons in them, the Philistines soon recovered them again, (Ch.) or perhaps the villages and territory were only seized by Juda; the cities being too well defended. Josue had not attacked them. Jos. xii. 3. Josephus says that only Ascalon and Azotus, in the plain, fell into the hands of the Israelites; and the Roman Sept. reads with a negation, (C.) which is inserted by Grabe in his edition as an interpolation, or as a peculiarity of the Alex. MSS. "and Juda did [not] possess Gaza with its dependencies, and Ascalon . . . and Accaron . . . and Azotus, with its fields around." H.—The situation of Gaza, Ascalon and Accaron in the plain, would seem to secure them from being captured, v. 19. S. Aug. and Procopius admit the negation. But the original and all the versions reject it, so that the children of Juda must have had possession of these cities at least for a short time. C. See C. xv. and xvi. 1 K. vi. 17. M.

VER. 19. Was not able, &c. Through a cowardly fear of their chariots armed with hooks and scythes, and for want of confidence in God. Ch.—Heb. does not say expressly that Juda could not: quia non ad expellendum, &c. He had not the courage or the will. With God's assistance, what had he to fear? Were these Philistines with their chariots, more terrible than the giants in their fortresses?—Scythes. Heb. receb barzel, "chariots of iron." C.—The Rom. and Alex. Sept. have "Rechab was opposed to them." H.—The edit. of Basil adds, "and they had chariots of iron," as S. Aug. (q. 5) reads. A double translation is thus given. C.—These chariots were calculated to cut down all that came in contact with them. Curt. iv. W.

VER. 20. Enac, mentioned v. 10. Sept. add, that "he took the three cities . . . and destroyed," &c. See Jos. xv. 14. H.

VER. 21. Day, before the reign of David. See Jos. xv. 63. The Jebusite occupied the citadel, &c. C.

VER. 22. Of Joseph, on the west side of the Jordan, attacked Bethel, which it does not appear that Josue molested. H.—Instead of house, some Heb. MSS. and the Arab. and Sept. read, "the sons," which seems to be the better reading. Kennicott.

VER. 23. Besieging. Heb. "sent to desery," or they came upon it like spies.

24 They saw a man coming out of the city, and they said to him: Shew us the entrance into the city, and we will shew thee mercy.

25 And when he had shewed them, they smote the city with the edge of the sword: but that man, and all his kindred, they let go:

26 Who being sent away, went into the land of Hethim, and built there a city, and called it Luza: which is so called until this day.

27 Manasses also did not destroy Bethsan, and Thanaac, with their villages; nor the inhabitants of Dor, and Jebelaam, and Mageddo, with their villages. And the Chanaanite began to dwell with them.

28 But after Israel was grown strong, he made them tributaries, and would not destroy them.

29 Ephraim also did not slay the Chanaanite that dwelt in Gazer, but dwelt with him.

30 Zabulon destroyed not the inhabitants of Cetron, and Naalol: but the Chanaanite dwelt among them, and became their tributary.

31 Aser also destroyed not the inhabitants of Accho, and of Sidon, of Ahalab, and of Achazib, and of Helba, and of Aphec, and of Rohob:

32 And he dwelt in the midst of the Chanaanites, the inhabitants of that land, and did not slay them.

33 Nephthali also destroyed not the inhabitants of Bethsames, and of Bethanath: and he dwelt in the midst of the Chanaanites, the inhabitants of the land, and the Bethsamites and Bethanites were tributaries to him.

34 And the Amorrite straitened the children of Dan in the mountain, and gave them not a place to go down to the plain:

35 And he dwelt in the mountain Hares, that is, of potsherds, in Aialon and Salebim. And the hand of the house of Joseph was heavy upon him, and he became tributary to him.

36 And the border of the Amorrite was from the ascent of the scorpion, the rock, and the higher places.

CHAP. II.

An angel reproveth Israel. They weep for their sins. After the death of Josue, they often fall, and repenting, are delivered from their afflictions; but still fall worse and worse.

AND an angel of the Lord went up from Galgal to the place of weepers, and said: I made you go out of Egypt, and have brought you into the land for which I swore to your fathers: and I promised that I would not make void my covenant with you for ever:

2 On condition that you should not make a league with the inhabitants of this land, but should throw down their altars: and you would not hear my voice: why have you done this?

3 Wherefore I would not destroy them from before your face; that you may have enemies, and their gods may be your ruin.

4 And when the angel of the Lord spoke these words to all the children of Israel: they lifted up their voice, and wept.

5 And the name of that place was called, The place of weepers, or of tears: and there they offered sacrifices to the Lord.

6 And Josue sent away the people, and the children of Israel went every one to his own possession to hold it:

7 And they served the Lord all his days, and the days of the ancients, that lived a long time after him, and who knew all the works of the Lord, which he had done for Israel.

a Jos. xxiv. 28.

VER. 24. Mercy. The city belonged of right to them, so that they might use this means, as they were not bound to enquire by what motives the man was actuated thus to betray his country. He might be convinced, like Rahab, that God had granted it to the Israelites, and these might justly requite his good dispositions and suffer him to depart in peace. Bonf. Grot. C.

VER. 26. Hethim. The Hethite lived towards the south of Chanaan. The man probably retired into the stony Arabia, where we find the city of Lusa or Flysa. Ptolemy v. 16.—He gave it this name in memory of his native city, (C.) which was called Luza, or "of nuts." M.

VER. 27. Bethsan, &c. See Jos. xvii. 11.—Began. Heb. "would dwell." H.—The Israelites sinfully acquiesced, partly through slothfulness and the dislike of war, and partly that they might receive tribute from the Chanaanites. M.

VER. 28. Them. We shall see the punishment of their prevarication during the greatest part of this book. C.

VER. 31. Accho. Heb. haco, The Greeks not knowing the derivation of this word, supposed that the city was so called from ake, "a remedy," as they pretend that Hercules was cured in this place. It was also called Ptolemais, after the king of Egypt. The little river Belus, and the famous bed of sand so proper for making glass, were in the neighbourhood. Plin. v. 19.—Ahalab. The situation is unknown, unless it be Aleppo. They say it is the famous city of Berea. C.

VER. 35. He dwelt. That is, the Amorrite. Ch.—Heb. "But the Amorrites would dwell in Mount Hares, in Aialon, and in Salebim." Some copies of the Sept. seem to give the meaning of these proper names, though inaccurately. H.—Solomon had one of his twelve officers at Salebim, in the tribe of Dan. 3 K. iv. 9.

VER. 36. Rock, Petra, the capital of Arabia, which Josephus (iii. 2.) assigns to Amalec. The Amorrites dwell in many parts of the land of promise, (C.) particularly in the higher places about the Dead Sea. II.

CHAP. II. VER. 1. An angel. Taking the shape of a man, (Ch.) such as had appeared to Josue, (C. v. 13. M.) the guardian angel of Israel. H.—The Jews commonly suppose that it was Phinees, the high priest. Mal. ii. 8. Drusus. But he might be dead with the rest of the ancients when this took place, as the Israelites seem to have experienced many difficulties in consequence of their repeated prevarications, before this messenger was sent to them. He might very probably be some prophet, who speaks in the name of God, (Agg. i. 13.) as he is said to come not from heaven, but from Galgal to the place of weepers. Heb. at Habbocim, "the mulberry trees." Sept. Klauthnon. This place, the valley of tears, (Pa. lxxxi. 7.) perhaps received his name afterwards, from what happened, v. 4. Some suppose it designates Silo, where the people might be assembled on some great festival, and where sacrifice was offered, v. 5. Bonfrere collects from the Sept. and Josephus, (vii. 4.) that it lay beyond the vale of the Raphaim, on the south side of Jerusalem, (M.) where this messenger might summon the people together, and authorize them to offer sacrifice, as was frequently done (C.) by dispensation (H.) at a distance from the tabernacle. C. vi. 20. and xiii. 19.—I made. If he was an angel, his authority could not be called in question; and if he was the high priest, or a prophet known to the people, they would hear him with attention and respect. C.—He appeared at least in human form, and spoke in the name of God W. Jos. v.

VER. 2. League. None of a public nature had been perhaps made by the whole nation, to sanction the idolatry of the Chanaanites. But so many individuals had entered into marriages with them and imitated their perverse manners, so many tribes had spared the cities, &c. that the Israelites in general merited the reprimand. Whether these leagues, made in contradiction to God's command, were to be observed or broken, is a matter of dispute. We may steer a middle course, and assert that such agreements as stipulated the protection of the idolatrous worship and altars, were null, and never to be observed; whereas those which secured to the inhabitants their lives and property, could not be lawfully broken, though the contractors did wrong in making such leagues. See 1 Esd. ix. C.

VER. 3. Ruin. Sept. "stumbling-block," the occasion of ruin. M.—Thus by a false compassion (C.) and negligence, the Israelites brought upon themselves the most serious difficulties, while those whom they had spared, turned against them by a just judgment of God, and proved the ruin both of their souls and bodies, by drawing them into idolatry and then putting them to the sword. H.

VER. 5. Lord: holocausts to acknowledge his dominion, and sacrifices of expiation for the transgressions of the people. Only the tabernacle and temple were appointed for such sacrifices, though they might be offered elsewhere by dispensation. S. Aug. q. 36. W.

VER. 6. And Josue, &c. This is here inserted out of Josue, (xxiv.) by way of recapitulation of what had happened before, and by way of an introduction to that which follows. Ch.—The sacred penman gives a short description of the general conduct of the Israelites, shewing how they abandoned their former fidelity, after Josue and the elders were no more, and in consequence were severely punished. Upon their repentance, God shewed them mercy again and again, as will be explained more at large (H.) in the subsequent chapters. Salien and some others have hence inferred, that Josue was living when the angel made this reproach. C.—But that is contradicted by many passages in the Book of Josue, where the fidelity of the people is commended, as well as here, v. 7; and C. i. we read of the death of Josue, so that S. Aug. (q. 14.) says, "there can be no doubt but this is a recapitulation." M.—As little had been said before, to enable us to see the grounds of the accusation, these few remarks are subjoined to justify the words of the angel, who appeared while the people was groaning under the afflictions which their sins had deserved. C.

8 And Josue, the son of Nun, the servant of the Lord, died, being a hundred and ten years old;

9 And they buried him in the borders of his possession in Thamnathsare, in Mount Ephraim, on the north side of Mount Gaas.

10 And all that generation was gathered to their fathers: and there arose others that knew not the Lord, and the works which he had done for Israel.

11 And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and they served Baalim.

12 And they left the Lord, the God of their fathers, who had brought them out of the land of Egypt: and they followed strange gods, and the gods of the people that dwelt round about them, and they adored them: and they provoked the Lord to anger, 13 Forsaking him, and serving Baal and Astaroth.

14 And the Lord being angry against Israel, delivered them into the hands of plunderers: who took them and sold them to their enemies, that dwelt round about: neither could they stand against their enemies:

15 But whithersoever they meant to go, the hand of the Lord was upon them, as he had said, and as he had sworn to them: and they were greatly distressed.

16 And the Lord raised up judges, to deliver them from the hands of those that oppressed them: but they would not hearken to them, 17 Committing fornication with strange gods, and adoring them. They quickly forsook the way, in which their fathers had walked: and hearing the commandments of the Lord, they did all things contrary.

18 And when the Lord raised them up judges, in their days, he was moved to mercy, and heard the groanings of the afflicted, and delivered them from the slaughter of the oppressors.

19 But after the judge was dead, they returned, and did much worse things than their fathers had done, following strange gods, serving them, and adoring them. They left not their own inventions, and the stubborn way, by which they were accustomed to walk.

20 And the wrath of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he said: Behold this nation hath made void my covenant, which I had made with their fathers, and hath despised to hearken to my voice:

21 I also will not destroy the nations which Josue left when he died:

22 That through them I may try Israel, whether they will keep the way of the Lord, and walk in it, as their fathers kept it, or not.

23 The Lord therefore left all these nations, and would not quickly destroy them, neither did he deliver them into the hands of Josue.

CHAP. III.

The people falling into idolatry, are oppressed by their enemies; but repenting are delivered by Othniel, Aod, and Samgar.

THESE are the nations which the Lord left, that by them he might instruct Israel, and all that had not known the wars of the Chanaanites;

2 That afterwards their children might learn to fight with their enemies, and to be trained up to war:

3 The five princes of the Philistines, and all the Chanaanites, and the Sidonians, and the Hevites that dwelt

VER. 10. Fathers. These expressions prove the immortality of the soul. Job xxxiv. 4. &c. Knew not, or did not approve or cordially serve the Lord. His tabernacle was still at Silo. But many joined the worship of idols with that of the true God, (C.) and light and darkness can never agree. H.

VER. 12. They followed strange gods. What is here said of the children of Israel, as to their falling so often into idolatry, is to be understood of a great part of them; but not so universally, as if the true worship of God was ever quite abolished among them: for the succession of the true church and religion was kept up all this time by the priests and Levites, at least in the house of God in Silo. Ch.—At different times God raised up deliverers, who were taken from among his people, and no doubt abhorred the impiety of the multitude.

VER. 13. Baal, "Lord," a title given to many of the idols, (H.) both male and female. M.—They are often distinguished by some additional name, as Beelzebub, "fly," and berith, "covenant," gods adored at Accaron and Sichem. Under this name the pagans adored heaven or the sun, (C.) as Astaroth denoted some female deity, the moon, Venus, &c. M.

VER. 14. Who took. Heb. "that spoiled them, and he sold" or abandoned them, &c. C.

VER. 16. Them, for any long time. Their inconstancy was astonishing. H.—These judges raised up by God, or chosen by the people under his direction, often rescued Israel from servitude; and during the remainder of their lives, watched to see the laws put in execution, being assisted by the counsels of the senators (M.) and magistrates of the nation. H.—They were commissioned to rescue the penitent and suffering Israelites. W.

VER. 17. Quickly. They had persevered in virtue under the government of Josue and of the elders, for the space of forty years, according to Marsham and Houbigant. The former places the first state of anarchy and of idolatry 34 years after Josue, allowing 15 years for the administration of the surviving ancients, and the remainder to bring the nation to such a pitch of wickedness as to force God to abandon it to the dominion of Chusan, for eight years.—Walked. Heb. and Sept. "walked, obeying the commands of the Lord: they did not so."

VER. 18. Moved, &c. Heb. and Sept. "and the Lord was with the judge, and delivered them out of the hand of their enemies all the days of the judge, (for it repented the Lord (Sept. he was moved to compassion) on account of their groans, &c.) H.—The repentance of God denotes a change of conduct in our regard. C.—Delivered. Hence the judges have the title of Saviour. C. iii. 9. 2 Esd. ix. 27. M.

VER. 19. And did. Heb. "and corrupted themselves." Sept. "were more depraved than," &c.—By which, &c. is put instead of the Heb. "their stubborn (or hard) (H.) Chal. 'corrupt' way." This hard and rough path denotes the labours which the wicked have to encounter, in the pursuit of pleasure, as they themselves confess. We wearied ourselves in the way of iniquity, and have walked through hard ways. Wisd. v. 7. C.—Though the life of the libertine seem delightful, it draws on the most serious evils and provokes the anger of God. M.

VER. 21. Nations. Heb. "any." Sept. "a man of those nations," which must be understood, unless the Israelites return to a proper sense of their duty. For then he destroyed not only individuals, but whole armies, by the hand of the judges. Yet we do not find that such havoc was made among the infidels afterwards, as had been made in the days of Josue. They frequently rose up and harassed the Israelites; and God suffered them to do so, that the latter might learn to know themselves, and might perceive how dreadful a thing it is not to comply, at first, with his injunctions. H.

VER. 22. Or not. The secrets of hearts cannot be hidden from the omniscience of God. C.—But he would have an experimental knowledge of the fidelity of his people, by leaving these nations in the midst of them. It was partly on this account that he withheld the sword of Josue, who would otherwise have easily followed up his victories, and exterminated all the inhabitants. The cowardice and secret indispositions of the people was another obstacle. H.—God acted like a person who distrusted the fidelity of his servant, and left something in his way to see if he would steal it. C.

CHAP. III. VER. 1. Instruct. The original is translated try, v. 4, and C. ii. 22.—And all. Heb. "as many of Israel as had not," &c. H.—Those who had served under Josue, were so strongly impressed with a sense of the divine power and severity, that they never forgot them: but there was danger lest their children should grow careless, if they were suffered to enjoy a constant state of prosperity. Virtue or power is made perfect in infirmity. 2 Cor. xii. 9. C.—He that hath been experienced in many things, multiplieth prudence. Eccli. xxxiv. 10.

VER. 2. And be. Heb. "at least, such as before knew nothing thereof." Though war be in itself an evil, the passions of men render it necessary, and God makes use of it as of a scourge, to punish the wicked, and at the same time to keep all under due restraint. H.—Too long a peace has proved sometimes fatal to states and to the virtue of individuals. In adversity we call upon God, and adhere to him with greater fervour and constancy. The Jews were so prone to evil, that, if they were permitted to enjoy tranquillity for a few years, they presently forgot themselves and the author of all their good, and even turned their backs upon the only true God. Their enemies forced them to have recourse to Him. C.

VER. 3. Princes, (satrapas) a Persian word. M.—These heads of the five great cities of the Philistines, are called Seranim, (H.) but never kings, whether they were governors of so many petty states, united in the same form of republican or aristocratical government, or independent of each other. See Jos. xiii. Three of these cities are said to have been taken by Juda, (C. i. 18,) unless the Sept. be more accurate, as this passage would seem to insinuate. C.—They might have thrown off the yoke in a short time, as we before observed. These five cities were Gaza, Geth, Ascalon, Azotus, and Accaron. H.—All but Geth were on the Mediterranean sea. C.—All the Chanaanites, &c. who dwell in Libanus, with some others, who were dispersed through the country, v. 5. H.—These chiefly inhabited the environs of Sidon.—Baal Hermon. The idol of Baal might probably be adored on this mountain. M.—We find Baal-gad in the same neighbourhood, and both may mean the same city. C.

4 And he left them, that he might try Israel by them, whether they would hear the commandments of the Lord, which he had commanded their fathers, by the hand of Moses, or not.

5 So the children of Israel dwelt in the midst of the Chanaanite, and the Hethite, and the Amorrite, and the Pherezite, and the Hevite, and the Jebusite:

6 And they took their daughters to wives, and they gave their own daughters to their sons, and they served their gods.

7 And they did evil in the sight of the Lord, and they forgot their God, and served Baalim and Astaroth.

8 And the Lord being angry with Israel, delivered them into the hands of Chusan Rasathaim, king of Mesopotamia, and they served him eight years.

9 And they cried to the Lord, who raised them up a saviour, and delivered them; to wit, Othoniel, the son of Cenez, the younger brother of Caleb:

10 And the spirit of the Lord was in him, and he judged Israel. And he went out to fight, and the Lord delivered Chusan Rasathaim, king of Syria, and he overthrew him:

11 And the land rested forty years, and Othoniel, the son of Cenez, died.

12 And the children of Israel did evil again in the sight of the Lord: who strengthened against them Eglon, king of Moab: because they did evil in his sight.

13 And he joined to him the children of Ammon, and Amalec: and he went and overthrew Israel, and possessed the city of palm-trees.

14 And the children of Israel served Eglon, king of Moab, eighteen years.

15 And afterwards they cried to the Lord, who raised them up a saviour, called Aod, the son of Gera, the son of Jemini, who used the left hand as well as the right. And the children of Israel sent presents to Eglon, king of Moab, by him.

16 And he made himself a two-edged sword, with a haft in the midst, of the length of the palm of the hand, and was girded therewith, under his garment, on the right thigh.

17 And he presented the gifts to Eglon, king of Moab. Now Eglon was exceeding fat.

VER. 4. Not. Various reasons are assigned, on the part of God, for not exterminating these nations at once. But their being spared so long, must be imputed to the disobedience of the Israelites, otherwise they would surely never have been tolerated with their idol-worship in the land of promise, to contaminate, by their wicked example, the manners of God's people. If they would have redeemed their lives, they must at least have given up the land and their idols. As the Israelites proved so little zealous in destroying the latter, they were justly punished by God, in being deprived of what would have contributed to make them richer and more comfortable in this world. H.

VER. 6. Gods. This was the fatal consequence which God had foretold. Deut. vii. 4. H.

VER. 7. Astaroth. Heb. Asheroth, Sept. "the groves," (M.) of which Astaroth was the goddess, (C.) like Diana. C. ii. 11. Various trees were sacred to idols. M.

VER. 8. Chusan. This name leads us to conclude that this prince was of Scythian extraction, a descendant of Chus: (C.) it signifies "black, or an Ethiopian." M.—Rasathaim was perhaps the place of his nativity. As it means "of two sorts of malice," Arias thinks that the Syrian kings took this title to shew that they would punish or repress all crimes against the civil or criminal law, (M.) those which affected the property as well as the lives of their subjects. H.—Mesopotamia. In Hebrew Aran naharayim. Syria of the two rivers; so called because it lies between the Euphrates and the Tigris. It is absolutely called Syria, v. 10. Ch.—Eight years, by manual labour and presents, testifying their submission to their oppressor, who might not perhaps live among them. C.—Moi's edition, by mistake, reads eighty years. The Hebrews were equally fallible. C. iii. 30. H.

VER. 9. Saviour. "We must remark, that the man by whom God grants us safety, is styled a saviour," (S. Aug. q. 18,) though Christ is the proper and principal Saviour. W.—Caleb. Sept. "the younger son of Cenez, who was the brother of Caleb." H.—Othoniel was one of the ancients. If he could not prevent the people from falling into idolatry, he rescued them from it. C.

VER. 10. In him, to instruct and enable him both to rout the enemy, and to govern the people with prudence. H.—Chal, "the spirit of prophecy." The oracle excited him to attack Chusan. Joseph. v. 3. He was entrusted with an extraordinary authority, in a wonderful manner, and God gave him all those virtues which were requisite for his exalted station. C.—Him. Heb. "his hand was strong upon Chusan Rasathaim." He gained a complete victory over him, (H.) the particulars of which are not mentioned, though they must have been very interesting and extraordinary, as the power of Chusan was so extensive. C.

VER. 11. Died, "forty years after Josue, according to the chronology of Usher, which we follow," (C.) or rather Usher translates the land began to rest "in the fortieth year" from the peace of Josue. He places the death of that leader A. 2570, and the end of Chusan's dominion 2599; so that, if we deduct 40 years from this last date, we shall come to the year 2559, the sixth of Josue's administration, when he began to divide the conquered lands. He supposes that the peace of Othoniel lasted about 62 years, when Eglon disturbed it for eighteen years. "Aod delivered Israel. After him Sangar appeared, and the land rested till the 80th year from the peace of Othoniel." Houbigant censures this indiscriminate use of cardinal and of ordinal numbers, and the blending the times of servitude with those of peace; (H.) and "surely this method of reckoning is very harsh, and contrary to the usual acceptation of words." C.—Yet it is adopted by many. W.—It may suit to form a system, but can have no solid foundation. H.—The epoch from which Usher dates is no where so distinctly specified, as that we should suppose that the author of the Book of Judges had it in view. Moreover, by this method, we are left to guess how long each of the judges reigned, or how long the peace which they had procured, subsisted. Usher admits that the years of servitude are specified; and, why not also the years of peace, since they are expressed exactly in the same manner? If the ordinal numbers 40th, 80th, &c. were intended, 6 would be prefixed, as Deut. i. 8; and this grammatical observation alone, suffices to overturn the calculation of Usher. Houbig. Proleg.—Salien dates from the death of Josue in 2600, and allows that 40 years elapsed from that period till the decease of Othoniel; including the years which some attribute to the ancients, and to the anarchy; (C. xvii. &c. to the end,) and also the eight years of servitude; so that instead of a rest of 40 years, we shall find that all was in confusion the greatest part of the time. The idolatry of Israel, which shortly brought on the servitude under Eglon, commenced immediately after the conclusion of these 40 years, when Salien begins to enumerate the years of Aod's government. Thus he does from one judge to another. This system does not indeed make the text bend to uphold it, but it supposes that the sacred writer includes anarchy and servitude under the name of rest. In these matters much is to be supplied by conjecture, and hence the chronological difficulties which infidels propose, to invalidate the authority of the Scripture, can have but little weight, till the learned shall have discovered the exact disposition of former times. The first judge of Israel was of the tribe of Juda. The second was chosen from the almost ruined tribe of Benjamin, as the learned commonly place the dreadful catastrophe which befel that tribe during the anarchy which ensued, and the death of Josue and of the ancients. Aod had no share in the crime. H.

VER. 12. Eglon, signifies "a calf." C.—God made use of this prince to scourge his people, with the assistance of the neighbouring nations. He took Engaddi, in the plains of Jericho, and was thus enabled to keep an eye both upon his own subjects and the conquered Israelites. C.—Here he probably met with his untimely end. H.

VER. 15. Aod, signifies "praise," whence perhaps Josephus calls him Jude, which has the same import. M.—He was a descendant of Jemini or Benjamin, by his son Gera. Gen. xli. 1.—Right. Sept. and many interpreters agree, that Aod was "Ambidexter," a quality which Plato exhorted those who were designed for war, to strive to acquire. Several of the heroes before Troy are praised on this account; and the Scripture takes particular notice of 700 citizens of Gabaa, who could use both hands alike, and could hit even a hair with a stone. C. xx. 16. The Jews explain itter, very absurdly; Aod "had his right hand maimed or tied;" (C.) and Prot. render "a man left-handed." H.—This would be a very awkward recommendation for a warrior, though it is pretended that such are more resolute, and more difficult to encounter than others. The number of the men at Gabaa who are praised for their skill, as well as the brave men of David, (1 Par. xii. 2,) shews sufficiently that the term does not mean left-handed. But the Scripture here takes notice that Aod could use his left hand so well, because he placed his dagger, contrary to custom, on his right side, and the motions of his left hand would not be so narrowly watched. Rufin does not agree with the present text of Josephus, which indeed seems very confused, saying, "that all the strength of Aod lay in his left hand." Gelenius also translates, utraque manu ex æquo promptus; (Ant. v. 5,) so that perhaps the Greek of Josephus may have been altered.—Presents; that is, tribute; an odious expression, instead of which the Scripture often puts presents, 1 K. x. 27. 1 Par. xviii. 2. No tribute was imposed in Persia till the reign of Darius Hytaspes; the subjects had to make presents to the king. Herod. iii. 89. C.

VER. 16. He made, or procured, though it was formerly honourable for a person to do such things himself. C.—Hand. Heb. gomed, is translated by the Prot. "of a cubit length," (H.) though the term is never used elsewhere for that measure. Sept. have spithamē, a measure of 12 fingers.—Garment. The sagum, as well as the Sept. mandua, from the Heb. maad, denote a military garment. But such a dress might have rendered Aod suspected, (C.) unless an uniform might then be deemed a suitable dress for an ambassador. H.—Thigh. The Jews wore the sword there; (Ps. xlv. 4,) and it would be more convenient on the left thigh, as the nations of Gaul and Germany had it, while the Roman cavalry wore the sword on the right; and the infantry had two swords, the long one on the left, and a shorter, about a hand's length, on the right. Joseph. Bel. iii. 3. Lipsius

VER. 17. Fat. The ancient version used by S. Aug. liad, "lean" which he justly took in an ironical sense. Sept. astecios, signifies "beautiful and genteel." C.—Serarius explains it in the same sense as the Vulgate. M.

18 And when he had presented the gifts unto him, he followed his companions that came along with him.

19 Then returning from Galgal, where the idols were, he said to the king: I have a secret message to thee, O king. And he commanded silence: and all being gone out that were about him, 20 Aod went in to him: now he was sitting in a summer parlour alone, and he said: I have a word from God to thee. And he forthwith rose up from his throne.

21 And Aod put forth his left hand, and took the dagger from his right thigh, and thrust it into his belly, 22 With such force that the haft went in after the blade into the wound, and was closed up with the abundance of fat. So that he did not draw out the dagger, but left it in the body as he had struck it in: and forthwith, by the secret parts of nature, the excrements of the belly came out.

23 And Aod carefully shutting the doors of the parlour, and locking them, 24 Went out by a postern door. And the king's servants going in, saw the doors of the parlour shut, and they said: Perhaps he is easing nature in his summer parlour.

VER. 18. Hin; or according to the Heb. Sept. and Chal. "he sent away the men who had brought the presents." C.—But it seems he followed after them as far as Galgal, (H.) whence he returned, as if he had been consulting the oracle, and had orders to communicate something of importance to the king, unless we translate, "He dismissed, &c. (19.) and as he was returned from the idols at Galgal, he said," &c. at the same interview. C.—He would not expose his companions to danger. M.

VER. 19. Idols. Heb. pesilim. Some take these to be only heaps of stones. Prot. "quarries." H.—But the Sept. &c. represent them as "carved" idols. The same expression is used Ex. xx. 4, &c. The Moabites had probably placed idols here, to profane that sacred place, which was resorted to out of devotion by the Israelites. Osee iv. 14. Amos iv. 5. Here also the prophets inform us that the ten tribes adored and consulted idols; resembling perhaps that of Michas, C. xvii. 4.—Silence to Aod, (C.) that none of the people might be able to divulge the secret. Heb. "be thou silent." M.

VER. 20. Alone. Heb. "Aod approached unto him, and he was sitting in a summer parlour, which he had for himself, alone." It seems to have been a private closet, to which he retired for greater secrecy, as his officers concluded that he was there only to ease nature. H.—It might be rendered, "a hall of audience." C.—But the place where Aod presented the tribute, was more probably of this description, and Eglon retired thence into a back parlour, and was followed by Aod alone, v. 24. H.—A word. What Aod, who was judge and chief magistrate of Israel, did on this occasion, was by a special inspiration of God: but such things are not to be imitated by private men. Ch. S. Aug. q. 20. Num. xxv. W.—Heb. "a thing (message, &c.) from God, (Aleim) or the gods." Probably the king would imagine that he was speaking of the idols at Galgal, and being full of awe for them, would be off his guard, and rise up out of respect. See Num. xxiii. 18. Ex. iii. 5. C.—But as the word Elohim was only abusively applied to idols and to great men, Aod might say with truth, that he had a word or an errand from Elohim to the king, without minding in what sense Eglon would take the expression. See S. Aug. q. 20. Orig. hom. 4. Though God permitted this king to attack his people, and to scourge them for a time, he did not approve of his injustice, and now authorized the chief magistrate of Israel to revenge their wrongs. H.—God is the arbiter of our lives, and may order whomsoever he pleases to put us to death. But the doctrine of J. Huss, who preached, "It is lawful for every subject to kill any tyrant," was condemned in the C. of Constance. David severely punished the man who pretended that he had slain Saul. The first Christians never entered into any revolt against those cruel and impious emperors who oppressed them, and whose title to the throne was evidently unjust. See Rom. xii. 1. Under what government are all satisfied, or of the same religion with the sovereign? Even if any should pretend that they have an order from God to kill a tyrant, they must give proof of their commission to the lawful superiors, or they must expect to be treated as fanatical impostors. C.—Throne; or Heb. "seat." The throne of state would not probably be placed in a retired chamber. H.—The king rose up out of respect to the deity; (M.) and at the same moment, Aod plunged the dagger into his bowels. H.

VER. 22. With, &c. Heb. Prot. "And the haft also went in after the blade, and the fat closed upon the blade, so that he could not draw the dagger out of his belly, and the dirt came out." By the word belly, the Jews mean all the vital parts. C.—The wound was so deep, that Aod did not think proper to strive long to extract his sword; and indeed, being all bloody, it would have only tended to excite suspicion. H.—The Chal. agrees with the Vulg. in rendering parshedona "excrements," though it seem to be rather irregularly in construction with a trans. verb, &c. If we should read peristana, "a porch," the difficulty would be avoided. C.—Sept. "(23) and Aod went out into the porch, (prostada) and he shut the doors of the upper chamber. . . (24) and he himself went out." H.

VER. 24. Door. Lyrano would prefer porticum, "the porch," as the Chal. explains the Heb. by credra, a portico highly ornamented with pillars and seats, (298)

25 And waiting a long time, till they were ashamed, and seeing that no man opened the door, they took a key: and opening, they found their lord lying dead on the ground.

26 But Aod, while they were in confusion, escaped, and passed by the place of the idols, from whence he had returned. And he came to Scirath:

27 And forthwith he sounded the trumpet in Mount Ephraim: and the children of Israel went down with him, he himself going in the front.

28 And he said to them: Follow me: for the Lord hath delivered our enemies, the Moabites, into our hands. And they went down after him, and seized upon the fords of the Jordan, which are in the way to Moab: and they suffered no man to pass over:

29 But they slew of the Moabites at that time, about ten thousand, all strong and valiant men: none of them could escape.

30 And Moab was humbled that day under the hand of Israel: and the land rested eighty years.

31 After him was Samgar, the son of Anath, who slew of the Philistines six hundred men with a ploughshare: and he also defended Israel.

where the princes formerly used to administer justice. Homer gives a grand description of the portico of Alcinous. Odyss. H.—See that of Solomon described, 3 K. vii. 6. C.—The Rom. Sept. adds after prostada, what may perhaps be a second version, "and he went through those who were drawn up," or the guards. He shewed no signs of fear. H.—It was not necessary for him to take the key with him, as a common one was used for several chambers, and was necessary only to unloose some bands, with which the doors were fastened. The keys in the East are very large, and of a very different construction from ours. C.—Nature. Heb. "he covereth his feet." The ancients did not wear breeches: they covered themselves with great care. C. See Deut. xxiii. 18. H.—Parlour Heb. "chamber." Sept. "bed-chamber."

VER. 25. Ashamed, perceiving that their hopes had been vain, (C.) and not knowing what to do, (M.) they began to fear the worst. H.

VER. 26. Confusion. Heb. "tarrying," as they waited a long time before they ventured to open the door.

VER. 27. Scirath seems to have been on the road from Galgal to Mount Ephraim. Some conjecture that Josephus speaks of it under the name of Syriad, (C.) where he saw the inscriptions, which he asserts were left by the children of Seth before the deluge. H.—They might perhaps be the idols which are mentioned here.

VER. 28. Fords. That none, from the other side, might come to the assistance of the Moabites, (M.) who were at their prince's court, in the territory of Jericho, and that none of these might make their escape. H.

VER. 29. Strong. Heb. lit. "the fatness, denoting what is most excellent. Ps. xxi. 30. and lxxvii. 31. C.—Eglon would have his chief nobility and most valiant soldiers round his person. H.

VER. 30. Eighty. The Hebrews use the letter p to express this number; and, as it is very like their c, which stands for 20, Houbigant suspects that the first number is a mistake of the transcribers. Usher confesses that it is "extremely improbable" that Aod should have governed so long, after he had slain Eglon, as he must have been at that time, about 40 years old; and the Israelites were not often so constant for such a length of time. Houbig. Proleg.—But this difficulty does not affect Usher, as he brings Aod forward only in the 80th year from the peace of Othoniel; and instead of allowing him 80 years of peaceful sway, he says Samgar appeared after him; but, it seems, both together did not reign a year, since in that 80th year, he commences the servitude, which Jabin brought upon Israel, from A. 2679 till 2699, and peace was not restored by Barac for other 20 years! H.

VER. 31. Samgar. His reign seems to have been short, and only perhaps extended over the tribes of Juda, Simeon, and Dan, while Debhora governed in another part. Some exclude him from the list of judges. But Josephus, Origen, &c. allow his title, with most of the moderns. C.—The Alex. Chronicle gives him a reign of 24 years, which Salien would understand, as if he had acted under the orders of Aod, when the latter was grown too old, if the author had not said that "after the death of Aod, Samgar, his son, judged Israel 24 years," which he subtracts from the 80 years allotted to Aod. He makes Bocci succeed Abisue in the pontificate, at the same time, which Salien admits, A. 2696.—Hundred. Sept. "as far as 600," which might be at different times, when the Philistines were dispersed through the country in order to plunder.—Plough-share. Sept. aratropodi. H.—Some translate the Heb. "an ox-goad." Maundrell describes those, which are used in Palestine, as eight feet long; and, at the thick end, 10 inches round, with a kind of spade, to clean the plough, while the other end is very sharp. Samgar might probably use such an instrument. From its being mentioned, we may gather that he did not engage the enemy in a pitched battle, (C.) but as he could find an opportunity. Thus Samson slew 1000 of the same nation with the jaw-bone of an ass. C. xv. H.—Defended. Heb. and Sept. "saved," which shews that he was a proper judge. M.—It is true, he did not rescue the Israelites entirely, but he stood up in their defence. C.—The duration of his

CHAP. IV.

Debbora and Barac deliver Israel from Jabin and Sisara. Jahel killeth Sisara.

AND the children of Israel again did evil in the sight of the Lord after the death of Aod:

2 And the Lord delivered them up into the hands of Jabin, king of Chanaan, who reigned in Asor: and he had a general of his army named Sisara, and he dwelt in Haroseth of the Gentiles.

3 And the children of Israel cried to the Lord: for he had nine hundred chariots set with scythes, and for twenty years had grievously oppressed them.

4 And there was at that time Debbora, a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth, who judged the people.

5 And she sat under a palm-tree, which was called by her name, between Rama and Bethel, in Mount Ephraim: and the children of Israel came up to her for all judgment.

6 And she sent and called Barac, the son of Abinoem, out of Cedes, in Nephthali: and she said to him: The Lord God of Israel hath commanded thee: Go, and lead an army to Mount Thabor, and thou shalt take with thee ten thousand fighting men of the children of Nephthali, and of the children of Zabulon:

7 And I will bring unto thee in the place of the torrent Cison, Sisara, the general of Jabin's army, and his chariots, and all his multitude, and will deliver them into thy hand.

a 1 Kings xii. 9.

government is not specified, nor is it said that the land rested, because he ruled for a short time only: Josephus says not quite a year; and the roads were continually infested with the incursions of the Philistines on the south, and of the Chanaanites on the North. C. v. 6. Samgar seems to have been a ploughman, and he seized the first weapon that came to hand. The Hungarians and Spaniards formerly defended themselves against the attacks of the Turks and Moors with their plough-shares, in memory of which the Spaniards long after went armed to plough. The most valiant Roman generals, Camillus, Curius, Cincinnatus, and Fabricius, were called from the plough to the Dictatorship; and Pliny (xviii.) observes, that "countrymen make the best soldiers."

CHAP. IV. VER. 1. Aod. Samgar is passed over, either because he was only a private man, who performed a feat of valour like Jahel, (C. v. 6. Salien) or because his government was so short and limited. Hence we need not wonder that he could not put a stop to the ravages of the Chanaanites, nor to the disorders of the people.

VER. 2. Asor. Josue defeated the king of this country. Jos. xi. 8. But some of his successors had contrived to raise themselves again to power. His dominion probably extended only over the tribes of Nephthali, Zabulon, and Issachar, while Debbora judged in Mount Ephraim, and Samgar in Juda.—He dwelt. It is not clear whether Jabin or Sisara dwelt in Haroseth, but most probably it was the latter, v. 13. This city was on the northern banks of the Semechonite lake, (C.) surrounded with "woods," as the Heb. word signifies; (Vatab.) though Bonfrere explains it "a shop, foundry, or arsenal," as if the arms and chariots were made and kept here. A mixture of different idolatrous nations dwelt in it.

VER. 3. Scythes. Heb. "chariots of iron." C.

VER. 4. Lapidoth, signifies "lamps," and Barac, "thunder;" which has given rise to various conjectures, as if they were the same person. S. Ambrose thinks that Debbora was a widow at this time, and the mother of Barac. But S. Jerom says there is no proof of either. Others suppose that the excellence of the gift of prophecy would not permit her to cohabit with her husband. It is not unusual for women to possess this gift. Mary, the sister of Moses, Holda, the blessed Virgin, the daughter of S. Philip, &c. were prophetesses. The devil most commonly chose women to explain his oracles.—Judged. Many deny that this word is taken in the same latitude here, as when it is applied to men. The Jews exclude women from government, and Athalia was only a tyrant. The Roman laws will not admit women to exercise the right of judicature. But the text, as it is explained by the Fathers in general, will not permit us to refuse the prerogatives of a judge to Debbora. Her authority was not merely voluntary, in consequence of the people's high opinion of her, as many would believe, with Salien, W. &c. (F) but she gave decisions which were binding on the Israelites; and she seems to have continued in the exercise of her functions along with Barac, after the victory which they gained over Sisara. The government of the latter was perhaps limited to the tribes which he had rescued from slavery. C.—He is guided by her counsel, as Christian princes ought to be by their spiritual superiors. Orig. W.

VER. 5. Nama. Heb. "she dwelt (or sat to judge) under the palm-tree of Debbora." "The oak of weeping," allon Bacuth, under which Debbora, the nurse of Rebecca, was interred, was also near Bethel. Gen. xxxv. 8. H.—This city was on the confines of the tribes of Ephraim and of Benjamin, over which Debbora chiefly exercised her authority; and here she was consulted by the people. C

8 And Barac said to her: If thou wilt come with me, I will go: if thou wilt not come with me, I will not go.

9 She said to him: I will go, indeed, with thee, but at this time the victory shall not be attributed to thee, because Sisara shall be delivered into the hand of a woman. Debbora therefore arose, and went with Barac to Cedes.

10 And he called unto him Zabulon and Nephthali, and went up with ten thousand fighting men, having Debbora in his company.

11 Now Haber, the Cinite, had some time before departed from the rest of the Cinites, his brethren, the sons of Hobab, the kinsman of Moses: and had pitched his tents unto the valley, which is called Sennim, and was near Cedes.

12 And it was told Sisara, that Barac, the son of Abinoem, was gone up to Mount Thabor:

13 And he gathered together his nine hundred chariots armed with scythes, and all his army, from Haroseth of the Gentiles, to the torrent Cison.

14 And Debbora said to Barac: Arise, for this is the day wherein the Lord hath delivered Sisara into thy hands: behold, he is thy leader. And Barac went down from Mount Thabor, and ten thousand fighting men with him.

15 And the Lord struck a terror into Sisara, and b Ps. lxxxii. 10.

VER. 6. Cedes. There was another city of this name in Juda. H.—Barac was of the tribe of Nephthali. C.—The Lord, &c. Prot. translate, "hath not the Lord?" &c. as if the will of God had been notified to him before. We find that he makes some demur, v. 8. H.—Thabor. A city of this name was also built at the foot or on the top of the mountain, and belonged to Zabulon. It is attributed to the Levites, 1 Par. vi. 77. The mountain rises in the midst of a vast plain, to the height of 30 stadia, (Joseph. Bel. iv. 2. S. Jer. in. Ose. v. 1.) or above 3000 paces, "which make a league, or an hour's walk." It is inaccessible on the northern side. There was a platform two-thirds as broad, at the top, where Polybius says a fortified city stood. Antiochus took possession of this strong place, and Josephus repaired the fortifications, to keep the country in subjection. It is commonly supposed that Jesus Christ was transfigured on this once delightful mountain, which is now a desert. During the crusades, there was an episcopal city and a Benedictine monastery here. C.

VER. 7. Hand. Cison flows through a luxuriant vale or champaign country, on the south of Mount Thabor, whence Barac came rushing down the rocks and precipices upon the army of Sisara. C. v. 15. C.—This general was delivered into the hand of Barac, to be routed, though he was afterwards slain by the hand of Jahel, v. 9. and 21. H.

VER. 8. Not go. Sept. and S. Aug. (q. 26.) add, "because I know not when the Lord will send his angel to grant me success." S. Paul (Heb. xi. 32.) praises the faith of Barac, so that he spoke thus out of prudence, that the people, seeing (C.) their revered prophetess in his company, (H.) might not condemn the undertaking as too rash and perilous. He therefore entreats her, in this earnest manner, to come with him, and point out the time when he must attack the enemy.

VER. 9. Thee. Prot. "the journey that thou takest, shall not be for thine honour, for the Lord shall sell Sisara," &c. It is certain, however, that Barac acquired great commendations on this occasion: but if he had not been accompanied by Debbora, he would not have shared the glory of the victory with her and another woman. H.—Some suppose that Debbora speaks of herself; others explain her words of Jahel. They may both be right. M.—Cedes. Here the Israelites took the generous resolution to throw off the yoke, and marched to seize the fort of Thabor. This motion gave the alarm to Jabin, who sent his general to besiege them, and to occupy the passages of the Cison. C. v. 18.

VER. 11. Valley. Heb. elon, may denote also, (Sept.) "a wood of oaks," (C.) or a plain. H.—Haber probably left the first settlement of the Cinites near Engaddi, when his brethren went (C.) into the southern parts of the tribe of Juda. C. i. 16. This is mentioned, that we might know how his wife came to be in those parts, v. 17, &c. Whether he had given information to Jabin of these movements, as he was at peace with him, we cannot assert; but his being mentioned in this place, might seem to insinuate as much. Heb. v. 12, "they told or shewed Sisara," &c. His wife, at least, did not prove unfaithful to Israel. H.

VER. 13. Cison. Part of this torrent falls into the Mediterranean, and part into the sea of Tiberias. It rises from Mount Thabor, (which is about two hours' walk, south-west of Nazareth) and from Gelboa, &c. M.—Here Sisara displayed his immense army, if we may credit Josephus, Jonathan, &c. But the Scripture only specifies 900 chariots of iron. C.—Whence, however, we may conclude that his horse and foot would be very formidable. Yet all were presently routed by the small company of Barac, who had God for his leader, v. 14. H.

VER. 15. Terror. The most dreadful storms of thunder, lightning, &c. (C. v. 20, all his chariots, and all his multitude, with the edge of the sword, at the sight of Barac; insomuch, that Sisara leaping down from off his chariot, fled away on foot, 16 And Barac pursued after the fleeing chariots, and the army, unto Haroseth of the Gentiles; and all the multitude of the enemies was utterly destroyed.

17 But Sisara fleeing, came to the tent of Jahel, the wife of Haber, the Cinite, for there was peace between Jabin, the king of Asor, and the house of Haber, the Cinite.

18 And Jahel went forth to meet Sisara, and said to him: Come in to me, my lord; come in, fear not. He went into her tent, and being covered by her with a cloak, 19 Said to her: Give me, I beseech thee, a little water, for I am very thirsty. She opened a bottle of milk, and gave him to drink, and covered him.

20 And Sisara said to her: Stand before the door of the tent, and when any shall come and enquire of thee, saying: Is there any man here? thou shalt say: There is none.

21 So Jahel, Haber's wife, took a nail of the tent, and taking also a hammer: and going in softly, and with silence, she put the nail upon the temples of his head, and striking it with the hammer, drove it through his brain fast into the ground: and so passing from deep sleep to death, he fainted away and died.

discomfited the enemy, while the sword of Barac (C.) dealt death around, so that Sisara and all his army presently turned their backs, (H.) and the general himself being stricken with a panic, leapt from his chariot, as if he thought his horses did not run fast enough. Thus Homer represents two Trojans abandoning their chariots, to escape the fury of Diomed and of Achilles. Iliad v. and xx.

VER. 16. Multitude. Josephus allots Sisara the same number of horse and foot as he did to Jabin, whom Josue defeated and slew. C. xi. 4. But instead of 20,000 chariots, he only gives Sisara 3000, which number appears to be far too great, and unauthorized by the Scripture. H.

VER. 17. Tent. The women had separate tents from their husbands. Haber, it seems, was from home, and was not molested by the Chanaanites. He continued neuter during this war. What then must we think of the conduct of his wife? Commentators generally justify her, as the Scripture gives her great commendations, and as the family of the Cinites enjoyed the religion and privileges of the Israelites. Hence this portion of it could not make a league with the enemy of God's people, to the detriment of the latter; and if they did, they were bound to break it as soon, at least, as God manifested his will, that the enemy should be destroyed. Jahel might however deserve the praise of fortitude, which the Scripture gives her, and yet mingle some human imperfection in her manner of acting. She seems to speak with fraud, and to betray the sacred rights of hospitality; and it is doubtful whether Haber himself could renounce the alliance with Jabin, (particularly if they had taken mutual oaths to observe it, as was then customary) without informing him of his resolution. Fides, quando promittitur, etiam hosti servanda est. S. Aug. ep. i. ad Bonif. See Grot. Jur. iii. 19. C.—Yet, if she told a lie, it was only an officious one, (M.) such as Sisara desired should be told for his safety, v. 20. H.—It is lawful to use stratagems against an enemy. Salien, A. 2741. See Jos. ii. and viii. 4. Debhora pronounces the name of Jahel to be most blessed, (C. v. 24.) which shews that she was inspired by God to kill Sisara. If we consider her action in any other light, it will certainly appear very shocking, as Rahab could not escape the accusation of treason towards her country by any other means. Aod, Judith, &c. who washed their hands in the blood of sinners, (Ps. lvii. 11.) would undoubtedly have been condemned at any merely human tribunal, which would not admit the plea of inspiration. H.—Besides this secret impulse, Jahel might be acquainted with the prediction of Debhora, (v. 2.) and with the miraculous victory which encouraged her to destroy the common enemy, (Abulensis, Josephus, &c. T.) the only remnant of an immense army. H.—The peace which subsisted between her family and the Chanaanites, was a forced one, (T.) and perhaps consisted only in the former being allowed to live quietly (D.) in the midst of these idolaters, whose manners they abhorred; (H.) while the Israelites, though at a greater distance, were so severely treated even when they were so weak as to adore the idols (T.) of their oppressors. Thus the divine Providence was pleased to reward virtue, and to punish infidelity. H.—The Fathers consider Debhora as a figure of the Synagogue, which begins the attack against the empire of the devil, while the victory is reserved for the Christian Church, represented by Jahel, a woman living among the Israelites, though of a different nation, and engrafted, as it were, like the wild olive on the good olive tree. She gains strength in the midst of persecutions, and, armed with the cross of Christ, destroys the captain of the worldly empire. Orig. hom. v. S. Aug. c. Faust. xii. 31. &c. C.—Jahel was also a figure of the blessed Virgin, who crushed the serpent's head. W.

VER. 18. Cloak, or rough hairy bed coverlet. Heb. Semica, occurs no where else. C.

22 And behold, Barac came pursuing after Sisara and Jahel went out to meet him, and said to him: Come and I will shew thee the man whom thou seekest. And when he came into her tent, he saw Sisara lying dead, and the nail fastened in his temples.

23 So God that day humbled Jabin, the king of Chanaan, before the children of Israel:

24 Who grew daily stronger, and with a mighty hand overpowered Jabin, king of Chanaan, till they quite destroyed him.

CHAP. V.

The canticle of Debhora and Barac, after their victory.

IN that day Debhora and Barac, son of Abinoem, sung, and said:

2 O you of Israel, that have willingly offered your lives to danger, bless the Lord.

3 Hear, O ye kings, give ear, O ye princes: It is I, it is I, that will sing to the Lord, I will sing to the Lord, the God of Israel.

4 O Lord, when thou wentest out of Seir, and passedst by the regions of Edom, the earth trembled, and the heavens and clouds dropped water.

5 The mountains melted before the face of the Lord, and Sinai before the face of the Lord the God of Israel.

6 In the days of Samgar, the son of Anath, in the days of Jahel, the paths rested: and they that went by them, walked through bye-ways.

VER. 19. Milk, out of a shew of greater civility. The Rabbins say the milk was sour, which is conformable to the manners of the oriental nations. Valle remarks, that the Arabs still give the preference to it. The bottle in which it was kept was made of leather, (utrem) and the milk was like cream. C. v. 25. Some think that wine was not then used in this family, as the Rechabites, descendants of the Cinites, always refrained from it. Jer. xxxv. But it is not certain that they did at this time, nor that they sprang from this branch of the family.

VER. 21. Tent. Such nails were used to fasten down the skins, of which the tent was composed. C.—This resembled a stake, though Josephus says it was made of iron. M.—And died. Thus he met a more ignoble fate, which would be more hateful to a warrior. Abimelech ordered his armour-bearer to kill him, that it might not be said that he had fallen by the hand of a woman. C. ix. 54. Extreme fatigue, and the will of Providence, caused Sisara to fall asleep so soon. How many, like him, lie down in health, and rise no more! H.

VER. 23. Humbled Jabin, though he was not present in this battle. The Israelites followed up the victory, and presently brought their late oppressor to ruin, that all might confess, none could resist their power, when God was propitious to them; as, on the other hand, the most feeble state was able to reduce them to servitude, when they proved rebellious. H.

CHAP. V. VER. 1. Debhora probably composed this most flowery and animated canticle, v. 3, 7. C.

VER. 2. Lord. Heb. may have different senses: "bless the Lord for having avenged Israel, the people willingly exposing themselves, or shewing their concurrence." Roman Sept. "What was hidden has been disclosed in Israel, when the people shewed their good will, bless the Lord." Pord, which the Vulg. has not expressed, commonly means to disclose, liberate, &c. ethondob signifies to give freely, to expose one's self, &c. Sept. and Theodotion together, (C.) and the Alex. copy have, "bless the Lord, for that leaders have risen up in Israel, and the people have shewn their good will." These two things were to be greatly desired, as a general can do but little without an obedient army, and the latter is, in a manner, useless, without a head. Both had been wanting in Israel for some time, and even still, some of the tribes seem to be blamed for not co-operating with zeal, v. 15, &c. This verse is repeated as a kind of chorus, v. 9. The zeal and concord of the little troop, which had met the formidable army of Sisara, deserved the highest applause. H.—Men bless God when they give him thanks; superiors bless by imparting some spiritual benefit. W.

VER. 3. Kings. She invites all who have authority, whether in or out of Israel, to attend unto the dispensations of Providence. God alternately cherishes and corrects his people. David makes a similar appeal to all kings and judges, Ps. ii. 10.—It is I. She dwells with a degree of rapture on the thought that God had shewn his power so wonderfully, and had effected his gracious purposes by the hand of a woman! H.—She directed Barac. W.

VER. 4. Edom. Sinai, where God gave his law amid thunder and lightning was situated in Idumea. C.—God displayed his glory on this mountain, and also on Mount Seir. Deut. xxxiii. 2. Some believe that Debhora compares the wonders which attended the late victory, with those which God wrought when he led his victorious bands through the desert, and conquered the countries of Sehon, &c. H.—He provided for the wants of his people, even in the most desolate regions, giving them water out of the hard (C.) rock of Horeb or Sinai, (H.) and causing all nature to change her appearance at his approach. Ps. lxvii. 8. Ex. xix. 18. C.

VER. 6. The paths rested. The ways to the sanctuary of God were unfrequented; and men walked in the bye-ways of error and sin. Ch.—Though 7 The valiant men ceased, and rested in Israel: until Debbora arose, a mother arose in Israel.

8 The Lord chose new wars, and he himself overthrew the gates of the enemies: a shield and spear was not seen among forty thousand of Israel.

9 My heart loveth the princes of Israel: O you, that of your own good will offered yourselves to danger, bless the Lord.

10 Speak, you that ride upon fair asses, and you that sit in judgment, and walk in the way.

11 Where the chariots were dashed together, and the army of the enemies was choaked, there let the justices of the Lord be rehearsed, and his clemency towards the brave men of Israel: then the people of the Lord went down to the gates, and obtained the sovereignty.

12 Arise, arise, O Debbora, arise, arise, and utter a canticle. Arise, Barac, and take hold of thy captives, O son of Abinoem.

Samgar and Jehel were so remarkable for their valour, as they had manifested on a late occasion, yet they did not prevent the incursions of the enemy both on the south and north. H.—The merchants durst not travel, as usual, through the country. Drusus.—God had threatened the faithless Israel with this punishment, Lev. xxvi. 22. Lament. i. 4. Isai. xxiii. 8. C.—They that went by them formerly without apprehension, are now forced to seek out bye-ways. H.—Thus was justly punished the negligence of those who observed not the festivals of the Lord, nor frequented his tabernacle. M.

VER. 7. Valiant. Heb. is also translated, “the villages ceased,” as no one thought himself in safety out of the strong cities.—Until. Heb. “until I, Debbora, arose, that I arose, a mother,” &c. The Holy Ghost obliges her to declare her own praises. She deserved the glorious title of “mother of her country.”—Mother denotes an authority, mixed with sweetness: such had been exercised by Debbora, in deciding the controversies of the people, (C.) and in directing them to follow the right path. H.

VER. 8. Israel. What could be more astonishing and new, than this method of warfare, in which a few unarmed Israelites gain the victory over an immense army, and oblige the general to leap from his chariot, that he may escape observation! A woman calls to battle. Heb. is rather different, “They chose new gods:” some copies of the Sept. have “vain gods, (C.) as barley bread.” Others agree with the Heb. “Then war was in the gates.” Jabin would not allow any arms in the country, and hence Samgar was forced to use the implements of husbandry. So the Philistines afterwards would not suffer the Hebrews to have a smith among them, lest they should make arms, 1 K. xiii. 19. 22.

VER. 9. Princes. Heb. “legislators,” governors, judges. I cannot refuse them due praise, and I invite them earnestly to bless the Lord, v. 2.

VER. 10. Fair asses. Heb. “shining, white, or of divers colours, particularly red and white, with which the people were accustomed to paint their asses. Bochart.—The rich Arabians paint the back part red. Tavernier iii. 5.—The Persians also give a yellowish hue to their horses as well as to themselves, with henna. Chardin.—Asses and mules were formerly much more in use than horses. Num. xxii. 21. Mat. xxi. 25. 3 K. i. 33. C.—Way. You who can now proceed on your journey without molestation, join the judges of the land in sounding forth God’s praises, v. 6. H.—Those who bring the flesh into subjection to the spirit, ride upon fair asses, (Orig. hom. vi. W.) and they may preach to others with more authority. H.

VER. 11. Choaked in the waters of the Cison, and of Mageddo, v. 19. 21. Heb. is very obscure: “from the noise of archers, in the places of drawing water, there shall they relate the justices of the Lord, the righteous acts of his villages, (or brave men) then shall the people of the Lord go down to the gates,” where the courts of judicature are held. The peaceful inhabitants shall be no more disturbed with the shouts of archers, but rehearsing what obligations they are under to the Lord, and the warriors of Barac, they shall pursue their usual employments without fear. H.—Sept. You shall make your voices heard, playing on instruments, C. (anacrovomenon, pulsantium).—Among those who rejoice, there shall they give righteous deeds to the Lord: they have wrought justice in Israel, &c. H.—If we neglect the points, we may render the Heb. more agreeably to the Vulgate. “At the voice of those who are pierced with arrows in the midst of those who draw water (or are drowned) there they shall publish,” &c. C.—And obtained. This is not in Hebrew expressly; but it is added to shew that the people could now act as a free nation, having cleared their country of its enemies. H.

VER. 12. Captives. Heb. “Take thy captivity prisoner.” Hold those in subjection who so lately domineered over you. C.

VER. 13. Remnants. Many of the Israelites had been slain by Jabin, but the Lord enabled the valiant Barac to requite him. Heb. “Then he made him that remaineth have dominion over the nobles among the people. The Lord made me rule over the mighty.” Barac and Debbora were raised from an humble state to govern Israel; while the nobles were passed over. H.—The people of God, which was reduced to such abjection and misery, is now become formidable to the greatest princes, who look upon themselves as something great, and are called beneficent. Luc. xxii. 26. Sept. “Then his (Barac’s) force was magnified. Lord, humble before me those who exceed me in strength.” Chal. “Then one of the army of Israel (Barac) crushed the power of these mighty nations,” &c. C.

VER. 14. Out of Ephraim, &c. The enemies struggling in their fight, were destroyed, as they were running through the land of Ephraim, and of Benjamin, 13 The remnants of the people are saved, the Lord hath fought among the valiant ones.

14 Out of Ephraim he destroyed them into Amalec, and after him out of Benjamin into thy people, O Amalec: out of Machir there came down princes, and out of Zabulon they that led the army to fight.

15 The captains of Issachar were with Debbora, and followed the steps of Barac, who exposed himself to danger, as one going headlong, and into a pit. Ruben being divided against himself, there was found a strife of courageous men.

16 Why dwellest thou between two borders, that thou mayst hear the bleatings of the flocks? Ruben being divided against himself, there was found a strife of courageous men.

17 Galaad rested beyond the Jordan, and Dan applied himself to ships: Aser dwelt on the sea shore, and abode in the havens.

which lies after, that is, beyond Ephraim; and so on to the very confines of Amalec. Or, it alludes to former victories of the people of God, particularly that which was freshest in memory, when the men of Ephraim and Benjamin, with Aod at their head, overthrew their enemies, the Moabites, with the Amalecites their allies. See C. iii. Ch.—Fight. Debbora insinuates that the late victory had rendered Nephthali and Issachar as famous as these tribes, which had formerly sent forth the greatest generals; Josue, who conquered Amalec, (Ex. xvii. 10,) and Aod, of the tribe of Benjamin, (C.) who had so greatly signalized himself, and sounded the alarm in Mount Ephraim with success. C. iii. 18. 27. H.—Heb. “out of Ephraim he has torn them (Prot. was there a root of them against, or) into Amalec, and after thee Benjamin among thy people.” There was a mountain called Amalec, in the tribe of Ephraim, (C. xii. 15,) where some victory may have been obtained, though we know not the particulars of it. C.—They and the neighbouring tribes might have encountered Amalec, coming to assist Jabin. D.—It is hardly probable that the army of Sisara would flee in that direction, as they would have had to encounter all the multitudes of Israel, and could have no prospect of saving themselves. Benjamin, who was farther off Debbora than Ephraim, is praised for expelling the king of Moab out of their city of Engaddi; (H.) or else the victories which this tribe obtained over the joint forces of the people of Israel are meant, (C.) as they shewed the valour of this tribe, though in so bad a cause. H.—It is thought that the Moabites fell upon their territory only after most of the inhabitants were cut off. C. xix. and xx. The Sept. and Theodotion take no notice of Amalec, as they have read, Amok, a valley: “the people of Ephraim chastised them in the valley, and thy brother Benjamin, in his people.” The Chaldee understands the whole verse, of the wars against Amalec, who had been routed by Josue, and would fall a prey to the arms of Saul, who was of the tribe of Benjamin. Many commentators follow this explanation. It does not appear that Barac received any aid from these tribes, nor from Machir, or any of those who lived at a distance. C.—As for Zabulon, the Vulgate intimates that great generals were found among them; but the Heb. rather gives them the praise of learning: “They that handle the pen of the writer.” H.—Yet sopher is applied not only to writers, and to those who are learned in the law, as the scribes, Esdras, Baruch, &c. were, but also to commissaries, secretaries of state, and officers who were employed both in peace and war. 2 Par. xxvi. 11. Hence the Sept. translate, “out of Zabulon, the powerful in the sceptre of learning;” (C.) (Grabe) “of instruction.” H.—Some, without any proof, attribute the institution of these officers to Moses, others to David. We read of many who possessed this title under his reign; and ever after, the kings of Juda had scribes, as some great men had also. The kings of Persia kept secretaries to write their edicts, and some they sent, with greater authority, into the provinces. See 1 Ead. iv. 8. Eccli. (x. 5,) says, upon the person of the scribe God shall lay his honour. The scribes, or sopherim, seem therefore to have enjoyed an extensive authority, and the tribe of Zabulon used it on this occasion for the common good, (v. 18. C.) while many of the other tribes seem to be accused of backwardness in the cause of God.

VER. 15. Exposed. Heb. “he was sent on foot into the vale,” to contend with the 900 chariots of Sisara. Issachar boldly followed him to battle. They came down with such fury and speed, as if they were falling headlong down a precipice. H.—Sisara presently turned his back, being affrighted with the apparition of angels, who probably fought at the head of Barac’s troop. Salien.—Only three tribes exposed themselves to danger, while the rest were either engaged in civil broils, or in their usual employments. C.—Divided. By this it seems that the valiant men of the tribe of Ruben were divided in their sentiments, with relation to this war; which division kept them at home within their own borders, to hear the bleating of their flocks. Ch.—Heb. may have different explanations, “In the divisions (families) of Ruben, there are princes of a great heart,” renowned for their prudence and valour: or “Ruben dwelt in his division, (or territory) there are chiefs,” &c. C.—Prot. “for the divisions of Ruben, there were great thoughts of heart.” Bonfrere supposes that these disputes excited the surprise and observations of all. H.

VER. 16. Borders, trusting in the strength of thy situation. Ruben was protected on all sides by the rivers Jordan, Arnon, and Jaboce.

VER. 17. Galaad was inhabited by the tribes of Gad and Manasses; and took no part in this war. C.—Dan. Heb. “Why did not Dan remain in ships?” Debbora now rebukes those who lived on the west side of the Jordan, as well as 18 But Zabulon and Nephthali offered their lives to death in the region of Merome.

19 The kings came and fought, the kings of Chanaan fought in Thanac, by the waters of Mageddo, and yet they took no spoils.

20 There was war made against them from heaven: the stars, remaining in their order and courses, fought against Sisara.

21 The torrent of Cison dragged their carcasses, the torrent of Cadumim, the torrent of Cison: tread thou, my soul, upon the strong ones.

22 The hoofs of the horses were broken whilst the stoutest of the enemies fled amain, and fell headlong down.

23 Curse ye the land of Meroz, said the angel of the Lord: curse the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord, to help his most valiant men.

24 Blessed among women be Jahel, the wife of Haber the Cinite, and blessed be she in her tent.

25 He asked her water, and she gave him milk, and offered him butter in a dish fit for princes.

26 She put her left hand to the nail, and her right those on the east. Dan might think himself remote enough from the kingdom of Jabin. But Aser dwelt very near, yet durst not make any attempt to throw off the yoke.—Havens. Heb. "Breaches." He had, perhaps, suffered much already, (H.) and preferred to remain quiet, even in his half-ruined cities, before engaging in the perilous attempt of his brethren. C.—He was too much taken up with commerce, to pay any attention to the oracles of the Lord. Grabe's Sept. "Aser . . pitched his tents upon his cavities, or the broken ground of it," the sea shore, which is commonly intersected with a variety of rivulets amid the cliffs. H.

VER. 18. Merome. Heb. "In the heights of the field, or of Merome." Some take this place to be the lake Semechon, but we have endeavoured to shew that it was in the vicinity of Thanac, Jos. xi. 5. C.—Thabor was in the midst of a great field or plain. D.—Barac seems to have been at the head of 10,000 men, of the tribe of Issachar, attacking Sisara, at the foot of Thabor, while 40,000 of the tribes of Nephthali and Zabulon, almost without arms, fell upon the kings of Chanaan, who had posted themselves near the waters of Mageddo, to intercept any recruits that might be sent from the southern tribes, v. 8. 15. 19. C.

VER. 19. Spoils. So far from it, they even lost their lives. M.—Heb. "they took no piece (or gain) of money." If we understand this of the Israelites, we may say that they stopped not to plunder the slain, nor would they suffer any to redeem their life by the promise of a great ransom. Whatever riches they found afterwards, they consecrated to the Lord, in testimony of their gratitude. C. Num. xxxi. 54.

VER. 20. Stars, or angels, who are compared to the stars, and often fought for Israel. 2 Mac. x. 29. Valea, Philos. c. xxxi. C.—The favourable and malignant influences of the stars, which the Rabbins talk of, would here be negatory, (H.) unless they might contribute to bring on rain. Cajet.—Josephus (v. 6.) informs us that a furious tempest of hail, &c. met the enemy in the face, and rendered all their efforts useless. C.—A similar instance of the divine protection was obtained by the prayers of the thundering legion, in the army of M. Aurelius; (Tert. Euseb. Hist. v. 5.) and again, when Theodosius attacked the tyrant Eugenius, of which Claudian speaks, (in 3 Cons. Honor.) "Te propter gelidis Aquilo de monte procellis—Obruit adversas acies, revolutaque tela—Vertit in Auctores et turbine repulit hastas—O nimium dilecte Deo, qui fundit ab antris—Æolus armatas hiemes, qui militat æther—Et conjurati veniunt ad classica venti." H.—Courses. This miracle was of a different kind from that which proved so fatal to the enemies of Josue. Lyran.—Sept. Alex. "They fought with (meta) Israel," for which Grabe puts, against Sisara. H.

VER. 21. Dragged. Prot. "swept them away, that ancient river, the river Kishon."—Cadumim, which the Prot. translate ancient, (H.) means also eastern. The former epithet seems very insignificant. Some assert, that the Cison divided its streams about Mount Thabor, and one part ran towards the east into the lake of Gencareth, which is here designated, while the other empties itself above Carmel into the great sea. But there is no proof of this assertion in the Scripture, nor in Josephus. We read (Judith vii. 3.) of a place, which the Syriac properly calls Cadmon, and the Vulg. Chelmon, in this neighbourhood. Instead of Cadumim, Sym. and Theodotion read Kodssim, which the former translates, "the holy vale." Many of the army (C.) of the kings, and perhaps of Sisara also, (H.) endeavouring to make their escape, were drowned in the Cison. C.

VER. 22. Broken (cecidervnt) "fell off," the hoofs being fractured by the hard road, while the riders galloped full speed. H.—Some translate the Heb. "the hoofs of the horses made a sound like that of a hammer beating an anvil, on account of the hurry of the strong ones who push them forward." Quadrupedante pulcritudine quatit ungula campum, as Virgil attempts to imitate the sound in verse. Others, "the hoof . . was broken by the precipitation (C.) (Prot. prancings, the prancings of the mighty ones. H.) of those who fled." Formerly, Xenophon observes, the horses were not usually shod with iron. The feet of Bucephalus were consequently much worn. Yet some took the precaution to defend the feet of their horses with brass, (Homer) or iron, in the shape of crescents. Eustathius.—Nero shod his mules with silver; (Sueton.) and Poppea, his wife, had shoes of gold for her more delicate beasts. Soleas ex auro quoque induere solebat.

hand to the workman's hammer, and she struck Sisara, seeking in his head a place for the wound, and strongly piercing through his temples.

27 Between her feet he fell: he fainted, and he died: he rolled before her feet, and there he lay lifeless and wretched.

28 His mother looked out at a window, and howled: and she spoke from the dining-room: Why is his chariot so long in coming back? Why are the feet of his horses so slow?

29 One that was wiser than the rest of his wives, returned this answer to her mother-in-law:

30 Perhaps he is now dividing the spoils, and the fairest of the women is chosen out for him: garments of divers colours are given to Sisara for his prey, and furniture of different kinds is heaped together to adorn necks.

31 So let all thy enemies perish, O Lord: but let them that love thee shine, as the sun shineth in his rising.

32 * And the land rested for forty years.

* A. M. 2719, A. C. 1285.

Plin. xxxiii. 11.—Yet many excellent horses in Arabia and Tartary are never shod. Tavern. T. i. B. ii. 5.

VER. 23. Meroz. Where this land of Meroz was, which is here laid under a curse, we cannot find: nor is there mention of it any where else in holy writ. In the spiritual sense, they are cursed who refuse to assist the people of God in their warfare against their spiritual enemies. Ch.—Eusebius seems to have thought that Merom, a body of water, and the village Meroz (H.) were the same place, 12 miles from Sebaste. The inhabitants were surely under an obligation of assisting their brethren; and these, it appears, lived in the vicinity, and neglected their duty. Sept. Alex. reads Mazar. Some stars are styled Mazzaroth. Job xxxviii. 32.—Angel, Michael; or the high priest, or Barac, Debbora, &c. See C. ii. 1. C.—Prot. "Curse ye Meroz, (said the angel of the Lord) curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof."—To help. Prot. "to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Sept. "our helper is the Lord in the mighty warriors." He assists their endeavours, which would otherwise prove unsuccessful. H.—The Jews think that Barac cursed Meroz, the star or the angel of the Chanaanites, who protected Sisara. Chal. See Serar. q. 15. Others say that he was an ally of that general, who was excommunicated by Barac, at the sound of 400 trumpets. But these opinions only deserve contempt. C.

VER. 24. Among. Heb. "above." After cursing those who befriended the enemy, Debbora pronounces a blessing upon Jahel. H.—The blessed Virgin is surely still more entitled to praise. W.—Tent. It was esteemed a mark of virtue for a woman to keep at home. Drusius.

VER. 25. Dish. Heb. sephel; whence the sympule of the Lydians, Tuscans, and Romans, was probably derived, denoting a bowl or jug with a handle, designed for libations. They were formerly made of potter's ware, fictilibus probatur sympliciis, or sympulis. Plin. xxxv. 18. "Aut quis—Symposium ridere Numas, nigrumve catinum—Aut vaticanas fragiles de monte patellas—Ausus erat." Juv. Sat. vi. C.

VER. 26. Sisara. Heb. says with the hammer; (Prot.) "she smote off his head, when she had pierced and stricken (the nail) through his temples." But we may rather translate, (H.) "she pierced his head, she struck it, and pierced through his temples." C.—For we cannot suppose that she severed his head from his body with the hammer; but she fastened it to the ground with the nail. C. iv. 21.

VER. 27. Wretched. Heb. "he expired where he fell down." H.—Debbora represents Jahel as ready to tread the unhappy Sisara under her feet, if he should offer to stir. She thrice repeats his death.

VER. 28. His mother, &c. This poetical imagination is very natural.—Room. Heb. "through the lattices," eshnab, of which the windows then consisted. Prov. vii. 6. C.—Horses. Prot. "why tarry the wheels of his chariots?" H.

VER. 29. Wives. This is not expressed in Heb. "his wise ladies answered her," or joined in her lamentations. Then the mother comforted herself with the hope that they might possibly be employed in dividing the spoils. C.—Heb. "yea she answered herself, Have they not gained the victory? have they divided the prey? to every man a damsel, yea two! to Sisara a booty of divers colours," &c. H.—Perhaps instead of damsel, lit. "a belly or two," which occurs no where else, the Heb. should be, "to the general a most beautiful embroidery work." C.

VER. 30. Necks. Heb. "the spoils of various colours, the embroidery of divers colours, on both sides, for the necks (of the captors) of the spoil." H.—Or more simply, "for the neck (general) of the army;" (Vatab.) or "the necks of the soldiers," who will be laden with the abundance of spoils. C.—The ladies dwell with great delight on the thought of possessing rich embroidery or needle work. How dreadfully would their hopes be blasted, when a few hours after they saw Barac at their gates, and their city in flames! H.

VER. 31. Rising. Heb. "when he goeth forth in his might." Let the just advance in virtue, and glory, as the sun becomes more beautiful and hot as he leaves the horizon, on a clear summer day. This comparison is often applied to the servants of God. Eccl. xvii. 16. 2 K. xxiii. 5. Mat. xiii. 45. C.

VER. 32. Forty. Usher says only 20 from the victory of Barac. Petau and

CHAP. VI.

The people, for their sins, are oppressed by the Madianites. Gedeon is called to deliver them.

AND the children of Israel again did evil in the sight of the Lord: and he delivered them into the hand of Madian seven years,

2 And they were grievously oppressed by them. And they made themselves dens and caves in the mountains, and strong holds to resist.

3 And when Israel had sown, Madian and Amalec, and the rest of the eastern nations, came up:

4 And pitching their tents among them, wasted all things as they were in the blade, even to the entrance of Gaza: and they left nothing at all in Israel for sustenance of life, nor sheep, nor oxen, nor asses.

5 For they and all their flocks came with their tents, and like locusts filled all places, an innumerable multitude of men, and of camels, wasting whatsoever they touched.

6 And Israel was humbled exceedingly in the sight of Madian.

7 And he cried to the Lord, desiring help against the Madianites.

8 And he sent unto them a prophet, and he spoke: Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel: I made you to come up out of Egypt, and brought you out of the house of bondage,

9 And delivered you out of the hands of the Egypt-other able chronologers allow the full term of 40 years, after that event. See C. iii. 11. H.—Barac was buried at Cedes, where Benjamin (Itin.) saw his tomb. C.—Ozi, the high priest for the last 40 years, was succeeded by Zarais, A. 2760, who reigned an equal length of time, and died with Gedeon. Maraioth took his place, A. 2801, at the commencement of Abimelech's usurpation, and died A. 2841. Salien.

CHAP. VI. VER. 1. Madian. This nation had formerly been almost extirpated by Moses. Num. xxxi. 7, &c. H.—But they had re-established themselves, and dwelt in the neighbourhood of the Moabites, whom they had assisted. They now made a league with Amalec, and other eastern nations, (C.) in order to revenge themselves upon the Israelites. H.—Madian was a descendant of Abraham by Cetura. Gen. xiv. 2. The shortness of the servitude, which the Israelites had to suffer from them, was compensated by its severity. M.

VER. 2. Resist is not expressed in Heb. neither did Israel dare to encounter the enemy. They retreated into the strongest holds, to rescue their goods and persons from the depredations of the Madianites. H.

VER. 3. Amalec was formerly widely dispersed through Arabia. Some dwelt to the south of the promised land. Ex. xvii. Num. xiii. 3. 1 K. xv. 6. and xxxi. 1. But these inhabited the eastern countries, concerning whom Balaam spoke, Num. xxiv. 20. The Amalecites were scattered from Hevila upon the Euphrates, as far as the Red Sea and Sur, which is near Egypt. 1 K. xv. 7. and xxvii. 8. The other eastern nations denote those who inhabited the desert Arabia, the Moabites, Ammonites, Idumeans, Cedarenians, &c. Isai. xi. 14. Jer. xlix. 28. Eze. viii. 7.

VER. 4. Blade. Heb. "the increase of the earth." They waited till the corn was almost ripe, and what they could not carry off they destroyed. C.—It seems they had allowed Gedeon time to gather in some corn, (v. 11.) and other Israelites would seize their opportunity, and perhaps cut the corn before it was perfectly ripe, which the Vulg. may insinuate by mentioning the blade.—Gaza. They ravaged the whole country from east to west. H.—This method of warfare is, in effect, more cruel than any other.—Asses. They left no cattle, nor animals that they could take, wherewith the Israelites might cultivate the earth. C.—In the extremity of famine, the flesh of asses would have been used to sustain life, as the text insinuates. H.

VER. 5. Locusts. This comparison shews the rapacity and devastation of the enemy. Locusts in those countries often obscure the air with their numbers, and presently eat up every green thing. They proceed in regular order like a great battalion, and it is reported that they send some before to explore the country. S. Jer. in Joel ii. Bochart. C. Gen. x. 4.

VER. 8. A prophet. The people no sooner repent, than God shews them mercy. H.—The name of this prophet is unknown. The Jews say it was Phineas; others think it was an angel in human shape: but he might be one divinely commissioned on this occasion, to make an exhortation to the people, assembled on some of the great festivals, (see C. ii. 1. C.) though he might continue to exercise his authority afterwards. M.—S. Aug. (q. 81.) thinks that the angel (v. 11.) is here called a prophet, because he appeared in human form. W.

VER. 10. Fear not. Idols can do you no hurt, if you continue faithful to me. H.—Shew them no respect or worship. The fear of Isaac means the God (C.) whom Isaac worshipped, Gen. xxxi. 42. Idolatry owed its rise to a groundless fear: grimos in orbe deos fecit timor. Lucret. The pagans offered sacrifice to tians, and of all the enemies that afflicted you: and I cast them out at your coming in, and gave you their land.

10 And I said: I am the Lord your God, fear not the gods of the Amorrhites, in whose land you dwell. And you would not hear my voice.

11 And an angel of the Lord came, *and sat under an oak that was in Ephra, and belonged to Joas, the father of the family of Ezri. And when Gedeon, his son, was threshing and cleansing wheat by the wine press, to flee from Madian, 12 The angel of the Lord appeared to him, and said The Lord is with thee, O most valiant of men.

13 And Gedeon said to him: I beseech thee, my lord, if the Lord be with us, why have these evils fallen upon us? Where are his miracles, which our fathers have told us of, saying: The Lord brought us out of Egypt? but now the Lord hath forsaken us, and delivered us into the hand of Madian.

14 And the Lord looked upon him, and said: *Go, in this thy strength, and thou shalt deliver Israel out of the hand of Madian: know that I have sent thee.

15 He answered, and said: I beseech thee, my lord, wherewith shall I deliver Israel? Behold, my family is the meanest in Manasses, and I am the least in my father's house.

16 And the Lord said to him: I will be with thee: and thou shalt cut off Madian as one man.

17 And he said: If I have found grace before thee, give me a sign that it is thou that speakest to me:

Paventia, to fear and paleness, &c. that they might be secure from them. Lactan. H.

VER. 11. Angel; Michael. M.—Some think it was the prophet who had addressed the people, or Phineas, according to the Rabbins. See S. Aug. q. 81. Others believe it was the Son of God, who takes the name of Jehovah. Broughton and other Protest.—But the most natural opinion is, that a real angel was sent, in the name of God, like that which appeared to Moses, and assumed the incommunicable name, as the ambassador of God. Gedeon took him for a man, and presented him a noble feast, without designing to offer sacrifice to him. Maimonides and Grotius seem to suppose that all this passed in a dream; but the sequel refutes this opinion.—Ephra, a city of the half tribe of Manasses, on the west side of the Jordan, of which Joas was the richest citizen. He was of the family of Ezri, and a descendant of Abiezer. 1 Par. viii. 18. Heb. might be rendered, "Joas, the Abiezerite." C. viii. 32. and xiii. 2.—Madian. Not having the convenience of cleansing the wheat in the open field, Gedeon was doing it privately, with a design to carry it off, at the approach of the enemy, and to support himself and family in some cavern. Heb. takes no notice of cleaning: "Gedeon threshed wheat, by the wine press, to hide it, or to flee," &c. He probably used a flail, or some smaller sticks, such as were employed to beat out olives. Isai. xxviii. 27. Ruth ii. 17. C.—The wheat harvest was about Pentecost, that of barley was at Easter. It seems the Madianites had been later than usual this year, in making their incursions, v. 33. H.

VER. 12. Ja. We should naturally translate, be with thee, if the answer of Gedeon did not shew (C.) that it is to be taken as an assertion, that the Lord was already reconciled to Israel, and had made choice of this valiant man to rescue his people from slavery, though he was not of the first nobility, v. 15.

VER. 13. My lord. This he says out of respect, supposing that he was addressing a prophet, (H.) or some virtuous person, of whom he desires to know what reasons could be given for the assurance of divine favour, which he held out. He speaks not out of distrust. M.

VER. 14. Lord, Jehova. H.—The Chal. and Sept. have, "the angel of the Lord," as the best interpreters understand it. C.—Upon him, with benevolence and an air of authority, that he might know that he was speaking to some one more than man. H.—Strength, with which I have endured thee. M.—Though Gedeon was naturally brave, he was no more disposed to attack the Madianites than the rest of his spirited countrymen; and, even after he was strengthened from above, he was so conscious of his own inability to effect so great a deliverance, that he stood in need of the most convincing miracles, to make him act as the judge of Israel. H.

VER. 15. The meanest in Manasses, &c. Mark how the Lord chooses the humble (who are mean and little in their own eyes) for the greatest enterprises. Ch.—Heb. and Sept. lit. "My millenary is poor, or lowly," &c. This term means a great family, from which many others spring, or a city inhabited by such Bethlehem was of this description in Juda. Mic. v. 2. Ephra and the family of Abiezer were not the first in Manasses. Grotius observes, that Gedeon and Cincinnatus were called to the highest offices, when they least expected it.

VER. 17. Thou, the Lord, or his angel, capable of fulfilling these great promises; or be pleased, by some sign, to manifest thyself to me. C.—He began to perceive that he was talking with some person of authority: (H.) yet still he did 18 And depart not hence, till I return to thee, and bring a sacrifice, and offer it to thee. And he answered: I will wait thy coming.

19 So Gedeon went in, and boiled a kid, and made unleavened loaves of a measure of flour: and putting the flesh in a basket, and the broth of the flesh into a pot, he carried all under the oak, and presented to him.

20 And the angel of the Lord said to him: Take the flesh and the unleavened loaves, and lay them upon that rock, and pour out the broth thereon. And when he had done so,

21 The angel of the Lord put forth the tip of the rod, which he held in his hand, and touched the flesh and the unleavened loaves: and there arose a fire from the rock, and consumed the flesh and the unleavened loaves: and the angel of the Lord vanished out of his sight.

22 And Gedeon seeing that it was the angel of the Lord, said: Alas, my Lord God: for I have seen the angel of the Lord face to face.

23 And the Lord said to him: Peace be with thee: fear not, thou shalt not die.

24 And Gedeon built there an altar to the Lord, and called it the Lord's peace, until this present day. And when he was yet in Ephra, which is of the family of Ezri,

25 That night the Lord said to him: Take a bullock of thy father's, and another bullock of seven years, and thou shalt destroy the altar of Baal, which is thy father's: and cut down the grove that is about the altar:

not suspect that it was a spirit, otherwise he would not have offered food, nor would he have been so much surprised and afraid, only when the angel disappeared so suddenly, v. 22.

VER. 18. A sacrifice, or some provisions to present unto thee. Heb. mincha, is taken for a present, particularly of flour and wine. It is used to denote those presents which were made by Jacob to Esau, and Joseph, and by Aod to the king of Moab. C. iii. 15. Gen. xliii. 14. C.—To sacrifice, often means to kill things for a feast, Mat. xxii. 4. What Gedeon brought, was afterwards turned into a sacrifice by the angel, v. 21. M.—Gedeon was not a priest, nor was there any altar prepared for a sacrifice. If Gedeon had intended to offer one, he would not have boiled nor baked the food, which he presented before his guest. C.

VER. 19. Measure. Heb. "epha," containing ten gomors, each of which was sufficient for the daily maintenance of a man; so that Gedeon brought as much as would have sufficed for ten men. Abraham presented no more before the three angels, Gen. xviii. 6. The magnificence of the ancients consisted rather in producing great abundance, than in multiplying dishes.—Broth. Syr. and Arab. translate, "a good (old) wine."

VER. 20. Thereon. Thus he would shew Gedeon that he had no need of food. He would exercise his obedience, and manifest a greater miracle, as the flesh and bread would be less apt to take fire, when the angel touched them, even though some might imagine that he caused a spark to come from the rock. For the like purpose, Elias ordered three or four buckets of water to be poured on the bullock, which fire from heaven would miraculously consume. 3 K. xviii. 24. H.—This broth might serve to anoint the altar, (Ex. xl. 10. M.) or answer instead of the usual libations. A. Montan.

VER. 22. Alas. He makes this exclamation, concluding that he should soon die. Ex. xxxiii. 20. Callimachus says that "it was a law of Saturn, that the man who saw an immortal, unless the god himself chose to shew him that favour, should pay dearly for it." Grot.—This opinion was groundless; and it is wonderful that it should prevail among the Israelites, (H.) since so many had seen angels without receiving any harm. M.

VER. 23. Said to him, as he was ascending into heaven, (M.) or the following night. C.—It seems that Gedeon heard the angel's proclamation of peace, and shewed his gratitude by forming the rock, or stone, into a kind of rough altar, which he entitled Yehova shalom, "God's peace." (H.) for doing which he received an order, v. 26. M.—Others erect altars, in various places; but they must be authorized by God. C.—Ezri. Prot. "unto this day it is yet in Ephra, of the Abiezrites." Sept. is ambiguous. "He, or it, being yet in Ephra," &c. H.

VER. 25.—And another, or "the second." Only one seems to have been sacrificed; (v. 28. Cajetan) though others think that the second bullock was designed for a peace-offering. Bonfrere. Some infer that it had been fattened for Baal. Sept. observe, that the first bullock or "calf was fattened:" but it does not appear for what purpose. C.—Seven years, in memory of the duration of the slavery. M.—Before that age, bulls were not deemed so fit for yoking. Hesiod would have them to be nine years old.—Altar. We may render the Heb. "Cut down the idol which is upon the altar; or, Break in pieces the aschera," &c. This is the title of the idol of the grove, Astarte or Asteroth. Syr. and Arab. The Sept. is favourable to this explanation. C.—But the groves themselves were to be cut down, where an altar of God was to be erected. It seems this altar and the grove belonged to Joas, who is hence supposed to have joined in the worship of 26 And thou shalt build an altar to the Lord thy God, in the top of this rock, whereupon thou didst lay the sacrifice before: and thou shalt take the second bullock, and shalt offer a holocaust upon a pile of the wood, which thou shalt cut down out of the grove.

27 Then Gedeon, taking ten men of his servants, did as the Lord had commanded him. But fearing his father's house, and the men of that city, he would not do it by day, but did all by night.

28 And when the men of that town were risen in the morning, they saw the altar of Baal destroyed, and the grove cut down, and the second bullock laid upon the altar, which then was built.

29 And they said one to another: Who hath done this? And when they enquired for the author of the fact, it was said: Gedeon, the son of Joas, did all this.

30 And they said to Joas: Bring out thy son hither, that he may die: because he hath destroyed the altar of Baal, and hath cut down his grove.

31 He answered them: Are you the avengers of Baal, that you fight for him? he that is his adversary, let him die before to-morrow light appear: if he be a god, let him revenge himself on him that hath cast down his altar.

32 From that day Gedeon was called Jerobaal, because Joas had said: Let Baal revenge himself on him that hath cast down his altar.

33 Now all Madian, and Amalec, and the eastern

Baal. If he did formerly, his eyes were now opened, and he boldly approved of the conduct of his son, (v. 31. H.) who had probably never been infected. M.

VER. 26. Top. Heb. "on the top of this fortress, (Masa. Dan. xi. 38. Sept.) on the platform, (C.) or place appointed." H.—Offer. Though Gedeon was not a priest, he was authorized to offer sacrifices. M.—God can dispense with his own laws. M.

VER. 27. House, his relations and fellow-citizens, (C.) who were addicted to idolatry. Prudence dictated that he should do this privately, lest he might be prevented by them. They would soon perceive the weakness of their idol. Yet some of the servants, or others who had been on the watch, disclosed to the idolaters that Gedeon had done the daring deed, unless perhaps they accused him on suspicion, as his enmity to that worship could not be concealed. H.

VER. 30. Bring. Parents took cognizance of the evil actions done in their family. The citizens require Joas to punish his son, or to deliver him up to them. On the same principle, the Israelites insisted that the tribes of Benjamin should not neglect to punish the citizens of Gabaa; and the Philistines demand Samson. C. xv. 12. and xx. 18. Cato advised that Cæsar should be given up to the Germans, whom he had unjustly invaded; and the Gauls would not be satisfied, unless the Fabii should be abandoned unto them. Grot. Jur. ii. 21. 4. C.

VER. 31. His, Baal's, or rather my son's adversary; (C.) let him die before this morning be spent, as the Heb. insinuates. Joas represents to the men of the city, who looked upon him with a degree of respect, (H.) as the first in power and riches among them, (C.) how ill it became the Israelites to vindicate an idol. If Baal were truly so powerful, as they seemed to imagine, (H.) and so eager to revenge himself, he could never be restrained from bringing his adversary to condign punishment. "Let the gods punish those who injure them," said Tacitus, Ann. i. "They would take care that their sacred things were not abused." Livy x. This argumentation would suit the idolaters, who supposed that their gods were animated with the same sentiments and eagerness for revenge as themselves. But the true God, who can feel no such impressions, bears for a long time with the impiety of men, though he requires that those who are in power should punish notorious offenders. The magistrate is the instrument of God's justice, and must stop, as much as possible, the growth of vice and irreligion. C.—It seems the citizens of Ephra acquiesced to the reason or authority of Joas, and even enlisted under the banners of Gedeon. H.

VER. 32. Altar. Prot. "Therefore on that day he called him Jerubbaal, saying, let Baal plead against him, because he hath thrown down his altar." Sept. Alex. says that he then styled it (auto, the altar,) "the judgment-seat of Baal, Dikasterion Baal. But the Vat. copy leaves Terobaal; and this title rather belonged to Gedeon. H.—David, out of horror for the name of Baal, calls him Jeruboseth, 2 K. xi. 21. "Let confusion plead," &c. For the same reason, Esbaal and Meribaal are called Isboseth and Miphboseth in Scripture. We read that Sanconisthon consulted "Jerombaal, priest of the god Jao," concerning the antiquities of Phœnicia, which has led some to conclude that he had seen Jerobaal. The work, however, of that author is generally supposed to be a fabrication of Porphyrius, and was unknown to Josephus. It contains a multitude of fabulous accounts, intermixed with some truths, which might be taken from the Bible. Gedeon was no priest, and we may suppose little concerned about the Phœnician affairs or antiquities. C.

VER. 33. Jeruel. They crossed the Jordan, probably at Bethsan, expecting people, were gathered together, and passing over the Jordan, camped in the valley of Jezrael.

34 But the spirit of the Lord came upon Gedeon, and he sounded the trumpet, and called together the house of Abiezer, to follow him.

35 And he sent messengers into all Manasses, and they also followed him: and other messengers into Aser, and Zabulon, and Nephthali, and they came to meet him.

36 And Gedeon said to God: If thou wilt save Israel by my hand, as thou hast said, 37 I will put this fleece of wool on the floor: if there be dew in the fleece only, and it be dry on all the ground beside, I shall know that by my hand, as thou hast said, thou wilt deliver Israel.

38 And it was so. And rising before day, wringing the fleece, he filled a vessel with the dew.

39 And he said again to God: Let not thy wrath be kindled against me, if I try once more, seeking a sign in the fleece. I pray that the fleece only may be dry, and all the ground wet with dew.

40 And God did that night as he had requested: and it was dry on the fleece only, and there was dew on all the ground.

CHAP. VII.

Gedeon with three hundred men, by stratagem, defeats the Madianites.

THEN *Jerobaal, who is the same as Gedeon, rising up early, and all the people with him, came to the fountain that is called Harad. Now the camp of Madian was in the valley, on the north side of the high hill.

2 And the Lord said to Gedeon: The people that are with thee are many, and Madian shall not be delivered into their hands: lest Israel should glory against me, and say: I was delivered by my own strength.

to find rich booty in this most fertile vale, where it is reported that grass, or the plants, grow to such a size, that a man on horseback can scarcely be seen! They met with a defeat near Endor and Mount Tabor. C. viii. 18. Ps. lxxxii. 11. C.

VER. 34. Him. He first calls his relations, and then the neighbouring tribes, to march against the enemy. He had before declared God's orders, and was recognized as judge and deliverer of Israel; so that no one objects to his exercising this act of sovereignty.

VER. 35. Him. Heb. "them." M.—The people readily obey the summons, though many of them had not got the better of their fears. C. vii. 3. II.

VER. 38. So. Gedeon besought the Lord to confirm his mission, in order to raise the drooping spirits of his soldiers. If he had not believed that he was chosen for the purpose of rescuing Israel, he would never have exposed himself, by destroying the idol and grove of Baal, and by calling the people to arms. Yet he might fear at present, lest he might be destitute of some of the necessary qualifications, and might entertain some apprehensions, lest the promises of God might be only conditional. The readiness with which God grants his requests, shews that he was inspired to act as he did, and his faith is greatly commended. Heb. xi. 22. Other great saints have asked for a miraculous confirmation of what was promised. Ex. iv. 1. Jos. v. 13. Luc. i. 34. C.—Vessel. Heb. sephel, Sept. lecanē, "a dish." Syr. "a basin." The dew in Chanaan is very copious, resembling a shower of rain, inasmuch that the roads are rendered extremely slippery. Roger. i. 2. C.

VER. 40. Ground. In these two miracles the Fathers observe, that the fleece represented the Jewish nation, favoured with so many graces, while the rest of the world was dry and barren; and that, when the latter was watered with dew from heaven, by the coming of Jesus Christ, the Synagogue was deprived of those favours. CHAP. VII. VER. 1. Fountain. The same is also called Areth, as the copies of the Sept. and of S. Jerom vary. Bonf.—Harad, or "of trouble," either because the Madianites were filled with terror at the approach of Gedeon, or because so many of his soldiers returned home through fear. M.—Perhaps it may be the same which is called the fountain of Jezrael, near which Saul encamped, 1 K. xxix. 1. C.—Adrichomius places it on the south of Gelboe, which is called the high hill. M.—Heb. "on the north side of them, by the hill of More, in the vale." H.—Jezrael was between Gelboe to the south, and Hermon to the north. C.

VER. 2. Lest Israel, &c. By this we see that God will not choose for his instruments in great achievements, which depend purely on his grace, such as, through pride and self-conceit, will take the glory to themselves. Ch.—Yet

3 Speak to the people, and proclaim in the hearing of all: ^bWhosoever is fearful and timorous, let him return. So two and twenty thousand men went away from Mount Galaad and returned home, and only ten thousand remained.

4 And the Lord said to Gedeon: The people are still too many, bring them to the waters, and there I will try them: and of whom I shall say to thee, This shall go with thee, let him go: whom I shall forbid to go, let him return.

5 And when the people were come down to the waters, the Lord said to Gedeon: They that shall lap the water with their tongues, as dogs are wont to lap, thou shalt set apart by themselves: but they that shall drink bowing down their knees, shall be on the other side.

6 And the number of them that had lapped water, casting it with the hand to their mouth, was three hundred men: and all the rest of the multitude had drunk kneeling.

7 And the Lord said to Gedeon: By the three hundred men, that lapped water, I will save you, and deliver Madian into thy hand: but let all the rest of the people return to their place.

8 So taking victuals and trumpets according to their number, he ordered all the rest of the multitude to depart to their tents: and he with the three hundred gave himself to the battle. Now the camp of Madian was beneath him in the valley.

9 The same night the Lord said to him: Arise, and go down into the camp: because I have delivered them into thy hand.

10 But if thou be afraid to go alone, let Phara, thy servant, go down with thee.

^b Dent. xx. 8. 1 Mac. iii. 58.

Gedeon had only 32,000 to encounter 135,000 fighting men; so that if all had remained with him, they would each had to engage above four men, v. 3. C. viii. 10. M.

VER. 3. Return, agreeably to the law of Moses. Dent. xx. 8. If God had not enforced this order, it would perhaps have been neglected in the hurry, particularly as all seemed to have joined the army with such alacrity. M.—Scipio going to destroy Carthage, was informed that some Sicilian knights went on this expedition with extreme reluctance and fear; whereupon he gave 300 leave to depart. Livy xxix.—Galaad perhaps may have been substituted for Gelboe, as there seem to have been none from the Galaad, on the other side of the Jordan, in the army of Gedeon. C.—Abulensis thinks that some little mountain of this name might be in the vicinity of Jezrael.—Home. They were terrified at the sight of the enemy's camp. M.

VER. 5. Tongues. Some Latin copies add, "and hand," as it is expressed in Heb. &c. in the following verse. They resembled dogs more in the hurry than in the method of taking water. An old proverb says, "the dog drinks and flees away," (C.) alluding to the dogs in Egypt, who, through fear of the crocodiles which infest the banks of the Nile, lap the water with all expedition, "like a dog from the Nile." Erasmus. H. Macrobi. ii. 2.—Hence we might infer, that these 300 men were the most cowardly in the army, as Joseph. (v. 8.) Theod. (q. 15.) have done; (C.) and thus the glory of the victory would belong more incontrovertibly to God. H.—But as these 300, on this supposition, ought to have been disbanded, as well as the rest, we may rather conclude that they shewed greater courage and temperance by their posture, and were therefore retained (C.) to accompany their heroic leader in his perilous expedition. We must, nevertheless remark, that only those who preferred to acknowledge their fear, were disbanded according to the law; and as, among those who were not quite so cowardly, (H.) there would be some less courageous than others, (Amama) these might be selected by God, that no flesh should glory in his sight, 1 Cor. i. 29. H.

VER. 7. That lapped water. These were preferred that took the water up in their hands, and so lapped it, before them who laid themselves quite down to the waters to drink; which argued a more eager and sensual disposition. Ch.—It is thought that the former would be more capable of supporting the fatigues of war. M.—The Jews suppose that those who knelt, had been accustomed to do so in honour of Baal. Lyranus concludes that they were extremely fatigued and thirsty, while the 300 underwent the labours of war with less inconvenience. Josephus observes that this experiment was made in the heat of the day; yet, if Providence had not interfered, it seems very improbable that 10,000 men should all be so eager for water. H.

VER. 8. Victuals. It appears that they did not take sufficient, (C.) not expecting that they would have to pursue the enemy so far. C. viii. 5. 8.

11 And when thou shalt hear what they are saying, then shall thy hands be strengthened, and thou shalt go down more secure to the enemies' camp. And he went down with Phara, his servant, into part of the camp, where was the watch of men in arms.

12 But Madian and Amalec, and all the eastern people, lay scattered in the valley, as a multitude of locusts: their camels also were innumerable, as the sand that lieth on the sea shore.

13 And when Gedeon was come, one told his neighbour a dream: and in this manner related what he had seen: I dreamt a dream, and it seemed to me as if a hearth-cake of barley-bread rolled and came down into the camp of Madian: and when it was come to a tent, it struck it, and beat it down flat to the ground.

14 He to whom he spoke, answered: This is nothing else but the sword of Gedeon, the son of Joas, a man of Israel. For the Lord hath delivered Madian, and all their camp into his hand.

15 And when Gedeon had heard the dream, and the interpretation thereof, he adored: and returned to the camp of Israel, and said: Arise, for the Lord hath delivered the camp of Madian into our hands.

16 And he divided the three hundred men into three parts, and gave them trumpets in their hands, and empty pitchers, and lamps within the pitchers.

17 And he said to them: What you shall see me do, do you the same: I will go into one part of the camp, and do you as I shall do.

18 When the trumpet shall sound in my hand, do you also blow the trumpets on every side of the camp, and shout together to the Lord and to Gedeon.

19 And Gedeon, and the three hundred men that were with him, went into part of the camp, at the

VER. 11. Servant. Thus he confessed that he was not entirely free from fear himself, v. 5. 10. H.—The most courageous feel less alarm, when they have a companion, (M.) as Diomedes observed, when he desired that one or two might accompany him in the attempt to explore the enemy's camp. Iliad x.—Arma. The greatest part of this immense crowd of people, who came to plunder, neglected the laws of war; as the Israelites had not dared, for a long time, to oppose them. A select number of 135,000 men in arms was destined to keep them in order, and to protect them. Among these Gedeon insinuated himself, to know how they were encamped, and what sentiments they entertained. C.

VER. 13. A dream. Observation of dreams is commonly superstitious, and as such is condemned by the word of God; but in some extraordinary cases, as we here see, God is pleased by dreams to foretell what he is about to do. Ch. See Gen. xl, Lev. xix. 26. Deut. xviii. 10. W.—The small company of Gedeon stood in need of every sort of encouragement. H.

VER. 14. Sword and loaf are both derived from the same Heb. word, which signifies "to make war." See Num. xiv. 9. But if there had been no connection or reason in the discourse of the soldier, (which was not the case, as Providence put it into his mouth,) the end would be equally obtained, which was to encourage Gedeon, and to inform him that the enemy was not without some apprehensions. C.—Gedeon was not of the richest family, but came with great expedition, as the rolling of the barley-loaf might designate. M.—He was also encamped upon an eminence, and presently threw the affairs of Madian into confusion. H.—He understands the language of the Madianites, as it was not very different from the Hebrew.

VER. 15. Interpretation. Heb. "the breaking," in allusion to a loaf or nut which must be broken. C.—Adored God, in thanksgiving. M.

VER. 16. Lamps, or flambeaux, (C.) made of wood, full of turpentine. H.—The soldiers held one end in their hand, and when they had thrown down their pitchers, the sudden light, the sound of trumpets and of men on three sides of the camp, threw the various nations into the utmost consternation, as they very naturally supposed that they were surrounded with a great army. God also sent among them the spirit of confusion, so that they knew not one another. An ancient author, under the name of Tertullian, asserts that the 300 men were on horseback, and conquered by virtue of the cross, as the letter T, in Greek, stands for 300; (C.) and S. Aug. (q. 37,) follows up this idea, saying that, as the Greeks are put by the apostle for all the Gentiles, this letter was to insinuate, that the Gentiles chiefly would believe in Christ. Some of the Fathers have given a like mysterious explanation of the 318 servants of Abraham, as the two first letters of the name of Jesus denote 18. Eucher. Gen. xiv. 14. S. Amb. de Abr. l. 3.—We can never conquer our spiritual enemies, without a lively faith in our crucified (306) beginning of the midnight watch, and the watchmen being alarmed, they began to sound their trumpets, and to clap the pitchers one against another.

20 And when they sounded their trumpets in three places round about the camp, and had broken their pitchers, they held their lamps in their left hands, and with their right hands the trumpets which they blew, and they cried out: The sword of the Lord and of Gedeon:

21 Standing every man in his place round about the enemies' camp. So all the camp was troubled, and crying out and howling, they fled away:

22 And the three hundred men nevertheless persisted sounding the trumpets. And the Lord sent the sword into all the camp, and they killed one another, 23 Fleeing as far as Bethsetta, and the border of Abelmechula, in Tebbath. But the men of Israel, shouting from Nephthali, and Aser, and from all Manasses, pursued after Madian.

24 And Gedeon sent messengers into all Mount Ephraim, saying: Come down to meet Madian, and take the waters before them to Bethbera and the Jordan. And all Ephraim shouted, and took the waters before them and the Jordan as far as Bethbera.

25 And having taken two men of Madian, Oreb and Zeb: Oreb they slew in the rock of Oreb, and Zeb in the wine-press of Zeb. And they pursued Madian, carrying the heads of Oreb and Zeb to Gedeon, beyond the waters of the Jordan.

He is the minister of God's justice to punish Madian. M.—It is no derogation to God (C.) that honour is given to his servants. VER. 19. Watch. This was the second of the three watches known to the ancient Hebrews: in the New Testament, they followed the Roman discipline, and admitted four. Mat. xiv. 25. C.—Menoch. thinks they did the same at this time. H.—Alarmed. The were not asleep. M.—We read of similar stratagems in the Roman history. The Falsci threw the Romans into consternation, by appearing among them in mourning weeds; (C.) others read in priestly attire, (H.) with flambeaux and serpents; as those of Veii did by means of burning torches. Grot. Frontin. Strat. ii. 4, &c. C.—Trumpets. In a mystical sense, the preachers of the gospel, in order to spiritual conquests, must not only sound with the trumpet of the word of God, but must also break the earthen pitchers, by the mortification of the flesh and its passions, and carry lamps in their hands by the light of their virtues. Ch.—These lamps denote the virtues and miracles of the martyrs. V. Bede, c. 5. The things which would seem ridiculous, fill the enemy with terror and dismay. ibid. W.

VER. 21. Camp. Hence the Madianites made no doubt but a great army was in the midst of the camp, and began to cut in pieces all whom they met. C.

VER. 23. Bethsetta. These cities seem to have been near Bethsan.—And the border. Heb. "in Zererath," (H.) which Junius takes to be Sarthan.—Abelmechula gave birth to Eliscus, and was 12 miles from Scythopolis. S. Jer.—Tebbath occurs nowhere else. But we read of Thebes, three miles from the last mentioned city, famous for the death of Abimelech. C. xi. 50.—Men. Probably those who had been sent home the preceding night. Upon hearing of the success which attended Gedeon, all the tribes began to be in motion.

VER. 24. Bethbera, "the house of corn." Serarius.—Many take it to be Bethabera, "the house of passage," or the ford of the Jordan. The river was fordable on camels at any time. But in summer, people might cross the Jordan in many places on foot. C.

VER. 25. Two men. That is, two of their chiefs. Ch.—Prens. Heb. yekob, denotes a cistern fit to contain wine. Isai. v. 2. Prov. iii. 10.—Zeb had concealed himself in it.—Jordan. They afterwards took occasion from this exploit to extol their own valour, and to quarrel with Gedeon. C.

CHAP. VIII. VER. 1 Ephraim. The valour and insolence of these men are not call us, when thou wentest to fight against Madian? And they said him sharply, and almost offered violence.

2 And he answered them: What could I have done like to that which you have done? Is not one bunch of grapes of Ephraim better than the vintages of Abiezer?

3 The Lord hath delivered into your hands the princes of Madian, Oreb and Zeb: what could I have done like to what you have done? And when he had said this, their spirit was appeased, with which they swelled against him.

4 And when Gedeon was come to the Jordan, he passed over it with the three hundred men that were with him: who were so weary that they could not pursue after them that fled.

5 And he said to the men of Soccoth: Give, I beseech you, bread to the people that is with me, for they are faint: that we may pursue Zebce, and Salmana, the kings of Madian.

6 The princes of Soccoth answered: Peradventure the palms of the hands of Zebce and Salmana are in thy hand, and therefore thou demandest that we should give bread to thy army.

7 And he said to them: When the Lord therefore shall have delivered Zebce and Salmana into my hands, I will thresh your flesh with the thorns and briers of the desert.

8 And going up from thence, he came to Phanuel: and he spoke the like things to the men of that place. And they also answered him, as the men of Soccoth had answered.

9 He said, therefore, to them also: When I shall return a conqueror in peace, I will destroy this tower.

10 But Zebce and Salmana were resting with all their army. For fifteen thousand men were left of all the troops of the eastern people, and one hundred and twenty thousand warriors that drew the sword were slain.

placed together. Afterwards we have an account of the transactions of Gedeon in the pursuit, v. 4. H.—The tribe of Ephraim seems to have had some grounds for being displeased at not being summoned at first, as well as the tribes of Aser, &c. which were farther off; particularly as they sprang from Joseph, no less than Manasses, and had their portion in common. The general answers them with great respect, as otherwise their displeasure might have had very pernicious consequences. C.

VER. 2. What could I, &c. A meek and humble answer appeased them; who otherwise might have come to extremities. So great is the power of humility both with God and man. Ch. Prov. xv. 1.—Could. Heb. and Sept. "What have I yet done like you? M.—Is not the gleaner?" &c. I only commenced the war; you have brought it to a happy termination, by killing the princes of the enemy. Debrin adag. 157. At the first siege of Troy, Telamon having entered the city before Hercules, the latter was on the point of killing him, when Telamon, collecting a heap of stones, which he said he intended for an altar in honour of "the victorious Hercules," the hero's fury was appeased. Apol. Bib. ii. 6.

VER. 4. Jordan. Notwithstanding the precautions of Gedeon, some had got over the river, whom he resolves to follow at Bethsan. This city was about 15 miles from Mount Thabor. His men had been in motion a great part of the night, and had not taken provisions (C.) for so long a journey; so that he was obliged to apply for some when he had crossed the Jordan. H.

VER. 5. Soccoth. "The tents," where Jacob had encamped. Gen. xxxiii. It belonged to the tribe of Dan. M.—The people of this town, as well as the ancients of Phanuel, return an insolent reply to the just request of Gedeon. In cases of such extremity, all are bound to assist the defenders of their country; and the refusal is punished as a sort of rebellion, 2 K. xxv. 10. C.

VER. 6. Hand. Perhaps thou makest sure of taking these kings. H.—We apprehend that they will return with greater forces, and punish our compliance. M.

VER. 7. Desert. An usual mode of punishment, (2 K. xii. 1 Par. xx. 3. C.) which the cruel irriion of Gedeon and his army, who were fighting in the cause of God and of the nation, richly called for.

VER. 9. Tower; on the strength of which they ventured to treat him with insolence. Phanuel, "the face of God," (Gen. xxxii. 33.) was near the Jaboc. M.

VER. 10. Resting, as the Heb. word Korkor, signifies. Bochart.—Prot. have, "in Karkor" as if it were the name of a place. H.

VER. 11. Tents. The Scenitez, (M.) who inhabited part of the desert Arabia.

11 *And Gedeon went up by the way of them that dwelt in tents, on the east of Nobe, and Jegbaa, and smote the camp of the enemies, who were secure, and suspected no hurt.

12 And Zebce and Salmana fled, and Gedeon pursued and took them, all their host being put in confusion.

13 And returning from the battle before the sun-rising, 14 He took a boy of the men of Soccoth: and he asked him the names of the princes and ancients of Soccoth, and he described unto him seventy-seven men.

15 And he came to Soccoth, and said to them: Behold Zebce, and Salmana, concerning whom you upbraided me, saying: Peradventure the hands of Zebce and Salmana are in thy hands, and therefore thou demandest that we should give bread to the men that are weary and faint.

16 So he took the ancients of the city, and thorns and briers of the desert, and tore them with the same, and cut in pieces the men of Soccoth.

17 And he demolished the tower of Phanuel, and slew the men of the city.

18 And he said to Zebce and Salmana: What manner of men were they, whom you slew in Thabor? They answered: They were like thee, and one of them as the son of a king.

19 He answered them: They were my brethren, the sons of my mother. As the Lord liveth, if you had saved them, I would not kill you.

20 And he said to Jether, his eldest son: Arise, and slay them. But he drew not his sword: for he was afraid, being but yet a boy.

21 And Zebce and Salmana said: Do thou rise and run upon us: because the strength of a man is according to his age: *Gedeon rose up, and slew Zebce and Salmana: and he took the ornaments and bosses, with

C.—Hurt. They had probably been mounted on camels, &c. (H.) and did not suspect that Gedeon would be so soon after them across the Jordan. M.

VER. 13. Sun-rising. It would seem as if all these exploits had been performed between midnight and sun-rising, in the month of May, which is quite incredible; and hence many translate, "the sun being up." Sept. and Theodotion, "from the height or ascent of Hares," (the situation of which we know not,) or "of the mountains," (Aquila) or "woods," (Symmachus) or perhaps "from the eastward." C.—The Scripture does not, however, specify that all this took place in the space of six or seven hours, or of one night, but only that Gedeon came to Soccoth so early, as to take the magistrates unawares, being informed by a young man where they lived. This might probably happen on the second morning, after he had surprised the camp of the Madianites, at Jezrael. Prot. and Chal. agree with the Vulg. "before the sun was up." The other translations explain chares, as if it denoted the place or situation from which Gedeon was returning. H.—Described. The text may signify either that the boy marked them out, or that Gedeon took down a memorandum of their names. C.—He would not punish the innocent with the guilty. M.

VER. 16. Tore. Heb. seems to be corrupted in this place. "And he slewed, (instructed or chastised) with these thorns." The Sept. and Vulg. read the same word as v. 7. He crushed the people with such instruments as are used to beat out corn. It is probable that he only treated the magistrates of Soccoth and of Phanuel in this manner. C.

VER. 18. Thabor. Some of the relations or brothers of Gedeon had retired thither, as to a place of safety; and the latter wished to know what was become of them, that he might redeem them, if alive. C.—King. They answer with flattery, insinuating that Gedeon had the air of a king. M.

VER. 19. Kill you. They were not included in the number of the seven devoted nations, (W.) and the precept for destroying the Madianites no longer subsisted. Num. xxxi. 17. M.—The laws of war permitted the Hebrews to kill their prisoners, if they thought proper. No public executioner was necessary. Samuel killed Agag, 1 K. xv. 32. See 3 K. ii. 25. 2 K. i. 15. C.—Gedeon had a mind to make his son partake in the victory, and punish these kings for an unjust murder of his relations. He would also inure him to fight against the enemies of God, &c. M.

VER. 21. Age. They beg that they may die in a more speedy and noble manner. Tacitus (Hist. iv.) observes, "it was reported that Civilis exposed some of 22 And all the men of Israel said to Gedeon: Rule thou over us, and thy son, and thy son's son: because thou hast delivered us from the hand of Madian.

23 And he said to them: I will not rule over you, neither shall my son rule over you, but the Lord shall rule over you.

24 And he said to them: I desire one request of you: Give me the earlets of your spoils. For the Ismaelites were accustomed to wear golden earlets.

25 They answered: We will give them most willingly. And spreading a mantle on the ground, they cast upon it the earlets of the spoils.

26 And the weight of the earlets that he requested, was a thousand seven hundred sicles of gold, besides the ornaments, and jewels, and purple raiment, which the kings of Madian were wont to use, and besides the golden chains that were about the camels' necks.

27 And Gedeon made an ephod thereof, and put it in his city Ephra. And all Israel committed fornication with it, and it became a ruin to Gedeon, and to all his house.

28 But Madian was humbled before the children of Israel, neither could they any more lift up their heads: but the land rested for forty years, while Gedeon presided.

the Roman captives to his little son, in order that he might fix his arrows and javelins in their bodies."—Ornaments. Most interpreters understand "crescents." The veneration of the Arabs for the moon, the celestial Venus, or Alilat, is well known. The Turks still make use of this sign, as Christians employ the cross on their standards, temples, &c. Men and women anciently wore on their neck or forehead ornaments of the same nature, as these camels did. Isai. iii. 18. Lactantius adorned his horses in the most splendid manner. Virg. Æn. vii: Aurea pectoribus demissa monilia pendunt. Caligula decorated with extravagance his famous horse Incitatus, on which he designed to confer the consulate. Sueton.—In Egypt the camels are sometimes painted yellow, and hung with a variety of little bells. Vaneb.

VER. 22. Israel, who were in his army, and of whom he receives the earlets for his share of the spoil. C.—But as those who staid at home received a share of the booty, and no doubt would come to congratulate Gedeon on his victory, it seems equally probable that this offer of the regal dignity was made to him in a full assembly of the people, (II.) which is greatly to the honour of this valiant man. M.—Rule thou. They wish to confer upon him a dignity which he did not now possess, and which he absolutely refused, being, as he thought, incompatible with the theocracy. This shews that it was not the dignity of judge, which he retained till his death, but that of king, which was so displeasing to God, when the Israelites resolved to establish it among them. 1 K. viii. 7. M. T. Grot. C.—Josephus (v. 8.) thinks that Gedeon wished to resign the former dignity, but was forced to retain it forty years. The judges were chosen by God, and acted as his lieutenants, so that the people having no part in their election, the Lord alone was considered as the king of Israel. Some are of opinion that the people wished, on this occasion, to make the dignity hereditary. C.—Serarius thinks that they made an offer of the regal power to Gedeon, to his son, and grandson, only. But it seems rather that they meant to make the sovereign authority over entirely to his family, (M.) so great a sense had they of his courage, moderation, and just severity, of which he had given such striking proofs. H.

VER. 24. Request. It was not then thought dishonourable to ask nor to receive presents. The most precious part of the booty had been already presented to the general, according to the custom of the heroic times. But, as the people wished to make Gedeon king, he consents to receive the earlets, as a memorial of their affection.—Earlets. Heb. and Sept. (M.) may also signify, "each an earlet," as if he would only accept of one from each soldier. The original signifies also, the rings which women put under their noses; but, as men never did, it has not that meaning here, (C.) though there might be women in the camp of the Madianites. H.—Ismaelites. By this title various nations are designated. It seems almost as general as the word Arab among us. These nations were no more distinguished by these ornaments than the Hebrews themselves. Ex. xxxii. 2. and xxxv. 12. The Persians, Africans, Lybians, &c. wore ear-rings. C.

VER. 26. And jewels. Some translate, "crescents (Sept. "little moons") and boxes" (actiphoth, M.) of perfumes, such as Alexander found among the spoils of Darius, and reserved to put his Homer in. These ornaments were also used by women. Isai. iii. 18. C.—The eastern nations delight in perfumes. M.—The ear-rings alone would amount to 3102½ lbs. sterling. H.

VER. 27. An ephod. A priestly garment; which Gedeon made with a good design: but the Israelites, after his death, abused it by making it an instrument of their idolatrous worship, (Ch.) and perhaps consulting their idols with it. No law forbade the making of such a garment. M.—It was not peculiar to the high priest, since we find that Samuel and David occasionally wore the ephod, (2 K.

29 So Jerobaal, the son of Joas, went and dwelt in his own house:

30 And he had seventy sons, who came out of his thigh, for he had many wives.

31 And his concubine, that he had in Sichem, bore him a son, whose name was Abimelech.

32 And Gedeon, the son of Joas, died in a good old age, and was buried in the sepulchre of his father, in Ephra, of the family of Ezri.

33 But after Gedeon was dead, the children of Israel turned again, and committed fornication with Baalim. And they made a covenant with Baal, that he should be their god:

34 And they remembered not the Lord their God, who delivered them out of the hands of all their enemies round about:

35 Neither did they shew mercy to the house of Jerobaal Gedeon, according to all the good things he had done to Israel.

CHAP. IX.

Abimelech killeth his brethren. Joatham's parable. Gaal conspireth with the Sichelmites against Abimelech, but is overcome. Abimelech destroyeth Sichem; but is killed at Thebes.

AND Abimelech, "the son of Jerobaal, went to Sichem, to his mother's brethren, and spoke to them, and to all the kindred of his mother's father, saying:

• A. M. 2768, A. C. 1236.

vi. 14.) and probably Gedeon would, on public occasions, do the like with this most costly one, which would serve to remind the people of the victory which they had gained over Madiann. The chief judge in Egypt wore a great golden chain and collar, adorned with curious figures, as a mark of his dignity. Diod. ii. 3. This monument of the victory, and of the dignity of Gedeon, became, after his death, an occasion of superstition to the people, who foolishly imagined that they might consult the Lord, wherever an ephod was found. See C. xvii. 5. Ex. xxv. 7. They began to neglect the tabernacle, and to form a religion of their own choice. Many think that Gedeon was guilty of indiscretion in making it. S. Aug. q. xli. Lyran. E.—But the thing was in itself indifferent. He did not intend to arrogate to himself the privileges of the Levitical tribe. The Scripture nowhere condemns him, but speaks of his faith and of his death with honour, v. 32. Heb. xi. 3.—With it. Heb. "after it or him," which may either signify that this superstition took place after the death of Gedeon, (Sept. Laguin. M.) or in consequence of the making of the ephod. Jonath. Drus. Prot. &c. versions. C.—And to. This explains how it affected Gedeon, who was probably dead. He suffered in the ruin of his family, (II.) as it is explained in the following chapter. M.

VER. 31. His concubine. She was his servant, but not his harlot; and is called his concubine, as wives of an inferior degree are commonly called in the Old Testament, though otherwise lawfully married. Ch.—They had not all the privileges of wives; (Gen. xxv. 6.) and their children could not claim the inheritance. C.—Abimelech means, "my (H.) father king;" alluding to the dignity of Gedeon; or perhaps the mother imposed this name, hoping that her son would obtain the highest honours. Josephus calls her Druma. She dwelt at Sichem, to which place the judge of Israel often resorted, though his usual residence was at Ephra. This son of theirs is included among the 70.

VER. 32. Good. He left an excellent reputation, and died in God's friendship. M.

VER. 33. After. This is the most solid proof of Gedeon's piety, since he kept the people in awe, and faithful to the Lord during his life.—God. Heb. "and appointed Baal Berith their god," or goddess; for Berith, "of the covenant," is feminine. In the temple of this idol, the citizens of Sichem kept money. C. ix.

4. The pagans had many gods who presided over treaties; and the parties were, it seems, at liberty to choose whom they thought proper. They commonly pitched upon Jupiter, who is, therefore, styled Zeus orkus, or Dius fidus, or Pistius Jupiter. Laert. in Pythag. Halicar. iv. A statue "of Jupiter for oaths," was seen at Olympus, holding the thunderbolts in his hands, ready to hurl against those who proved faithless. Pausan. Eliae. Philo of Byblos speaks of the Phoenician god Elian, "the High," and (C.) of the goddess "Beruth," which last has a visible connection with Berith. The former title is sometimes given to the true God in Scripture. The city of Berytus was so called, probably in honour of the latter. Nonnus seems to have styled her Berca. Bochart. Chanaan ii. 17.—Pliny (xxx. 1.) mentions the god Briaze, at the foot of whose temple runs the river Olachas, the waters of which are said to burn those who are guilty of perjury. The Chaldee reads, "they chose Beel-kiam for their error." Amos (v. 26.) speaks of the images of Chim. May he not be the same as Berith or Kiam? Spencer says, that Chim was Saturn; but Vossius thinks it was the moon. Idol. ii. 23. C.

VER. 35. Mercy is here put for many virtues: gratitude, justice, kindness, &c. M.—The Israelites did not take care to provide for (C.) the family of one who had rendered them such essential services. H.

CHAP. IX. VER. 1. Abimelech was encouraged to contend with his brethren,

2 Speak to all the men of Sichem: whether is better for you that seventy men, all the sons of Jerobaal, should rule over you, or that one man should rule over you? And withal, consider that I am your bone, and your flesh.

3 And his mother's brethren spoke of him to all the men of Sichem, all these words, and they inclined their hearts after Abimelech, saying: He is our brother:

4 And they gave him seventy weight of silver out of the temple of Baalberith: wherewith he hired to himself men that were needy, and vagabonds, and they followed him.

5 And he came to his father's house in Ephra, and slew his brethren, the sons of Jerobaal, seventy men, upon one stone: and there remained only Joatham, the youngest son of Jerobaal, who was hidden.

6 And all the men of Sichem were gathered together, and all the families of the city of Mello: and as he saw the indifference which the people shewed for them, and as he was of a bold enterprising temper. C.

VER. 2. Men, particularly to those who have the greatest influence. Heb. Bahaim M.—The argumentation of Abimelech tended to prove that monarchy was the most perfect and eligible form of government, and that it would be hard upon the people, and greatly weaken the state, if seventy princes were to be supported in all the dignity of kings. But it was easy to discern the fallacy of his reasons. The dignity of judge was not hereditary, and it does not appear that the sons of Gedeon claimed it. If it had belonged to his family, the eldest would have been entitled to it, or any of the children, in preference to this son of the servant, v. 18. He was, indeed, born at Sichem; but the others were by no means strangers: (C.) and what right had the men of this town to give a ruler to Israel? H.—Flesh, an usual expression in Scripture to denote kindred. v. 3. Gen. ii 23. 2 K. xix. 13. C.

VER. 4. Weight. Heb. Chal. and Sept. do not express what quantity of silver was given. M.—But sicle on such occasions is generally supplied. C.—Hence this sum would amount to little more than 8*l.* sterling. H.—As this appears too insignificant a sum to maintain an army, (C.) some would supply pounds, each consisting of 24 sicles, or talents, which were equivalent to 3000 sicles. M.—But this is without example, and the army of Abimelech was, probably, a company of banditti, or villains, who went with him to Ephra, to murder his brethren, and afterwards kept near his person. When he had got possession of his father's estate, and of the sovereign power, he found means to supply his wants. C.—Baalberith. That is, Baul of the covenant, so called from the covenant they had made with Baal, c. viii. 33. Ch.—The custom of keeping money in temples was formerly very common. Almost all the cities of Greece sent money to the temple of Apollo, at Delphos, (Marsham, see xvii.) where the people of Rome and of Marseilles had also some. The different cities had likewise holes cut in the rock of Olympia, in Elis, for the same purpose. The public treasury was, almost universally, some temple. That of Rome was the temple of Saturn.—Vagabonds. Heb. "empty and inconstant" (C.) people who had nothing to lose, and who would not embrace any proper method of getting a livelihood. H.—Chal. "seekers." Sept. "stupid. Sym. "idle and of desperate fortunes, or frantic." C.—Such people are generally at the head of every revolution, or, at least, are ready to follow the directions of some powerful and designing man; as but too many instances, both in ancient and modern times evince; which ought to be a caution for all to watch their motions. H.

VER. 5. Stones where criminals were, perhaps, commonly executed, that he might seem to act with justice, (Tostat) or he might slaughter his brethren on the very altar, which had been erected to God by Gedeon, after he had thrown down that of Baal. By doing so, he would seem to vindicate the idol, and gratify the people of Sichem, who were zealous idolaters, v. 46. Joatham escaped his fury, yet he, also, uses a round number, 70, when he says you have killed 70 men, v. 18. C.—Abimelech himself must also be deducted from the number. Thus we say the seventy interpreters, (M.) though the Greek interpreters of the Bible are supposed (H.) to have been 72. M.—The history of nations is full of similar instances of cruelty. Oehus, king of Persia, killed his uncle, and 80 or 100 of his sons. Phraortes, son of Herod, king of the Parthians, by a concubine, slew his father and his 30 children. Justin. x. and xlii.—The Turkish emperors have shown equal barbarity on many occasions, and they still murder or confine all their brothers. Serar, q. 6.

VER. 6. Mello. We know of no such city in the vicinity of Sichem. Heb. "all the house of Mello;" which some take to be the town-house of Sichem, full of the chief citizens, as Mello signifies "filled up;" (Vatable) or it might designate some part of the city which had been levelled, like the deep valley at Jerusalem, (3 K. ix. 15. H.) and where some powerful family, probably the father of Abimelech's mother, might dwell. C.—this family would interest itself the most in the advancement of the tyrant, v. 3. H.—Oak. Heb. "the plain, or oak of the state," (alluding to the monument which was left here by Josue, v. 37. Jos. xiv. 26) or Sept. "of the station," as those of Sichem might assemble here to deliberate on public affairs, (C.) in memory of the solemn covenant between God and the people. H.

VER. 7. Stand on. As Abimelech was a figure of Antichrist, who will reign for a time, so Joatham denotes the pastors of the church, who shall stand up for they went and made Abimelech king, by the oak that stood in Sichem.

7 This being told to Joatham, he went, and stood on the top of Mount Garizim: and lifting up his voice, he cried, and said: Hear me, ye men of Sichem, so may God hear you.

8 The trees went to anoint a king over them: and they said to the olive-tree: Reign thou over us.

9 And it answered: Can I leave my fatness, which both gods and men make use of, to come to be promoted among the trees?

10 And the trees said to the fig-tree: Come thou and reign over us.

11 And it answered them: Can I leave my sweetness, and my delicious fruits, and go to be promoted among the other trees?

12 And the trees said to the vine: Come thou and reign over us.

13 And it answered them: Can I forsake my wine, the truth. W.—Garizim. At the foot of this mountain Sichem was built. Joatham addressed the people of the city, probably during the absence of Abimelech, (C.) when, Josephus (v. 9.) says, a great festival was celebrated.

VER. 8. Us. By this parable, Joatham expostulates with the men of Sichem, who had so basely requited the labours of Gedeon, and had given the preference to the son of a servant, who was of the most savage temper. H.—In a spiritual sense, which the Fathers chiefly regard, heretics and schismatics act in this manner, and choose rather to be governed by those who will allow them to follow their passions, than by such governors as God has appointed, though the latter be endued with the grace of the Holy Ghost, and with all virtues, signified by the olive and other fruit trees. They prefer the bramble, or the worst dispositions, like Nemrod, Mahomet, Antichrist, &c. who, after persecuting the virtuous, and Catholics for a time, (2 Thess. ii.) will, in the end, prove their ruin, though they themselves be involved in the common destruction. "Fire shall rise (says V. Bede, q. 6.) against this bramble, Antichrist, and shall devour him, and all his together." W.—The use of parables has been very general. M.—Agrippa brought the Roman plebeians, who had retired to the sacred mount, to a sense of their duty, and to a love of mutual harmony with the nobles, by observing that the members once refused to supply the wants of the belly, because it did not labour like the rest. Livy ii.—In the application of these parables, Maimonides justly remarks, that we must consider their general scope, and not pretend to explain every circumstance; (More. Neboc.) a remark which Origen had already made. Many things are only added for the sake of ornament. H.—Thus we need not imagine that the people of Sichem offered the sovereign authority to many, who refused to accept of it, and at last only prevailed upon Abimelech. Gedeon had, indeed, rejected a similar offer, (C. viii. 22.) and his other sons not endeavouring to retain the authority of their father, the Sichemites acceded to the petition of Abimelech, to anoint him king. This expression does not always imply a material unction, though such was used among the Jews. It signifies the granting of all the power of a king; in which sense it is applied to foreign princes, (Isa. lxx. 1.) and to Jesus Christ, (Dan. ix. 24.) who received the reality of that sovereign dominion, of which this unction was only a figure. C.

VER. 9. Leave. But, would this advancement prove any disadvantage? The king is bound to give himself up wholly for the good of the public, so that he must frequently be full of anxiety and care. C.—Use of. The olive-tree is introduced, speaking in this manner, because oil was used, both in the worship of the true God, and in that of the false gods, whom the Sichemites served. Ch.—The pagans burnt lamps in honour of their idols, and anointed their statues; unquextoque lares humescere nigro. Prud. c. Sym. 1.—They also anointed their military standards at Rome. Plin. xiii. 3.—The same author observes, that "two sorts of liquor are very delightful to the bodies of men: wine to drink, and oil for the outside: intus vini, foris olei." B. xiv. 22.—Men use oil to strengthen and foment their bodies, as well as to give them light. C.—It spiritually denotes the grace of God, which establishes the peace of the soul, as the fig-tree signifies the sweetness of God's law, producing good works, and the vine shews forth those noble actions, which are performed without the affectation of outward show; and which are therefore, most agreeable both to God and to men. W.—Promoted. Some translate the Heb. "to put myself in motion for." Syr. &c. We might also render, "which honoureth the gods, (or the judges) and men to come to be promoted among (or disquieted on account of) the trees."

VER. 11. Sweetness. The fig is the sweetest of fruits, and is regarded as the symbol of sweetness. Aristop. Bonfrere.

VER. 13. Cheereth God and men. Wine is here represented as agreeable to God, because he had appointed it to be offered up with his sacrifices. But we are not obliged to take these words, spoken by the trees in Joatham's parable according to the strict rigour of divinity; but only in a sense accommodated to the design of the parable expressed in the conclusion of it. Ch.—The same word, Elohim, which is translated God, may also signify any powerful man, as in v. 9. H.—Yet wine may be said to cheer God, in the same figurative sense, as the odour of victims is sweet and delightful to him. C. He is pleased with the devotion of men, and requires these things as a testimony of their love and fidelity. H.—Joatham might speak according to the notions of idolaters, who thought that their gods really fed on ambrosia and nectar, and were pleased with the smell of victims and of perfumes. That wine cheereth the heart of man needs no that cheereth God and men, and be promoted among the other trees?

14 And all the trees said to the bramble: Come thou and reign over us.

15 And it answered them: If, indeed, you mean to make me king, come ye, and rest under my shadow: but if you mean it not, let fire come out from the bramble, and devour the cedars of Libanus.

16 Now, therefore, if you have done well, and without sin, in appointing Abimelech king over you, and have dealt well with Jerobaal, and with his house, and have made a suitable return for the benefits of him who fought for you,

17 And exposed his life to dangers, to deliver you from the hand of Madian,

18 And you are now risen up against my father's house, and have killed his sons, seventy men, upon one stone, and have made Abimelech, the son of his hand-maid, king over the inhabitants of Sichem, because he is your brother:

19 If therefore you have dealt well, and without fault, with Jerobaal and his house, rejoice ye, this day, in Abimelech, and may he rejoice in you.

20 But if unjustly: let fire come out from him, and consume the inhabitants of Sichem, and the town of Mello: and let fire come out from the men of Sichem, and from the town of Mello, and devour Abimelech.

21 And when he had said thus, he fled, and went into Bera: and dwelt there for fear of Abimelech, his brother.

22 So Abimelech reigned over Israel three years.

23 And the Lord sent a very evil spirit between Abimelech and the inhabitants of Sichem; who began to detest him,

24 And to lay the crime of the murder of the seventy sons of Jerobaal, and the shedding of their blood, upon Abimelech, their brother, and upon the rest of the princes of the Sichemites, who aided him.

25 And they set an ambush against him on the top of the mountains: and while they waited for his coming, they committed robberies, taking spoils of all that passed by: and it was told Abimelech.

26 And Gaal, the son of Obed, came with his brethren, and went over to Sichem. And the inhabitants of Sichem, taking courage at his coming, 27 Went out into the fields, wasting the vineyards and treading down the grapes: and singing and dancing, they went into the temple of their god, and in their banquets and cups they cursed Abimelech.

28 And Gaal, the son of Obed, cried: Who is Abimelech, and what is Sichem, that we should serve him? Is he not the son of Jerobaal, and hath made Zebul, his servant, ruler over the men of Emor, the father of Sichem? Why then shall we serve him?

29 Would to God that some man would put this people under my hand, that I might remove Abimelech out of the way. And it was said to Abimelech: Gather together the multitude of an army, and come.

30 For Zebul, the ruler of the city, hearing the words of Gaal, the son of Obed, was very angry, 31 And sent messengers privately to Abimelech, saying: Behold, Gaal, the son of Obed, is come into Sichem with his brethren, and endeavoureth to set the city against thee.

32 Arise, therefore, in the night, with the people that is with thee, and lie hid in the field:

33 And betimes in the morning, at sun-rising, set upon the city, and when he shall come out against thee, with his people, do to him what thou shalt be able.

34 Abimelech, therefore, arose with all his army, by night, and laid ambushes near Sichem in four places.

proof. Ps. ciii. 15.—Tunc veniunt risus, tunc pauper cornua sumit.—Tunc dolor et cura rugaque frontis abit. (C)il.

VER. 14. Bramble. Sept. rhamnos, "the white, or hawthorn." Some suppose that amad means "a wild rose, (Vatab.) thistle," &c. C.—It is here put for any base and ambitious man. W.

VER. 15. Shadow or protection, Ps. xvi. 8. Barne i. 12. C.—Joatham hints at the insolence of Abimelech, (H.) and foretells that he and his foolish subjects will soon be at variance, and destroy each other. Fire is often put for war. The people of Sichem began soon to despise their new king, and he made war upon them, and destroyed their city; though the people afterwards took ample revenge, v. 20. C.—Tyrants promise much, but their rage soon falls upon the more wealthy and powerful citizens, (H.) as signified by the cedars. M.

VER. 18. You are. People are answerable for the injuries which they do not prevent, when they have it in their power. C.—Many of the chief citizens of Sichem had assisted Abimelech, v. 4.—Brother. The ties of kindred could not avert their ingratitude and cruelty. H.

VER. 20. Town of. Heb. "the house of Mello," v. 6. C.—The imprecation of Joatham was prophetic. He had not the smallest doubt but the people had done wrong; (H.) and the three different traditions, which related the story of promotion, represented all the virtuous Israelites, who knew that they could not lawfully assume the regal or judicial authority, without the divine call. Ezechiel (xvii. 24), attributes knowledge to trees by the same figure of speech, as Joatham does here. M.

VER. 21. Bera. Heb. Bar or Beera, "the well." There was a place of this name in the tribe of Ruben, where the Israelites encamped. Num. xxi. 16. Bersabee, in the tribe of Juda, was another famous well, and it is probable that Joatham would retire to some distant place. H.—S. Jerome mentions a Bera, eight miles north of Eleutheropolis, and Abimelech speaks of another, about 21 miles from Sichem, on the road to Jerashan. The dominion of Abimelech did not extend far. C.

VER. 23. Spirit. God permitted the spirit of discord to arise, like an executioner, (C.) to punish the sins both of the ruler and of his subjects. H.—S. Aug. (q. 45.) observes, that God caused the people to be sorry for what they had done; but they afterwards proceeded to acts of violence and enmity, at the instigation of the devil, to whose advice they gave ear, in consequence of their former transgression. W.—The common people began to open their eyes, and beheld the cruelty of Abimelech, and of some of the principal citizens, who had espoused his cause, with abhorrence. M.—They reflected on the justice of Joatham's parable, which tended to rouse them not to suffer the tyrant to remain unpunished any longer. H.—Detest him. Heb. "revolted against (or dealt treacherously with) Abimelech, (24) that the crime (or punishment of the murder) of the, &c. might come, and their blood be laid upon," &c. H.—God permitted that Abimelech should be punished by those very men who had been the occasion of his sin. To obtain the sceptre over them, he had committed the most horrible cruelty. C.

VER. 25. Coming. Abimelech resided at Ephra, having appointed Zebul governor of Sichem, from whom he received information of what was doing. The malecontents began to plunder his adherents; (C) and as it was the time of vintage, they gave way to all the sallies which fury, heated by wine, can suggest; particularly after Gaal, a powerful man of the neighbourhood, came to put himself at their head, v. 28. H.

VER. 27. Cups. Such revellings were common in the days of vintage; (Isa. xvi. 10. Jer. xlviii. 33.) and they generally accompanied the heathenish sacrifices. C. vi. 21. They went to give thanks to their god, for having delivered them, (C.) as they thought, from the power of Abimelech. H.

VER. 28. Sichem. Why should this ancient city be thus degraded? This son of Jerobaal dares not to reside among us, but sets one of his servants over us! H.—He mentions Jerobaal instead of Gedeon, to remind the people of the indignity formerly offered to the great idol, by the father of their present ruler. M.—He may have another sense. "Who is Abimelech? . . . Is he not the son of Jerobaal, and Zebul his officer? Serve the men of Emor," &c. It seems that Gaal was of the race of Chanaan, by the manner in which he speaks of Emor, whose history is given, Gen. xxxiv. Many of the same nation might still inhabit Sichem, (C) which made the people so bold and zealous in the adoration of Baal. H.—The insidious Gaal hence takes occasion to propose to his countrymen, that they had better acknowledge the authority of their ancient magistrates, who occupied the place of Emor. C.—But he immediately insinuates, that the most effectual method to expel the tyrant, would be to vest him with the sovereign authority. H. v. 29.—The party of Abimelech was now the weaker. C.

VER. 31. Thee. Heb. "they besiege (C.) or fortify the city." H.—The partisans of Gaal attacked those who were still favourable to Abimelech, and fortified themselves as much as possible, in those parts which they had already seized. Vat. Drusus.—Or as tearin means "enemies," we may as well translate, "lo, the enemies are in (or with) the city against thee." C.

VER. 34. Places. Heb. "companies, (H.) or heads." He divided his army into four parts, over each of which he appointed a commander. C.

35 And Gaal, the son of Obed, went out, and stood in the entrance of the gate of the city. And Abimelech rose up, and all his army with him, from the places of the ambushes.

36 And when Gaal saw the people, he said to Zebul: Behold, a multitude cometh down from the mountains. And he answered him: Thou seest the shadows of the mountains as if they were the heads of men, and this is thy mistake.

37 Again Gaal said: Behold, there cometh people down from the minst of the land, and one troop cometh by the way that looketh towards the oak.

38 And Zebul said to him: Where is now thy mouth, wherewith thou saidst: Who is Abimelech, that we should serve him? Is not this the people which thou didst despise? Go out, and fight against him.

39 So Gaal went out, in the sight of the people of Sichem, and fought against Abimelech,

40 Who chased and put him to flight, and drove him to the city: and many were slain of his people, even to the gate of the city:

41 And Abimelech sat down in Ruma: but Zebul drove Gaal, and his companions, out of the city, and would not suffer them to abide in it.

42 So the day following the people went out into the field. And it was told to Abimelech,

43 And he took his army, and divided it into three companies, and laid ambushes in the fields. And seeing that the people came out of the city, he arose, and set upon them

44 With his own company, assaulting and besieging the city: whilst the two other companies chased the enemies that were scattered about the field.

45 And Abimelech assaulted the city all that day: and took it, and killed the inhabitants thereof, and demolished it, so that he sowed salt in it.

* 2 Kings xi. 21.

VER. 36. To Zebul. It seems the latter had acted with such dissimulation, that Gaal supposed he had come over to his party. Zebul laughs at him, as if he were disturbed with groundless fears, (H.) in order that Abimelech may take him unawares. M.

VER. 37. Midst. Heb. Tubur, here signifies "a little hill, or the navel," which title is given to places which are elevated and in the centre of the country. Eze. xxviii. 12. Joseph. Bel. iii. 2. Varro mentions the lake of Ostia, as the navel of Italy. The wood of Enna and Etolia are styled the navel of Sicily and of Greece, by Cicero and Livy. Bonfrere. C.—Oak, which is probably mentioned, v. 6. M.—Heb. "another company comes by the oak or plain of Mehonemim," which may signify, "of the augurs." Sept. "of those who make observations," apolepouton. C.

VER. 41. Ruma may be the same place as Arimathea, between Joppe and Lidda. S. Jer. M.—But this seems to be too remote from Sichem, (H. Bonfrere) in the neighbourhood of which Abimelech halted, to give the citizens time to enter into themselves, (C.) and to open their gates to him without farther resistance. Gaal entered the city after his defeat: but was forced the next day to leave it by Zebul. Whereupon he was met by two divisions of Abimelech's army, which routed him, and pursued the fugitives, while the king marched straight to the city; and though he had a party within the walls, headed by Zebul, (H.) unless he was slain, (C.) the rest of the inhabitants made such a stout resistance, that the tyrant resolved to demolish the city, when he took it, at night. H.

VER. 45. Sowed salt. To make the ground barren, and fit for nothing; (Ch.) and to testify his eternal hatred towards the place, as salt is the symbol of duration. See Deut. xxix. 23. Sophon. ii. 9. Jer. xvii. 8.—Salsa autem tellus & que perhibetur amara—Fugibus infelix. Virg. Geor. ii. Notwithstanding the fury of Abimelech, Sichem was afterwards rebuilt, and became as fertile as before. The city of Milan was destroyed and sowed with salt in 1162. Sigon.—The houses of traitors were formerly treated in this manner in France, (Brantome) as was that of the admiral de Châtillon. C. See on this custom Bochart, animal. iii. 16.—Some think it denoted that the ground might henceforth be cultivated, and grow corn where houses had stood. Salt is the source of fertility, if there be not too much of it. H.

VER. 46. Tower. S. Hieronymus thinks it was the house of Mello, out of the city, v. 6. M.—It was the citadel, large enough to contain 1900 soldiers. They durst not, however, stop here to encounter Abimelech, but retired to the temple, either 46 And when they who dwelt in the tower of Sichem, had heard this, they went into the temple of their god Berith, where they had made a covenant with him, and from thence the place had taken its name, and it was exceeding strong.

47 Abimelech also hearing that the men of the tower of Sichem were gathered together, 48 Went up into Mount Selmon, he and all his people with him: and taking an ax, he cut down the bough of a tree, and laying it on his shoulder, and carrying it, he said to his companions: What you see me do, do ye out of hand.

49 So they cut down boughs from the trees, every man as fast as he could, and followed their leader. And surrounding the fort, they set it on fire: and so it came to pass, that with the smoke and with the fire a thousand persons were killed, men and women together, of the inhabitants of the town of Sichem.

50 Then Abimelech, departing from thence, came to the town of Thebes, which he surrounded and besieged with his army.

51 And there was in the midst of the city a high tower, to which both the men and the women were fled together, and all the princes of the city, and having shut and strongly barred the gate, they stood upon the battlements of the tower to defend themselves.

52 And Abimelech, coming near the tower, fought stoutly: and, approaching to the gate, endeavoured to set fire to it:

53 And behold, a certain woman casting a piece of a millstone from above, dashed it against the head of Abimelech, and broke his skull.

54 And he called hastily to his armour-bearer, and said to him: Draw thy sword, and kill me: lest it should be said that I was slain by a woman. He did as he was commanded, and slew him.

b 1 Kings xxxi. 4. 1 Par. x. 4.

because it was still stronger and higher, or in hopes that they would be secure, on account of the veneration (C.) to which the place was entitled among the idolaters.—Berith. Prot. "they entered into an hold of the house of the god Berith." Sept. "of the covenant." H.—Where, &c. is added by way of explanation, (C.) except the word strong, which the Sept. render ochlōroma, "a fortress." The tower and temple seem to have been contiguous, since Abimelech, by setting fire to the tower, destroyed these people at the same time, v. 49. H.

VER. 48. Selmon. This mountain lay towards the Jordan, and was covered with trees and snow. Ps. lxxvii. 16. M.—Bough. Sept. "a burden or faggot of sticks." Josephus observes that they were dry. C.

VER. 49. And so. Heb. and Sept. "upon them, so that all the men of the tower of Sichem died also, about a thousand men and women." The sanctity of the place where they had taken refuge, made no impression upon the tyrant's mind, who was equally devoid of religion as of humanity. H.

VER. 50. Thebes, about 13 miles from Sichem, towards Scythopolis. Euseb.—Besieged. Heb. &c. "took," as the sequel shews, (v. 52.) since Abimelech was killed, as he was attacking the tower or citadel, in the midst of the city. C.

VER. 51. Battlements, or roof of the tower, which was flat. Hence the defendants hurled down stones, &c. upon the enemy.

VER. 53. Above, or "of the upper millstone," according to the Heb. and Sept. Pyrrhus met with a similar fate at Argos. Plutarch observes, (in Scylla) that the Lacedemonians did not like to attack walls, because the bravest men are there often slain by the greatest cowards. C.—Hence Joab puts this advice in the mouth of David, that it is imprudent to come too near the walls, 2 K. xⁱ. 21.—Skull, (cerebrum) "brain." Yet the tyrant's understanding was not per.aps so much impaired, as to excuse him for commanding his armour-bearer to kill him. H.

VER. 54. Slew him. The ancient heroes were always attended by their armour-bearers. C.—Marius ordered his servant to run him through, that he might not be exposed to the insults of his enemies; and V. Maximus (vi. 8.) greatly commends the servant for doing so. Nihil eorum pietati cedidit, a quibus salus Domini-norum protecta est. David was not of the same opinion, since he punished the Amalecites who pretended that he had rendered this service to Saul, 2 K. i. 16. The Christian religion condemns both those who engage others to take away their life, and those who comply with the impious request. Hercules was affected in the same manner as Abimelech, when he found that he was to die by the malice

55 And when he was dead, all the men of Israel that were with him, returned to their homes.

56 And God repaid the evil that Abimelech had done against his father, killing his seventy brethren.

57 The Sichemites also were rewarded for what they had done, and the curse of Joatham, the son of Jerobaal, came upon them.

CHAP. X.

Thola reuleth Israel twenty-three years: and Jair twenty-two. The people fall again into idolatry, and are afflicted by the Philistines and Ammonites. They cry to God for help, who, upon their repentance, hath compassion on them.

AFTER Abimelech, there arose a ruler in Israel, Thola, son of Phua, the uncle of Abimelech, a man of Issachar, who dwelt in Samir of Mount Ephraim:

2 And he judged Israel three and twenty years, and he died, and was buried in Samir.

3 To him succeeded Jair, the Galaadite, who judged Israel for two and twenty years,

4 Having thirty sons, that rode on thirty ass-colts, and were princes of thirty cities, which from his name were called Havoth Jair, that is, the towns of Jair, until this present day, in the land of Galaad.

5 And Jair died, and was buried in the place which is called Camon.

of a woman. O turpe fatum! femina Herculee necis—Auctor feratur. Seneca.—The Laedemonians were not eager to besiege Argos, when they saw that the women were engaged in its defence. Pausan. ii. C.—Notwithstanding the wicked premeditation of Abimelech, what he so much feared took place; for Joab said, Did not a woman cast a piece of a millstone upon him from the wall, and slay him in Thebes? 2 K. xi. 21. His skull was so much fractured, that he had received a mortal wound: the sword only hastened his death. Thus was he justly punished with a stone, who had slaughtered 66 or 69 of his brethren upon one stone. H.—He can only be considered as an usurper or tyrant, since he was neither chosen by God nor by the Israelites in general. Hence he is only said to have reigned at Sichem. A. Lapidé.—He was going to extend his conquests over the other cities and tribes, when he was slain at Thebes. Josephus. H.

CHAP. X. VER. 1. Uncle of Abimelech. i. e. Half-brother to Gedeon, as being born of the same mother, but by a different father, and of a different tribe. Ch.—The wife of Joas might have been married to a person of the tribe of Issachar, by whom she had Phua, who was half-brother of Gedeon. H.—Thola was cousin-german of Abimelech. S. Aug. q. xlvii. &c. The Israelites elected Thola for their judge, (Abulensis) out of respect to Gedeon, (A. Lapidé) that he might put an end to the commotions which had been excited by the tyrant. M.—Joatham might be passed over on account of his youth. The Sept. and Chal. have "Thola, the son of Phua, the son of his uncle by the father's side," which may be true, if the brother of Gedeon adopted him; or this uncle might refer to Abimelech. The uncertainty arises from the Heb. Dodo, which may be taken as a proper name. "Phua, the son of Dodo;" (Pagnin. Prot. &c. H.) or as denoting a relation, the paternal uncle of Abimelech, or of Thola, (Bonf. &c. C.) or simply "his kinsman." The Heb. Sept. &c. assert that Thola "arose to defend or to save Israel." He seems to have kept all quiet during the 23 years of his administration.—Samir. Sept. Alex. reads "Samarin;" but the city was not built till the reign of Amri. There was a city on a mountain, (H.) called Samir, in the tribe of Juda, (Jos. xv. 48.) different from this. M.—People were at liberty to dwell where they pleased, out of their own tribe. C.—This judge was buried among the Ephraimites. H.—But we know not the exact place where Samir stood. C.—There seems, however, to be no inconvenience in allowing that there was a town in the vicinity of Sichem, long before Amri made Samaria the capital of his kingdom; (see 3 K. xiii. 22. and xvi. 24.) and here Thola might reside. He was probably of the eldest, or of the second branch, of Issachar, (Num. xxvi. 23.) of great nobility and virtue, and the 10th judge of Israel.

VER. 2. Years. 3. Severus says 22, making the reign of Jair of equal length. Non inque niginti & duos annos principatum obtinuit. But this is contrary to all the best chronologists. The fidelity of the Israelites seems to have been of no longer continuance at this period than usual, as we find that they relapsed into idolatry again, at least after the death of Jair, within 45 years after they had been scourged by the tyrant Abimelech, v. 6. H.

VER. 4. Havoth Jair. This name was now confirmed to these towns, which they had formerly received from another Jair. Num. xxxii. 41. Ch.—Sixty are there specified, and only 30 here, which might either be the same, or different from those villages to which the former Jair had left his name. Grotius thinks that judge Jair was the son of Segub, who left 23 cities to him. These, with seven belonging to his grandfather, Hesron, make up the number here specified. 1 Par. ii. 22.—The Heb. does not say that these 30 cities were called after the judge: "they had 30 cities, which are called Havoth Jair," &c. C.—Some copies of the Sept. add "two" to the number of sons, asses, and cities, as if there had been 32 of each. In other respects they agree with the original. It was formerly a mark of distinction to ride on fair asses. C. v. 10. H.—S. Jerom thinks that horses were prohibited, as they were in Egypt, without the king's leave. But we no

6 But the children of Israel, adding new sins to their old ones, did evil in the sight of the Lord, and served idols, Baalim and Astaroth, and the gods of Syria, and of Sidon, and of Moab, and of the children of Ammon, and of the Philistines: and they left the Lord, and did not serve him.

7 And the Lord being angry with them, delivered them into the hands of the Philistines, and of the children of Ammon.

8 And they were afflicted, and grievously oppressed for eighteen years, all they that dwelt beyond the Jordan in the land of the Amorrite, who is in Galaad:

9 Insomuch that the children of Ammon, passing over the Jordan, wasted Juda, and Benjamin, and Ephraim: and Israel was distressed exceedingly.

10 And they cried to the Lord, and said, We have sinned against thee, because we have forsaken the Lord our God, and have served Baalim.

11 And the Lord said to them: Did not the Egyptians, and the Amorrites, and the children of Ammon, and the Philistines, 12 The Sidonians also, and Amalec, and Chanaan, oppress you, and you cried to me, and I delivered you out of their hand?

13 And yet you have forsaken me, and have wor-where find this law recorded, (C.) and it is not universally true that it existed. M. Hieropolit. iii. 15.—Some have inferred from Jair's children having 30 cities, that he exercised a sovereign authority over Israel: but he might only give his children the authority of magistrates in them, as Samuel did. 1 K. viii. E.—We know not by what means Jair was raised to the chief command, nor what he did for the benefit of the people. He is supposed to be the same who is called Bedan. 1 K. xii. 11. Serar. Usher, &c.; though others think that Bedan is a title of Samson. He was of the tribe of Manasses in Galaad. Having kept the people under due restraint during his administration, they burst forth, like a torrent, at his death, and, on all sides, abandoned themselves to a multiplicity of idols, so that God made some difficulty in restoring them again to favour. H.—A. Lapidé thinks that they had begun to relapse 18 years before the death of Jair and were, consequently, chastised by the Ammonites. Serarius is of a contrary opinion, though Houbigant rather inclines to the former sentiment, as it is not said that Jair gave rest to the land, no more than Sagar. H.

VER. 5. Canon is placed in Galaad by Adrichonius, though S. Jerom mentions another, six miles from Legion, where he supposes that Jair was buried. It seems more natural to say that he was interred in his own country, on the east side of the Jordan. Bonfrere.—It is, probably, the same city as Hamon (1 Par. vi. 16.) and Hammothdor. Jos. xxxi. 32. C.

VER. 6. Gods. The sun and moon were principally adored among these nations, under different names.

VER. 7. Ammon. While these infested the eastern parts, the Philistines made incursions into the territories of their neighbours. H.—This servitude resembled that of Madian. Jephthé attacked the Ammonites, and Abesai, with other judges, made head against the Philistines (C.) on the west. H.

VER. 8. Years by the Ammonites, whose dominion was suppressed by the victory of Jephthé. When the servitude commenced is uncertain, v. 4. Heb. "And that year they vexed," &c. C.—Roman Sept. "at that time." Grabe's copy has "in that year;" and though the former expression appears to be more indefinite, yet it must refer to some period, (H.) either prior to the death of Jair, (Salien) or subsequent to that event. Euseb. Genebrard.—The text will not decide with certainty. How long the Philistines harassed Israel is specified, C. xiii. 1.

VER. 9. Exceedingly. Not only those who lived in Galaad, but also three tribes on the west of the Jordan, were treated as the half tribe of Manasses had been, (C.) when Gedeon delivered them. H.

VER. 11. Said by the mouth of an angel, or of some prophet. M.

VER. 12. Chanaan. Heb. "Maon." Sept. Rom. and Alex. "Madian." The Moabites are styled Mineans by the Sept. (1 Par. iv. 40.) and these inhabited Arabia, (Diod. iii. 42.) and might join themselves to Madian and Amalec, in their attacks upon the Israelites. As for Chanaan, which other editions of the Sept. retain, we know that they were domestic enemies, like thorns in the sides of Israel. Jos. xviii. 13. All the persecutions, which the Hebrews had to undergo, are not particularized in this book. C.—They were grievously tormented in Egypt, they had to contend with the Amorrites at their first entrance into the land. H.—The Ammonites and Amalecites had assisted Eglon before, and the Philistines had attacked Samgar. The Sidonians, it seems, had also greatly molested those who lived near them, and probably were the auxiliaries of Jabin. C.—But the Chanaanites were ready to fall upon every weak spot, living in various parts of the country, (H.) and continually tempted the people of Israel to abandon the service of God. C.

VER. 13. No more, so readily as I have done formerly. I will make you feel the rod of your oppressors. H.—Unless you change your conduct, I will never deliver you. C.

shipped strange gods: therefore I will deliver you no more:

14 Go, and call upon the gods which you have chosen: let them deliver you in the time of distress.

15 And the children of Israel said to the Lord: We have sinned, do thou unto us whatsoever pleaseth thee: only deliver us this time.

16 And saying these things, they cast away out of their coasts all the idols of strange gods, and served the Lord their God: and he was touched with their miseries.

17 And the children of Ammon shouting together, pitched their tents in Galaad: against whom the children of Israel assembled themselves together, and camped in Maspha.

18 And the princes of Galaad said one to another: Whosoever of us shall first begin to fight against the children of Ammon, he shall be the leader of the people of Galaad.

CHAP. XI.

Jephte is made ruler of the people of Galaad: he first pleads their cause against the Ammonites; then making a vow, obtains a signal victory: he performs his vow.

THERE was at that time Jephte, the Galaadite, a most valiant man, and a warrior, the son of a woman that was a harlot, and his father was Galaad.

2 Now Galaad had a wife of whom he had sons: who, after they were grown up, thrust out Jephte, saying: Thou canst not inherit in the house of our father, because thou art born of another mother.

3 Then he fled and avoided them, and dwelt in the land of Tob: and there were gathered to him needy men and robbers, and they followed him as their prince.

* Gen. xxvi. 27.

VER. 14. Go. This is not a command, but an ironical expression, as Deut. xxxii. 38.

VER. 15. Time. They are willing to suffer from the hand of God, (2 K. xxiv. 14,) if they prove inconstant any more. M.

VER. 16. Touched. Lit. "grieved." Heb. "his soul was straitened," as in joy it is said to be enlarged. He speaks of God in a human manner. C. Gen. vi. 6. M.

VER. 17. Together, as people sure of victory.—Galaad, the capital of the country of the same name. It belonged to Gad.—Maspha, near the springs of the Jaboc. Jos. xi. 3. and xiii. 26. C.—It signifies "a watch-tower." M.

VER. 18. Galaad. It seems none of them durst accept the offer, as the first onset was the most hazardous. Hence they invited Jephte to take upon him the command. The Israelites consulted the Lord on a former occasion, who should begin the attack upon the Chanaanites. C. i. 1. In these wars much depended on one battle. The wars were seldom protracted to such a length as they have been since. C.

CHAP. XI. VER. 1. Harlot. Heb. Zona. Jos. ii. 1. It is uncertain whether she was properly a concubine, or a wife of inferior dignity. She lived with her son in the house of Galaad; (C.) at least the latter was in his father's house. H.—Hence Jephte complains that he had been expelled, not that he was debarred from enjoying his father's inheritance, and consequently the law was not observed in his regard. Moses makes no provision for illegitimate children, but he excludes the son of a man from the church of God. Deut. xxi. 2. Some think that the mother of Jephte was of a nation with whom it was not lawful to marry. Josephus, v. 9. Said. Grot.—Serarius believes that his father was already married, when he had to do with this harlot. M.—But he might have first taken her to wife, without the usual formalities. Drus. A. Lapid.—It is equally uncertain whether Jephte was of the tribe of Gad or of Manasses, as both occupied the country of Galaad. Interpreters generally conclude that he was of one of these tribes, and most probably of the latter; his father also was called Galaad. H.

VER. 2. Sons. Grabe's Sept. determines the number to be "two." H.—They caused the magistrates to declare that Jephte should not partake in the inheritance, v. 7. M.

VER. 3. Tob. to the north of Galaad, of which it is a part. Joseph.—It is called Rubim, 1 Mac. v. 13. See 2 K. x. 6.—And robbers. This is a farther explication of rekin, poor, vain fellows. C. ix. 4. They did not infest the Israelites, but made war on their enemies around; latro, in Latin, often signifies a soldier, particularly such as lived on plunder, as we read in Plautus. Mil. glorios. Latrocinatus annos decem, mercedem accipio. Some have imagined that Jephte was at the head of some banditti, q. 43. inter. op. S. Aug.—But David's followers were of the same description (1 K. xxii. 2.) as those of Jephte, men of determined

4 In those days the children of Ammon made war against Israel.

5 And as they pressed hard upon them, the ancients of Galaad went to fetch Jephthe out of the land of Tob to help them:

6 And they said to him: Come thou, and be our prince, and fight against the children of Ammon.

7 And he answered them: "Are not you the men that hated me, and cast me out of my father's house, and now you are come to me, constrained by necessity?"

8 And the princes of Galaad said to Jephthe: For this cause we are now come to thee, that thou mayst go with us, and fight against the children of Ammon, and be head over all the inhabitants of Galaad.

9 Jephthe also said to them: If you be come to me sincerely, that I should fight for you against the children of Ammon, and the Lord shall deliver them into my hand, shall I be your prince?

10 They answered him: The Lord, who heareth these things, he himself is mediator and witness that we will do as we have promised.

11 Jephthe therefore went with the princes of Galaad, and all the people made him their prince. And Jephthe spoke all his words before the Lord in Maspha.

12 And he sent messengers to the king of the children of Ammon, to say in his name: What hast thou to do with me, that thou art come against me, to waste my land?

13 And he answered them: "Because Israel took away my land, when he came up out of Egypt, from the confines of the Arnon unto the Jaboc and the Jordan: now, therefore, restore the same peaceably to me."

* A. M. 2817, A. C. 1187.—Num. xxi. 24.

resolution and valour. C.—Such a man as Jephte, was therefore a valuable acquisition to the dispirited Israelites; and Providence had insured him to labour and endured him with extraordinary prudence, notwithstanding his want of education, v. 12. Necessity has often supplied every deficiency, and produced the most consummate generals. Prince. Heb. and Sept. "and there were gathered unto Jephte vain men, and they went out with him." H.

VER. 5. Hard. Heb. "and when the Ammonites made war." As both armies were encamped near Maspha, they could hardly avoid having some skirmishes. But the Israelites durst not come to a pitched battle till they had Jephte at their head. H.—The Ammonites infested them every year with similar incursions, v. 12. C.

VER. 7. House. Perhaps he saw some of his brothers among them; though he might speak thus to the magistrates, because they had not prevented this injustice, (C.) as it was their duty to do. H.

VER. 8. Cause to make some reparation for our offence, though we must acknowledge that our present distress caused us to think of doing so. H.—Heb. "therefore we turn again to thee," &c. C.—Galaad. They only engage that the tribes of Gad and Manasses, who inhabited that country, should submit to his authority. M.—But as they were the most in danger, they first make head against the enemy, not doubting but their brethren in other parts would come to their assistance. C. xii. 1. God ratifies their choice, v. 11. 29; (H.) and he was acknowledged, after his victory, judge of all Israel. M.

VER. 11. Prince. Heb. "head or captain," (H.) to carry on the war, with a promise that he should be the judge of all the people, if he succeeded. C.—Words. Plans, explaining how he would first send a message to the king of Ammon, and if he would not accede to reasonable terms, he would collect all the forces of Galaad, and invite all their brethren on the other side of the river to make a joint attack upon him. H.—The Lord was considered as present in their public assemblies. Deut. vi. and xx. M.—He had also been taken by the people to witness their engagement; and Jephte promises, in like manner, to perform his part with fidelity. H.—They promise on oath to be constant to each other. C.

VER. 12. Land. Jephte acts with a prudence and moderation which could not have been expected from one who had been brought up amid the noise of arms. C.—He gives notice that he has been recognized by the lawful proprietors of the land for their head; and therefore begs that the Ammonites would desist from their unjust warfare. If words prove ineffectual, he must then try the fortune of a battle. H.

VER. 13. To me. The king falsely asserts, that all the country between the Arnon and the Jaboc belonged to him when Moses took it. The Amorrites had possession when the Israelites arrived, and it had formerly been occupied by Moab, and not by Ammon, Deut. ii. 19. and 37; (M.) unless both might claim different parts. C.

14 And Jephthe again sent word by them, and commanded them to say to the king of Ammon:

15 Thus saith Jephthe: Israel did not take away the land of Moab, nor the land of the children of Ammon:

16 But when they came up out of Egypt, he walked through the desert to the Red Sea, and came into Cades.

17 And he sent messengers to the king of Edom, saying: Suffer me to pass through thy land. But he would not condescend to his request. He sent also to the king of Moab, who, likewise, refused to give him passage. He abode, therefore, in Cades, 18 And went round the land of Edom at the side, and the land of Moab: and came over-against the east coast of the land of Moab, and camped on the other side of the Arnon: and he would not enter the bounds of Moab.

19 So Israel sent messengers to Sehon, king of the Amorrites, who dwelt in Hesebon, and they said to him: Suffer me to pass through thy land to the river.

20 But he, also despising the words of Israel, suffered him not to pass through his borders: but gathering an infinite multitude, went out against him to Jasa, and made strong opposition.

21 And the Lord delivered him, with all his army, into the hands of Israel, and he slew him, and possessed all the land of the Amorrite, the inhabitant of that country, 22 And all the coasts thereof from the Arnon to the Jaboc, and from the wilderness to the Jordan.

23 So the Lord, the God of Israel, destroyed the Amorrhite, his people of Israel fighting against him, and wilt thou now possess his land?

24 Are not those things which thy god Chamos possesseth, due to thee by right? But what the Lord our God hath obtained by conquest, shall be our possession:

25 Unless, perhaps, thou art better than Balac, the son of Sephor, king of Moab: or canst shew that he strove against Israel, and fought against him,

26 Whereas he hath dwelt in Hesebon, and the villages thereof, and in Aroer, and its villages, and in all the cities near the Jordan, for three hundred years. Why have you for so long a time attempted nothing about this claim?

27 Therefore I do not trespass against thee, but thou wrongest me by declaring an unjust war against me. The Lord be judge, and decide this day, between Israel and the children of Ammon.

28 And the king of the children of Ammon would not hearken to the words of Jephthe, which he sent him by the messengers.

29 Therefore the spirit of the Lord came upon Jephthe, and going round Galaad, and Manasses, and Maspha of Galaad, and passing over from thence to the children of Ammon,

30 He made a vow to the Lord, saying: If thou wilt deliver the children of Ammon into my hands, 31 Whosoever shall first come forth out of the doors of my house, and shall meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, the same will I offer a holocaust to the Lord.

* Num. xx. 14.—* Num. xxi. 18.

VER. 15. Moab. After the death of Eglon, the Ammonites had probably seized upon his dominions, (v. 25,) as we find no farther mention of the Moabites among the enemies of Israel, nor any king of that nation till the reign of David. Hence, as the king of Ammon laid claim to all the country, and had many of the Moabites in his army, Jephthe answers at once, that the land under dispute belonged to neither of these nations. C.—They had entirely lost it when Israel attacked Sehon, and took it from him, as was plain from the history both of Moses and of the Amorrites. Num. xxi. 27. H.—Jephthe refers to facts universally known. C.

VER. 16. Red Sea, at Asiongaber, many years after they left Egypt.

VER. 17. Moab. This is not specified by Moses, but he sufficiently insinuates that he had done it. Deut. ii. 8. 9. C.

VER. 23. His land, which the Amorrite had first conquered, and which God took from him to give to Israel. It was clear that this country was not then considered as the property of the sons of Lot, since God expressly forbade his people to molest them. H.—Jephthe produces the right of conquest, the grant of God, and the possession of 300 years, to prove that the country belonged to the Israelites. All acknowledge that the right of conquest, in a just war, gives a good title. Grot. Jur. iii. 6. 7.—The children of Lot had lost all hopes of recovering what Sehon had taken from them. C.—He could not be proved to be a thief or an usurper, but was in peaceable possession when the war with Israel commenced, in which he lost all his dominions. H.—By the same right, David kept what he had taken from the Amalekites plunderers, (1 K. xxx. 20,) and Abraham might have retained the spoils which had been carried off from Sodom. Gen. xiv. 21. The Roman and Grecian histories are full of such examples; and this right was admitted by all as the law of nations, Quæ ex hostibus, jure gentium, statim capiuntur sunt. Cuius. J. C.—The second argument of Jephthe is unanswerable, since God may undoubtedly transfer the property of one to another. But as the Ammonites might reply that they did not admit the God of Israel, he observes that the latter might at least have the same privilege as their Chamos, v. 24. Prescription of so long a time, with good faith, was the third argument, as the Amorrites being destroyed, and the Moabites disheartened, could not pretend to reclaim the conquered country. There would never be an end of disputes among men, if the undisturbed possession of a country for such a length of time did not confirm their right to it. These principles establish the tranquillity of families and of states. C. Grot. Jur. ii. 4.

VER. 24. Chamos. The idol of the Moabites and Ammonites. He argues from their opinion, who thought they had a just title to the countries which they imagined they had conquered by the help of their gods; how much more then had Israel an indisputable title to the countries which God, by visible miracles, had conquered for them. Ch.—Heb. "And shall not we possess those (countries occupied by the people whom) the Lord our God has driven out from before us?" H.—The Emim had been expelled by these people. Deut. ii. 10. Chamos was the peculiar deity of Moab, (Num. xxi. 29. Jer. xlviii. 46. &c. C.) and signifies "as taking away." It is commonly supposed to be the sun. H.

VER. 25. Him. Josue (xix. 9.) says that Balac fought against Israel. But it was not in a pitched battle, (C.) at least of which we have the particulars, (H.)

nor to recover the territory which the Israelites had taken from Sehon, but only to defend his own dominions. He collected an army, and called the soothsayer to curse Israel. Num. xxii. 4, &c. C.

VER. 26. He. Heb. "While Israel," &c.—Years. He makes use of a round number. H.—Chronologists generally suppose that either more or fewer years had elapsed; (M.) and the Scripture only relates what Jephthe said. Sa.—The Jews reckon 394. Some date from the coming out of Egypt 305. C.—Petau has 365. But as Jephthe only speaks of the time during which the Israelites had occupied the land, the 40 years' sojournment must be deducted, and still Petau will have 25 years too many; (H.) whereas "those who adduce the title of prescription, are accustomed rather to increase than to diminish the length of time," Usher, p. 74.—Hence this author allows only 263 years. Houbigant comes rather nearer to the number of Jephthe, and reckons 281, which the ambassadors might represent, in a round number, as 300. Proleg.—Salien almost agrees with Usher, dating 306 years from the exit, and 266 from the victory over Sehon. He observes, with Eusebius, that Hercules instituted the Olympic games in the first year of Jephthe, A. 2849. But they were restored, and became a famous epoch only 430 years after. He places the first rape of Helen by Theseus at the same time, when she was about 12 years old. In her 24th, she was stolen again by Paris, and gave occasion to the famous siege of Troy. H.

VER. 27. And decide. Lit. "the arbiter of this day." Jephthe is so well convinced of the justice of his cause, that he is willing to abide by God's decision, (H.) to be manifested by the issue of the battle. M.—At the same time, he threatens the Ammonites with God's judgments, if by their fault blood be shed unjustly, as he, like a good prince, had tried every means to prevent that misfortune, and to bring things to an amicable conclusion. C.

VER. 29. Therefore. Heb. "then." Sept. "and." The refusal of the king of Ammon was not precisely the reason why God ended Jephthe with such wisdom and courage, though we may say that it was the occasion. H.—Jephthe summoned the troops in Galaad, and in the two tribes of Manasses, to attend his standard. He also invited Ephraim, (C. xli. 2. C.) and we may reasonably suppose the other tribes also, who were near enough to be ready for the day of battle. Having collected what force he could in so short a time, he returned to Maspha, and thence proceeded to attack the enemy. H.

VER. 30. He. Heb. and Sept. "And he vowed." A new sentence commences; (Cajet.) so that it is not clear that Jephthe was moved to make this vow by the spirit of the Lord; else it could not be blamed. H.

VER. 31. Whosoever, &c. Some are of opinion, that the meaning of this vow of Jephthe, was to consecrate to God whatsoever should first meet him, according to the condition of the thing; so as to offer it up as a holocaust, if it were such a thing as might be so offered by the law; or to devote it otherwise to God, if it were not such as the law allowed to be offered in sacrifice. And therefore they think the daughter of Jephthe was not slain by her father, but only consecrated to perpetual virginity. But the common opinion followed by the generality of the holy fathers and divines is, that she was offered as a holocaust, in consequence of her father's vow: and that Jephthe did not sin, at least not mortally, neither in 32 And Jephthe passed over to the children of Ammon to fight against them: and the Lord delivered them into his hands.

33 And he smote them from Aroer till you come to Mennith, twenty cities, and as far as Abel, which is set with vineyards, with a very great slaughter: and the children of Ammon were humbled by the children of Israel.

34 And when Jephthe returned into Maspha, to his house, his only daughter met him with timbrels and with dances: for he had no other children.

35 And when he saw her, he rent his garments, and said: Alas! my daughter, thou hast deceived me, and thou thyself art deceived: for I have opened my mouth to the Lord, and I can do no other thing.

36 And she answered him: My father, if thou hast opened thy mouth to the Lord, do unto me whatsoever thou hast promised, since the victory hath been granted to thee, and revenge of thy enemies.

37 And she said to her father: Grant me only this, which I desire: Let me go, that I may go about the mountains for two months, and may bewail my virginity with my companions.

38 And he answered her: Go. And he sent her away for two months. And when she was gone with making nor in keeping his vow; since he is no ways blamed for it in scripture; and was even inspired by God himself to make the vow, (as appears from ver. 29, 30,) in consequence of which he obtained the victory; and therefore he reasonably concluded that God, who is the master of life and death, was pleased, on this occasion, to dispense with his own law; and that it was the divine will he should fulfil his vow. Ch.—S. Thomas (2. 2. q. 88. a. 2.) acknowledges that Jephthe was inspired to make a vow, and his devotion herein is praised by the apostle. Heb. xi. 32. But he afterwards followed his own spirit, in delivering himself, without mature deliberation, and in executing what he had so ill engaged himself to perform. This decision seems to be the most agreeable to the Scripture, and to the holy fathers. S. Jerom (in Jer. vii.) says, non sacrificium placet, sed animus offertis. "If Jephthe offered his virgin daughter, it was not the sacrifice, but the good will of the offerer which deserves applause." Almost all the ancients seem to agree that the virgin was really burnt to death; and the versions have whosoever, which intimates that Jephthe intended to offer a human victim; particularly as he could not expect that a beast fit for such a purpose, would come out of the doors of his house to meet him. C.—Yet many of the moderns, considering how much such things are forbidden by God, cannot persuade themselves that Jephthe should be so ignorant of the law, or that the priests and people of Israel should suffer him to transgress it. The original may be rendered as well, "whatsoever proceedeth . . . shall surely be the Lord's, and (Prot.) or I will offer it up for a holocaust." Pagnin, &c.—The version of Houbigant is very favourable to this opinion. See Hook's Principia.—It is supposed that the sacrifice of Iphigenia, which took place about this time, (Aulis. v. 26,) was only in imitation of this of Jephthe's daughter. But the poets say, that Diana saved her life, and substituted a doe in her place; (Ovid Met. xii.) which, if true, would make the conformity more striking, if we admit that the sacrifice of Jephthe's daughter was not carried into effect. Iphigenia was made a priestess of Diana, to whom human victims were immolated. The daughter of Jephthe, whom the false Philo calls Seila, was consecrated to the Lord, and shut up (H.) to lead a kind of monastic life; as the wives of David, (2 K. xx. 3. Grotius) after they had been dishonoured, were obliged to live in a state of continency. Although (H.) forced chastity be not a virtue, (C.) yet Jephthe had no reason to believe that his daughter would not enter into the spirit of his vow, and embrace that state for God's honour and service. We know that she gave her entire consent to whatever might be the nature of his vow; and surely she would be as ready to refrain from marriage, however desirable at that time, as to be burnt alive, which would effectually prevent her from becoming a mother, v. 37. To require this of her, was not, at least, more cruel in her father than to offer her in sacrifice. The Chaldee paraphrast says, "Jephthe did not consult Phinees, the priest, or he might have redeemed her;" and Kimchi gives us a very mean idea, both of Jephthe and of the high priest, the great Phinees, whom the Rabbins foolishly suppose was still living, and of course above 300 years old, v. 26.—"Phinees said, He wants me, let him come to me. But Jephthe, the head of the princes of Israel, shall I go to him? During this contest the girl perished." To such straits are those reduced who wish to account for the neglect of Jephthe in redeeming his daughter, as the Targum observes, was lawful for a sum of money. Lev. xxvii. 2. 3. 28.—But (H.) his vow was of the nature of the cherom, which allowed of no redemption, and required death. C.—On this point, however, interpreters are not agreed, and this manner of devoting to death, probably, regarded only the enemies of God, or such things as were under a person's absolute dominion. H.—If a dog had first come out to meet Jephthe, could he have offered it up for a holocaust? Certainly not, (Grot.) because it was prohibited, (Deut. xxiii. 18,) to offer even its price, (H.) and only oxen, sheep, goats, turtles and doves, were the proper victims. If, therefore, a person made a vow, of a man, he was to be consecrated to the Lord, (Grot.) like Samuel, and he might marry. But a woman could not, as she was already declared the servant of the Lord, and was not at liberty to follow her husband. Anama.—We need not herein labour to defend the conduct of Jephthe. The Scripture does not canonize him on this account. If he did wrong, his repentance, and other heroic acts of virtue, might justly entitle him to be ranked among the saints of the old law. S. Aug. q. 49.—"Shew me the man who has not fallen into sin . . . Jephthe returned victorious from the enemy, but in the midst of his triumph, he was overcome by his own vow, so that he thought it proper to requite the piety of his daughter, who came out to meet him, by parricide. In the first place, what need was there of making a vow so hastily, to promise things uncertain, the event of which he knew not, instead of what was certain? The why did he perform so sorrowful a vow to the Lord God, by shedding blood?" S. Arab. Apol. Dav. i. 4.—This saint adopts the common opinion that Jephthe really immolated his daughter. But he is far from thinking that he was influenced by the holy spirit to make the vow, otherwise he would never represent it in such odious colours. If God had required the life of Jephthe's daughter, as he did formerly command Abraham to sacrifice his son, the obedience and faith of the former would have been equally applauded, as the good will of the latter. But most of those who embrace the opinion that Jephthe sacrificed his daughter, are forced to excuse or to condemn the action. They suppose that he was permitted to fulfil his vow, that others might be deterred from making similar promises, without the divine authority. S. Chrys. hom. xiv. ad pop. Ant. S. Jer. c. Jov. i. "I shall never, says S. Amb. (Off. iii. 12.) be induced to believe that Jephthe, the prince, did not promise incautiously that he would immolate whosoever should meet him, . . . since he repented of his vow," &c. We may observe that this great Doctor supposes, that Jephthe promised to sacrifice the first thing that should meet him "at the door of his own house;" whence he seems to take whosoever in the same latitude as we have given in the Hebrew. He concludes, "I cannot accuse the man who was obliged to fulfil his vow," &c. We may imitate his moderation, (H.) rather than adopt the bold language of one who has written notes on the Prot. Bible, (1603) who says, without scruple, that by this rash vow and wicked performance, his victory was defaced; and again, that he was overcome with blind zeal, not considering whether the vow was lawful or not. W.—If Jephthe was under the immediate influence of the Holy Ghost in what he did, as Salien believes, and the context by no means disproves, we ought to admire the faith of this victorious judge, though he gave way to the feelings of human nature, v. 35. We should praise his fidelity either in sacrificing or in consecrating his daughter to God's service in perpetual virginity; but if he followed his own spirit, we cannot think that he was so ill-informed or so barbarous as to murder his daughter, nor that she would consent to an impiety which so often disgraced the pagan superstition, though she might very well agree to embrace that better part, which her father and God himself, by a glorious victory, seemed to have marked out for her. Amid the variety of opinions which have divided the learned on this subject, infidels can derive no advantage or solid proof against the divine authority of the Scripture, and of our holy religion. The fact is simply recorded. People are at liberty to form what judgment of it they think most rational. If they decide that Jephthe was guilty of an oversight, or of a downright impiety, it will in the first place be difficult for them to prove it to the general satisfaction; and when they have done so, they will only evince that he was once a sinner, and under this idea the word of God gives him no praise. But if he did wrong in promising, as many of the Fathers believe, he might be justified in fulfilling his vow, as God might intimate to him both interiorly, and by granting him the victory, that he dispensed with his own law, and required this sort of victim in order to foreshew the bloody sacrifice of Jesus Christ for our sins, (Serarius and Salien, A. 2850) or the state of virginity which his blessed Mother and so many nuns and others in the Christian Church embrace with fervour.—Peace, with victory.—Same. Heb. "it shall be the Lord's, and (or) I will make it ascend a whole burnt-offering." H.—The particle we often signifies or as well as and, and it is explained in this sense here by the two Kimchis, by Junius, &c. See Ex. xxi. 17. Piscator says, the first part of the sentence determines that whatever the thing was it should be consecrated to the Lord, with the privilege of being redeemed, (Lev. xxvii. 11,) and the second shews that it should be immolated, if it were a suitable victim. Anama.

VER. 33. Aroer, upon the Arnon, belonged to the tribe of Gad. Mennith was four miles from Hesebon, towards Rabbath.—Abel was noted for its vineyards, 12 miles east of Gadara, so that Jephthe pursued the enemy, as they fled towards the north, for about 60 miles, and during the course of the war destroyed 20 of their cities, (C.) to punish them for their unjust ravages and usurpation of another's property. H.

VER. 34. Daughter. It seems the vow had been kept secret, as no precautions were taken to prevent the affliction of the general; (C.) and indeed to have done so, would have been injurious to God's providence, and childish in Jephthe, as he meant to offer whatever should come to meet him. It would have been very mean, and contrary to the meaning of the vow, for him to procure something for which he had no great value, to present itself. H.—Dances, as it was customary on such occasions. 1 K. xviii. 6.

VER. 35. Alas. These indications of grief are the effects of nature. Salien.—S. Amb. considers them as the marks of repentance; (v. 31,) and we might hence infer that the vow was not dictated by the holy spirit, who would have ended Jephthe with fortitude, as he did Abraham, though all may not possess the virtue of that great father of believers. Gen. xxii. H.—Deceived. We mutually expected comfort from each other's presence; but we must both experience the reverse. Heb. may signify, "depressed, terrified," &c.—Thing. Heb. "I cannot recede." H.—It appears that he could not redeem what he had promised, (C.) as the condition had been fulfilled on the part of God. He might consider that he was no longer at liberty to use the privilege which the law allowed, when no condition had been specified. Lev. xxvii. 4. H.

VER. 37. Bewail my virginity. The bearing of children was much coveted under the Old Testament, when women might hope that from some child of theirs the Saviour of the world might one day spring. But under the New Testament virginity is preferred. 1 Cor. vii. 35.

VER. 38. Mountains. Such places were frequented in times of mourning. Jer. xxxi. 15. Is. xv. 2. C.—Jephthe allowed his daughter this short respite, without any offence, (Deut. xxiii. 21,) before he immolated her, (M.) or before he debarred her from the society of men. Grot. &c.

her comrades and companions, she mourned her virginity in the mountains.

39 And the two months being expired, she returned to her father, and he did to her as he had vowed, and she knew no man. From thence came a fashion in Israel, and a custom has been kept:

40 That, from year to year, the daughters of Israel assemble together, and lament the daughter of Jephthe, the Galaadite, for four days.

CHAP. XII.

The Ephraimites quarrel with Jephthe: forty-two thousand of them are slain: Abesan, Ahialon, and Abdon, are judges.

BUT behold there arose a sedition in Ephraim. And passing towards the north, they said to Jephthe: When thou wentest to fight against the children of Ammon, why wouldst thou not call us, that we might go with thee? Therefore we will burn thy house.

2 And he answered them: I and my people were at great strife with the children of Ammon: and I called you to assist me, and you would not do it.

3 And when I saw this, I put my life in my own hands, and passed over-against the children of Ammon, and the Lord delivered them into my hands. What have I deserved, that you should rise up to fight against me?

4 Then calling to him all the men of Galaad, he fought against Ephraim. and the men of Galaad defeat-

VER. 39. Father. Her fortitude is commended by S. Ambrose (Off. iii. 12,) as more worthy of admiration than that of the two Pythagorean friends, one of whom, being sentenced to die, procured the other to stand bond for his return; and, at the time appointed, came freely to deliver himself up; an instance of generosity which made the tyrant who had sentenced him to die, beg that they would admit him into the society of their friendship. H.—Whatever we may think of Jephthe, “we cannot sufficiently admire the dutiful behaviour, and amiable simplicity of the daughter, who voluntarily submitted to her parent’s will, and exhorted him to do as he had vowed. To die to sin, to resign the pomps of a licentious world, to renounce those pleasures and incentives to vice, which are inconsistent with a clean heart, is a sacrifice truly meritorious, and acceptable to God; it is a sacrifice which was solemnly begun at the font of baptism.” Reeves, A. 2817.—No man. It is remarked by those who believe that she was not slain, that this observation would be very unnecessary in the contrary opinion. No mention of death is made. The virgin only deplores, with pious resignation, that she cannot be the happy mother of the Messias.

VER. 40. Lament. Heb. Lethanolh. On this term the solution of this question greatly depends. H.—Kimchi translates, “to talk with,” or “to comfort the daughter of Jephthe,” as he supposes that the custom subsisted during her life, while she was shut up either near the tabernacle, or in her father’s house. C.—Montanus renders “to speak to.” Junius and the Tigurin version, “to discourse with.”—Thanan certainly is used for “he related,” &c. Judg. v. 11. yethannu narrentur, or rather narrent; and the construction here seems to require this sense. Amama.—If this be admitted, the bloody sacrifice is at an end, since the daughters of Israel could not meet to comfort the virgin every year, if she was immolated at the expiration of two months. But if we follow the translation of the Vulg. Sept. and Chal. as the Protestants have done, the lamentation might still be viewed in the same light, as tending to condole with the lady, rather than bewail her untimely death, (H.) as, for the latter purpose, it would not have been necessary for them to assemble together. Amama.—They might well enter into her sentiments, when she mourned her virginity, (v. 38,) and strive to yield her some comfort in her secluded state, by coming in such numbers, and with the permission of the priests of God, continuing with her four days. H.—Some translate “to publish,” or sound forth the praises (C.) of this heroic virgin, which may be true, whether she was slain, or only consecrated to the Lord. H.—S. Epiphanius (hær. 55. and 78,) informs us that “at Sichen an annual sacrifice was still offered up in the name of the virgin, and that she was revered as a goddess by the people in the vicinity.” The vow of Jephthe seems to have given rise to what we read in profane authors, of that which Idomeneus, king of Crete, made in the midst of a storm at sea: “He vowed that he would sacrifice to the gods whatever met him first. It happened that his son was the person, whom, when he had immolated, or, as others say, had wished to do it, and afterwards a pestilence had ensued, his subjects drove him from his kingdom.” Servius in Æn. iii. and xi. C.—Aldrovandus (in Asino) relates a similar vow of Alexander the Great. Even the more sober pagans could not, it seems, approve of the unwarranted vows of parents to destroy the lives of their children. But of people consecrated to the Lord, by their parents, without first requiring their consent, we have many examples in Samuel. S. Foraventure, July 14, &c.—If we explain the vow of Jephthe in the same sense, every difficulty will be removed, and infidels will not allege this example to prove that human victims are pleasing to God. H.

CHAP. XII. VER. 1. Sedition. Heb. “the men of Ephraim shouted together” to arms.—North. Sept. “Sephana.” The Heb. may either signify the north, or (314) ed Ephraim, because he had said: Galaad is a fugitive of Ephraim, and dwelleth in the midst of Ephraim and Manasses.

5 And the Galaadites secured the fords of the Jordan, by which Ephraim was to return. And when any one of the number of Ephraim came thither in the flight, and said: I beseech you let me pass: the Galaadites said to him: Art thou not an Ephraimite? If he said: I am not: 6 They asked him: Say then, Shibboleth, which is interpreted, An ear of corn. But he answered, Sibboleth, not being able to express an ear of corn by the same letter. Then presently they took him and killed him in the very passage of the Jordan. And there fell at that time of Ephraim, two and forty thousand.

7 And Jephthe, the Galaadite, judged Israel six years: and he died, and was buried in his city of Galaad.

8 After him Abesan of Bethlehem judged Israel:

9 He had thirty sons, and as many daughters, whom he sent abroad, and gave to husbands, and took wives for his sons, of the same number, bringing them into his house. And he judged Israel seven years:

10 And he died, and was buried in Bethlehem.

11 To him succeeded Ahialon, a Zabulonite: and he judged Israel ten years:

12 And he died, and was buried in Zabulon.

13 After him, Abdon, the son of Illel, a Pharathonite, judged Israel:

some city. Mont.—It is probable that Ephraim went to quarrel with Jephthe at Abel, before he had returned to Maspha. C.—House. Heb. and Sept. add, “with or upon thee.” M.

VER. 2. Strife, to defend our property.—I called. Drusius doubts whether he sent an express invitation to Ephraim, otherwise how durst they assert that they had not been summoned? C.—But we may rather give credit to Jephthe. The condition of the nation was a sufficient invitation, as they knew that the greatest preparations were making for war on both sides, and it was their duty to come forward. H.

VER. 3. Hands exposed to all sorts of danger. I resolved to defend myself to the utmost, 1 K. xix. 6. Eccles. x. 2. C.

VER. 4. Fugitive. Vile and timid, so that his brethren around him might destroy him at any time. M.—Galaad dwelt in the midst of the descendants of Joseph. H.—But Ephraim, in despite, had represented him as an outcast. Their envy deserved to be severely punished. C.—The same passion had nearly excited them to make war upon Gedeon. C. viii. M.

VER. 6. Letter. Prot. “Say now Shibboleth, and he said Sibboleth, for he could not frame to pronounce it right.” The interpretation of the first word is added by S. Jerom. (H.) and denotes also “a running water;” (M.) whereas the Ephraimites pronounced a word which signifies “a burden,” not being able to utter properly sh, or schin, for which they substituted a o, samec, sobloth. H.—In the same nation, a variety of pronunciation frequently distinguishes the inhabitants of the different provinces. The Galileans were thus known from the rest of the Jews. Mat. xxvi. 23.

VER. 7. His city. Maspha, in the country of Galaad. C. xi. 34. C.—Heb. “in the cities;” whence the Rabbins have idly conjectured, that parts of his body were interred in different cities out of respect, or that they rotted off in punishment of the sacrifice of his daughter. Munster.—Grotius compares Jephthe with the renowned Viriatus. His character, both in peace and war, deserves the highest commendations; and in many respects, he was a striking figure of Jesus Christ. C.—The uncertainty of his birth, and the subsequent persecution which he endured from his brethren, foreshewed the deformity of the synagogue, and the conduct of the Jews (H.) towards their Messias, from whom alone they could expect salvation. Hence they are forced to have recourse to him, as the Israelites found themselves under a necessity of recalling Jephthe to lead them on to victory. Those who refused obedience to him, were deservedly exterminated, as the faithless Jews were by the arms of the Romans. Whether the daughter of Jephthe was immolated, or only consecrated to God, we may discover in her person a figure of the death and of the resurrection of our Saviour, who voluntarily made a sacrifice of his human nature to the justice of his father. See S. Aug. q. 49. Serar. q. 26. C.

VER. 8. Bethlehem of Juda, where Booz also was born. C.—The Rabbins make him the same person with Abesan. Serar. q. 5.—Maldonat (in Mat. ii. 1,) believes that this judge was of a city in Zabulon. Jos. xix. 15. M.—In the 5th year of Abesan, the Philistines compelled the Israelites to pay tribute, (C. xiii. 1,) and Samson was born A. 2860. Salien.

VER. 9. House, or family, though perhaps not under the same roof. M.

VER. 11. Ahialon. Eusebius calls him Adon, and his successor Labdon. C.—Salien says that he entirely omits the 10 years of Ahialon’s administration, though his name occurs in the body of the Chronicle, as being in the Heb. and not in the Sept. H.

VER. 13. Illel. Josephus reads “the son or servant of Helon,” whom some have confounded with Ahialon, though contrary to the Hebrew. C.—That author

14 And he had forty sons, and of them thirty grandsons, mounted upon seventy ass-colts, and he judged Israel eight years:

15 And he died, and was buried in Pharathon, in the land of Ephraim, in the mount of Amalech.

CHAP. XIII.

The people fall again into idolatry, and are afflicted by the Philistines. An angel foretelleth the birth of Samson.

AND the children of Israel did evil again in the sight of the Lord: and he delivered them into the hands of the Philistines forty years.

2 Now there was a certain man of Saraa, and of the race of Dan, whose name was Manue, and his wife was barren.

3 And an angel of the Lord appeared to her, and said: Thou art barren and without children: but thou shalt conceive and bear a son.

4 Now therefore beware, and drink no wine nor strong drink, and eat not any unclean thing.

5 Because thou shalt conceive, and bear a son, and no razor shall touch his head: for he shall be a Nazarite of God, from his infancy, and from his mother's womb, and he shall begin to deliver Israel from the hands of the Philistines.

6 And when she was come to her husband, she said to him: A man of God came to me, having the countenance of an angel, very awful. And when I asked him whence he came, and by what name he was called, he would not tell me:

7 But he answered thus: Behold thou shalt conceive and bear a son: beware thou drink no wine, nor strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing: for the child shall be supposes that Abdon reigned in peace. But it seems that he and the two others preceding him in the government of the people, were forced to purchase rest by paying tribute. Salier, A. C. 1193.

VER. 14. Forty sons. At this we need not be surprised, in a country where polygamy prevailed. Priam had 50 sons, and the Turks have often as many.—Colts. This was as great a distinction as to keep one's coach among us. C. x. 4. C.—This judge succeeded Ahialon, A. 2872, A. C. 1182, the year after Troy was taken, having endured a ten years' siege, by the treachery of Antenor, and of Æneas, Dictys, &c. Dares says the Greeks lost 886,000, and the Trojans 676,000, before the city was taken. Salien.

VER. 15. Amalec. The situation of this mountain, as well as of the town of Pharathon, is unknown. Some have supposed that Amalec had formerly had possession of this country. C. v. 14. Sept. Alex. reads "Mount Lanak." But this place occurs no where else, and other copies agree with the Vulgate. H.—Amaria, who entered upon the pontificate the same year that Heli was born, died after a reign of 39 years, A. 2879, and left the care of the people to Achitob and Samson for 20 years. Salien.

CHAP. XIII. VER. 1. Years. It is not clear whence this sixth and longest servitude is to be dated. If it terminated at the death of Samson, when the Philistines lost their chief nobility, &c. we must allow that the Israelites began to be obliged to pay tribute in the 6th year of Abesan. A. C. 1193. Salien. C. xii. 8. H.—Marsham dates from the third month after the death of Jair, to the third year of Samuel, during which period Heli governed in one part, and Jephte, Abesan, Ahialon, and Abdon in other provinces of Palestine. It is not very material which of these systems be adopted, as they do not contradict the text. All Israel was not reduced under the power of the Philistines; but the neighbouring tribes were infested with their incursions, and were obliged to pay tribute. Juda complains at their invading his territory, and they allege that it was because Samson had been the aggressor, which shews that the Israelites retained some little liberty. C. xv. 9. C.—The servitude had scarcely commenced, when God provided Samson a deliverer for his people. Salien, A. 2860. H.

VER. 2. Saraa, in the confines of Juda and of Dan, ten miles north of Eleutheropolis. Euseb.—Manue seems to have resided in the country, near this town. v. 25. M.

VER. 3. Angel, in human form. Some Protestants pretend that he was "the Son of God," and yet (v. 16) they say, "he sought not his own honour, but God's, whose messenger he was," (Bible, 1603) in which they plainly contradict themselves, or else teach Arianism, as if the Son were not true God, and equal to his Father. W.—The title of God, (Jehova) which is given to this angel, (v. 15, 21) is a proof that he was the Supreme Being. C. vi. 11.

VER. 4. Thing. Exhortations to observe the law are not unnecessary. S.

a Nazarite of God from his infancy, from his mother's womb until the day of his death.

8 Then Manue prayed to the Lord, and said: I beseech thee, O Lord, that the man of God, whom thou didst send, may come again, and teach us what we ought to do concerning the child, that shall be born.

9 And the Lord heard the prayer of Manue, and the angel of the Lord appeared again to his wife, as she was sitting in the field. But Manue her husband was not with her. And when she saw the angel, 10 She made haste, and ran to her husband: and told him, saying: Behold the man hath appeared to me, whom I saw before.

11 He rose up, and followed his wife: and coming to the man, said to him: Art thou he that spoke to the woman? And he answered: I am.

12 And Manue said to him: When thy word shall come to pass, what wilt thou that the child should do? or from what shall he keep-himself?

13 And the angel of the Lord said to Manue: From all the things I have spoken of to thy wife, let her refrain herself:

14 And let her eat nothing that cometh of the vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing: and whatsoever I have commanded her, let her fulfil and observe.

15 And Manue said to the angel of the Lord: I beseech thee to consent to my request, and let us dress a kid for thee.

16 And the angel answered him: If thou press me, I will not eat of thy bread: but if thou wilt offer a holocaust, offer it to the Lord. And Manue knew not it was the angel of the Lord.

Aug. q. 50. Besides the things which common people might take, such as wine, grapes, &c. were unclean for the Nazarites. The mother of Samson was required to abstain from every species of uncleanness as much as possible, at least while she bore and nursed her child. C.—Abulensis says, she was unquestionably under peculiar restrictions till her delivery. M.—This was a preparation for the child who should abstain from all unclean things, not only for a time, (Num. vi.) but during his whole life, that he might be a more perfect figure of Christ. W.—His dignity was not of choice, nor could he forfeit it by touching any thing unclean, nor by the violent cutting off his hair. As the deliverer of the people, he must often have been obliged to touch dead bodies. C.—Begin. The power of the Philistines was greatly broken by Samson. C. xvi. 13. M.—But Samuel, Saul and David had still to contend with them. 1 K. vii. 13. H.

VER. 6. And when, &c. Heb. Chal. Syr. Arab. and the Vatican Sept. read a negation, "And I did not ask him whence he came; neither did he tell me his name." The other copies of the Sept. S. Aug. (q. 51.) &c. agree with the Vulg. though S. Aug. suspected that the negation was wanting. C.

VER. 8. Born. Josephus (v. 10.) insinuates that Manue was touched with a sort of jealousy, as his wife had mentioned the comeliness of the stranger. H.—But S. Ambrose (ep. 70) has undertaken his defence; and surely God would not have wrought a miracle to gratify his request, if it had not proceeded from a virtuous motive, desiring to enjoy the same happiness as his wife, and to know precisely how they were to educate their son. C.—Procopius thinks that the wife of Manue was of more eminent virtue than her husband, and was therefore honoured with the first vision. She had been most afflicted at her sterility, and had prayed more earnestly for the people's safety. M.

VER. 12. Himself. Heb. and Sept. "What shall be the judgment (education. C.) of the boy, and what his works? (or Prot.) how shall we do unto him?" H.

VER. 13. Let her refrain, &c. By the Latin text, it is not clear whether this abstinence was prescribed to the mother or to the child; but the Heb. (in which the verbs relating thereto are of the feminine gender) determines it to the mother. But then the child also was to refrain from the like things, because he was to be from his infancy a Nazarite of God, (v. 6) that is, one set aside in a particular manner, and consecrated to God; now the Nazarites, by the law, were to abstain from all these things.

VER. 15. Dress. Heb. and Sept. "let us make." Vulg. faciamus, is used either for a common feast or for a sacrifice. Ex. xxix. 36. Virg. (eclog. iii.) Cras faciam vitula. Manue did not yet know who the angel was. He only designed to give him something to eat. A kid was then esteemed the most delicious food, and physicians esteem it very wholesome. The taste of people has since altered. Bochart, Anim. p. i. b. ii. 52. C.

VER. 16. Bread is put for all sorts of food. Angels eat none. Tob. xii. 19. M.

7 And he said to him: What is thy name, that, if word shall come to pass, we may honour thee?

18 And he answered him: "Why askest thou my name, which is wonderful?"

19 Then Manue took a kid of the flocks, and the libations, and put them upon a rock, offering to the Lord, who doth wonderful things: and he and his wife looked on.

20 And when the flame from the altar went up towards heaven, the angel of the Lord ascended also in the flame. And when Manue and his wife saw this, they fell flat on the ground;

21 And the angel of the Lord appeared to them no more. And forthwith Manue understood that it was an angel of the Lord, 22 And he said to his wife: We shall certainly die, because we have seen God.

23 And his wife answered him: If the Lord had a mind to kill us, he would not have received a holocaust and libations at our hands; neither would he have shewed us all these things, nor have told us the things that are to come.

24 "And she bore a son, and called his name Samson. And the child grew, and the Lord blessed him.

25 And the Spirit of the Lord began to be with him in the camp of Dan, between Saraa and Esthaol.

CHAP. XIV.

Samson desireth a wife of the Philistines. He killeth a lion: in whose mouth he afterwards findeth honey. His marriage feast and riddle, which is discovered by his wife. He killeth and strippeth thirty Philistines. His wife taketh another man.

VER. 17. Honour thee with a suitable reward. 1 Tim. v. 17.

VER. 18. Wonderful. Heb. Pell. Some have concluded that this was the proper name of the angel, as it is one of the titles of the Messiah. Isai. ix. 6. But it is more probable that the angel did not reveal his name. Chal. Others divide this sentence thus, "and he (the angel, or rather God) was wonderful." He was the author of all miracles, to whom sacrifice was immediately offered. It is doubted whether the angels have distinctive names. But we read of Michael, &c. and there is no reason why they should not have names denoting their peculiar dignity and offices. C.—Michael, the guardian of the church, perhaps appeared on this occasion. M.

VER. 19. On. Manue was convinced that the person who had authorized him to offer sacrifice, had power to dispense with him. W.—The angel "did wonderful things," as the Heb. may be explained, causing a flame to proceed from the rock and to consume the victim, as Josephus assures us, (C.) and as the angel who had appeared to Gedeon had done. C. vi. 21. M.

VER. 22. Seen God: not in his own person, but in the person of his messenger. The Israelites, in those days imagined they should die if they saw an angel, taking occasion perhaps from these words spoken by the Lord to Moses, (Ex. xxxiii. 20.) No man shall see me and live. But the event demonstrated that it was but a groundless imagination. Ch.—Elohim is applied to angels and men, as well as to God. C.

VER. 23. Come. The wife of Manue allays his fears with great prudence, as she observes that God had just promised them a son. H.

VER. 24. Samson signifies, "His sun, or joy;" or Syr. "service." C.—"His, or a little sun." M.—Blessed him with graces and strength, suitable for his office. C.

VER. 25. To be. Sept. "to walk along." Jonathan, "to sanctify." Samson began to manifest an eager desire to deliver his brethren. C.—Dan, as it was called by those 600 men who encamped here, when they were going to take Lais. C. xviii. 12. H.—God inspired him to commence the liberation of his country, when he was about 17 years old, (Usher) or 20 according to Salien. Then he entered upon his judicial authority, and punished the wrongs which the Philistines did him in person, as well as his countrymen. The seven years wandering of Aeneas had terminated in his death just before, at the river Numicus. Halicar. Salien, A. C. 1176. H.

CHAP. XIV. VER. 1. Thamnatha, in the confines of the tribes of Juda and Gad, and of the Philistines, who often took it from the latter. It is called Thamna, Gen. xxxviii. 12, (Bonfrere) and lies near Lidda. Euseb.

VER. 3. Eyes. He probably informed his parents (H.) that he was inspired by the Lord, v. 4. W.—The Jews say that he had first converted this woman; and interpreters generally excuse his conduct. But S. Ambrose thinks that he forfeited God's grace; (ep 19) and Theodoret also supposes that he transgressed

2 He came up, and told his father and his mother, saying: I saw a woman in Thamnatha of the daughters of the Philistines: I beseech you, take her for me to wife.

3 And his father and mother said to him: Is there no woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou wilt take a wife of the Philistines, who are uncircumcised? And Samson said to his father: Take this woman for me; for she hath pleased my eyes.

4 Now his parents knew not that the thing was done by the Lord, and that he sought an occasion against the Philistines: for at that time the Philistines had dominion over Israel.

5 Then Samson went down with his father and mother to Thamnatha. And when they were come to the vineyards of the town, behold a young lion met him, raging and roaring.

6 And the Spirit of the Lord came upon Samson, and he tore the lion as he would have torn a kid in pieces, having nothing at all in his hand: and he would not tell this to his father and mother.

7 And he went down, and spoke to the woman that had pleased his eyes.

8 And after some days, returning to take her, he went aside to see the carcass of the lion, and behold there was a swarm of bees in the mouth of the lion, and a honey-comb.

9 And when he had taken it in his hands, he went on eating: and coming to his father and mother, he gave them of it, and they ate: but he would not tell them that he had taken the honey from the body of the lion.

the law, (Ex. xxxiv. 12.) and God only permitted him to fall in love with women, without approving his conduct, q. 21. The Scripture often says, that he does and wills what he only permits. Ex. iv. 21. Jos. xi. 20. C.—If the conversion of this woman were well attested, there would be no difficulty about his marrying her, as Salmon did Rahab. S. Mat. i. 5. We have only conjectures that the women whom these and other holy personages espoused, embraced the true faith. But these may suffice in a matter of this nature. We cannot condemn Samson on this occasion, without involving his parents in the same censure, as they were charged to keep him from any contamination. S. Ambrose justly observed that a woman was the occasion of his fall, but he might allude to Dalila. C. xvi. 4. It seems hard to pass sentence on this judge of Israel, on his first appearance, without the most cogent reasons. See Lyran, A. Lapide, &c. H.—Heb. "She is right in my eyes." His parents were at length convinced that he was directed by God. T.

VER. 4. He sought. This may be understood either of the Lord, or rather of Samson. C.—Sept. "because he himself sought to retaliate upon the Philistines." Heb. "that it was of the Lord that, or because he sought an occasion to take," &c. H.

VER. 5. Young lion, not quite so strong as an old one, but in its vigour. Rabbin. C.—Met him. Heb. "roared against him." H.—His parents were at some distance. M.—S. Aug. (in Ps. lxxxviii.) shows the application of this history to Christ's establishing and adorning the church of the Gentiles with sweet and wholesome laws. D.

VER. 6. Spirit, increasing his courage and strength. M.—This shows that the strength of Samson was miraculous, attached to the keeping of his hair, and the observance of the duties of the Nazarite. C. C. xvi. 19.—Mother. The modesty which he displays is more wonderful than the feat of valour. H.—Brave men are never boasters. M.—He kept what he had done secret, designing to propose a riddle. Salien.

VER. 7. Spoke. Sept. "they spoke;" both Samson and his parents (M.) asked the young woman in marriage Gen. xxiv. 57. Cant. viii. 8. C.—That had. Prof. "and she pleased Samson well," as at first, v. 3. H.

VER. 8. A honeycomb. There was a very remarkable providence in this particular of the history of Samson. From which also in the mystical sense we may learn what spiritual sweetness and nourishment our souls will acquire from slaying the lions of our passions and vices. Ch.—Samson waited some time before he went to celebrate his marriage. The Rabbins say a full year was the usual term after the espousals; (Est. ii. 12.) and many have translated "after a year." Chal. Arab. &c. During this space the flesh of the lion would be consumed, and bees might make honey in its skeleton. Herodotus (v. 114,) informs us that a swarm lodged in the skull of Onesylus, the tyrant of Cyprus, which had been suspended for a long time. They keep at a distance from carrion and every fetid

10 So his father went down to the woman, and made a feast for his son Samson: for so the young men used to do.

11 And when the citizens of that place saw him, they brought him thirty companions to be with him.

12 And Samson said to them: I will propose to you a riddle, which if you declare unto me within the seven days of the feast, I will give you thirty shirts, and as many coats:

13 But if you shall not be able to declare it, you shall give me thirty shirts and the same number of coats. They answered him: Put forth the riddle, that we may hear it.

14 And he said to them: Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness. And they could not for three days expound the riddle.

15 And when the seventh day came, they said to the wife of Samson: Sooth thy husband, and persuade him to tell thee what the riddle meaneth. But if thou wilt not do it, we will burn thee, and thy father's house. Have you called us to the wedding on purpose to strip us?

16 So she wept before Samson and complained, saying: Thou hatest me, and dost not love me: therefore thou wilt not expound to me the riddle, which thou hast proposed to the sons of my people. But he answered: I would not tell it to my father and mother: and how can I tell it to thee?

17 So she wept before him the seven days of the feast: and, at length, on the seventh day, as she was troublesome to him, he expounded it. And she immediately told her countrymen.

smell. Some say that they were produced from the corrupted flesh of the lion, in the same manner as Virgil (iv.) describes them proceeding from a young ox beaten to death, and covered with boughs, in a place closely shut up. The bees might have laid their eggs upon these boughs, and the grass upon which an ox feeds, &c. But none of these precautions were taken with the lion which Samson tore in pieces. C.

VER. 10. Father. Before the nuptials, the young man was not accustomed to go to the house of his future bride. Montanus.—Samson's mother also accompanied him. Abul.—Do. Sept. "Samson made there a feast for seven days, because young men do so." H.

VER. 11. With him. Some imagine that these were placed to watch his motions. But he had surely invited them, v. 15. During the time that the nuptials were celebrated, these men (who are called the friends of the bridegroom, Mat. ix. 15,) are said to have been exempted from all public charges. Mont. C.

VER. 12. Riddle. Such obscure and ingenious questions were much liked in the East. 8 K. x. 1. The Egyptians concealed the mysteries of their religion, and Pythagoras his choicest maxims under them. S. Clem. Strom. 5. The Greeks proposed these γρίφους at feasts, determining some reward or punishment to those who succeeded or failed to explain them. Athenæus (x. 22,) relates that Simonides proposed this to his companions, after he had seen a blacksmith asleep, with a skin of wine and a craw-fish beside him. "The father of the kid, which eateth all sorts of herbs, and the miserable fish knocked their heads against each other, and he who has received upon his eye-lids the son of the night, would not feed the minister, who kills the oxen of king Bacchus." He could not get his ax mended. The ancients kept their wine in the skins of kids, &c. whence he alludes to the bottle of wine, near the miserable craw-fish or lobster.—Shirts. Heb. sedim, "sindons," the garment which was worn next the skin. Mar. xiv. 51. It was used also by women, (Isai. iii. 23,) and is probably the same which is called a tunic. C.—Coats. Heb. "change of garments." Some understand new and splendid garments. But Samson complied with his promise, by giving such as he found upon the 30 men, whom he slew, v. 19. H.—The custom of making presents of garments has long prevailed in the East. The Turkish emperor still receives and makes such presents to ambassadors. C.—Their long robes may easily be made to fit any person. H.

VER. 14. Sweetness. The explication of the ancient riddles frequently depended on the knowledge of something that had taken place. Our riddle-makers follow other rules. In a spiritual sense, the Philistines might be considered as those strong ones who had domineered over Israel, but would shortly afford them the spoils of a glorious victory. Jesus rises triumphant from the grave, and, after he has been persecuted and torn in pieces, becomes the food of Christians. S. Aug. &c. C.

VER. 15. Seventh day of the week, (Salien) which was the fourth of the feast; and the Syr. Arab. and some editions of the Sept. read, "the fourth." The young men tried their skill for three days; when, despairing of success, they solicited Samson's wife to draw the secret from him. She tried; but the seventh day being come, or at hand, (M.) the men began to threaten her, so that she became 18 And they, on the seventh day before the sun went down, said to him: What is sweeter than honey? and what is stronger than a lion? And he said to them: If you had not ploughed with my heifer, you had not found out my riddle.

19 And the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he went down to Ascalon, and slew there thirty men, whose garments he took away, and gave to them that had declared the riddle. And being exceeding angry, he went up to his father's house:

20 But his wife took one of his friends and bridal companions for her husband.

CHAP. XV.

Samson is denied his wife: He burns the corn of the Philistines, and kills many of them.

AND *a while after, when the days of the wheat harvest were at hand, Samson came, meaning to visit his wife, and he brought her a kid of the flock. And when he would have gone into her chamber, as usual, her father would not suffer him, saying:

2 I thought thou hadst hated her, and therefore I gave her to thy friend: but she hath a sister, who is younger and fairer than she, take her to wife instead of her.

3 And Samson answered him: From this day I shall be blameless in what I do against the Philistines: for I will do you evils.

4 And he went and caught three hundred foxes, and coupled them tail to tail, and fastened torches between the tails:

more importunate, and obtained her request. She had been weeping during a great part of the seven days, (v. 17. C.) or perhaps she had begun to tease him from the beginning. M.—Strip us. Sept. "to impoverish us." Homer (Odys. Z.) insinuates, that it was customary for the bride to furnish her attendants with white linen garments. These companions of Samson fear that they are going to be losers, by the honour which they do him. C.—They compel his wife by threats to betray his secret, and still destroy her afterwards: thus persecutors frequently treat those who comply with their demands, and deny the faith. W.

VER. 18. Down, at which time the day ended among the Jews.—Heifer. This proverbial expression means, that another's property had been used against himself; (Delrio adag. 162) or it may intimate, that improper liberties had been taken with Samson's wife, (C.) as her so readily taking one of them for her husband, (v. 20) might lead us to suspect. H.—The Greek and Latin authors speak of a faith less wife in similar terms. Theognis. lvi. &c.

VER. 19. Riddle. Samson must no longer be considered as a private man. He was authorized by the Spirit of the Lord, thus to punish the oppressors of Israel. C.—Though these 30 men had done him no injury in person, (H.) they had sinned against God, and deserved to die. Salien.—He slew them publicly in the city (M.) though others believe that he did it in the neighbouring country, as it does not appear that the people knew of their death. C.

VER. 20. Companions, the chief friend of the bridegroom, (Jo. iii. 29,) the paranymp. S. Amb. C.—Prot. "But Samson's wife was given to his companion, whom he had used as his friend." It seems her father had supposed, from Samson's keeping away for a long time, that he had abandoned her. H.—But, though he offered some sort of recompense, (M.) he justly fell a victim to the people's rage, who abhorred adultery, (C.) and were irritated at the persecution which he had brought upon them. C. xv. 2. 6. H.

CHAP. XV. VER. 1. After. The same term is used in the original as C. xiv. 8, which may be rendered "a year after," as it is not probable that the wife or Samson should be married to another, nor that he should lay aside his resentment much sooner. C.

VER. 2. Sister. Jacob had married two sisters, and such marriages were not uncommon among the eastern nations. C.—Samson does not accept the offer, as it was now contrary to the law. Lev. xviii. 18. M.

VER. 3. Evils. This is a declaration of war, made by Samson in person, against a whole nation. H.—He does not wish to engage his countrymen in the quarrel, that they may not be more oppressed. God chose that he should weaken the Philistines by degrees. They had been apprised of the injustice done to Samson, and did not strive to hinder it, so that they all deserved to suffer Grot. E. C.

VER. 4. Foxes. Being judge of the people, he might have many to assist him to catch with nets or otherwise a number of these animals; of which there were great numbers in that country, (Ch.) as we may gather from Cant. ii. 15. Lament. v. 15. M.—Hence many places received the name of Sual. Jos. xv. 28. and xix. 42. Pompey exhibited 600 lions at Rome, and the Emp. Probus 5000 ostriches, and as many wild boars, &c. in the theatre. Vopisc. Plin. viii. 16. A. Lap.—Js

5 And setting them on fire he let the foxes go, that they might run about hither and thither. And they presently went into the standing corn of the Philistines. Which being set on fire, both the corn that was already carried together, and that which was yet standing, was all burnt, insomuch that the flame consumed also the vineyards and the olive-yards.

6 Then the Philistines said: Who hath done this thing? And it was answered: Samson, the son-in-law of the Thamnathite, because he took away his wife, and gave her to another, hath done these things. And the Philistines went up and burnt both the woman and her father.

7 But Samson said to them: Although you have done this, yet will I be revenged of you, and then I will be quiet.

8 And he made a great slaughter of them, so that in astonishment they laid the calf of the leg upon the thigh. And going down he dwelt in a cavern of the rock Etam.

9 Then the Philistines going up into the land of Juda, camped in the place which afterwards was called Lechi, that is, the Jaw-bone, where their army was spread abroad.

10 And the men of the tribe of Juda said to them: Why are you come up against us? They answered: We are come to bind Samson, and to pay him for what he hath done against us.

11 Wherefore three thousand men of Juda went down to the cave of the rock Etam, and said to Samson: Knowest thou not that the Philistines rule over us? Why wouldst thou do thus? And he said to them: As they did to me, so have I done to them.

12 And they said to him: We are come to bind thee, it more incredible that Samson should collect 300 foxes! By this means he cleared his country of a pernicious animal, the most proper for carrying flames, and spreading fire far and wide among the fields of the enemy. By tying the foxes together, he hindered them from retiring into their holes, and gave the fire time to take hold of the corn and vineyards. C.—Ovid mentions a Roman custom of burning foxes in the theatre, with torches tied upon their backs, in the month of April; which some have imagined was in memorial of this transaction. Serar. q. 7.

A hundred and fifty firebrands, in different parts of the country, destroy the farmer's hopes. H.—And olive. The conjunction is now wanting in H. b. and some translate, "the vineyards of olive-trees." Kimchi.—But who ever heard of such an expression! It is better therefore to supply and, with the Sept. (C.) as the Prot. also have done. H.—"The foxes signify the deceitful ensnarers, and chiefly heretics." S. Aug. in Ps. viii. D.

VER. 6. Father. Thus they met with the fate which the woman had endeavoured to avoid, by an infidelity to her husband. Salien.—The princes of the Philistines acknowledged the wrong which had been done to Samson, and thus testify their abhorrence of adultery. C.—Some Heb. MSS. confirm the Sept. Ar. and Syr. versions; and instead of "her father with her," read, "and her father's house," (Kennicott) or all his family.

VER. 7. Of you. He intimates that they should answer for the injustice which they ought to have prevented, or punished sooner. H.—Heb. "If you had done like this," and slain the father and daughter, I should be quiet. D.

VER. 8. Thigh. Striking this part is often mentioned as a mark of consternation. Jer. xxxi. 19. M.—Heb. "and he smote them thigh and leg, with a great slaughter." H.—Vatable supposes this means an entire destruction. Chaldee, "he smote both horse and foot." He rendered them incapable of fleeing, or of making resistance. Nah. ii. 5. C.—Cavern. Heb. sahiph, signifies, "the top, branch," &c. The rock might be covered with wood, (C.) and was situated in the confines of the tribes of Simeon, Juda, and Dan. 1 Par. iv. 32. M.

VER. 9. Spread. Heb. "encamped in Juda, and spread themselves in Lechi." H.

VER. 12. Kill me, in a treacherous manner. He was not afraid of them. C. and to deliver thee into the hands of the Philistines. And Samson said to them: Swear to me, and promise me that you will not kill me.

13 They said: We will not kill thee: but we will deliver thee up bound. And they bound him with two new cords, and brought him from the rock Etam.

14 Now when he was come to the place of the Jaw-bone, and the Philistines shouting went to meet him, the Spirit of the Lord came strongly upon him: and as flax is wont to be consumed at the approach of fire, so the bands with which he was bound were broken and loosed.

15 And finding a jaw-bone, even the jaw-bone of an ass, which lay there, catching it up, he slew therewith a thousand men.

16 And he said: With the jaw-bone of an ass, with the jaw of the colt of asses, I have destroyed them, and have slain a thousand men.

17 And when he had ended these words, singing, he threw the jaw-bone out of his hand, and called the name of that place Ramathlechi, which is interpreted the lifting up of the jaw-bone.

18 And being very thirsty, he cried to the Lord, and said: Thou hast given this very great deliverance and victory into the hand of thy servant: and behold I die for thirst, and shall fall into the hands of the uncircumcised.

19 Then the Lord opened a great tooth in the jaw of the ass, and waters issued out of it. And when he had drunk them, he refreshed his spirit, and recovered his strength. Therefore the name of that place was called The Spring of him that invoked from the jaw-bone, until this present day.

VER. 13. Cords. Heb. habothim, Sept. Kalaidous, denote strong ropes or cables M.—Etam is not in Heb. or the Sept. H.

VER. 14. Bone. Heb. "Lechi," as it was called after the slaughter made by Samson, v. 15. It is about 20 miles to the east of Ascalon. C.—Approach: lit "the smell." This expression is often used to denote burning. Sept. C. xvi. 9 Dan. iii. 94.

VER. 15. Thera. The Sept. Josephus, and the Vulg. agree, reading Heb. truth, instead of the present teriya, "fresh," or raw, which seems an useless remark in this place. C.—Asses are very large in Palestine. M.

VER. 16. Asses. He insists on this particular, as such an unusual weapon rendered his victory more astonishing, and he would not leave any room for doubt. Heb. is variously translated, "with the jaw-bone of an ass, I have made a heap, yea two heaps; with the jaw-bone of an ass, I have defeated a thousand men." Syr. &c. Castalion and Bonfrere defend the Vulg. The Sept. have, "with the jaw-bone of an ass I have entirely taken them off, (H. defeating them, with," &c. They have explained chamorathayim, as the first person of emor, rube-fecit, or Chal. destruxit, "I have covered them with blood;" and indeed to understand it of "two she asses," is impossible. C.—This verse formed the chorus of Samson's song. H.—He did not take the glory to himself, as Josephus (v. 10,) would insinuate, but attributed the victory to God, v. 18. Salien, A. C. 1172. This miracle of strength can no more be accounted for by reason, than many others. W.

VER. 17. Which is, &c. This is added by the Vulg. being the interpretation of the Sept. Anapneus; (C.) though it also signify, "the slaughter." S. Amb. ep. 19. H.—The Syr. and Arab. have read domoth, "the blood," instead of ramath Lechi, "the lifting up;" or as others would have it, "the throwing down of the jaw-bone." C.—Samson had snatched it from the ground, slew the thousand Philistines, and left it as a monument of his victory. H.

VER. 18. Thirsty. S. Ambrose (ep. 19 or 70) follows Josephus, (M.) in supposing that the arrogance of Samson, in attributing the victory to his own strength, was thus punished. But others are more favorable to the hero, (C.) and suppose that his thirst was occasioned by the extraordinary fatigue. He sufficiently testifies that he had received all from God, (M.) and he is immediately favored with another miracle. H.—God is able to grant victory by the most feeble instruments, and he is never wanting when his presence is requisite. S. Aug. Doct. iv. 15. T.

VER. 19. Then. Heb. "And God clave the Mactesh (H. hollow place, great tooth; or the name of a rock, as Josephus and others understand it, perhaps on account of its resemblance with a tooth) which was at Lechi; and . . . he called it the fountain of him who cries out, (C. En-hakkore. Prot.) which is in Lechi, until this day." The translating of some proper names has given occasion to various difficulties. See 2 K. vi. 3. 1 Par. iv. 22. H.—Sopbonias (1. 11.) mentions a place called (Mactesh, or) Machteas, in Hebrew, which seems to have been built where the fountain of Samson was. C.—It is a greater miracle

20 And he judged Israel, in the days of the Philistines, twenty years.*

CHAP. XVI.

Samson is deluded by Dalila: and falls into the hands of the Philistines. His death.

HE^b went also into Gaza, and saw there a woman, a harlot, and went in unto her.

2 And when the Philistines had heard this, and it was noised about among them, that Samson was come into the city, they surrounded him, setting guards at the gate of the city, and watching there all the night in silence, that in the morning they might kill him as he went out.

3 But Samson slept till midnight, and then rising, he took both the doors of the gate, with the posts thereof and the bolt, and laying them on his shoulders, carried them up to the top of the hill, which looketh towards Hebron.

4 After this he loved a woman, who dwelt in the valley of Sorec, and she was called Dalila.

5 And the princes of the Philistines came to her, and said: Deceive him, and learn of him wherein his great strength lieth, and how we may be able to overcome him, to bind and afflict him: which if thou shalt do, we will give thee every one of us eleven hundred pieces of silver.

6 And Dalila said to Samson: Tell me, I beseech thee, wherein thy greatest strength lieth, and what it is, wherewith if thou wert bound, thou couldst not break loose.

7 And Samson answered her: If I shall be bound to draw water out of a dry bone, than out of the earth or stones. But all things are possible to God. W.

VER. 20. Years. Salien gathers from this remark being made here, that the Philistines still asserted their dominion over Israel, but with greater moderation than they had done before: and both nations acknowledged the judicial authority of Samson, who had now been giving them such proofs of his valour for two years, soon after he performed the feat at Gaza, A. C. 1169, being on some business. H.

CHAP. XVI. VER. 1. A harlot, or an innkeeper; for the Heb. word signifies either. CH.—We have already noticed the ambiguity of the word zona, which occurs Jos. ii. 1, and is applied to Rahab. This woman seems to have been of the same profession. Gaza was one of the strongest towns of the Philistines, on the south of the country. Some have erroneously supposed, (C.) that it was so called from a Persian word, which signifies a treasury, as Cambyses there deposited his most valuable effects. Mela. i. 11.

VER. 2. Setting. Heb. "they laid wait for him all night in the gate, . . . and were quiet all night, saying, in the morning, when it is day, we shall kill him." They hoped to seize him unawares, (H.) as they were afraid to rouse this lion, and hence probably refrained from setting fire to the house: (C.) though they might be deterred from doing this, by the fear of the conflagration spreading to other parts of the city, (H.) and by an over-ruling Providence. Salien.

VER. 3. Bolt, (serd) which many translate, "lock." H.—The doors of the Hebrews were fastened with bars tied in a curious manner, so as to require a sort of a key, and not to be opened but on the inside. Hebron was above thirty miles distant: but travellers mention a small hill, where they say the doors were left in the vicinity of Gaza; (C.) and the text does not assert that Samson carried them as far as Hebron. H.—He went out by that gate, contrary to the expectations of the Philistines, who supposed that he would go towards Thamathath. If any saw him, none durst encounter the hero, as they had not yet forgotten the thousand slain with the jaw-bone. Salien.—The pagans confound their Hercules with Samson; (S. Aug. C. D. xviii. 19.) but the former durst not attack two at a time, whereas the latter engaged and slew so many. W.

VER. 4. After this. The lamentable fall of Samson took place in the last year of his administration, when Heli, of the house of Thamar, succeeded Achitob I. in the high priesthood. A. C. 1154. Salien.—Sorec was not far from Saraa, where Samson was born. It probably belonged to the Philistines, as Dalila is generally supposed to have been of that nation, and most people believe a harlot. C.—Adrichomius says the eunuch was here baptized. T.—Dalila. Some are of opinion she was married to Samson; others that she was his harlot. If the latter opinion be true, we cannot wonder that, in punishment of his lust, the Lord delivered him up by her means into the hands of his enemies. However, if he was guilty, it is not to be doubted, but that under his afflictions he with seven cords, made of sinews not yet dry, but still moist, I shall be weak like other men.

8 And the princes of the Philistines brought unto her seven cords, such as he spoke of, with which she bound him;

9 Men lying privately in wait with her, and in the chamber, expecting the event of the thing, and she cried out to him: The Philistines are upon thee, Samson. And he broke the bands, as a man would break a thread of tow, when it smelleth the fire: so it was not known wherein his strength lay.

10 And Dalila said to him: Behold thou hast mocked me, and hast told me a false thing: but now at least tell me wherewith thou mayest be bound.

11 And he answered her: If I shall be bound with new ropes, that were never in work, I shall be weak and like other men.

12 Dalila bound him again with these, and cried out: The Philistines are upon thee, Samson, there being an ambush prepared for him in the chamber. But he broke the bands like threads of webs.

13 And Dalila said to him again: How long dost thou deceive me, and tell me lies? Shew me wherewith thou mayest be bound. And Samson answered her: If thou plattest the seven locks of my head with a lace, and tying them round about a nail, fastenest it in the ground, I shall be weak.

14 And when Dalila had done this, she said to him: The Philistines are upon thee, Samson. And awaking out of his sleep, he drew out the nail with the hairs and the lace.

* A. M. circoiter 2885.

heartily repented and returned to God, and so obtained forgiveness of his sins. CH.—Dolol means, "to be impoverished or weakened," as Samson was in all respects by this wicked woman.

VER. 5. Princes, (saranim;) the five satraps, who had the chief sway in the nation, either came in person or sent messengers to Cepharsorec. They were convinced that the strength of Samson was supernatural; but they wished to learn whether it depended on some magical charm, or on some religious observation, or whether he was vulnerable only in some particular part, like Achilles, who could only be slain by a wound in the heel, according to the pagans. C.—If Dalila would learn, and endeavour to remove the obstacle, these princes engaged to give her each 1100 pieces (or sicles, C.) of silver. Salien.

VER. 7. Her, in jest. H.—Sinews; such were frequently used for strength. Vegetius iv. 9. Ps. x. 2. Cato often speaks of lorros funes, (C.) or "leathern thongs." H.—Moist. Heb. "seven bands, green and moist;" as if he were speaking of willow twigs, or bands made of the rind of trees, &c. But we need not abandon the Sept. and Vulg. to follow the moderns in this place, as yethurim unquestionably means cords of sinews, and the epithet, green, is applied to the eyes of Moses, (Deut. xxiv. 7.) to denote their shining vigour and strength; so here it may signify, that the sinews were to be fresh and in full perfection. C.—Dalila might easily think that such bands would make Samson her prisoner. She had people to assist her, in case she proved successful. But Samson probably broke the bands before they made their appearance; otherwise he would have resented the woman's infidelity, and not exposed himself again. He supposed she only made these exclamations to see what he would do, v. 9. &c.

VER. 9. Fire. Prot. "and he brake the withs, as a thread of tow is broken when it toucheth the fire." H.—Thus he played with her, never suspecting that the enemy was concealed so near. C.

VER. 13. Lace, (licio;) "the woof about the beam," &c. Heb. "the web, (14) and she fastened it," &c. The original text is here imperfect. H.—The Sept. have preserved eighteen words, which have been omitted in Heb. "the web, [and fasten them with a pin unto the wall, then shall I be weak, and be as another man. (14) And it came to pass, when he slept, that Dalila took seven locks of his head, and wove them with a web] and fastened them with a pin, [unto the wall] and said," &c. Kennicott, Diss. ii.—The Vulg. expresses the whole idea in fewer words: but the Heb. leaves the proposal of Samson imperfect. It is observable that Grabe's edition of the Alex. Sept. has no mark of any thing being redundant; whence we might suppose, that in the days of Origen, (whose marks he endeavours to exhibit) the Hebrew agreed with the Greek version; but the 14th verse is rather different from the Vatican copy, which has been given above.—"And Dalila (so the Sept. always style her) lulled him asleep; (exoripiscit, as v. 19, (H.) perhaps by giving him some potion, with which people of her character are frequently provided; Salien) and she wove the seven curls of his head with the woof, (seracous) and she fastened them with the pins of wood into the 15 And Dalila said to him: How dost thou say thou lovest me, when thy mind is not with me? Thou hast told me lies these three times, and wouldst not tell me wherein thy greatest strength lieth.

16 And when she pressed him much, and continually hung upon him for many days, giving him no time to rest, his soul fainted away, and was wearied even unto death.

17 Then opening the truth of the thing, he said to her: The razor hath never come upon my head, for I am a Nazarite, that is to say, consecrated to God from my mother's womb: If my head be shaven, my strength shall depart from me, and I shall become weak, and shall be like other men.

18 Then seeing that he had discovered to her all his mind, she sent to the princes of the Philistines, saying: Come up this once more, for now he hath opened his heart to me. And they went up, taking with them the money which they had promised.

19 But she made him sleep upon her knees, and lay his head in her bosom. And she called a barber wall," &c. H.—The Heb. text is liable to many difficulties, says Calmet; "If thou shalt make a tissue of seven locks of my head with the veil, which thou weavest, and shalt fasten it to a nail, I shall become weak as another man: or, If thou weave together my hair and thy thread," &c. The ancients were accustomed to weave standing. Samson was probably lying on the ground, while Dalila was acting this farce. C.

VER. 18. Death. Heb. "and pressed him so, that his soul was straitened unto death." It would be well if Christians would always make as stout a resistance against manifest temptations to sin, as Samson did on this occasion, when he might consider the revealing of the truth rather as an indiscretion than as a crime. It is difficult to determine in what precisely the fault consisted, which was followed by so severe a punishment. Perhaps he may have been placed as a pattern of patience, like holy Job, without incurring the divine displeasure. Yet most people suppose, that he fell by the love of women, and by disclosing the secret of his strength. But where do we read that he had received a precept from God, not to mention it even to his wife? For in this light SS. Ephrem and Chrys. Sulp Severus, Pererius, and others, represent Dalila, which removes the greatest objection to his character. We have seen (v. 1) that the harlot of Gaza might be only an innkeeper; and the first object of his love, was proposed to him by the holy spirit. C. xiv. 4. But even allowing that Dalila was a harlot, though the Scripture does not assert it, what harm was there in Samson's endeavouring to reclaim her, and to make her his wife, as Osee (i. 2.) was commanded to do! It is only said, (v. 4) that he loved a woman; and his subsequent conduct with her, might be nothing more than what is lawful among lovers, or even commendable between married people. Isaac's playing with Rebecca, his wife, (Gen. xxvi. 8.) was a proof of his conjugal love for her, as S. Francis of Sales observes. Generous souls are frequently prone to love, and delight to unbend their minds in the company of the fair sex, with whom they can fear no rivalry in strength. Samson, in particular, seemed unable to deny their importunate requests. He yielded at last to explain his riddle to his first wife, and though he was justly offended at her infidelity, he took occasion from it to begin the work for which he was sent by God, the destruction of the enemy. Perhaps he thought that his compliance with the repeated solicitations of Dalila would be attended with the like effect, as in reality it was, and he destroyed more in death than during the whole course of his life. Without the strongest proofs, it seems unjust to pass sentences of condemnation upon a great character, the number of the perfect being already too small. Our Saviour, laden with the sins of mankind, as with the treacherous Dalila, exclaimed, my soul is sorrowful unto death. Mat. xxvi. 38. Yet (H.) the weakness of Samson's heart throughout this history, is still more surprising than the strength of his body. C.—Tirin asserts that God had granted him such strength, with an order not to disclose the secret, that it was attached to the not wilfully having his hair cut.

VER. 17. Thing. Heb. and Sept. "He told her all his heart."—That is to say, consecrated, is added by the Vulg. H.—Men. Was the hair the physical, or only the moral, cause of his wonderful strength? It is generally believed that it was only a moral cause, or a token appointed by God, that as long as Samson retained his hair he should be endued with such force. The pagans relate, that the kingdom of Nisus and of Pterelaus depended on a fatal lock of hair, which their daughters cut off. Orinis inhaerebat, magni fiducia regni. Ovid, Met. viii. Apoll. 2. C.

VER. 18. To me. Heb. "to her." Lah instead of li, perhaps in all the printed editions except the Complutensian, which has corrected the mistake, and is authorized by some MSS. Kennicott.

VER. 19. Knees. by some soporiferous draught, as on the other occasions. M.—Barber. He only produced the razor, or rather a pair of scissors, such as were used to shear sheep. Barbers were unknown at Rome for 464 years; and the ancient Greeks looked with indignation upon those who introduced the custom of shaving among them. Plin. vii. 59. The Hebrews did not cut all their beard, and generally let the hair of their head grow long. Samson wore his curled, which is still the fashion among some people.—And began. Sept. "he began to and shaved his seven locks, and began to drive him away, and thrust him from her: for immediately his strength departed from him.

20 And she said: The Philistines are upon thee, Samson. And awaking from sleep, he said in his mind: I will go out as I did before, and shake myself, not knowing that the Lord was departed from him.

21 Then the Philistines seized upon him, and forthwith pulled out his eyes, and led him bound in chains to Gaza, and shutting him up in prison made him grind.

22 And now his hair began to grow again,

23 And the princes of the Philistines assembled together, to offer great sacrifices to Dagon their god, and to make merry, saying: Our god hath delivered our enemy Samson into our hands.

24 And the people also seeing this, praised their god, and said the same: Our god hath delivered our adversary into our hands, him that destroyed our country, and killed very many.

25 And rejoicing in their feasts, when they had now taken their good cheer, they commanded that Samson be humbled, (C.) or rendered abject, and his strength," &c. Heb. "she began to render him contemptible." H.

"But what is strength without a double share

Of wisdom? vast, unyielding, burdensome."—Milton's Samson.

VER. 20. Myself. This might insinuate that he was bound, though it may only mean that he will extricate himself from the hands of the Philistines. C.—We read of no bands on this occasion. But the loss of the sign of his being a Nazarite was Samson's greatest misfortune, and rendered him less formidable than if he had been bound with chains of adamant. He was not sensible of his loss at first; or he himself was uninformed that his strength depended on the preservation of his hair. The cutting it off was wholly involuntary, so that, if he sinned by losing it, we must conclude that he was guilty in putting himself in the power of a woman, by revealing a secret which he ought to have kept to himself. Other Nazarites were surely under no such obligation. If a barbarous ruffian or infidel had, by violence, deprived them of their sacred ornament, or touched them with something unclean, they would have been obliged to submit to the legal purifications, but no blame could have attached to them. H.—From him, as to the gratuitous and supernatural degree of strength. M.

VER. 21. Chains. Heb. and Sept. add, "of brass," which were more ancient than those of iron or of steel. Brass was generally used instead of the latter, for knives, &c. C.—Gaza, the place where he had lately given such an instance of strength, v. 2. H.—Grind. Before the invention of wind or of water mills, the ancients forced their meanest slaves to grind with a hand-mill, consisting of two large stones. Many such are made in the isle of Milo. The mill was the common place for slaves, who had given an offence not deserving of death. Isai. xlvii. 2. Lament. v. 13. Cod. Theod. de pœnit. Apuleius describes their condition as most pitiful; half naked, with their hair half cut, their feet chained, disfigured with scourges, &c. Metam. ix. Herodotus (iv. 2.) says, that the Scythians put out the eyes of their slaves, that they may not become dizzy with turning round vessels of milk, upon which these people feed. Such was the condition of Samson. S. Jerom (in Isai. xlvii.) mentions a foolish interpretation of the Rabbins, as if the Philistines obliged this strong man to have children by their women. See Thalmud, sutah 1, fol. 10. C. Job xxxi. 10. H.—Samson "laboured hard, that he might not eat his bread for nothing." Lyra.

VER. 22. Again. Heb. adds, "as when he was shaven." H.—He was in prison three or four months. M.—As his hair grew his strength returned, because he entered into himself and did penance, so that he was restored to the rank and privileges of a Nazarite. C. M.

VER. 23. Dagon. Probably the decepto, whom Diodorus (3.) represents with the head of a woman, and the rest of the body like a fish, the chief object of adoration at Ascalon. C.—Dagon may signify "wheat;" and hence Eusebius (prep. 1.) styles him "the ploughing Jupiter," or "a fish."—Hands. For this purpose they were offering sacrifices of thanksgiving, (M.) which they did not only when they first took Samson, but probably on all their great festivals, till the hero's death. This could not but excite the indignation and zeal of this great judge, and God resented the indignity offered to himself. They cursed Samson, (H.) as the Sichemites had done Abimelec on a similar occasion. C. ix. 27. M.

God "will not connive or linger, thus provoked,

But will arise and his great name assert."—Milton, v. 466.

VER. 25. Played. Dancing in a ridiculous manner, (Montanus) running against the walls, or falling down, so as to make the people laugh, (Lyrano) or rather (H.) Serarius gathers from the Sept. that "they buffeted him," and made a sport of him. M.—It is not at all probable that Samson would act the ape before the Philistines; but, in attempting to keep off the rabble with many a fruitless blow, against his will he might make them merry. C.—He appeared before them in the garb of a slave, covered with the dust of the mill, (Salien, like our Saviour in the fool's garment. H.—Two pillars. The temples of Hercules, at Tyre and in Africa, had the same number. Porphy. Abst. 2.—The temple of Dagon was supported on wooden pillars standing near each other should be called, and should play before them. And being brought out of prison, he played before them; and they made him stand between two pillars.

26 And he said to the lad that guided his steps: Suffer me to touch the pillars which support the whole house, and let me lean upon them, and rest a little.

27 Now the house was full of men and women, and all the princes of the Philistines were there. Moreover about three thousand persons of both sexes, from the roof and the higher part of the house, were beholding Samson's play.

28 But he called upon the Lord, saying: O Lord God remember me, and restore to me now my former strength, O my God, that I may revenge myself on my enemies, and for the loss of my two eyes I may take one revenge.

29 And laying hold on both the pillars on which the house rested, and holding the one with his right hand, and the other with his left,

30 He said: Let me die with the Philistines. And when he had strongly shook the pillars, the house fell

People might see down from the roof. Serar.—We read that the theatre of Rome rested on one pivot, and the amphitheatre on two. Ecce populus Romanus universus, says Pliny, (xxxvi. 15.) binis cardinibus sustinetur. C.—The roofs of the Philistine temples were flat, and galleries all around them, so that an immense crowd might be collected, (M.) to gaze on this terror of their country, now their prey. They had forgotten how he had formerly carried off their gates, or they concluded that his amazing strength was gone for ever. H.

VER. 27. Play. It is not clear from the text, whether the 3000 were distinct from those who were below. It seems this is the number of all the slain, (C.) as Josephus asserts. But the Prot. insert, "the lords of the Philistines were there: and there were upon the roof" &c. which shews that they understand it in the same sense as the Vulg. and the Sept. which distinguish these outside spectators from those who filled the house, and were in company with the princes. H.

VER. 28. Revenge myself. This desire of revenge was out of zeal for justice against the enemies of God and his people; and not out of private rancour and malice of heart. Ch.—He was judge of his people, and concerned for their wrongs: God, by a miracle, testified that he approved of his sentiments. C.—Sept. insinuate that the cry of Samson was accompanied with tears, (eklausē). It was the cry of the heart, which is most eloquent with God. Heb. and Sept. "strengthen me yet this once, O God, and I will repay," &c. H.

VER. 29. Both the. Heb. adds "middle" pillars, so that their fall occasioned that of the whole temple, (C.) excepting perhaps some of the ruins, which are still shewn at Gaza. Butten.

"He tugged, he shook till down they came, and drew

The whole roof after them with bursts of thunder." Milton. H.

VER. 30. Let me die. Literally, let my soul die. Samson did not sin on this occasion, though he was indirectly the cause of his own death. Because he was moved to what he did, by a particular inspiration of God, who also concurred with him by a miracle, in restoring his strength upon the spot, in consequence of his prayer. Samson, by dying in this manner, was a figure of Christ, who by his death overcame all his enemies. Ch. W.—S. Aug. says, "he was not under a human delusion, but divinely inspired. . . Who will accuse his obedience?" De C. i. 21. and 26. &c. And S. Bern. (de præc. 3.) observes that he would have sinned, if he had not received a particular inspiration. But many think that he might have acted as he did, without it, in quality of judge, as he might intend primarily to avenge his people and the glory of God. He was willing to sacrifice his life for this purpose, though he would have preserved it, if it had been in his power. Cajet. Lessius, &c.—The Church honours many virgin martyrs, (C.) who have thrown themselves into fire or water, in similar dispositions. S. Amb. says, "it is to be presumed that their zeal came from God." De Virg. iii. 7. He mentions S. Pelagia, and her mother and sisters, and S. Soteris, a relation of his, whose memory is honoured on the 10th of February. S. Apollonia's feast occurs the day before. "She leapt into the fire, having her breast enkindled with a stronger flame of the holy spirit." Brev. Rom. See the fact of Razias, 2 Mac. xiv. 87. H.—So that the revelation of S. Mathildes doubting of his, Solomon's, Origen's, and Trajan's salvation, as if God would thus keep mankind in fear, seems to be a fabrication. Baronius. A. D. 604. S. Paul ranks Samson among the saints. Heb. xi. 32.—Life. Express mention is made of 1030 slain by Samson, besides the great numbers, which excited the astonishment of the Philistines. C. xv. 8. But on this occasion he destroyed 3000 at once, and the death of all the princes made the slaughter more terrible, (C.) inasmuch that the people being without a head, were glad to let Samson's brethren take away his body without molestation, as they had every reason to fear that the Israelites would now fall upon them. Salien.—If 3000 perished on the outside of the temple, (H.) Serarius concludes that not less than 20,000 were destroyed in all.

VER. 31. Twenty. "Why then, says the Talmud of Jerusalem, does the Scripture allow him 40? That thou mightest understand the Philistines were kept in awe, by the fear of him, for 20 years after his decease." The Hebrew copies seems to have varied. Drusius.—Some refuse Samson the title of judge, (Maasus) as they suppose (H.) that Heli filled that office at the same time. But upon all the princes, and the rest of the multitude, that was there: and he killed many more at his death, than he had killed before in his life.

31 And his brethren and all his kindred, going down took his body, and buried it between Saraa and Esthaol, in the burying-place of his father Manue: and he judged Israel twenty years.

CHAP. XVII.

The history of the idol of Michas, and the young Levite.

THERE was at that time a man of Mount Ephraim, whose name was Michas.

2 Who said to his mother: The eleven hundred pieces of silver, which thou hadst put aside for thyself, and concerning which thou didst swear in my hearing, behold I have, and they are with me. And she said to him: Blessed be my son by the Lord.

3 So he restored them to his mother, who said to him: I have consecrated and vowed this silver to the Lord, that my son may receive it at my hand, and make a graven and a molten god; so now I deliver it to thee.

there might be several in different parts of the country, and Heli might administer sacred things, while Samson acted in the character of a warrior. C.—Salien believes that Heli only commenced high priest and judge at the death of Samson, and continued for 40 years, though he was 58 years old when he entered upon office, A. 2900. A. C. 1153. Samson prefigured the Messiah, not only in death, but also in his annunciation, birth, name, and in many particulars of his life. He was a Nazarite: Jesus receives that title even from his enemies. Samson marries a foreign woman; is delivered by his brethren of Juda into the hands of his enemies; judges and delivers his people. Christ, the sun of justice, calls the Gentiles; is betrayed by Judas, and abandoned to the fury of the Romans; is appointed Judge and Saviour of all. He embraces the cross, as Samson did the pillars, and by his humiliations redeemed the world. The pagan temple falls and crushes the idolaters. The Jews are overwhelmed in the ruins of their temple and city: and the earth trembles at the death of Christ. He is buried with honour, notwithstanding the malice of his enemies, (C.) as the body of Samson was taken from the midst of the raging inhabitants of Gaza, and interred peaceably in his father's tomb. The fabulous account of the Phœnician, or of another (H.) Hercules, who lived about this time, seems to have been chiefly taken from the history of Samson. Both encountered many difficulties, and perished by woman's malice. Hercules never used a sword, and we do not read that Samson had any. C.—"He was possessed of an incomparable strength both of mind and body," says Josephus, (v. 10.) which he employed for the destruction of the enemy even to the last breath. His being deceived by a woman, we ought to attribute to human weakness, which is prone to such faults. In all other respects, his virtue entitles him to eternal praise." H.

"Tax not divine disposal; wisest men

Have err'd, and by bad women been deceived;

And shall again, pretend they ne'er so wise." Sams. Agon. v. 210.

CHAP. XVII. VER. 1. At that time, is not in the Heb. or Sept. It only means that the event which is recorded took place at some time, which the sacred writer does not determine. We should conclude, that the histories which fill up the remainder of this book, ought to be placed after the death of Samson, (Serarius, &c.) if some passages did not determine us to allow that their proper order must be soon after the death of Josue and of the ancients. The grandson of Moses must, on the former supposition, have been extremely old, whereas he is said to have been a young man, v. 7. The tribe of Dan was still straitened for room. C. xviii. 1, &c. C.—Josephus, (v. 2.) who passes over the history of Michas. Salien, A. 2622, the 22d year of Othoniel and Phineas. H.—Anarchy at that time prevailed, (v. 6.) so that we need not wonder to behold such confusion among the Israelites. M.—Ephraim. The country was mountainous for nine miles. Adrichomius.

VER. 2. Mother. A rich (C.) old widow, since she had grandchildren, one of whom was appointed to serve her domestic chapel. M.—She had lost a sum of money, and was venting imprecations against the thief, when her son came and informed her that he had it safe, upon which she changed her curses into blessings.—Swear, may have another meaning, as if she had made a vow of this money. C. M.—Lord. Heb. Yehova, the title of God, which she gives to idols, (M.) or perhaps she preposterously adored both the true and false gods at the same time. C.—Many Protestants assert that her intention was good, in what she did. Monceus, Grot. &c.—So willing are they to excuse all from idolatry but Catholics! H.—Almost all interpreters condemn Michas and his mother of superstition, and of acting contrary to the express orders of God, in appointing a priest who was not of the family of Aaron, &c. C.—Their graven image was an idol. But this is no proof against the sacred images of Catholics. W.

VER. 3. God. Heb. pesel umasaca. The word thing, would perhaps be as well substituted, as (H.) all are not convinced that the woman was guilty of idolatry. Cajetan.—The same figure might be both graven and molten. The image was first carved, and then covered with plates of gold, &c. in the more ancient times. C.—There might be two figures made by Michas. Salien.—The Theraphim denote "images which foretel what is to happen." Rabbins. T.—But this is not always the case. H.

4 And he restored them to his mother: and she took two hundred pieces of silver and gave them to the silversmith, to make of them a graven and a molten god, which was in the house of Michas.

5 And he separated also therein a little temple for the god, and made an ephod, and theraphim, that is to say, a priestly garment, and idols: and he filled the hand of one of his sons, and he became his priest.

6 In those days there was no king in Israel, but every one did that which seemed right to himself.

7 There was also another young man of Bethlehem Juda, of the kindred thereof: and he was a Levite, and dwelt there.

8 Now he went out from the city of Bethlehem, and desired to sojourn wheresoever he should find it convenient for him. And when he was come to Mount Ephraim, as he was on his journey, and had turned aside a little into the house of Michas, 9 He was asked by him whence he came. And he answered: I am a Levite of Bethlehem Juda, and I am going to dwell where I can, and where I shall find a place to my advantage.

10 And Michas said: Stay with me, and be unto me a father and a priest, and I will give thee every year ten pieces of silver, and a double suit of apparel, and thy victuals.

11 He was content, and abode with the man, and was unto him as one of his sons.

12 And Michas filled his hand, and had the young man with him for his priest, saying:

13 Now I know God will do me good, since I have a priest of the race of the Levites.

VER. 5. That . . . idols is added by the Vulg. S. Jerom supposes that the ephod denotes all the sacerdotal vestments, and the theraphim whatever else was requisite for priestly functions, ep. ad Marcel. Grotius is of opinion that these theraphim, or cherubim, are styled elohim, gods, (v. 5) and that the altar, candlesticks, &c. are designated above by whatever was to be graven or molten. Michas had a mind to represent the tabernacle, with its ornaments, in miniature. By the theraphim he might imitate the urim, &c. at the expense of 200 sicles, while 900 might be set apart for the other ornaments. C.—Many think that he wished to have domestic gods, like the Lares or Penates.—Hand. That is, appointed and consecrated him to the priestly office. Ch.—He put in his hand the offerings which he had to make, as was customary. Ex. xxviii. 41. C. Priest, contrary to all order. M. Num. iii. 10. Heb. v. 4. C.—The anointing of his hands with oil, as prescribed, (Lev. viii.) could give him no authority. W.

VER. 6. Himself. Serarius thinks this took place before Heli was appointed to succeed Samson. But the opinion of Salien (M.) is more probable. For, though he places this history in the 22d year of Othniel, yet we must remember that he attributes to him all the years of anarchy, so that this liberty was taken by an individual, when none had power or zeal enough to restrain it. How much would Phinees be mortified at this prevarication if he were still alive! H.—The title of king may be applied to the judges. But this book was probably written after the appointment of Saul. C.

VER. 7. Another, is not in Heb. or the Sept. but it refers to the former young priest, the son of Michas, whose place he took.—Thereof. It is uncertain whether this be spoken of the city or of the man. Some think that this Levite's mother was of Juda, though his father was the son of Moses. C. xviii. 30. C.—He was poor, as the people neglected to pay tithes, and he imitated their irreligion, being of a fickle temper. He was yet single, (v. 10) though he married among the Danites. C. xviii. 30. M.—Being a Levite, he is esteemed fitter for the priesthood; so Protestants receive with joy an apostate Catholic priest. W.

VER. 10. A father. So he styles him out of respect, as we do our directors. H.—It is a title of dignity. Est. xvi. 11. 2 Mac. xiv. 37. 2 Par. ii. 13. C.—Pieces, sicles.—Double suit, one for summer and another for winter, (M.) or such as might be worn on common, or on sacred occasions, unless it rather mean a cloak and a tunic; (C.) a change of dress. C. xiv. 13.

VER. 13. Good. He was in hopes that the people would come and make their offerings with more zeal, so that he would derive greater advantage: the true character of superstitious misers. 1 Tim. vi. 5. C.—He foolishly flattered himself that God would be pleased with his devotion; though he had done so many things contrary to the law. M.—Thus many form a religion to themselves, and would still claim the title of Christians. But the judge will drive them away with, I never knew you. Mat. vii. 23. They think that if they believe some things which they are pleased to call fundamental, though they cannot agree what they are) they may form a "true Catholic church" out of all the contradictory heresies which have made such havoc in the world! Perhaps Michas thus deluded him

CHAP. XVIII.

The expedition of the men of Dan against Lais: in their way they rob Michas of his priest and his gods.

IN those days there was no king in Israel, and the tribe of Dan sought them an inheritance to dwell in: for unto that day they had not received their lot among the other tribes.

• 2 So the children of Dan sent five most valiant men, of their stock and family, from Saraa and Esthaol, to spy out the land, and to view it diligently: and they said to them: Go, and view the land. They went on their way, and when they came to Mount Ephraim, they went into the house of Michas, and rested there:

3 And knowing the voice of the young man the Levite, and lodging with him, they said to him: Who brought thee hither? what dost thou here? why wouldst thou come hither?

4 He answered them: Michas hath done such and such things for me, and hath hired me to be his priest.

5 Then they desired him to consult the Lord, that they might know whether their journey should be prosperous, and the thing should have effect.

6 He answered them: Go in peace: the Lord looketh on your way, and the journey that you go.

7 So the five men going on came to Lais: and they saw how the people dwelt therein without any fear, according to the custom of the Sidonians, secure and easy, having no man at all to oppose them, being very rich, and living separated, at a distance from Sidon and from all men.

8 And they returned to their brethren in Saraa and self with the idea that his innovations were not fundamental. It is rather ridiculous to hear J. Wesley, and a late very weak defendant of his, (Mr. Slack,) refusing the title of Christian to Roman Catholics, while they prostitute it to almost every sectary. But heretics have, indeed, no just pretensions to it. See S. Athanas. &c.

CHAP. XVIII. VER. 1. Days, after the death of Josue and the ancients. Debbora speaks of the tribe of Dan, as addicted to navigation. C. v. 17. C.—It had now conquered most of the enemies who had formerly forced some to seek fresh settlements, (H.) as it is hinted at, Jos. xix. The particulars are here given in detail. C.—Received, &c. They had their portions assigned them, Josue xix. 40. But through their own sloth, possessed as yet but a small part of it. See Judges i. 34. Ch. W.—Prot. supply, "all their inheritance had not fallen unto them among the tribes of Israel." H.

VER. 2. Family. Heb. "From their extremity." Which may denote such as came to hand, (C.) or princes, (De Dieu) or people of mean appearance, (Castellan) unless we explain it "from their coasts," with Montanus, Prot. &c. H.

VER. 4. Voice. His pronunciation was different from that of the Ephraimites. C. xii. 6.

VER. 5. Lord (Elohim). A title sometimes given to false gods. The Levite answered in the name of Jehova; whence it is inferred that they all adored the true God, though their worship was not clear of superstition. C.

VER. 6. Looketh with approbation. H.—It is uncertain whether this prediction proceeded from God, from the devil, or from the crafty Levite, (C.) who might answer as he thought the messengers wished him to do. M.—Their undertaking proved successful. But the devil, who knew the valour of the Danites, and the security of the citizens of Lais, or even a man of moderate prudence and sagacity, might have told what would be the probable event of an attack in such circumstances. C.—Whether God approved or condemned the Levite's worship he might speak by his mouth, as he did by that of Balaam. H.—But it is generally supposed that Jonathan was the organ of the devil, (C.) who answered with a degree of obscurity, as he was accustomed, (W.) that, in any case, his credit might subsist. H.

VER. 7. Lais, four miles from Paneas, towards Tyre. It is called Lesem Dan; (Jos. xix. 47.) both the ancient and the new name being joined together.—Rich. Heb. has almost as many different meanings as interpreters. De Dieu, "There was no one to put them to shame, no chief magistrate." C.—Prot. "and there was no magistrate in the land that might put them to shame in any thing." H.—The citizens of Lais were perhaps a colony, and followed the manners and religion of Sidon, but were at a day's journey from their territory; (Josephus) so that the latter could not come to their assistance at a very short warning. The Danites were therefore encouraged to make the attack, (C.) particularly as this city was confident in its own strength and riches, and made no alliance with any other. H.—Sept. Alex. &c. read, Aram instead of Adam. "They had no commerce with Syria." But the Roman edition (C.) has, "they are far off from the Esthaol, who asked them what they had done: to whom they answered:

9 Arise, and let us go up to them: for we have seen the land which is exceeding rich and fruitful: neglect not, lose no time: let us go and possess it, there will be no difficulty.

10 We shall come to a people that is secure, into a spacious country, and the Lord will deliver the place to us, in which there is no want of any thing that groweth on the earth.

11 There went therefore of the kindred of Dan, to wit, from Saraa and Esthaol, six hundred men, furnished with arms for war.

12 And going up they lodged in Cariathiarim of Juda: which place from that time is called the camp of Dan, and is behind Cariathiarim.

13 From thence they passed into Mount Ephraim. And when they were come to the house of Michas, 14 The five men, that before had been sent to view the land of Lais, said to the rest of their brethren: You know that in these houses there is an ephod and theraphim, and a graven and a molten god: see what you are pleased to do.

15 And when they had turned a little aside, they went into the house of the young man the Levite, who was in the house of Michas: and they saluted him with words of peace.

16 And the six hundred men stood before the door, appointed with their arms.

17 But they that were gone into the house of the young man, went about to take away the graven god, and the ephod, and the theraphim, and the molten god, and the priest stood before the door, the six hundred valiant men waiting not far off.

18 So they that were gone in took away the graven thing, the ephod, and the idols, and the molten god. And the priest said to them: What are you doing?

19 And they said to him: Hold thy peace, and put thy finger on thy mouth, and come with us, that we may have thee for a father, and a priest. Whether is better for thee, to be a priest in the house of one man, or in a tribe and family in Israel?

20 When he heard this, he agreed to their words, and took the ephod, and the idols, and the graven god, and departed with them.

21 And when they were going forward, and had put before them the children and the cattle, and all that was valuable,

22 And were now at a distance from the house of Michas, the men that dwelt in the houses of Michas gathering together followed them,

23 And began to shout out after them. They looked back, and said to Michas: What aileth thee? Why dost thou cry?

24 And he answered: You have taken away my gods which I have made me, and the priest, and all that I have, and do you say: What aileth thee?

25 And the children of Dan said to him: See thou say no more to us, lest men enraged come upon thee, and thou perish with all thy house.

26 And so they went on the journey they had begun. But Michas seeing that they were stronger than he, returned to his house.

27 And the six hundred men took the priest, and the things we spoke of before, and came to Lais, to a people that was quiet and secure, and smote them with the edge of the sword: and the city they burnt with fire,

28 There being no man at all who brought them any succour, because they dwelt far from Sidon, and had no society or business with any man. And the city was in the land of Rohob: and they rebuilt it, and dwelt therein, 29 Calling the name of the city Dan, after the name of their father, who was the son of Israel, which before was called Lais.

30 And they set up to themselves the graven idol, and Jonathan the son of Gersam, the son of Moses, he Sidonians, and have no (word or) commerce with man." The edition of Grabe repeats a great part of this verse again; v. 9, with an obelus.

VER. 9. There will, &c. is added to signify, that it will be necessary only to go to take possession. H.

VER. 10. Secure. "No one is sooner overcome than the man who has no fear; and security is generally the forerunner of ruin." Velleius 2. initium est calamitatis securitas.

VER. 11. War, besides their wives, &c. v. 21.

VER. 12. Behind, on the west. C.

VER. 14. To do. Whether we must take them by force or by craft. H.—It seems they had a premeditated design to seize them. C.

VER. 17. They. Heb. and Sept. "and the five men that went to spy out the land." H.—Off. The Levite's attention was drawn off for a while by the 600 men, till the five, who had formerly become acquainted with him, had ransacked his little temple. C.—Perceiving them as they came out, he began to complain, but was soon persuaded to follow the Danites, and to abandon his former protector. So little dependence can be had on those who are faithless to their God! H.

VER. 19. Mouth: to signify that silence must be observed. Job xxix. 9. Eccli. v. 12. Angerona, among the Romans, and Harpocrates, in Egypt, were represented in this posture; digitoque silentia suadet. Ovid, Met. ix.

VER. 22. Houses. Heb. "near the house of Michas." The poor fellow called his neighbours, and pursued the Danites, (H.) despising as it were all his other effects, in comparison with his god. M.

VER. 25. House. The violence and injustice of the Danites cannot be excused, particularly as they were stealing what they deemed sacred. C.

VER. 27. And, &c. Heb. "and they took what Michas had made, and the priest, . . and came." H.—Fire, as they could not make themselves masters of it otherwise. They were forced afterwards to rebuild it. Some Rabbins have supposed, that Sidon and its colonies were not given by God to Israel: but their proofs are unsatisfactory. Lais was inhabited by the Chanaanites; and though it was in the territory of Aser, as the people of Dan had made the conquest, they were suffered to keep quiet possession of it. See Jos. xv. 35.

VER. 28. Rohob, which stood at the foot of Libanus. The vale belonging to this city, extended for about twenty miles.

VER. 29. Lais. Heb. Ulam Layish, as the Sept. express it. C.—But the former term is explained by the Alex. and other copies in the sense of the Vulgate, before. H.—Dan is often placed for the northern boundary of Palestine. C.

VER. 30. Idol. Heb. pasel. W.—Grabe's Sept. "the graven thing of Michas, and Jonathan the son of Gersam, of the son of Manasses." The Roman copy omits "of Michas," but retains Manasses, as the present Heb. reads, instead of Moses. H.—It is suspected that the Jews have inserted an n over the word Mose, that it might not be known that a grandson of their lawgiver had been guilty of such impiety. They have not dared, however, to place the letter in the same rank as the others, but have suspended it, (C.) as if it were suspected, says Michaelis. Abendana relates, that by (or on) the authority of the ancients, this nun was added for the honour of Moses, lest his grandson might appear to be the first little sacrificing priest of an idol. The Latin Vulgate reads the name of Moses; and I am convinced that Moses, and not Manasses, ought to be understood: for how could a Levite have Manasses for his ancestor? Got. Comm. 1753. The Jews pretend that this relationship to the idolatrous king of Juda was not real, but figurative, in as much as Jonathan acted like him. But thus the reproach would fall on Gersam, who is said to be the son of Manasses, while the idolatrous priest is only placed as the son of Gersam. It is surely very absurd to say that he was the son of Manasses, because Manasses acted like him 800 years afterwards; and Sol. Jarchi honestly confesses that, "for the honour of Moses nun was written, on purpose to change the name, and it was written suspended, to indicate that it was not Manasses, but Moses." See Talmud Bava. fol. 109. The letter has, however, sometimes been suspended half way, and sometimes uniformly inserted, so that it has at last supplanted the genuine word. Some copies of the Sept. agree with the Vulg. Brug.—Theodoret reads, "Jonathan, the son of Manasses, of the son (non) of Gersam, of the son of Moses," retaining both words, in order to be sure of the right one, as the copies varied. Kennicott, Dis. 2. see Deut. xxvii. 4. Here we have a plain proof of the liberties which the Jews have taken with their text. But the providence of God has left and his sons were priests in the tribe of Dan, until the day of their captivity.

31 And the idol of Michas remained with them all the time, that the house of God was in Silo. In those days there was no king in Israel.

CHAP. XIX.

A Levite bringing home his wife, is lodged by an old man at Gabaa, in the tribe of Benjamin. His wife is there abused by wicked men, and in the morning found dead. Her husband cutteth her body in pieces, and sendeth to every tribe of Israel, requiring them to revenge the wicked fact.

THERE was a certain Levite, who dwelt on the side of Mount Ephraim, who took a wife of Bethlehem Juda:

2 And she left him, and returned to her father's house in Bethlehem, and abode with him four months.

3 And her husband followed her, willing to be reconciled with her, and to speak kindly to her, and to bring her back with him, having with him a servant and two asses: and she received him, and brought him into her father's house. And when his father-in-law had heard this, and had seen him, he met him with joy,

4 And embraced the man. And the son-in-law tarried in the house of his father-in-law three days, eating with him and drinking familiarly.

5 But on the fourth day, arising early in the morning, he desired to depart. But his father-in-law kept him, and said to him: Taste first a little bread, and strengthen thy stomach, and so thou shalt depart.

6 And they sat down together, and ate and drank. And the father of the young woman said to his son-in-law: I beseech thee to stay here to-day, and let us make merry together.

7 But he rising up, began to be for departing. And us means to detect their fraud, by the Vulg. &c. In other difficulties of a like nature, the collation of ancient MSS. and versions will generally remove the uncertainty, and we may pronounce that the word of God has not been adulterated, though perhaps no one copy may now represent it in all its genuine beauty and integrity. See Prolog. in SS. Mariana, C. xxiii. T. iii. Menoch. &c. Prot. here follow the corrupted Heb. "Manassah." H.—Captivity, under the Philistines, when many of their brethren were taken prisoners, (Ps. lxxvii. 61. T.) and when Samuel obliged all Israel to renounce idolatry. 1 K. vii. 4. E.—Serarius, (q. 7.) or the sacred penman, speaks of a captivity, the particulars of which are not recorded. Salien understands it of the captivity of Nephthali, 85 years before the rest of the kingdom of Israel was destroyed: (4 K. xv. 29. H.) though Lyran and Bonfriere explain it of the latter event, under Salmanasser. ib. C. xvii. M.—We may allow that several interruptions took place under Samuel, David, &c. Salien.—In effect, Jonathan and his posterity might serve the idol of Michas till it was destroyed, at the same time as the ark was removed from Silo; (v. 31.) and afterwards they might relapse into their wonted impiety, and act in the character of priests to the golden calves of Jeroboam; who, no doubt, would prefer such of the tribe of Levi as would come over to him, (Eze. xiv. 10.) though he was generally forced to select his priests from the dregs of the people. 8 K. xii. In this sense they might be priests in Dan, till Salmanasser led them captives. By substituting geloth for geloth, we might translate, "till the deliverance of the land," which was effected by Samuel; (C.) who not only repressed the Philistines, (1 K. vii. 13.) but also persuaded all Israel to renounce the service of idols. ib. v. 4. H.

VER. 31. In Silo. The ark was taken by the Philistines, (1 K. iv.) after remaining at Silo 349 years, and 217 from the idolatry of Michas and of Dan. Salien. H.—In those. The Heb. here commences the following chapter, which contains an account of another instance of licentiousness, which probably took place after the two former. Phinees was high priest; but there was no civil head. C.

CHAP. XIX. VER. 1. Ephraim. Some think at Silo, to which place, he says, he was going, (v. 18.) though it might be only out of devotion. C.—A wife. Heb. "a concubine." Sept. joins both together, "he took a harlot to wife." H.

VER. 2. Left him. Heb. thozne. Now izana, (D.) "his concubine, fell into fornication against (Junius improperly translates with) him." Chal. "She despised and went from him." Sept. "She was vexed at or she left him." C.—Josephus, "as he was deeply in love with her on account of her beauty, he was displeased that she did not correspond with his love. Hence a quarrel ensuing, the woman would not bear his continual expostulations, and leaving her husband, after four months, returns to her parents. Hither, overcome by his love for her, (326) nevertheless his father-in-law earnestly pressed him, and made him stay with him.

8 But when morning was come, the Levite prepared to go on his journey. And his father-in-law said to him again: I beseech thee to take a little meat, and strengthening thyself, till the day be farther advanced, afterwards thou mayest depart. And they ate together.

9 And the young man arose to set forward with his wife and servant. And his father-in-law spoke to him again: Consider that the day is declining, and draweth toward evening: tarry with me to-day also, and spend the day in mirth, and to-morrow thou shalt depart, that thou mayest go into thy house.

10 His son-in-law would not consent to his words: but forthwith went forward, and came over-against Jebus, which by another name is called Jerusalem, leading with him two asses laden, and his concubine.

11 And now they were come near Jebus, and the day was far spent: and the servant said to his master: Come, I beseech thee, let us turn into the city of the Jebusites, and lodge there.

12 His master answered him: I will not go into the town of another nation, who are not of the children of Israel, but I will pass over to Gabaa:

13 And when I shall come thither, we will lodge there, or at least in the city of Rama.

14 So they passed by Jebus, and went on their journey, and the sun went down upon them when they were by Gabaa, which is in the tribe of Benjamin:

15 And they turned into it to lodge there. And when they were come in, they sat in the street of the city, for no man would receive them to lodge.

16 And behold they saw an old man, returning out he follows, and, by the mediation of her parents, he is reconciled to his wife, both agreeing to lay aside all complaints." Ant. v. 2.—It is clear that the Sept. Vulg. &c. have read the text in a different manner from what we do at present, and their explanation seems more rational than the Hebrew. For, is it probable that a Levite should go to be reconciled to an adulteress, contrary to the intention of the law (Deut. xxiv. 2. Jer. iii. 1. Prov. xviii. 22.) and the custom of the Jews, as well as of pagan nations, who looked upon those with contempt, who kept a woman of this character? The word concubine, we have often remarked, signifies a wife without a dowry, &c. (C.) such as the Mahometans still maintain as lawful wives. Busbec. ii.—Months. Josephus explains this of the time she had remained with her husband.

VER. 8. With him. Heb. "her husband arose and followed her to speak to her heart, to bring her back." Gen. xxxiv. 3. He shewed great condescension and love, (II.) and she received him with suitable sentiments of regard, and did not become more haughty, as women, who perceive themselves to be courted, frequently do. If she had been married to another, she could not have been received by her former husband.

VER. 7. With him. A beautiful instance of hospitality, like that of the disciples at Emmaus. Luc. xxiv. 29. M.

VER. 8. Advanced. Heb. "and they tarried until the evening." Sept. "rest till the day decline." H.—He wishes them to wait till the heat of the day be over. C.—When he had obtained this request, he made the late hour an excuse for detaining them longer. But unhappily, the Levite was too resolute and desirous of returning home.

VER. 9. Depart. Heb. and Sept. add, "early," before the sun was up to render travelling inconvenient. H.

VER. 10. Jebus was about six short miles from Bethlehem, and as many from Gabaa. It had not yet fallen into the hands of Juda (C.) and Benjamin, (H.) or they had been expelled again, so that the old inhabitants held possession of it at this time, (C.) as they did of the citadel till the reign of David. See C. i. 6. 21. H.—Concubine. She was his lawful wife: but even lawful wives are frequently in Scripture called concubines. See above, chap. viii. ver. 31. Ch.—ver. 2.

VER. 13. Rama was not so far as Gabaa; so that, if they could not travel to the latter place, they might turn to the former, and lodge all night. They held on their journey, however, till they came not very late, to Gabaa.

VER. 15. Lodge. No one invited them in. How much had these people degenerated from the manners of Abraham and of Lot, to imitate those of the men of Sodom! H.—There was no inn it seems at Gabaa, though we read of sorae at Jericho, Gaza, &c. C. xvi. 1. Jos. ii. 1. Gen. xlii. 27. C.

VER. 16. Jemini. That is, Benjamin. Ch.—C. iii. 15.

of the field and from his work in the evening, and he also was of Mount Ephraim, and dwelt as a stranger in Gabaa; but the men of that country were the children of Jemini.

17 And the old man lifting up his eyes, saw the man sitting with his bundles in the street of the city, and said to him: Whence comest thou? and whither goest thou?

18 He answered him: We came out from Bethlehem Juda, and we are going to our home, which is on the side of Mount Ephraim, from whence we went to Bethlehem: and now we go to the house of God, and none will receive us under his roof:

19 We have straw and hay for provender of the asses, and bread and wine for the use of myself and of thy handmaid, and of the servant that is with me: we want nothing but lodging.

20 And the old man answered him: Peace be with thee: I will furnish all things that are necessary: only I beseech thee, stay not in the street.

21 And he brought him into his house, and gave provender to his asses: and after they had washed their feet, he entertained them with a feast.

22 While they were making merry, and refreshing their bodies with meat and drink, after the labour of the journey, the men of that city, sons of Belial (that is, without yoke), came and beset the old man's house, and began to knock at the door, calling to the master of the house, and saying: "Bring forth the man that came into thy house, that we may abuse him.

23 And the old man went out to them, and said: Do not so, my brethren, do not so wickedly: because this man is come into my lodging, and cease I pray you from this folly.

24 I have a maiden daughter, and this man hath a concubine, I will bring them out to you, and you may humble them, and satisfy your lust: only, I be-

* Gen. xix. 5.

VER. 17. Bundles. Heb. "saw a traveller in," &c.

VER. 18. Of God. Sept. "to my house I return in haste; and no one brings me into his house." The tabernacle was fixed at Silo in Ephraim. H.—Chal. "the house of the sanctuary of God." M. v. 1.

VER. 19. Straw. It used to be cut small, as hay was very scarce. S. Jer. in Isai. xxv. Heb. "straw and provender."

VER. 20. I will. Heb. "all thy wants be upon me." I will furnish all that may be requisite. In this wicked city, there was at least, one generous soul, like Lot in Sodom. Gen. xviii. and xix.

VER. 22. That is, &c. An interpretation of the Vulg. Belial is sometimes rendered "devilish, apostate," &c. Sept. "lawless, or transgressors." M.—Aquila, "rebels." Sym. "libertines," without education or restraint. C.—Josephus lays the blame on some young men, who had been captivated with the charms of the Levite's wife, whom they had seen in the street. But they seem to have had designs still more criminal, though they were prevailed upon to desist, when she was abandoned to them. H.—They demanded the Levite himself. C.

VER. 24. I have, &c. A similar proposal was made by Lot; (Gen. xix. 8.) and hence the old man, who was brought up to hard labour, and the young Levite might, through ignorance, suppose it lawful for them to do the like. M.—It is lawful to advise a man, who is about to commit two crimes, to be satisfied with the less: but we cannot persuade any one to do even the smallest offence, that good may ensue. Rom. iii. 8. The ignorance or good intention of these people might extenuate, but could hardly excuse their conduct, as it was unjust to the woman, whom the people of Gabaa did not ask for; and they ought rather to have encountered the utmost fury of the populace. Had the latter even come to the extremity proposed, if the Levite had made all possible resistance, his virtue could not have been injured. C.—His crown would have been doubled, as S. Lucy observed when the judge threatened to have her prostituted. Castitas mihi duplicabitur ad coronam. Dec. xiii. H.—Perhaps in the agitation of mind, caused by such a brutal proposal, the old man might have been so disturbed, as scarcely to know what he was saying, and he did not afterwards expose his daughter. C.—But the Levite, seeing him in such a dilemma, on his account (H.) took his wife by force. Heb. &c. See Tostat. Bouf. E. G.—Against nature. Heb. "unto this man do not so vile a thing."

seech you, commit not this crime against nature on the man.

25 They would not be satisfied with his words; which the man seeing, brought out his concubine to them, and abandoned her to their wickedness: And when they had abused her all the night, they let her go in the morning.

26 But the woman, at the dawning of the day, came to the door of the house, where her lord lodged, and there fell down.

27 And in the morning the man arose, and opened the door, that he might end the journey he had begun: and behold his concubine lay before the door with her hands spread on the threshold.

28 He thinking she was taking her rest, said to her: Arise, and let us be going. But as she made no answer, perceiving she was dead, he took her up, and laid her upon his ass, and returned to his house.

29 And when he was come home, he took a sword, and divided the dead body of his wife with her bones into twelve parts, and sent the pieces into all the borders of Israel.

30 And when every one had seen this, they all cried out: There was never such a thing done in Israel, from the day that our fathers came up out of Egypt, until this day: give sentence, and decree in common what ought to be done.

CHAP. XX.

The Israelites warring against Benjamin are twice defeated; but in the third battle the Benjamites are all slain, saving six hundred men.

THEN all the children of Israel went out, and gathered together as one man, ^bfrom Dan to Bersabee, with the land of Galaad, to the Lord in Maspha:

2 And all the chiefs of the people, and all the tribes of Israel, met together in the assembly of the people of God, four hundred thousand foot-men fit for war.

^b Osee ix. 9.

VER. 25. And abandoned. Heb. "and they knew her and abused her." H.—Interpreters say in the most unnatural manner. C.

VER. 26. Lord. So wives styled their husbands. 1 Pet. iii. 5.—Down dead through fatigue, (M,) shame, and grief. Joseph.—She had not power to knock. C.—Though the former misconduct of this unhappy woman might call for punishment, yet, after she was reconciled to her husband, we cannot but think he used her ill, though he acted through a sort of constraint and ignorance. H.—Instances of women dying under a similar treatment, may be found in Herodotus, and in the Russian and Turkish historians. C.

VER. 29. Israel. One part, like an epistle, written with blood, to every tribe. Salien.—Some, without reason, think that Benjamin was neglected; but they were to be summoned, to bring their guilty brethren (C.) to condign punishment, or to share in their fate, as accomplices of the crime. H.—The state of the republic authorized the Levite to take this extraordinary method of rousing all to a sense of horror for what had been done. C.—His brethren, dispersed through the country, would no doubt take part in his grief.

VER. 30. Egypt, that is for the space of eighty years. Salien.—Indeed the annals of all past ages could hardly furnish an instance of such barbarous lust.—Done. In every city, people gathered together to consult how the crime was to be expiated; (H.) and all agreed to assemble before the Lord. C.—Grabe's Sept. observes, that the Levite "gave order to the men, to whom he sent, saying, these things shall you speak to every Israelite. If such a word (or thing) has come to pass, from the day of the coming up of the sons of Israel out of Egypt, till the present day? Take ye advice concerning it, and speak." H.

CHAP. XX. VER. 1. Bersabee, from the northern to the southern extremity of the land, (C.) west of the Jordan, as Galaad denotes that on the east, belonging to Israel. Only the Benjamites and the town of Jabes declined attending. H.—Maspha, on the confines of the tribes of Juda and of Benjamin. Here the people frequently assembled; and it was a place of prayer, 1 Mac. iii. 46. It is thought that an altar of the Lord had been erected. C.—Maspha denotes, "a height or watch-tower," (H.) near Silo. Mas. in Jos. xviii. 26.

VER. 2. Chiefa. Lit. "angles or corner-stones," whose business it was to keep the people in order; or, all the different ranks of men may be designated. C.—Sept. "the climate," or country. H.—Syr. and Arab. "the families of all the people." 1 K. xiv. 38. C.

3 (Nor were the children of Benjamin ignorant that the children of Israel were come up to Maspha). And the Levite, the husband of the woman that was killed, being asked, how so great a wickedness had been committed,

4 Answered: I came into Gabaa, of Benjamin, with my wife, and there I lodged:

5 And behold the men of that city, in the night beset the house wherein I was, intending to kill me, and abused my wife with an incredible fury of lust, so that at last she died.

6 And I took her and cut her in pieces, and sent the parts into all the borders of your possession: because there never was so heinous a crime, and so great an abomination committed in Israel.

7 You are all here, O children of Israel, determine what you ought to do.

8 And all the people standing, answered as by the voice of one man: We will not return to our tents, neither shall any one of us go into his own house:

9 But this we will do in common against Gabaa:

10 We will take ten men of a hundred out of all the tribes of Israel, and a hundred out of a thousand, and a thousand out of ten thousand, to bring victuals for the army, that we may fight against Gabaa of Benjamin, and render to it for its wickedness, what it deserveth

11 And all Israel were gathered together against the city, as one man, with one mind, and one counsel:

12 And they sent messengers to all the tribe of Benjamin, to say to them: Why hath so great an abomination been found among you?

VER. 3. Levite. Heb. and Sept. do not say that the discourse was addressed to him; but he was the most interested, and capable of giving a true account. Heb. "Then said the children of Israel, Relate (Sept. ye) how this wickedness happened, (4) And the Levite," &c. answered.

VER. 5. Kill me. He expressed an abominable crime by another less horrible. Salien.—But he does not say that he brought out his wife. He might conclude, that if he had been exposed to their fury, he would have experienced a similar fate. H.—So determined was he to resist to the last extremity. The outrage would have been more hateful to him than death. C.—We may reasonably conclude that his wife had the same sentiments, and that she died a martyr to her conjugal fidelity, resisting even unto death, and thus making some atonement for her past misconduct.

VER. 6. Because, &c. Heb. and Sept. "for they have wrought (zinna, a word which the Sept. (Alex. and Vat.) leave untranslated, others render dishonesty) lewdness and folly," or a most impious act of lust. H.—They do not compare this crime with every other that had been committed, as idolatry, and other sins, which directly attack God, are greater. But this was the most atrocious injustice which could be done to a fellow creature. Salien.

VER. 9. In common. Heb. "by lot." C.—They chose one man out of ten to procure provisions, selecting 40,000 for that purpose, or the 10th part of the forces. H.

VER. 11. With, &c. This is added to explain. C.—Heb. "united as one man." H.

VER. 12. Send. The law of nations requires that satisfaction be demanded, (C.) before a war commence. M.—The former resolution (v. 9.) was only conditional, if the Benjamites should prefer defending their brethren of Gabaa, before punishing them, as they deserved. C.—Indeed their absenting themselves from this general assembly, implied as much, and the Israelites were determined, at any rate, to see that the guilty were duly punished. H.—Tribe. Heb. "tribes," denoting the great families of Benjamin. Gen. xvi. 21. Num. xxvi. 38.

VER. 15. Men. This number is verified, v. 35. The Benjamites had 25,700 in all, of whom they lost 25,100; so that 600 remained. Heb. reads here 25,000; and some pretend (C.) that 1000 fell in the two victories which they obtained. Grot. &c.—But this is without proof, and the Vulg. is confirmed by Josephus, and by most of the copies of the Sept. though the Vat. copy has only 23,000. C.—Gabaa. Heb. and Sept. add, "which were numbered 700 chosen men." Grabe repeats in the following verse with the Heb. "Among all this people, 700 chosen men," which seems to insinuate that these expert archers were selected out of all the army. H.—But the other copies of the Sept. agree with the Vulg. (ba. they were all of Gabaa, (C.) as if they were trained at this city with more particular care, to hit a mark how small soever.

VER. 16. Right. Sept. "ambidextrous." Moderns generally translate the Heb. "left-handed." But we have seen that such a meaning is improbable. C. fil. 15.—Side. The inhabitants of Palestine formerly applied themselves very 13 Deliver up the men of Gabaa, that have committed this heinous crime, that they may die, and the evil may be taken away out of Israel. But they would not hearken to the proposition of their brethren the children of Israel:

14 But out of all the cities which were of their lot, they gathered themselves together into Gabaa, to aid them, and to fight against the whole people of Israel.

15 And there were found of Benjamin five and twenty thousand men that drew the sword, besides the inhabitants of Gabaa, 16 Who were seven hundred most valiant men, fighting with the left hand as well as with the right: and slinging stones so sure that they could hit even a hair, and not miss by the stone's going on either side.

17 Of the men of Israel also, beside the children of Benjamin, were found four hundred thousand that drew swords and were prepared to fight.

18 And they arose and came to the house of God, that is, to Silo: and they consulted God, and said: Who shall be in our army the first to go to the battle against the children of Benjamin? And the Lord answered them: Let Juda be your leader.

19 And forthwith the children of Israel rising in the morning, camped by Gabaa:

20 And going out from thence to fight against Benjamin, began to assault the city.

21 And the children of Benjamin coming out of Gabaa, slew of the children of Israel that day two and twenty thousand men.

22 Again Israel, trusting in their strength and their number, set their army in array in the same place, where they had fought before:

much to this exercise, and by them it was propagated over other parts of the world. Plin. vii. 56. Strabo (iii.) observes that the people of the Balearic islands became so famous for slinging, only after the Phœnicians had taken possession of their country, which is the present Majorca and Minorca. They could hit the mark without failing, and penetrate every sort of armour. Florus iii. Their bullets of lead were sent with such violence, as sometimes to melt in the air, according to Ovid and Seneca, q. 2. 56. The slingers commonly stood 600 paces from the mark of white, which they seldom missed. Veget. ii. 23. The stones which they used weighed a pound among the Romans. The sling would frequently carry farther than a bow. Xenophon, Anab. v. Yet the exploits of bowmen are not less extraordinary than what is here recorded. Philostorgius (ii. 12.) assures us that the Indians, after they have been drinking, will shoot at a child, and only touch the ends of his hair. Domitian would shoot from a great distance, and make the arrow pass between the extended fingers of a child, and at other times would divert himself with piercing an animal with two arrows, so that they would stick out like horns. Sueton. Soranus could send an arrow into the air, and pierce it with another as it fell. The emperor Hadrian writes of him, "Emissumque arcu dum pendet in aere telum, Ac redivit ex alto, fixi fregique sagitta." C.

VER. 17. Thousand. Their numbers had decreased since they came out of Egypt, (Num. i. and xxvi.) when they were 600,000 fighting men. M.—But we must reflect, that some would be left to garrison the cities, &c. The Benjamites must surely have been infatuated to encounter so great a force in such a cause. H.

VER. 18. Silo. Heb. simply "to Bethel," which the Sept. Syr. Josephus, and others, explain of the city: but others generally understand "the house of God," at Silo, for which Bethel is placed. C. xxi. 2. 9. and 12. Phineas resided near the tabernacle, and was deputed to consult God.—Juda is not the name of a man, but of the tribe; (C.) and probably Othoniel would have the chief command. Salien.—The Israelites do not ask whether they ought to make war on their brethren, &c. but only desire to know which tribe shall begin the attack. C. i. 1. and x. 18. They manifest a degree of presumption, which God soon chastised, (C.) as well as the idolatry of Dan, &c. which they had neglected to punish, though they had an express command to do it. Deut. xiii. 12. Salien.—They were full of pride, and only concerned to revenge their own wrongs. I.

VER. 22. Trusting in their strength. The Lord suffered them to be overthrown, and many of them to be slain, though their cause was just; partly in punishment of the idolatry which they exercised or tolerated in the tribe of Dan, and elsewhere: and partly because they trusted in their own strength: and therefore though he bid them fight, he would not give them the victory, till they were thoroughly humbled, and had learned to trust in him alone. Ch.—God's thoughts are often very different from ours; and he frequently delays to crown with success the most holy enterprises, that man may learn to be more humble, and to trust wholly in his mercy. C.

23 Yet so that they first went up and wept before the Lord until night: and consulted him and said: Shall I go out any more to fight against the children of Benjamin my brethren or not? And he answered them: Go up against them, and join battle.

24 And when the children of Israel went out the next day to fight against the children of Benjamin, 25 The children of Benjamin sallied forth out of the gates of Gabaa: and meeting them, made so great a slaughter of them, as to kill eighteen thousand men that drew the sword.

26 Wherefore all the children of Israel came to the house of God, and sat and wept before the Lord: and they fasted that day till the evening, and offered to him holocausts, and victims of peace-offerings,

27 And inquired of him concerning their state. At that time the ark of the covenant of the Lord was there, 28 And Phinees, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, was over the house. So they consulted the Lord, and said: Shall we go out any more to fight against the children of Benjamin, our brethren, or shall we cease? And the Lord said to them: Go up, for to-morrow I will deliver them into your hands.

29 And the children of Israel set ambushes round about the city of Gabaa:

30 And they drew up their army against Benjamin the third time, as they had done the first and second.

31 And the children of Benjamin boldly issued out of the city, and seeing their enemies flee, pursued them a long way, so as to wound and kill some of them, as they had done the first and second day, whilst they fled by two highways, whereof one goeth up to Bethel, and the other to Gabaa, and they slew about thirty men:

32 For they thought to cut them off as they did before. But they artfully feigning a flight, designed to draw them away from the city, and by their seeming to flee, to bring them to the highways aforesaid.

33 Then all the children of Israel rising up out of the places where they were, set their army in battle array, in the place which is called Baalthamar. The ambushes also, which were about the city, began by little and little to come forth,

34 And to march from the west side of the city. And other ten thousand men chosen out of all Israel, attacked the inhabitants of the city. And the battle grew hot against the children of Benjamin: and they understood not that present death threatened them on every side.

35 And the Lord defeated them before the children of Israel, and they slew of them in that day five and twenty thousand, and one hundred, all fighting men, and that drew the sword.

36 But the children of Benjamin, when they saw themselves to be too weak, began to flee. Which the children of Israel seeing, gave them place to flee, that they might come to the ambushes that were prepared, which they had set near the city.

37 And they that were in ambush arose on a sudden out of their coverts, and whilst Benjamin turned their backs to the slayers, went into the city, and smote it with the edge of the sword.

38 Now the children of Israel had given a sign to them, whom they had laid in ambushes, that after they had taken the city, they should make a fire: that by the smoke rising on high, they might shew that the city was taken.

39 And when the children of Israel saw this in the battle, (for the children of Benjamin thought they fled, and pursued them vigorously, killing thirty men of their army)

40 And perceived, as it were, a pillar of smoke rise up from the city; and Benjamin looking back, saw that the city was taken, and that the flames ascended on high:

41 They that before had made as if they fled, turning their faces, stood bravely against them. Which the children of Benjamin seeing, turned their backs, 42 And began to go towards the way of the desert, the enemy pursuing them thither also. And they that fired the city came also out to meet them.

43 And so it was, that they were slain on both sides by the enemies, and there was no rest of their men dying. They fell and were beaten down on the east side of the city of Gabaa.

44 And they that were slain in the same place, were eighteen thousand men, all most valiant soldiers.

45 And when they that remained of Benjamin saw this, they fled into the wilderness, and made towards the rock that is called Remmon. In that flight also,

VER. 23. And join battle. This is an explanation of Heb. "against him." H.—The Israelites still neglected to sue for the divine protection, trusting in their numbers. God sends them again to battle, and suffers them to be routed. Did he deceive them? By no means. He wished them to learn the important lesson of self-diffidence, and he had not promised them the victory. H.—But after they had humbled themselves, He acts like a master. I will deliver, &c. v. 28. C.

VER. 25. Sword. In each battle the Benjamites kill almost as many as their whole army, in all 40,000 Israelites, without losing a man, v. 15. H.

VER. 26. Evening. Till then the Jews never eat on fasting days. The Turks still do the like: but they only change day into night, as they sleep till sunset, and then begin to feast and to make merry. C.

VER. 28. Was over. Heb. "stood before it at that time," (H.) in the camp, (C.) or perhaps at Silo, which was not so remote; but some, if not the whole army, might go thither to weep, and to consult the Lord. Phinees had formerly displayed his zeal against the impiety of Beelphegor. Num. xxv. 7. He was cotemporary with Jonathan, the priest of Michas. Kennicott.—Hence it appears that this took place not long after the death of Eleazar. Jos. xiv. W.

VER. 31. To Gabaa, from some other city. H.—This body of men consisted of 10,000, who were designed to draw off the Benjamites from the city into the midst of the forces of Israel, at Baalthamar; while another division, in ambush, on the west of Gabaa, had to enter the city, and having set it on fire, were to prevent the inhabitants from re-entering. C.—They used a similar stratagem to that which Josue (C. viii.) had employed against Hai. Salien.

VER. 33. Baalthamar, the plain of Jericho; (Chal.) or rather a village in the vicinity of Gabaa, which Eusebius calls Besthamar.

VER. 34. West side. H.—Wôr "a cavern," (C.) "a plain," (Chal.) "the thickets," Vat. &c. But the Sept. have read mârbe, "the west," with the Vulg. C.—The Vat. copy leaves Maraagabe. M.—Gabaa was situated on a hill, and the ambuscade might be concealed in a cavern, some of which in Palestine are very spacious. C.

VER. 35. The sword. It seems the slingers also used the sword, v. 16.

VER. 36. Flee; some towards the city, others to the wilderness, and to Remmon. v. 45. H.—That. Heb. "because they confided in those whom they had placed in ambush, near Gabaa." Hence they were not so eager to prevent their flight, by surrounding them.

VER. 37. Arose. Heb. "drew along (advanced or sounded the trumpet a long time,) perhaps for a signal, (C.) though the firing of the city seems to have been designed for this purpose, v. 40. H.

VER. 39. Saw. Heb. "retired in the battle, Benjamin began to smite and to kill . . . about thirty men; for they said, surely they are destroyed before us, (or flee) as in the first battle." It is wonderful that they should thus so easily fall into the very snare laid formerly for the men of Hai. Jos. viii. 5.

VER. 42. Them. Heb. "and those who came out of the cities, (of Benjamin) they (destroyed, (H.) or the other Israelites) destroyed them who fled in the midst of them."

VER. 43. Rest. Heb. "with ease, or at leisure they crushed them," &c. Others translate, (C.) Monvê, "from Nucha, Noua, (Sept. Rom. H.) Menucha," &c. We read of a place in the tribe of Juda, called Menucha, 1 Par. ii. 52. C.—The same word may be taken as a proper name, or may signify rest. M.

VER. 45. In that. Heb. "and they gleaned of them in the highways 5000 men, and pursued them close to Giddon," of which the Vulg. takes no notice. The Roman Sept. reads "Gedan;" the rest have "Galad."

as they were straggling, and going different ways, they slew of them five thousand men. And as they went farther, they still pursued them, and slew also other two thousand.

46 And so it came to pass, that all that were slain of Benjamin, in divers places, were five and twenty thousand fighting men, most valiant for war.

47 And there remained of all the number of Benjamin only six hundred men that were able to escape, and flee to the wilderness: and they abode in the rock Remmon four months.

48 But the children of Israel returning, put all the remains of the city to the sword, both men and beasts, and all the cities and villages of Benjamin were consumed with devouring flames.

CHAP. XXI.

The tribe of Benjamin is saved from being utterly extinct, by providing wives for the six hundred that remained.

NOW the children of Israel had also sworn in Maspha, saying: None of us shall give of his daughters to the children of Benjamin to wife.

2 And they all came to the house of God in Silo, and sitting before him till the evening, lifted up their voices, and began to lament and weep, saying:

3 O Lord God of Israel, why is so great an evil come to pass in thy people, that this day one tribe should be taken away from among us?

VER. 46. War. The Scripture, and other authors of the greatest exactitude, sometimes use round numbers. C.—An odd hundred (v. 35, and 15. H.) is here neglected. C.

VER. 47. Escape. Mercy was shewn to these, as the tribe had been already treated with sufficient severity. S. Jerom says, they were “reserved for the sake of the apostle Paul,” (epit. Paul. M.) who was descended from some of them. H.—Remmon, near Gabaa. Zac. xiv. 10. Eusebius places it fourteen miles north of Jerusalem. C.

VER. 48. And villages, is not expressed in Heb. &c. But as both cities, and all the inhabitants were destroyed, the villages would share the same fate, (H.) as being under a curse. The Israelites concluded, from the exemplary vengeance which had been taken of Sodom and Gomorra, that they were authorized to treat their brethren in guilt with the utmost severity. C.

CHAP. XXI. VER. 1. Sworn, (juraverunt.) The mention of Maspha, seems to determine that this oath was taken before the battle; though it would otherwise appear, that the Israelites engaged themselves to extirpate the tribe in the heat of their fury, and after they had destroyed the women of Benjamin. If they could lawfully slay their brethren indiscriminately, as connected in the same wicked cause, (H.) they might surely refuse their daughters to any of those (M) who might chance to make their escape. H.—But they ought first to have consulted the Lord, as this was a matter of as great consequence as to know who was first to go to battle. They seem to have discovered the rashness of their proceedings, and to have repented when it was too late; and they ridiculously attempt to elude the obligation of the oath, which lay heavy on their consciences. Salien.—They think it sufficient to adhere to the letter, while they neglect the spirit of their oath. H.—The ancients had a scrupulous regard for oaths, and did not allow themselves the liberty of interpreting them away. Gen. xxiv. 5. Jos. ix. 15. 1 K. xiv. 24. C.—But here the Israelites wish to keep and to evade the oath at the same time. H.—Serarius, &c. declare that their oath was lawful, as they did not consider the inconveniences which would attend its execution. As soon as they perceived them, the obligation ceased; though, if their erroneous conscience dictated the contrary to them, they were obliged to follow it, (T.) if they could not receive a more certain information. H.—Tostat and others maintain that the oath was null, as being illegal, and consequently of no force. Grotius (Jur. ii. 2, 21.) lays it down as the right of nature, for people to marry with their neighbours, (C.) though any individual may refuse such connexions; (H.) and S. Augustine (de G. ii. 17.) allows, that the Romans had “a right, perhaps, to seize the Sabine women, in a war declared on account of the unjust refusal.” We can excuse the Benjamites for taking the women of Silo, by force, on no other plea, (C.) unless the consent of the parents and of the virgins intervened. H. v. 22.—If, therefore, the Israelites could not lawfully deny their daughters in marriage to the Benjamites, their oath was unjust, and nowise obligatory. C.—They had no right to punish the innocent with the guilty, as they had received no order from God; (Salieu) and therefore they ought not to have slain the unoffending females of Benjamin, or of Jabes, v. 11. It is not necessary for us to defend the rash oaths or the conduct of the Israelites, in exterminating their fellow creatures, who were innocent; nor in the rape, &c.

VER. 2. Silo. Heb. simply, “to Bethel,” as C. xx. 18. Sept. Alex. “to Maspha and Bethel.” H.

VER. 3. Evil. Thus they style their own cruelty, in destroying the women and children, and in taking an oath to prevent the remaining Benjamites from having any posterity, unless they married with strangers, which the law forbade, (230)

4 And rising early the next day, they built an altar: and offered there holocausts, and victims of peace, and they said:

5 Who is there among all the tribes of Israel that came not up with the army of the Lord? for they had bound themselves with a great oath, when they were in Maspha, that whosoever were wanting should be slain.

6 And the children of Israel being moved with repentance for their brother Benjamin, began to say: One tribe is taken away from Israel,

7 Whence shall they take wives? For we have all in general sworn, not to give our daughters to them.

8 Therefore they said: Who is there of all the tribes of Israel, that came not up to the Lord to Maspha? And, behold, the inhabitants of Jabes Galaad were found not to have been in that army.

9 (At that time also when they were in Silo, no one of them was found there,)

10 So they sent ten thousand of the most valiant men, and commanded them, saying: Go and put the inhabitants of Jabes Galaad to the sword, with their wives and their children.

11 And this is what you shall observe: “Every male, and all women that have known men, you shall kill, but the virgins you shall save.

12 And there were found of Jabes Galaad four hun-

(C.) though it would hardly bind in cases of such necessity. H.—Hence the sons of Noemi are excused for entering into such marriages. Ruth i. 4. T.—Heb. and Sept. do not mention, so great an evil, but only this. The context however shews, that the people considered the extermination of a whole tribe, as a dreadful misfortune; and, as it was going to take place in consequence of their oath, unless some expedient could be discovered to prevent it, without the guilt of perjury, they were moved with repentance, and endeavoured to appease God’s wrath by a multiplicity of victims. How much better would it have been not to have made a vow, than after making it, to strive to render it ineffectual! Eccl. v. 3. 4. It does not appear that God gave them any answer in all this affair; and the concluding verse seems to indicate, that their conduct was displeasing to him. Perhaps he punished this, as well as the other faults of his people, by delivering them over to Chusan for eight years, as Salien and Usher place the first year of servitude immediately after the close of this unfortunate war, which would enable the Chanaanites to gain fresh strength, and to rejoice at the civil broils of Israel. C. iii. 8. And, who slew Eglon, about 94 years afterwards, was not yet born. H.

VER. 4. Altar, within the tabernacle, to suffice for the number of victims, as Solomon did; (3 K. viii. 64. T.) or out of the court, by God’s dispensation, as they were defiled with blood; (Num. xxxi. 24. C.) though this is not certain, as four months elapsed between the battle and the reconciliation of the remaining Israelites with their brethren: (C. xx. 47.) so that during that interval, they might have committed the massacres in the different cities, and still have had time to be purified seven days, as the law required, before they could be allowed to enter the camp or the tabernacle. H.—Some think that one altar was prescribed only during the sojournment in the desert. See Serar. M.

VER. 5. Slain. Why then did they deem it lawful to reserve the virgins? or if they meant only those who were fit for war, why were the married women, &c. involved in the common ruin? The people of Jabes deserved chastisement, for seeming to connive at the wickedness of Galaa, and by separating themselves from the religious sacrifices of the rest. But it does not appear that they were legally summoned, nor had the majority of the people a right to execute such summary justice upon a few, who perhaps might not have been acquainted with their vows and new made laws. H.

VER. 6. Say. Governors should use great discretion, and correct with justice and mercy. S. Greg. i. ep. 24. W.

VER. 7. In general. Heb. “by the Lord,” with an imprecation, v. 18. M.

VER. 8. Jabes was between Pella and Gerasa, upon a mountain, east of the Jordan. It was after its destruction rebuilt, (C.) and became very famous, (1 K. xi. M.) if it was indeed ever demolished. We know not what prevented the inhabitants from joining in the common cause. H.

VER. 10. Ten. Heb. Chal. Sept. and Josephus read, twelve. The refusal to serve in the national army was punished like a sort of rebellion, with death, no less than to desert. Debora curses the inhabitants of Meros, on this account. C. v. 23.

VER. 11. But, &c. This is not expressed in the Heb. or the Sept. though it be sufficiently implied, (C.) as the males and married women only are ordered to be slain. H.—It is doubted whether the virgins, who were not fit for marriage, were reserved or butchered. But probably all the younger children were saved (C.) of that sex, though the order was to kill the wives and children; and the reason for sparing any was, that the Benjamites might be supplied with wives immediately. H.—Heb. and Sept. intimate, that the citizens were to be treated as those who were under an anathema: “ye shall utterly destroy;” anathematize Yet the houses and cattle were spared. M.

dred virgins, that had not known the bed of a man, and they brought them to the camp in Silo, into the land of Chanaan.

13 And they sent messengers to the children of Benjamin, that were in the rock Remmon, and commanded them to receive them in peace.

14 And the children of Benjamin came at that time, and wives were given them of Jabes Galaad: but they found no others, whom they might give in like manner.

15 And all Israel was very sorry, and repented for the destroying of one tribe out of Israel.

16 And the ancients said: What shall we do with the rest, that have not received wives? for all the women in Benjamin are dead.

17 And we must use all care, and provide with great diligence, that one tribe be not destroyed out of Israel.

18 For as to our own daughters we cannot give them, being bound with an oath and a curse, whereby we said: Cursed be he that shall give Benjamin any of his daughters to wife.

19 So they took counsel, and said: Behold, there is a yearly solemnity of the Lord in Silo, which is situate on the north of the city of Bethel, and on the east side of the way, that goeth from Bethel to Sichem, and on the south of the town of Lebona.

20 And they commanded the children of Benjamin, and said: Go, and lie hid in the vineyards, 21 And when you shall see the daughters of Silo come out, as the custom is, to dance, come ye on a sudden out of the vineyards, and catch you every man his wife among them, and go into the land of Benjamin.

22 And when their fathers and their brethren shall come, and shall begin to complain against you, and to chide, we will say to them: Have pity on them: for they took them not away as by the right of war or conquest, but when they asked to have them, you gave them not, and the fault was committed on your part.

23 And the children of Benjamin did as they had been commanded: and, according to their number, they carried off for themselves every man his wife of them that were dancing: and they went into their possession, and built up their cities, and dwelt in them.

24 The children of Israel also returned by their tribes, and families, to their dwellings. In those days there was no king in Israel: but every one did that which seemed right to himself.

VER. 13. Them, the messengers to, &c. Heb. "and to make unto them a proclamation of peace." H.

VER. 15. Sorry, and. Heb. "for Benjamin, because the Lord had made a breach in Israel." C.

VER. 17. And we, &c. Heb. "and they said: an inheritance for those Benjamites who have escaped, that a tribe," &c. They wish to repair the breach as fast as possible, so that each of the 600 may have a wife.

VER. 19. Counsel, among themselves. H.—Solemnity. It is not known which is meant, as all the three great festivals occurred during the time that the vines were covered with leaves; (v. 20) or this feast might be one peculiar to the city of Silo, in memory of the ark being transported thither. Vatable thinks that the description here given, regards the place where the dance was to be, as all must have known the situation of the city. Silo rather lies to the west than to the east, (C.) if we draw a line from Bethel to Sichem, but the road might be circuitous. H.—S. Jerom places Silo ten miles west of Sichem.—Lebona may be Chan Lebna, four miles to the south of it. C.

VER. 21. To dance; not in a lascivious manner, as a certain heretical interpreter would have it, but out of a religious motive. M.—Such dances were formerly very common among all nations. The Therapeuts, who are supposed to have been the first Jewish converts to the Christian faith, in Egypt, and were remarkable for their modesty and serious deportment, danced nevertheless in their religious assemblies, first in two separate bands, and afterwards men and women together. Philo. contemplat. The women still dance round the tombs of their relatives, in Palestine, with solemn lamentations. Roger, and Le Brun's Voyages.—Come. Josephus insinuates, that the women were to be seized as they came from different parts to the solemnity. But it hence appears that they were coming out of the city; (C.) though it is very probable that the virgins did not all belong to it, but came from all Israel: for why should the people of Silo be forced to supply wives for these surviving Benjamites, against whose character they might reasonably entertain such strong objections! But, if all the assembly agreed that the Benjamites should select from among their daughters whomsoever they could lay their hands on, they could not complain that they were treated with peculiar severity. H.—But did not the Israelites offend by giving this counsel, so contrary to the import of their vow! And were not the Benjamites equally guilty in following such advice! It is answered that, in odious matters words must be taken in all their rigour, and the person who vows not to give, does not engage himself to reclaim if the thing be taken. Those who gave the advice are not perhaps deserving of excuse, on account of the artifice which they employ to get rid of their oath; but the rest, who were not apprised of it till after the execution, were surely without blame; and the Benjamites, who followed the counsel of respectable men, in such circumstances, cannot be considered as guilty of a rape, &c. Grot. Jur. ii. 13. A. Lapide. C.—S. Ambrose (ep. 6,) seems to be of this opinion. Tostat and others cannot, however, approve of these arguments. "As they erroneously supposed that they were bound by their oath, they prudently turned aside to advise the rape." T.—So Liran. &c.—But this was only a human prudence. H.—The ancients gave counsel to the Benjamites, to ask the people of Silo to give them their daughters in marriage, knowing they would not grant the request, that they might afterwards have recourse to the expedient of taking them by force. "No doubt they were not without blame. For as they believed that their oath was binding, they ought neither to have done nor to have advised any thing, by which it might be violated." Salien, A. 2622.—The rape at Silo preceded that of the Sabines, at Rome, about 700 years, and both probably happened in September. T.

VER. 22. Part. Heb. is variously translated; but the Sept. and Arab. agree with the Vulg. By your refusal, and by your oath, you have constrained them to take what you would not, (C.) or could not grant. Prot. "Be favourable to them for our sakes, because we reserved not to each man his wife, in the war; for ye did not give unto them, at that time, that ye should be guilty." H.—You have not to answer for the infraction of the oath, since you did not give your daughters. C.—They had no objections to the Benjamites on any other head, and the young women were not very reluctant. T.—It is wonderful that the high priest, Phinees, appears so little on this occasion. If he had spoken in the name of God, the rest would have been under no perplexity.

VER. 24. Himself. This remark has been made twice before, respecting the conduct of Michas and of Dan, both which deserved reprehension. It seems to be added here for the same purpose, that we might not be so much startled at the relation of such strange proceedings. Soon after this event, the angel came to upbraid the Israelites. C. ii. 1. H.—There was no judge perhaps, but anarchy then prevailed. D.—At least the people were under more restraint when they had kings, (W.) or judges divinely appointed at their head. H.

THE BOOK OF RUTH.

THIS Book is called RUTH, from the name of the person whose history is here recorded; who, being a Gentile, became a convert to the true faith, and marrying Booz, the great-grandfather of David, was one of those from whom Christ sprang according to the flesh, and an illustrious figure of the Gentile church. It is thought this book was written by the prophet Samuel. Ch.—The Holy Ghost chose that the genealogy of David, and of the Messias, should be thus more clearly ascertained. Theodoret.—Christ proceeded from the Gentiles, as well as from the Jews, and his grace is given to both. W.—Send forth, O Lord, the lamb, the ruler of the earth, from Petra. Isai. xvi. This was the capital city of Arabia Petrea, where Ruth is supposed to have lived, (Tostat) being, according to the Chal. &c. the daughter of Egion, king of Moab. The Jews also pretend that Booz was the same person as Abesan, the judge. But it is by no means certain to what period this history belongs. Usher places it under Samgar, about 120 years after Josue. C.—Salien believes that the famine, which obliged Elimelech to leave Bethlehem, happened under Abimelech, and that Noemi returned in the 7th year of Thola, A. C. 1243. This event certainly took place under some of the judges; so that we may consider this book as an appendix to the preceding, like the last chapters, (Judg. xvii. &c. H.) and a preface to the history of the kings. C.

CHAP. I.

Elimelech of Bethlehem going with his wife Noemi, and two sons, into the land of Moab, dieth there. His sons marry wives of that country, and die without issue. Noemi returneth home with her daughter-in-law, Ruth, who refuseth to part with her.

IN the days of one of the judges, when the judges ruled, there came a famine in the land. And a certain man of Bethlehem Juda, went to sojourn in the land of Moab with his wife and his two sons.

2 He was named Elimelech, and his wife Noemi: and his two sons, the one Mahalon, and the other Chelion, Ephrathites of Bethlehem Juda. And entering into the country of Moab, they abode there.

3 And Elimelech the husband of Noemi died: and she remained with her sons.

4 And they took wives of the women of Moab, of which one was called Orpha, and the other Ruth. And they dwelt there ten years,

5 And they both died, to wit, Mahalon and Chelion: and the woman was left alone, having lost both her sons and her husband.

6 And she arose to go from the land of Moab to her own country, with both her daughters-in-law: for she had heard that the Lord had looked upon his people, and had given them food.

7 Wherefore she went forth out of the place of her sojournment, with both her daughters-in-law: and being now in the way to return into the land of Juda,

8 She said to them: Go ye home to your mothers, the Lord deal mercifully with you, as you have dealt with the dead and with me.

* A. M. circiter 2706, A. C. 1298.

CHAP. I. VER. 1. Of one. Heb. "And it came to pass in the days when the judges ruled." H.—The and shews the connection with the former book. C.—Land. Chal. adds, "of Israel," (M.) while the less fertile country of Moab had abundance. God thus punished the idolatry of his people. Some say the famine lasted ten years; but this is uncertain, though Noemi continued so long out of the country, v. 4. Salien.

VER. 2. Elimelech. Josephus and others read erroneously, Abimelech. He was probably called also Jokim. 1 Par. iv. 22.—Ephrathites. This title often designates people of the tribe of Ephraim; (Judg. xii. 5. 1 K. i. 2.) but here it means those of Ephrata, which is also called Bethlehem of Juda, about five or six miles south of Jerusalem. Gen. xxv. 19. Mic. v. 2. C.

VER. 4. Ruth was the wife of Mahalon; (C. iv. 10,) and signifies one "well watered, (M.) or inebriated," &c. H.—The sons of Noemi were excused by necessity in marrying idolaters, though they ought to have done their best to convert them. The Chaldee greatly condemns their marriage, and thinks that their death was in punishment of their prevarication. Deut. vii. 3. and xx. 11. C.—Salien is of the same opinion. So various have always been the sentiments of people on this head! H. See Serarius, q. 11.

VER. 8. Mothers, who had separate apartments from the men. C.—Me. They had behaved with great respect and love towards their husbands, and towards Noemi, whom they even wish to accompany. M.—The pronouns in this, and verses 9, 11, 13, and 19, are surprisingly corrupted in Heb. being masculine or feminine, where we should expect the contrary. Kennicott.

VER. 9. Take. She proposes marriage to them, as a state more suitable to their years, (H.) and wishes that they may experience none of its solitudes, (1 Cor. 1332)

9 May he grant you to find rest in the houses of the husbands which you shall take. And she kissed them. And they lifted up their voice, and began to weep,

10 And to say: We will go on with thee to thy people.

11 But she answered them: Return, my daughters, why come ye with me? have I any more sons in my womb, that you may hope for husbands of me?

12 Return again, my daughters, and go your ways: for I am now spent with age, and not fit for wedlock. Although I might conceive this night, and bear children, 13 If you would wait till they were grown up, and come to man's estate, you would be old women before you marry. Do not so, my daughters, I beseech you: for I am grieved the more for your distress, and the hand of the Lord is gone out against me.

14 And they lifted up their voice, and began to weep again: Orpha kissed her mother-in-law, and returned: Ruth stuck close to her mother-in-law.

15 And Noemi said to her: Behold thy kinswoman is returned to her people, and to her gods, go thou with her.

16 She answered: Be not against me, to desire that I should leave thee and depart: for whithersoever thou shalt go, I will go: and where thou shalt dwell, I also will dwell. Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.

17 The land that shall receive thee dying, in the same will I die: and there will I be buried. The Lord do so and so to me, and add more also, if ought but death part me and thee.

18 Then Noemi seeing that Ruth was steadfastly de-vii. 28,) but be constantly protected by their husbands. Widows are exposed to many difficulties. M.

VER. 11. Of me. Hence it appears that the Rabbins are under a mistake, when they say that those children who are born after the death of their brothers, are not obliged to take their widows.

VER. 13. Marry. Heb. "would you stay for them from having husbands?"

VER. 14. And returned, is not expressed in Heb. But the Sept. have, "and she returned to her people." H.

VER. 15. To her gods, &c. Noemi did not mean to persuade Ruth to return to the false gods she had formerly worshipped; but by this manner of speech, insinuated to her, that if she would go with her, she must renounce her false gods, and turn to the Lord, the God of Israel. Ch.—She wished to try her constancy. Salien.—Most infer from this passage, that Orpha was never converted, or that she relapsed.—Her gods, may indeed be rendered in the singular, "god." But what god was peculiar to her and the Moabites, but Chamos? C.—Noemi might well fear that Orpha would give way to the superstition of her countrymen, to which she had been addicted, even though she might have made profession of serving the true God, while she lived with her. H. *

VER. 17. The Lord do so and so, &c. A form of swearing usual in the history of the Old Testament, by which the person wished such and such evils to fall upon them, if they did not do what they said. Ch.—It is not certain that they expressed what particular evils. C.—They might be willing to undergo any punishment, if they should transgress. H.—The pagans used a similar form of imprecation. 3 K. xix. 4 K. xx. 10. C.

terminated to go with her, would not be against it, nor persuade her any more to return to her friends:

19 So they went together, and came to Bethlehem. And when they were come into the city, the report was quickly spread among all: and the women said: This is that Noemi.

20 But she said to them: Call me not Noemi (that is, beautiful), but call me Mara (that is, bitter), for the Almighty hath quite filled me with bitterness.

21 I went out full and the Lord hath brought me back empty. Why then do you call me Noemi, whom the Lord hath humbled, and the Almighty hath afflicted?

22 So Noemi came with Ruth, the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, from the land of her sojournment: and returned into Bethlehem, in the beginning of the barley harvest.

CHAP. II.

Ruth gleaneth in the field of Booz: who sheweth her favour.

NOW her husband Elimelech had a kinsman, a powerful man, and very rich, whose name was Booz.

2 And Ruth, the Moabitess, said to her mother-in-law: If thou wilt, I will go into the field, and glean the ears of corn that escape the hands of the reapers, wheresoever I shall find grace with a householder, that will be favourable to me. And she answered her: Go, my daughter.

3 She went, therefore, and gleaned the ears of corn after the reapers. And it happened that the owner of that field was Booz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech.

4 And behold, he came out of Bethlehem, and said to the reapers: The Lord be with you. And they answered him: The Lord bless thee.

5 And Booz said to the young man that was set over the reapers: Whose maid is this?

6 And he answered him: This is the Moabitess, who came with Noemi, from the land of Moab,

7 And she desired leave to glean the ears of corn that remain, following the steps of the reapers: and

VER. 19. That Noemi. This exclamation might proceed either from surprise, or from contempt. M.

VER. 20. That is. The explanations are added by S. Jerom. H.—Noemi had formerly a husband and two sons, with great riches, of which she was now deprived. W.

VER. 21. Almighty. Heb. Sadai, ("the self-sufficient") hath afflicted."

VER. 22. Harvest. About the month of Nisan, or our March (C.) and April. M. CHAP. II. VER. 1. Booz. The Scripture does not specify how nearly they were related. R. Josue says Elimelech, Salmon, and Tob (C. iii. 13.) were brothers, and Booz was the son of Salmon, which cannot be refuted, (Serar. q. 1. M.) though the authority and proofs be very weak. It is not, however, more probable that Booz was the brother of Elimelech. Some think that he was not the immediate son of Salmon, as four persons seem too few to fill up the space of 386 years, from the marriage of Rahab till the birth of David. But this is not impossible. C. See C. iv. 20.

VER. 2. To me. It was the privilege of the poor and of strangers to glean. Deut. xxiv. 19. Lev. xix. 9. Yet Ruth asks leave, through civility. C.—This law is no longer in force, but it would be inhuman for the rich to deny this liberty to those who are in distress, and willing rather to work than to beg. T.

VER. 4. With you. This blessing the Church still adopts in her service. W.—It was customary to bless one another during harvest. Pa. cxxviii. 5. 8. C.—Booz did, as Cato advises, Ne opera parcas visere; "See what is going forward." The master's eye makes the servants diligent. H.

VER. 5. Man. Heb. náhar, a man in the prime of life. He had the care of all in the field, during the absence of his master; whence Josephus styles him agrocemos, or agronomos. M.—Homer mentions an officer or king, standing with his sceptre in the midst of the reapers, and silently rejoicing at the rich profusion of the field. Iliad.—Thus we see the taste of the ancients, while agriculture was honourable.

VER. 7. Moment. Heb. "her tarrying in the house is but small, or till now, that she remains a little in the house." She entered the house with the reapers, during the excessive heat of the day, and to avoid the suspicion of taking more than was allowed, during their absence. C.—Sept. "she hath not discontinued she hath been in the field from morning till now, and hath not gone home for one moment.

8 And Booz said to Ruth: Hear me, daughter, do not go to glean in any other field, and do not depart from this place: but keep with my maids,

9 And follow where they reap. For I have charged my young men, not to molest thee: and if thou art thirsty, go to the vessels, and drink of the waters whereof the servants drink.

10 She fell on her face, and worshipping upon the ground, said to him: Whence cometh this to me, that I should find grace before thy eyes, and that thou shouldst vouchsafe to take notice of me, a woman of another country?

11 And he answered her: All hath been told me, that thou hast done to thy mother-in-law after the death of thy husband: and how thou hast left thy parents, and the land wherein thou wast born, and art come to a people which thou knewest not heretofore.

12 The Lord render unto thee for thy work, and mayst thou receive a full reward of the Lord the God of Israel, to whom thou art come, and under whose wings thou art fled.

13 And she said: I have found grace in thy eyes, my lord, who hast comforted me, and hast spoken to the heart of thy handmaid, who am not like to one of thy maids.

14 And Booz said to her: At meal-time come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morsel in the vinegar. So she sat at the side of the reapers, and she heaped to herself frumenty, and ate and was filled, and took the leavings.

15 And she arose from thence, to glean the ears of corn as before. And Booz commanded his servants, saying: If she would even reap with you, hinder her not:

16 And let fall some of your handfuls of purpose, and leave them, that she may gather them without shame, and let no man rebuke her when she gathereth them.

to work in the field even a little." Her diligence and modesty attracted the notice of Booz. H.

VER. 9. Thee. The men tied the corn after the female reapers, (C.) and Ruth was authorized to follow, close at their heels, without fear. H.—The waters. This is not expressed in Heb. but it is in the Sept. and the Chal. C.—The privilege of having water in those countries was very considerable. M.

VER. 10. Country. S. Elizabeth was impressed with similar sentiments, when she was visited by the blessed Virgin; (II.) and so was David, when he considered the wonderful condescension of God. Pa. viii. 5. and cxliii. 3. Job vii. 17. C.—Frequent instances occur in Scripture of people worshipping, or shewing their gratitude to their fellow creatures, by this posture of the body. M.—Yet no suspicion of idolatry attaches to them. Gen. xxiii. 7. &c. II.

VER. 11. Heretofore, to embrace the same religion. M.

VER. 12. Work. Booz doubted not but a full and eternal reward was due to good works. W.—Fled. This similitude frequently occurs, (Pa. xxxv. 8. Mat. xxiii. 37.) to denote protection. C.—Chal. "Thou art come to be a proselyte, and to hide thyself under the shade of the majesty of his glory." M.

VER. 13. Heart. This has the same meaning as the former part of the sentence. C. See Ose. ii. 14.—Maids, but more lowly and mean. M.

VER. 14. Vinegar, or small wine, made on purpose for working people. Some think that such was presented to our Saviour. Yet vinegar was very frequently mixed with other things, and was esteemed particularly refreshing. Plin. xxiii. 1. C.—Side. Not in front, that they might not stare at her. M.—And she, &c. Heb. "and he gave her frumenty, or parched corn." A little oil might be poured upon it. See Lev. ii. 14. 2 K. xxvi. 28. H.—Travellers in Ethiopia only take parched barley with them. C.—The leavings, to Noemi. "Learn," says Seneca, (ep. 110,) to be content with a little." Sept. "and Booz heaped up food before her, and she ate and was filled, and left a part." H.—But it appears that she afterwards took it home, v. 18. M.—The vinegar and corn which were given to Ruth were very refreshing. The Spaniards still drink posca, or water and vinegar. T.

VER. 15. Reap. Heb. "if she will glean, even among the sheaves, do not cover her with confusion," (H.) or hinder her. Pa. xliii. 10. C.

17 She gleaned therefore in the field till evening: and beating out with a rod, and threshing what she had gleaned, she found about the measure of an ephi of barley, that is, three bushels:

18 Which she took up, and returned into the city, and shewed it to her mother-in-law: moreover, she brought out, and gave her of the remains of her meat, wherewith she had been filled.

19 And her mother-in-law said to her: Where hast thou gleaned to-day, and where hast thou wrought? blessed be he that hath had pity on thee. And she told her with whom she had wrought: and she told the man's name, that he was called Booz.

20 And Noemi answered her: Blessed be he of the Lord: because the same kindness which he shewed to the living, he hath kept also to the dead. And again she said: The man is our kinsman.

21 And Ruth said: He also charged me, that I should keep close to his reapers, till all the corn should be reaped.

22 And her mother-in-law said to her: It is better for thee, my daughter, to go out to reap with his maids, lest in another man's field some one may resist thee.

23 So she kept close to the maids of Booz: and continued to glean with them, till all the barley and the wheat were laid up in the barns.

VER. 17. Rod, as Gedeon had done. Judg. vi. 11.—That is, &c. an explanation of the Vulg. C.—The ephi contained three pecks and three pints. Arbutnot.—Alcazar and A. Lapide say 960 ounces. M.

VER. 20. Dead. He hath not forgotten Elimelech, his friend, for whose sake he treats his daughter-in-law with kindness. H.—Kinsman. Heb. adds, "one of our redeemers, (C.) or next kinsmen." H.—To such the right of avenging the slain, of marrying the widow of the deceased, and entering upon his property, belonged. The best interpreters suppose that Booz was the nephew of Elimelech. C. Lev. xxv. 25. Deut. xxv. 5. M.

VER. 23. And the wheat. Heb. Syr. and Arab. "It is good that thou keep close to the maidens of Booz, and continue to glean with them till," &c. This was the advice of Noemi: but Providence ordered that Ruth should be married to Booz before the commencement of the wheat harvest. C.—The Prot. agree with the Vulg. and Sept. "So she kept fast by, &c. unto the end of the barley harvest, and of the wheat harvest, and dwelt with her mother-in-law." These last words are expressed by the Vulg. in the following chapter. H.

CHAP. III. VER. 1. I will. Heb. and Sept. may be read with an interrogation in the same sense. "Shall I not seek rest?" H.—By this expression she means a husband. C. i. 9. Marriage fixes the unsettled condition of women. C.—Noemi being apprised of the law, entertained hopes that she could engage Booz to marry Ruth. H.—Thus her penury would cease, and she would perhaps have children, as she earnestly desired. M.

VER. 2. Night. In Palestine, and other maritime countries, a breeze generally arises from the sea in the evening. It was then that Booz seized the opportunity of winnowing his barley; so that, at an early hour, he gave Ruth six measures, and retired to rest, beside some of the remaining sheaves (C.) in an adjoining apartment, erected for the protection of the reapers during the great heats, and to contain the corn in case of a shower. Columella, i. 7. and ii. 51. This shade was probably in the same field where Ruth had been gleaned. C.—She might lawfully seize this opportunity (H.) to obtain an honest marriage. D.

VER. 3. Garments. External cleanliness has many attractions. Judith x. 3. Many editions of the Heb. are very confused, by the improper insertion of i: "I will put the garments on thee, and get me down," &c. Ken.

VER. 4. Sleepeth. People of fortune did not disdain to sleep among the corn. Non pudor in stipula placidam cepisse quietem, Nec fenum capiti supposituisse suo.—Ovid, Fast. i. M.

—Feet. It is said that women in the East, enter their husbands' bed at the feet, to shew their submission. C.—Ruth was conducted on this occasion by a superior Being, who gave success to her undertaking, and disposed the mind of Booz (Theodore) to grant her just claim. It was according to the law of Moses, that a widow might demand in marriage the next kinsman of her deceased husband, if she had no children by him. Ruth considered Booz in this light. H.—She was not actuated by a love of pleasure, as the latter was convinced, otherwise she would have desired to marry some young man, (C.) in her own country, v. 10. Both parties would probably have their clothes on among the straw, so that there would be less danger; though, if their virtue had not been very constant, (H.) the situation was no doubt sufficiently perilous, and in other circumstances could not have been tolerated. C.—We must also remember, that clandestine marriages were not then forbidden. Salien.—That same night they might have married, had not another's being nearer akin proved an obstacle; (T.) so that Booz could not have claimed the inheritance of Elimelech, though he might have taken Ruth to wife. By deferring another day he obtained both.

CHAP. III.

Ruth, instructed by her mother-in-law, lieth at Booz's feet, claiming him for her husband by the law of affinity: she receiveth a good answer, and six measures of barley.

AFTER she was returned to her mother-in-law, Noemi said to her: My daughter, I will seek rest for thee, and will provide that it may be well with thee.

2 This Booz, with whose maids thou wast joined in the field, is our near kinsman, and behold this night he winnoweth barley in the threshing-floor.

3 Wash thyself therefore and anoint thee, and put on thy best garments, and go down to the barn-floor: but let not the man see thee, till he shall have done eating and drinking.

4 And when he shall go to sleep, mark the place wherein he sleepeth: and thou shalt go in, and lift up the clothes wherewith he is covered towards his feet, and shalt lay thyself down there: and he will tell thee what thou must do.

5 She answered: Whatsoever thou shalt command, I will do.

6 And she went down to the barn-floor, and did all that her mother-in-law had bid her.

7 And when Booz had eaten, and drunk, and was merry, he went to sleep by the heap of sheaves, and she came softly, and uncovering his feet, laid herself down.

8 And behold, when it was now midnight the man

H.—Lyan thinks Ruth could be excused only by ignorance, in thus exposing herself to danger, and that Noemi was guilty of a grievous sin, in giving her such advice. But they both had the purest views, seeking only an honest marriage, by arts which were not blamable. See S. Tho. 2. 2. q. 154. and 189. and Cajet. T.—Noemi was well assured of the virtue of both parties, and followed the directions of the Holy Spirit, (C.) as the event shewed. W.—Dr. Watson justly reproves the censure of Paine, who calls Ruth, "a strolling country girl, creeping slyly to bed to her cousin," and exclaims, "pretty stuff indeed to be called the word of God!" But in correcting this impertinent remark, he seems to allow that some things have been inserted in the Scriptures by human authority, so as not to be the word of God. This concession is more dangerous than the censure of Paine, and the quotation from S. Aug. by no means countenances it, as it barely insinuates that an express revelation was not requisite to insert some things, which the authors might know by other means. The holy father never doubted but every part of Scripture was equally inspired, and to be received without the smallest hesitation. What Dr. Law, and other such "good Christians," might think, does not regard us. H.—"As a person imploring protection, Ruth laid herself down at the foot of an aged kinsman's bed, and she rose up with as much innocence as she laid herself down. She was afterwards married to Booz, and reputed by all her neighbours as a virtuous woman; and they were more likely to know her character than you are. Whoever reads the Book of Ruth, bearing in mind the simplicity of ancient manners, will find it an interesting story of a poor young woman," &c. Watson, let. 4.—Must do. She trusted to the superior wisdom of Booz, knowing perhaps that he was not absolutely the nearest relation, but being convinced, as the event proved, that the other would not consent to marry Ruth on the conditions specified by the law. Salien, A. 2810.

VER. 7. Merry. Heb. "good," yet by no means intoxicated. D. M.—It was formerly the custom, as it is still in many places, (H.) to conclude the harvest with a feast; (C.) on which day Cato observes, that the men and oxen did not work. De re Rust. c. 131. Hence the vacuna of Ovid. Fast. vi. T.—The pagans did this in honour of Jupiter and Ceres. But the true God had enjoined his people (H.) to offer the first-fruits to him, and to feast in his presence. Lev. xxiii. 10. Deut. xxvi. 21.—Sheaves, either of corn or of straw. Sept.—The Arabs and neighbouring nations still delight to rest upon the ground, with some clothes thrown over them. C.

VER. 8. Troubled. Heb. may be rendered, "and turned himself, or felt," &c. C.—He perceived something at his feet, when he awoke, and was in consternation, particularly when he perceived, through the glimmering light, a woman at his feet. H.

VER. 9. Kinsman. Heb. "a redeemer;" (C.) one bound to defend and to espouse a brother's widow, if others more nearly akin refuse. H.—Ruth modestly admonishes him of this duty, and begs that he would take her to wife, (C.) as he might then have done without any other formality. Serar. q. vii.—We find a similar expression, Ecce. xvi. 8. Deut. xxii. 30. Some think that she only asked for protection. The custom of the husband, stretching a part of his garment over his bride, was perhaps already established among the Hebrews. C.—Heb. and Sept. "stretch thy wing over," &c. Chal. "Let thy name be invoked upon thy handmaid, to take me to wife," M. Is. iv. 1.

VER. 10. Thy latter kindness; viz. to thy husband deceased, in seeking to keep up his name and family, by marrying his relation according to the law, and not following after young men: for Booz, it seems, was then in years. Ch.—Salien supposes about seventy years old. H.—The affection which Ruth had all was afraid, and troubled: seeing a woman lying at his feet,

9 And he said to her: Who art thou? And she answered: I am Ruth, thy handmaid: spread thy coverlet over thy servant, for thou art a near kinsman.

10 And he said: Blessed art thou of the Lord, my daughter, and thy latter kindness has surpassed the former: because thou hast not followed young men either poor or rich.

11 Fear not, therefore, but whatsoever thou shalt say to me, I will do to thee. For all the people that dwell within the gates of my city, know that thou art a virtuous woman.

12 Neither do I deny myself to be near of kin, but there is another nearer than I.

13 Rest thou this night: and when morning is come, if he will take thee by the right of kindred, all is well: but if he will not, I will undoubtedly take thee, as the Lord liveth: sleep till the morning.

14 So she slept at his feet till the night was going off. And she arose before men could know one another, and Booz said: Beware lest any man know that thou camest hither.

15 And again he said: Spread thy mantle, where-with thou art covered, and hold it with both hands. And when she spread it and held it, he measured six measures of barley, and laid it upon her. And she carried it, and went into the city, 16 And came to her mother-in-law. Who said to her: What hast thou done, daughter? And she told her all that the man had done to her.

17 And she said: Behold he hath given me six measures of barley: for he said: I will not have thee return empty to thy mother-in-law.

18 And Noemi said: Wait, my daughter, till we see along displayed towards her husband, deserved applause. C.—Much more did her present endeavours to comply with God's law. W.

VER. 11. Woman. Virtuous here may denote, "strong, generous," &c. Prov. xxxi. 10. C.—But it includes the assemblage of all virtues. H.

VER. 12. Than I. The Jews think that he was brother of Elimelech, while Booz was only his nephew. But they might be in the same degree; the other being only older. C.

VER. 13. Well. Heb. tob. H.—Hence the Jews would translate, "If Tob will redeem thee, let him." They say that Tob was the paternal uncle of Mahalon: but it is not proper that his proper name should be only here mentioned, and not C. iv. The Sept. and Chaldee are conformable to the Vulg. and the opinion of the Jews is abandoned by most interpreters; (C.) and by the Prot. "well, let him do the kinsman's part." H.—Liveth. Chal. "Bound by an oath, before the Lord, I say that I will fulfil my promise unto thee."

VER. 14. Hither. The next kinsman might otherwise allege this as a pretext for not marrying her, (Salien) as people are but too apt to suspect the worst, though nothing amiss had passed between them. H.—Booz consulted his own as well as Ruth's reputation: for the apostle admonishes us to abstain from every appearance of evil. 1 Thess. v. 22. M.

VER. 15. Mantle. The Syrian and Arab. ladies cover themselves all over with a large white veil, or piece of cloth, which has no holes, so that Ruth might conveniently carry the barley in it.—Measures is not in Heb. or Sept. Most people supply ephi. S. Jerom, who has translated six bushels, (allowing three to the ephi; C. ii. 17,) has understood that Booz gave Ruth two ephi. If we explain it of six ephi, the burden would be great enough, consisting of 180 pints or pounds of barley. Bouffere would supply six gomeres, each of which consisted of only the tenth part of the ephi, or three pints, in all 18. But such a present seems too inconsiderable. We may therefore stick to S. Jerom, whose six measures (C.—modios, bushels; H.) make about 60 pints; (C.) or, according to others, 160 pounds, which, though heavy, a woman might carry. The Sept. insinuate, that Ruth carried the barley in her apron. M.—And. Heb. "he went." But the text is probably corrupted. C.

VER. 16. What, &c. Heb. "Who art thou?" It was yet so dark that she did not know her. C.

CHAP. IV. VER. 1. Gate, where justice was administered.—Calling. Heb. Ploni Almoni. C.—Prot. "Ho! such a one." H.—This form of speech is used concerning a person whose name we know not, or will not mention. 1 K. xxi. 2. C.—The name of this man is buried in eternal oblivion, perhaps because he was so much concerned about the splendour of his family, that he would not marry the widow of his deceased relation. T.

what end the thing will have. For the man will not rest until he have accomplished what he hath said.

CHAP. IV.

Upon the refusal of the nearer kinsman, Booz marrieth Ruth, who brings forth Obed, the grandfather of David.

THEN Booz went up to the gate, and sat there. And when he had seen the kinsman going by, of whom he had spoken before, he said to him, calling him by his name: Turn aside for a little while, and sit down here. He turned aside, and sat down.

2 And Booz, taking ten men of the ancients of the city, said to them: Sit ye down here.

3 They sat down, and he spoke to the kinsman: Noemi, who is returned from the country of Moab, will sell a parcel of land that belonged to our brother Elimelech.

4 I would have thee to understand this, and would tell thee before all that sit here, and before the ancients of my people. If thou wilt take possession of it by the right of kindred: buy it, and possess it: But if it please thee not, tell me so, that I may know what I have to do. For there is no near kinsman besides thee, who art first, and me, who am second. But he answered: I will buy the field.

5 And Booz said to him: When thou shalt buy the field at the woman's hand, thou must take also Ruth, the Moabitess, who was the wife of the deceased: to raise up the name of thy kinsman in his inheritance.

6 He answered: I yield up my right of next akin: for I must not cut off the posterity of my own family. Do thou make use of my privilege, which I profess I do willingly forego.

7 *Now this in former times was the manner in Israel between kinsmen, that if at any time one yielded his

* Deut. xxv. 7.

VER. 2. Here, as witnesses, not as judges, v. 9. C.—This number was requisite in matters of consequence. Grot.

VER. 3. Will sell. Some Latin copies read, "sells, or has sold." But the sequel shews that she was only now disposed to do it. But what right had Noemi or Ruth to the land, since women could not inherit? The latter might indeed retain her title, as long as she continued unmarried. But Noemi only acted in her behalf. Selden thinks that their respective husbands had made them a present of some land. Josephus (v. 11) asserts, that the person whom Booz addressed had already possession, and that he resigned his claim, as he would not take another wife. C.—Our brother. He was his nephew, and calls him brother, as Abraham did Lot. W.

VER. 4. This. Heb. "I thought to uncover thy ear," or to admonish thee. Virgil (frag.) uses a similar expression, Mors aurem vellens, vivite, ait, venio: "Death pulls the ear; live now, he says, I come."—Not. Heb. printed erroneously, "But if he will not redeem it." Ken.

VER. 5. When. Heb. again corruptly, "On the day thou buyest the land of the hand of Noemi, I will also buy it of Ruth," &c. It ought to be, conformably to some MSS. and the ancient versions, "thou must also take Ruth," v. 10. Cap. 4, p. 144, and 382. Kennicott. H.—We see here the observance of two laws, the one preserving the inheritance in the same family, and the other obliging the next of kin to marry the widow of the deceased, if he would enjoy his land. Lev. xxv. 10. Deut. xxv. 5. C.—Such widows as designed to comply with this condition, took possession of the land on the death of their husband, and conveyed it to those whom they married, till their eldest son became entitled to it. Abulensis, q. 30 to 81.—Inheritance. The son to be born, would be esteemed the heir of his legal parent. M.

VER. 6. Family. Heb. "I cannot redeem it for myself, lest I spoil my own inheritance." He was afraid of having too many children, and sensible that the first son that should be born of the proposed marriage would not be counted as his. H.—The miserable Onan had the same pretext. Gen. xxxviii. 9. Chal. "Since I cannot make use of this privilege, having already a wife, and not being allowed to take another, as that might cause dissensions in my family, and spoil my inheritance, do thou redeem it, . . . as thou art unmarried."

VER. 7. Israel. Heb. "and this was the testimony in Israel." The ceremony here specified is very different from that which the law prescribed. Deut. xxv. 7. But Josephus says, that they complied with all the regulations of the law, and that Ruth was present on this occasion. C.—Perhaps the law was not executed in all its rigour, when another was found to marry the widow, (W.) and when no real brother was living. T.

VER. 9. Chelion. As Orpha, his widow, took no care to comply with the law (335) right to another: that the grant might be sure, the man put off his shoe, and gave it to his neighbour; this was testimony of cession of right in Israel.

8 So Booz said to his kinsman: Put off thy shoe. And immediately he took it off from his foot.

9 And he said to the ancients, and to all the people: You are witnesses this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and Chelion's, and Mahalon's, of the hand of Noemi:

10 And have taken to wife Ruth, the Moabite, the wife of Mahalon, to raise up the name of the deceased in his inheritance, lest his name be cut off, from among his family and his brethren, and his people. You, I say, are witnesses of this thing.

11 Then all the people that were in the gate, and the ancients, answered: We are witnesses: The Lord make this woman who cometh into thy house, like Rachel, and Lia, who built up the house of Israel: that she may be an example of virtue in Ephrata, and may have a famous name in Bethlehem:

12 And that thy house may be, as the house of Phares, *whom Tamar bore unto Juda, of the seed which the Lord shall give thee of this young woman.

* Gen. xxxviii. 29.

all his possessions devolved on his brother's posterity. M.—It was presumed that she would marry some Moabite. C.

VER. 10. Moabite. The sons of Elimelech were excused in taking such women to wife, on account of necessity, and to avoid the danger of incontinence, which is a greater evil. Booz was under another sort of necessity, and was bound to comply with the law; (C.) so that he was guilty of no sin, as Beza would pretend. T.—Some also remark, that the exclusion of the people of Moab from the Church of God, regarded not the females, (S. Aug. q. 35, in Deut. Serar. T. &c.) particularly if they embraced the true religion. According to the Rabbins, Obed should have been accounted a Moabite, as they say children follow the condition of their mothers: but we need not here adopt their decisions.—People. Heb. "and from the gate of his place." In the assemblies, the legal son of Mahalon would represent him, though he was also considered as the son of Booz, at least if the latter had no other, as was probably the case.

VER. 11. Israel, by a numerous posterity.—That she. Heb. "mayst thou acquire riches," &c. C.—Prot. "do thou (Booz) worthily in," &c. H.—Ephrata: another name of Bethlehem. Ch.

VER. 12. Phares. His family was chief among the five, descended from Juda. M.

VER. 14. Successor. Heb. "redeemer, that his (Booz, or the Lord's) name," &c. C.

VER. 15. Comfort. Heb. "to make thy soul revive."

VER. 17. Obed; "serving," to comfort the old age of Noemi, (v. 15,) who gave him this name, (Serar. q. 14,) at the suggestion of her neighbours. M.

VER. 18. These. Hence the design of the sacred writer becomes evident, (C.) to shew the genealogy of David, from whom Christ sprang, as it had been foretold. See Gen. xlix. Mat. i. &c. W.

VER. 19. Aram. He is called Ram in Heb. and 1 Par. ii. 9.

VER. 20. Salmon. Heb. and Chal. Salma, (H.) though we read Salmon in the following verse. C.—This is one argument adduced by Houbigant, to shew that this genealogy is now imperfect. He concludes that Salma ought to be admitted, as well as Salmon; and, as the reason for calling the first son of Ruth, Obed, "serving or ploughing," seems rather harsh, as we should naturally expect some more glorious title. He thinks that the immediate son of Ruth was called Jachin, "he shall establish," and that Solomon called one of the pillars before the temple by his name, as he did the other Booz, "in strength," in honour of his ancestors. Báz icin means, "In strength (or solidity) it (he) shall (stand or) establish." As the son of Booz established his father's house, (v. 10. 11,) so these pillars denoted the stability of the temple. We must thus allow that the hand of time has 13 Booz therefore took Ruth, and married her: and went in unto her, and the Lord gave her to conceive and to bear a son.

14 And the women said to Noemi: Blessed be the Lord, who hath not suffered thy family to want a successor: that his name should be preserved in Israel.

15 And thou shouldst have one to comfort thy soul, and cherish thy old age. For he is born of thy daughter-in-law: who loveth thee: and is much better to thee, than if thou hadst seven sons.

16 And Noemi taking the child, laid it in her bosom, and she carried it, and was a nurse unto it.

17 And the women, her neighbours, congratulating with her, and saying, There is a son born to Noemi, called his name Obed: he is the father of Isai, the father of David.

18 These are the generations of Phares: *Phares begot Esron,

19 Esron begot Aram, Aram begot Aminadab,

20 Aminadab begot Nahasson, Nahasson begot Salmon,

21 Salmon begot Booz, Booz begot Obed,

22 Obed begot Isai, Isai begot David.

* 1 Par. ii. 5. and xi. 15. Mat. i. 8.

mutilated the genealogy of David, and that two ought to be admitted among his ancestors, who have been here omitted, as S. Matthew likewise passes them over as well as three others, who were the descendants of Joram. The same omission of Jachin occurs 1 Paral. ii. 11, where we find Salma instead of Salmon. Houbigant supposes that the sacred writers, Esdras and S. Matthew, gave the genealogies as they found them, without correcting the mistakes of transcribers. Chronolog. sacra, p. 81. But there might be some reason for the omission which we do not know; and Nahasson, Booz, and Joram might be said to beget Salmon, Obed, and Jechonias, though they were not their immediate children. Salien and many others assert, that there were three of the name of Booz, succeeding each other, so that six persons instead of four fill up the space of 440 years, from the taking of Jericho till the building of the temple. Salien, A. 2741, in which year he places the birth of the third Booz, who married Ruth, seventy years afterwards. Petau allows 520 years from the coming out of Egypt till the fourth year of Solomon, so that he leaves above 420 years to the three generations of Booz, Obed, and Isai. But he prudently passes over this chronological difficulty. Usher supposes that each of these people were almost 100 years old when they had children; and he produces many examples of people who lived beyond that age, but he does not mention any, since the days of Moses, who had children at such an advanced age, much less that many in the same family, and in succession, were remarkable for such a thing. Moreover, according to Houbigant's chronology, Booz and Obed must have had children when they were almost 120, and Isai in his 107th year. But by admitting Salma and Jachin, the five persons might each have sons when they were about seventy, and thus would complete 347 years. See C. ii. 1. H.

VER. 22. David, the king, whom Samuel crowned, though he did not live to see him in the full enjoyment of his power, (H.) as he died before Saul. C.—Thus the greatest personages have people of mean condition among their ancestors, that none may be too much elated on account of their high birth. Ruth, notwithstanding her poverty, was a striking figure of the Christian Church. H.—The Gentiles were strangers to Christ, on account of their errors, but related to him in as much as they were his creatures. Their miserable condition pleaded hard for them, that Jesus would receive them under his protection, espouse and give them rest and peace. Booz would not marry Ruth till the nearer relation had refused, and thus brought dishonour on himself; (Deut. xxv.) so Jesus was principally sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and did not send his apostles to the Gentiles till the Jews had rejected their ministry. C.—See S. Amb. de fide, iii. 5. D.—Ruth was also a pattern of the most perfect virtues. See Louis de Puente. T

THE FIRST BOOK OF SAMUEL;

OTHERWISE CALLED,

THE FIRST BOOK OF KINGS.

THIS and the following Book are called by the Hebrews, the Books of Samuel, because they contain the history of Samuel, and of the two kings, Saul the David, whom he anointed. They are more commonly named by the Fathers, the First and Second Book of Kings. As to the writer of them, it is the common opinion that Samuel composed the first book, as far as the twenty-fifth chapter; and that the prophets Nathan and Gad finished the first and wrote the second book. See 1 Par. alias 1 Chronicles, xxix. 19. Ch.—The authors of the Third and Fourth Books of Kings were also prophets, but we know not exactly their names. These works have nevertheless been always esteemed authentic (H.) and canonical. W.—V. Bede takes occasion to observe, from the Books of Kings (or as the Sept. read, "of kingdoms;" H.) being placed after that of Judges, that the everlasting kingdom of Christ will succeed the general judgment. The translation of the priesthood and of the regal dignity, recorded in these books, denote also that Christ would unite both in his own person; as the two wives of Elcana intimated, that both Jews and Gentiles would acknowledge the same Lord. S. Jerom, S. Aug. &c.—The transactions of Heli, Samuel and Saul, and the persecutions which David sustained from the latter, form the subject of the first book, (H.) during the space of 100 years. All the four books carry down the sacred history near 600 years, from A. 2849 till the transmigration of Juda, A. 3420. C. Usher.

CHAP. I.

Anna, the wife of Elcana, being barren, by vow and prayer obtaineth a son: whom she calleth Samuel: and presenteth him to the service of God in Silo, according to her vow.

THERE was a man of Ramathaimsophim, of Mount Ephraim, and his name was Elcana, the son of Jeroham, the son of Eliu, the son of Thohu, the son of Suph, an Ephraimite:

2 And he had two wives, the name of one was Anna, and the name of the other Phenenna. Phenenna had children: but Anna had no children.

3 And this man went up out of his city upon the appointed days, to adore and to offer sacrifice to the Lord of hosts in Silo. And the two sons of Heli, Ophni and Phinees, were there priests of the Lord.

4 Now the day came, and Elcana offered sacrifice, and gave to Phenenna, his wife, and to all her sons and daughters, portions:

5 But to Anna he gave one portion with sorrow, because he loved Anna. And the Lord had shut up her womb.

6 Her rival also afflicted her, and troubled her exceedingly, insomuch that she upbraided her, that the Lord had shut up her womb:

7 And thus she did every year, when the time returned, that they went up to the temple of the Lord: and thus she provoked her: but Anna wept, and did not eat.

8 Then Elcana, her husband, said to her: Anna, why weepest thou? and why dost thou not eat? and why dost thou afflict thy heart? Am not I better to thee than ten children?

9 So Anna arose after she had eaten and drunk in Silo: *And Heli, the priest, sitting upon a stool before the door of the temple of the Lord;

10 As Anna had her heart full of grief, she prayed to the Lord, shedding many tears,

11 And she made a vow, saying: O Lord of hosts, if thou wilt look down, and wilt be mindful of me, and not forget thy handmaid, and wilt give to thy servant a man-child: I will give him to the Lord all the days of his life, and no razor shall come upon his head.

CHAP. I. VER. 1. There. Heb. Sept. &c. "And there," &c. The books of Scripture are thus frequently connected. The authors present us with a series of events, without prefixing any title, or their own names, that our attention may be wholly fixed on what we read. The birth of Samuel being so miraculous, deserves to be recorded, as he was the last judge of Israel, and had so much to do under the first of their kings, whose election and misconduct brought a great change into the state of the commonwealth. C.—Ramathaimsophim. Rama, or Ramatha, "a height," and the environs were occupied by the family of Suph, a descendant of Core; (1 Par. vi. 28.) though the place did not properly belong to the Levites. It lay probably between Gabaa and Bethel; where Samuel spent much of his time, while he was judge, and obliged to be frequently absent from the tabernacle. C.—Ragusinus and Prince Radzivil think it was afterwards called Arimathea, the birth-place of Joseph, and now Ramula. T. C. ii. 11.—Ephraimite. He was of the tribe of Levi, (1 Par. vi. 34.) but is called an Ephraimite from dwelling in Mount Ephraim. Ch.—So we read of Cretan Jews. Acts ii. 11. T.

VER. 2. Phenenna. She was only of inferior dignity. At that time polygamy was lawful, (M.) as Moses insinuates, if he do not expressly allow it.

VER. 3. Days, the three great festivals. His family accompanied him, though the law only lays an express injunction upon the males to attend. We find, however, that females did not neglect to come. C.—Hosts. Heb. (Tsebaoth) of "armies," both of angels and of Israel. God is attended by myriads of angels, and decides the fate of armies. H.—This title has not appeared in the former books. The pagans took occasion from it to form their Jupiter Sabazius. C.—Elcana might go up from the height of Ramatha to Silo, which was the highest mountain round Jerusalem of all in the holy land. Adrichom. T.

VER. 4. Sacrificed, by the hand of the priests, (M.) who had the breast and the right shoulder; the rest was given back to the person who had presented the fattened victim, that he might feast with his friends. C.

VER. 5. With sorrow. Heb. apayim, "of faces, indignation, (C.) sorrow;" (M.) or that was presented before him. Chal. and many others translate, "a chosen:" (C.) Prot. "a worthy portion." H.—The shew-bread is called, "the bread of the face," because it stood before the Lord. Joseph sent to each of his brethren, "a portion of his faces," as the Heb. expresses it; (Gen. xliii. 33.) or of such meat as was placed upon his table. In the East, the master of a family has all set before him, and he sends to each his portion, to the place where he is sitting. Chardin, Perse.—Thus Elcana sent some more excellent, or "double," part to his beloved Anna, (C.) grieving inwardly that she had no children, to whom he might also send. H.—By this distinction, he wished to alleviate the sorrow of his wife. M.—Womb. Sterility was deemed a curse, and a mark of God's displeasure, with which women were often reproached. Hence Anna prays so earnestly that God would be mindful of her. v. 11—19. The power of the Almighty, in giving children to the barren, is frequently mentioned. Gen. xxviii. 13. Ps. cxii. 9. C.—Luke i. 25. &c. H.

VER. 6. Insomuch. Heb. "to make her fret, or rage; because the Lord," &c. C.

VER. 7. Lord. Then they could hardly avoid being together on the road, and Anna was accustomed to pray earnestly (M.) to be delivered from her reproach. H.

VER. 9. Silo; either in some private house, or in the porch before the tabernacle. She complied with the entreaty of her husband. M.—Stool. Heb. "Heli was sitting upon a throne, near the steps, leading to the palace of the Lord." It is also called the temple, or the house of God, though it was only a tent. Mat. xii. 4. &c. Perhaps women were not allowed to go beyond the porch.

VER. 11. A vow; rightly trusting that her husband would give his consent. Num. xxx. 7.—Razor. Heb. mora, "scissors." Sept. "iron." Some copies add, "he shall not drink wine, nor any intoxicating drink." In quality of Levite, Samuel was bound to serve the tabernacle from 25 or 30 years of age till he was 50. Num. iv. 2. Anna consecrates him to the Lord for life, and promises that he shall be a Nazarite, like Samson, and S. John Baptist. The law prescribes no rules for these perpetual Nazarites. Num. vi. 3. Many of the ancients believe that Samuel always observed the prescriptions of Moses, and abstained from intoxicating liquors; though the Heb. and Vulg. are silent on this head. We find that during his administration as Judge, he was not able to continue always near the tabernacle. C.—When he came to years of discretion, he might depart if he thought proper, like other Levites. Had he been of any other tribe, he must 12 And it came to pass, as she multiplied prayers before the Lord, that Heli observed her mouth.

13 Now Anna spoke in her heart, and only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard at all. Heli therefore thought her to be drunk, 14 And said to her: How long wilt thou be drunk? digest a little the wine, of which thou hast taken too much.

15 Anna answering, said: Not so, my lord: for I am an exceeding unhappy woman, and have drunk neither wine nor any strong drink, but I have poured out my soul before the Lord.

16 Count not thy handmaid for one of the daughters of Belial: for out of the abundance of my sorrow and grief have I spoken till now.

17 Then Heli said to her: Go in peace: and the God of Israel grant thee thy petition, which thou hast asked of him.

18 And she said: Would to God thy handmaid may find grace in thy eyes. So the woman went on her way, and ate, and her countenance was no more changed.

19 And they rose in the morning, and worshipped before the Lord: and they returned, and came into their house at Ramatha. And Elcana knew Anna his wife: And the Lord remembered her.

20 And it came to pass when the time was come about, Anna conceived and bore a son, and called his name Samuel: because she had asked him of the Lord.

21 And Elcana, her husband, went up, and all his house, to offer to the Lord the solemn sacrifice, and his vow.

22 But Anna went not up: for she said to her hushave been redeemed. W.—Eather, Elcana, or Samuel, might have annulled this vow. Salien, A. 2900.

VER. 12. Prayers, out of fervour; not through vain superstition and ostentation, as the Pharisees and pagans did. Mat. xxiii. 14. Christ does not condemn many, or long prayers, since he prayed whole nights for our instruction. Luc. xxi. 48. and vi. 12. 1 Thea. v. 17.—Mouth. He tried, but could not hear what she said. C.

VER. 14. Much. Heli's "son or servant," (παῖδας, according to the Sept.) addressed these words to Anna. Her going to pray immediately after a feast, instead of taking recreation, increased the suspicion. S. Chrys. hom. 1.—Salien (A. C. 1153) observes the many instances of patience which Anna exhibits on this occasion. H.—She teaches us not to answer the unjust reproaches of our superiors with haughtiness. D.

VER. 15. My lord. She gives him this title, though he had called her a drunken woman. H.—Unhappy. Heb. "of a hard (or afflicted) spirit." See Cant. viii. 6. C.

VER. 16. Belial; "without restraint;" abandoned. H.—Sept. "pestiferous."—Sorrow. Heb. "meditation;" (C.) what preys upon my spirits. H.

VER. 17. Peace, with all blessings. M.

VER. 18. Eyes: that thou wouldst lay aside thy suspicions against my character, and pray (C.) that I may obtain so great a happiness.—Changed. Heb. "no more," as it had been sad, and defaced with tears. H.—She was now full of hope and joy. M.—Sept. "her countenance fell not." She was not moved with anger or with jealousy. Gen. iv. 6. C.

VER. 20. About, at the expiration of the year, which term the ancients frequently allowed between the conception and the nativity. Gen. xviii. 10.—Samuel. This name imports, asked of God. Ch.—Some letters are omitted for the easier pronunciation, as the Hebrews would now write it, Saul-meel; (C.) or it may signify, "God placed him," sum-hal. T.—Shaal means, "to ask." But Vatable thinks that Anna retained only the first letter. M.

VER. 21. Vow, in consequence of his son's nativity. The sacrifice might be of precept, such as the paschal lamb, or for his wife's purification and the redemption of his first-born, as they could not attend in person. C.—Heb. "the victim of days and his vow," which he had probably made in conjunction with Anna. M.

VER. 22. Weaned. The mother of the Machabees weaned her children when they were three years old, (2 Mac. vii. 27.) which Gallien asserts as the proper time, though Avicenna fixes upon two years. See Gen. xxi. 8. Iremellius translates, "till the child be grown up." But we must not allow any long term, since he was very young when he was presented to the Lord. v. 24.

VER. 23. Word, by preserving the life of the child, (C.) and enabling him to band: I will not go till the child be weaned, and till I may carry him, that he may appear before the Lord, and may abide always there.

23 And Elcana, her husband, said to her: Do what seemeth good to thee, and stay till thou wean him: and I pray that the Lord may fulfil his word. So the woman staid at home, and gave her son suck, till she weaned him.

24 And after she had weaned him, she carried him with her, with three calves, and three bushels of flour, and a bottle of wine, and she brought him to the house of the Lord in Silo. Now the child was as yet very young:

25 And they immolated a calf, and offered the child to Heli.

26 And Anna said: I beseech thee, my lord, as thy soul liveth, my lord: I am that woman, who stood before thee here praying to the Lord.

27 For this child did I pray, and the Lord hath granted me my petition, which I asked of him.

28 Therefore I also have lent him to the Lord all the days of his life, he shall be lent to the Lord. And they adored the Lord there. And Anna prayed, and said:

CHAP. II.

The canticle of Anna. The wickedness of the sons of Heli: for which they are not duly corrected by their father. A prophecy against the house of Heli.

MY heart hath rejoiced in the Lord, and my horn is exalted in my God: my mouth is enlarged over my enemies: because I have joyed in thy salvation.

2 There is none holy as the Lord is: for there is no other beside thee, and there is none strong like our God.

3 Do not multiply to speak lofty things, boasting: let old matters depart from your mouth: for the Lord serve according to our engagement. H.—Word is often put for "a thing," in Heb. May God perfect his own work. M.

VER. 24. Three calves. Sept. "a calf three years old," such as Abraham sacrificed, Gen. xv. 9. We only find one offered up, v. 25.—Bushels. Heb. ephah, (C.) each of which contained three bushels or measures. Ruth, ii. 17. H.—Bottle. Heb. nebel, a large measure containing above 87 pinta. C.—The sacrifices seem to have been for thanksgiving, accompanied with an ephi for each calf, and with wine. Num. xv. Ezec. xli. 7.

VER. 26. Liveth: a strong attestation. M.—As sure as you live; or, may you enjoy a long and happy life. See C. xvii. 55. and xx. 3. Dan. iii. 9. 2 Esd. ii. 3.

VER. 28. Lent. This is equivalent to giving entirely. Anna presents her son to the Lord, to serve in his tabernacle as long as God shall think proper. He dispensed with his personal attendance, when he appointed him judge. C. vii. 15. C.—As much as depended on Samuel's mother, he was consecrated for ever. But he was at liberty to ratify the vow if he pleased. M.—The expression, lent, seems to reserve the dominion of the thing, which Anna had entirely given up, so that we might translate the Heb. "Therefore I have him simply as one lent . . . he is a thing lent, which belongs to the Lord." C.—They. Heb. "he worshipped the Lord there." Grabe found not these words in the Alex. copy, which by a comparison of this chapter with the Vatican edition, appears to be more accurate. Both omit this sentence: but it is found in the Aldine edition of the Sept. Proleg. C. iv. The Targum adds, "and she prayed in the spirit of prophecy, and said." H.

CHAP. II. VER. 1. Rejoiced. Sept. and Chal. "been strengthened." Anna composed this canticle at the nativity of her son; or rather at his presentation in the tabernacle. She foretells the reign and glory of the Messias, and of his church. S. Aug. de C. xvii. 4.—Horn. The horn in the Scripture signifies strength, power, and glory: so the horn is said to be exalted, when a person receives an increase of strength or glory. Ch.—So Horace (3 Ode, 21.) says, adde cornua pauperi.—Enlarged. Chal. "I have opened my mouth, to speak great things against my enemies." She has Phenenna principally in view, and compares her present glory with her former distress. C.—I may boast more on account of Samuel, than my rival can of her numerous offspring. M.

VER. 2. Holy. This is frequently a title of God, the holy one of Israel. Isai i. 4. and v. 19. He is essentially holy.—Strong. Heb. "no rock like," &c. The rocks of Palestine were the common fortresses of the nation, having caverns to which the people fled for refuge. Hence God is often called a rock, (C.) as none can afford such protection. H. Ps. xvii. 2. Deut. xxxii. 15.

VER. 3. Old. Heb. hathak means also, "hard things." D.—"Let arrogance come out of your mouth," to return no more. Yet most people supply the neis a God of all knowledge, and to him are thoughts prepared.

4 The bow of the mighty is overcome, and the weak are girt with strength.

5 They that were full before, have hired out themselves for bread: and the hungry are filled, so that the barren hath borne many: and she that had many children is weakened.

6 *The Lord killeth and maketh alive, he bringeth down to hell, and bringeth back again.

7 The Lord maketh poor and maketh rich, he humbleth and he exalteth:

8 He raiseth up the needy from the dust, and lifteth up the poor from the dunghill: that he may sit with princes, and hold the throne of glory. For the poles of the earth are the Lord's, and upon them he hath set the world.

9 He will keep the feet of his saints, and the wicked shall be signet in darkness; because no man shall prevail by his own strength.

10 The adversaries of the Lord shall fear him: and upon them shall he thunder in the heavens: The Lord shall judge the ends of the earth, and he shall give empire to his king, and shall exalt the horn of his Christ.

gation from the former member; "Let not arrogance or hard things." Chal. "blasphemy," &c. C.—Cease to praise idols, as you have done. W.—Use not the malevolent language to which you have been accustomed.—Knowledge. The secrets of hearts are open to him.—And to him. Heb. "and by his actions are weighed," as in scales; (H.) or, "thoughts (and actions) are not established." Sym. The Syr. and Arab. also read the negation, "there are no pretences before him;" or, "are not actions founded upon him?" Will he not execute what he has wisely designed, in spite of opposition? H.—Sept. "and God prepares his thoughts;" C. (εργασματα αρεω) or, what is convenient for him." H.—They have read hu, "of him," instead of la, "not," as they are authorized to do by the Keri, (or various readings in the margin) and by several Heb. MSS. The Prot. think rightly, and suppose that la, "not," has been omitted, "Let not arrogance;" because we find it in Chal. Sept. Syr. and Arab. versions. Lu is substituted for la, v. 16. When some have been pressed with the argument of variations, called Keri, they have said that they were rather explanations of obscure words in the text: but is there any obscurity in hu, "to him," and la, "not," or can they explain each other? Leusden answers in the affirmative, v. 16! Kennicott.

VER. 4. Overcome. Heb. "broken." Sept. "he has weakened the bow," having deprived it of its elasticity. H.

VER. 5. Many. Heb. "seven," which is often used in the same sense. Anna had never more than six children; (C.) whereas Phenenna had perhaps ten. C. i. 8. and iii. 21. H.—The Rabbins pretend that she lost one every time that Anna brought forth. But the text says nothing of the kind. It only insinuates at most, that she had no more. This admirably represents the state of the Synagogue, compared to the Christian Church. S. Aug. sup. C. W.—The blessed Virgin conveys the same idea in other words. Luke i. M.

VER. 6. Hell, (inferos), "the lower regions." God calls us out of this world, or restores the dead to life, as he thinks proper. H.—He easily makes the greatest prosperity succeed extreme distress, which is often denoted by death, hell, &c. S. Seneca says, Mortis habet vices—Lentis cum trahitur vita gemitibus. The prodigal son is said to have come to life again, when his father received him, contrary to his expectations. Luke xv. 24. Ps. xxix. 4. &c. C.

VER. 7. Exalteth. The same instances of God's power and providence are related, Ps. cxli. 7. Luke i. 52. M.—Hesiod (op.) says, "Jupiter easily gives or takes away power," &c.

VER. 8. World. The Hebrews represented the earth as resting on a firm basis, or on pillars, or turning on poles. Ps. ciii. 5. Prov. viii. 25. &c. The magistrates of the earth may be also thus designated, as the world is entrusted to their care. God compares Jeremias to an iron pillar. Jer. i. 18. Apoc. iii. 12. C.—The last sentence is omitted in the Sept.

VER. 9. Saints. Heb. "kind, merciful, pious ones;" (C.) those to whom he shews mercy, and who comply with his will in assisting others. Sept. "Granting their petition to those who ask him, and I e has blessed the years of the just, because man is not strong by his own strength." H.—Silent: condemned to death. Mox etiam Lemures animas dixere silentes. Ovid, Fast. v. Loca nocte silentia late. Virg. vi. Unable to act as they had done, and ashamed of themselves, (C.) they seek for the most obscure retreat, where they may not behold the glory of those whom they had despised. They will pray that the hills would fall upon them, and hide them from the indignation of the Lamb. H.

12 Now the sons of Heli were children of Bejial, not knowing the Lord,

13 Nor the office of the priests to the people: but whosoever had offered a sacrifice, the servant of the priest came, while the flesh was in boiling, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hand,

14 And thrust it into the kettle, or into the cauldron, or into the pot, or into the pan: and all that the flesh-hook brought up, the priest took to himself. Thus did they to all Israel that came to Silo.

15 Also before they burnt the fat, the servant of the priest came, and said to the man that sacrificed: Give me flesh to boil for the priest: for I will not take of thee sodden flesh, but raw.

16 And he that sacrificed said to him: Let the fat first be burnt to-day, according to the custom, and then take to thee as much as thy soul desireth. But he answered, and said to him: Not so: but thou shalt give it me now, or else I will take it by force.

17 Wherefore the sin of the young men was exceeding great before the Lord: because they withdrew men from the sacrifice of the Lord.

18 But Samuel ministered before the face of the Lord: being a child girded with a linen ephod.

19 And his mother made him a little coat, which she brought to him on the appointed days, when she went up with her husband, to offer the solemn sacrifice.

20 And Heli blessed Elcana and his wife: and he

VER. 10. Him. Sept. "The Lord will render his adversary weak. The holy Lord. Let not the prudent boast of his prudence," &c. (H. which seems to be added from Jer. ix. 23. C.) "The Lord has mounted the heavens, and thundered. He judges the ends of the earth, and gives power to those who rule, as kings, over us," &c. H.—Heavens. This prediction against the Philistines was exactly verified. C. vii. 10. It denotes the protection which God grants to his servants. Ps. xvii. 8. 14.—Christ. Chaldee, and the best interpreters, understand this of the Messiah: "He will multiply the kingdom of his Messiah." Jonathan.—Anna might also have David in view, who was one of his most express figures. C.—But neither he, nor Solomon, ever ruled over all the earth, as Christ will. Ps. ii. 18. W.—Zachary seems to allude to this text. Luke i. 69. C.—The empire of Christ rose from the smallest beginnings. M.

VER. 11. Ramatha. Heb. Rama. Sept. Alex. "and they left him there before the Lord, and went away to Armathaim." H.

VER. 12. The Lord, whom they denied by their works. Tit. i. 16.

VER. 13. Nor the office. The Vulg. repeats the negation from the preceding sentence. Others translate, "The priests' custom with the people was," &c. or "the pretended right of the priests" &c. They neither performed their duty towards God, (C.) nor were they content with what the law authorized them to receive from the people. H.—Servant, or son; perhaps Ophni or Phineas.—Boiling. In the heroic times, the meat was never boiled, but roasted. Athen. i. 10. and Servius; though Hesiod asserts the contrary, v. 748. C.—Abuleusis (q. 8.) observes that the person who offered the victim, boiled the parts which belonged to himself, as well as the priest's share. But, whereas in the peace-offerings, only the breast and the right shoulder fell to the priest, these rapacious men took whatever they pleased. M.

VER. 14. Pan. Heb. has also four terms, but their precise meaning cannot be determined. The vessels were of different forms, or intended for various uses.

VER. 15. Raw. Here are two other abuses. The fat ought first to have been burnt, in honour of the Lord; and the meat should have been boiled, in order that the priest might not be taken off from his sacred functions; as custom, it seems, had determined, though the law be silent on this head.

VER. 16. Desireth. The Laic gives an example of moderation and zeal, to which the priest might well have paid some deference. The former is willing to abandon his goods, provided the honour of God be not neglected. H.

VER. 17. Lord. People, seeing that the law was not observed, refrained from presenting victims. M.—They are but too apt to follow the bad example of their teachers. H.—Hence God punishes the smallest faults of his ministers, with great severity, since they withdraw people from his service, by their scandalous behaviour, and are guilty of a more horrid sacrilege than those who laid violent hands on the Lord of majesty. S. Bern. ser. i. Nothing brings a greater discredit on religion. C.

VER. 18. Ephod. It was not, therefore, peculiar to priests, 2 K. vi. 14.

VER. 19. Coat. Heb. mehil, the outer garment. Hence it appears that the parents of people consecrated to the Lord, furnished them with clothes, till they were able to serve the tabernacle, otherwise they would have been a burden to it. C.

VER. 20. Lent. This was in reply to what Anna had said. C. i. 28. H.—God always gives back with interest. M. said to him: The Lord give thee seed of this woman, for the loan thou hast lent to the Lord. And they went to their own home.

21 And the Lord visited Anna, and she conceived, and bore three sons, and two daughters: and the child Samuel became great before the Lord.

22 Now Heli was very old, and he heard all that his sons did to all Israel: and how they lay with the women that waited at the door of the tabernacle:

23 And he said to them: Why do ye these kinds of things, which I hear, very wicked things, from all the people?

24 Do not so, my sons: for it is no good report that I hear, that you make the people of the Lord to transgress.

25 If one man shall sin against another, God may be appeased in his behalf: but if a man shall sin against the Lord, who shall pray for him? And they hearkened not to the voice of their father, because the Lord would slay them.

26 But the child Samuel advanced, and grew on, and pleased both the Lord and men.

27 And there came a man of God to Heli, and said to him: Thus saith the Lord: Did I not plainly appear to thy father's house, when they were in Egypt in the house of Pharaoh?

28 And I chose him out of all the tribes of Israel to be my priest, to go up to my altar, and burn incense to me, and to wear the ephod before me: and I gave to thy father's house of all the sacrifices of the children of Israel.

29 Why have you kicked away my victims, and my gifts which I commanded to be offered in the temple: and thou hast rather honoured thy sons than me, to eat the first-fruits of every sacrifice of my people Israel?

30 Wherefore thus saith the Lord the God of Israel: "I said indeed that thy house, and the house of thy father, should minister in my sight for ever. But now saith the Lord: Far be this from me: but whosoever shall glorify me, him will I glorify: but they that despise me, shall be despised.

31 Behold the days come: and I will cut off thy arm, and the arm of thy father's house, that there shall not be an old man in thy house.

32 And thou shalt see thy rival in the temple, in all the prosperity of Israel, and there shall not be an old man in thy house for ever.

• 3 Kings ii. 27

VER. 21. Lord. He behaved well in the tabernacle, (C.) notwithstanding the ill example of Heli's own sons. H.

VER. 22. Waited, like an army of guards. Ex. xxxviii. 8. The Rabbins pretend that these priests only sent away these women who came to be purified, and allowed them to return to their husbands before the appointed time, and thus caused the latter to offend. These authors are generally very fertile in discoveries. C.—The virgins or widows gave themselves up to work for the tabernacle. M.—The sons of Heli found an opportunity in the sacred practices of religion to gratify their passions. Perhaps some false pastors in the Church of Christ may have imitated their perversity. A man of the character of Mr. Crowley, a late deserter of the Catholic faith, judging of others by the corruption of his own heart, would hence insinuate that they all take these liberties, or at least that it is "a miracle," if they can admit females to confession, without yielding to such base temptations. If this be a miracle, we may confidently hope that wonders have not ceased, otherwise among his other malicious remarks, he would surely have adduced some proofs of his assertion, from the records of past ages. But in reality he seems to be little acquainted (though he pretends to have been converted by it, &c. and falsely asserts it is kept from laymen) either with history or with the Bible, having read perhaps little more than what his Catechism set before him; and this he boldly contradicts, as if he supposed that his "Thoughts" would have more weight than the decisions of the Fathers and of the whole Church. If he can find a professor of Maynooth, and another or two Irish priests, disposed to follow his example, (which we need not believe on his assertion) what would this prove? Yet Mr. Slack lays great stress on this man's authority, in his late defence of Wesley. Letters to R. Campion, Esq. Whitby, 1811. So ready are the enemies of the Catholic faith to scrape together every idle remark that may tend to defame the mother Church! So eager are infidels to reject the faith, on account of the misconduct of some of its degenerate professors! H.—The best of fathers have often very profligate children, as the latter take pride in the honours of their family, and expect to obtain the same without trouble. Grot.

VER. 23. People. They could not refrain from complaining of the iniquity of his children, how much soever they might revere him. Though he was not a witness himself of their abominations, such an uproar must have convinced him that they were guilty. H.—The Fathers in general blame the lenity of the high priest, who ought not only to have rebuked, but also to have put a stop to the crying sins of his sons, by the utmost severity. C.

VER. 25. Who shall pray for him. By these words Heli would have his sons understand, that by their wicked abuse of sacred things, and of the very sacrifices which were appointed to appease the Lord, they deprived themselves of the ordinary means of reconciliation with God; which was by sacrifices. The more, because as they were the chief priests, whose business it was to intercede for all others, they had no other to offer sacrifice and to make atonement for them. Ch.—We need not, however, consider the words of Heli as an oracle of God. Sanchez.—In human transactions, a person would find more difficulty in obtaining pardon, when the judge himself had received the injury. Sept. instead of appeased, have "and they shall pray for him." M.—Some may be found to plead his cause, but if he have offended the judge, who will undertake to be his advocate? What mediators shall be used, when those, which God has appointed, are trodden under foot? H.—By persevering in such wickedness, no redress can be expected: and indeed, the infinite distance between God and man, would place an insuperable obstacle to a reconciliation, if Jesus Christ had not undertaken the cause even of the most desperate sinner. C.—Because the Lord would slay them. In consequence of their manifold sacrileges, he would not soften their hearts with his efficacious grace, but was determined to destroy them. Ch.—They had filled up the measure of their crimes: and, though God wills not the death of a sinner, they had treasured up to themselves wrath, which he will now display. We might also translate of, "therefore," (Noldius. Ose. ix. 15, &c.) or "that." They would not be convinced that the threat of their father would be executed. Schmid. C.—Sins directly against God, and which hinder his service, are remitted with greater difficulty, though to all true penitents pardon is promised. Eze. xxxiii. God did not take away the free will of Ophni and Phinees, but left them to their own obstinacy, and justly punished them. See S. Aug. c. Jul. v. 3 W.—They had already rendered themselves unworthy of extraordinary graces. T. S. Tho. 1 p. q. 23, n. 3.

VER. 26. And men. Thus he is, in some degree, compared with our Saviour Luke ii. 52. When one minister prevaricates, God presently raises up another so that he never abandons his Church. H.

VER. 27. A man. His name is not known. Some say it was Eleazar, Samuel, or an angel, &c. The Rabbins suppose that Phinees performed this office. But he was long ago dead, (C.) or he would still have enjoyed the high priesthood instead of Heli.—Father's. Aaron was the chief both of the house of Eleazar and of Ithamar, and was selected by God to be his ambassador and priest. H.—His posterity held the high priesthood till after the reign of Herod. T.

VER. 28. Ephod, and all the pontifical attire. H.—The high priest wore a different sort of ephod from that of other people. C.—All the, &c. Even of the holocausts, the priests received the skin. M.

VER. 29. Away, by scandalizing the people, and causing them to neglect offering the appointed victims. H.—To eat. Heli seems to have refrained from divesting his sons of their high office, that the riches of his family might not be impaired. C.—Avarice is the root of many evils, and those who seek to become rich fall into many snares. Poverty soon overtook the descendants of Heli, while the immediate perpetrators of the wickedness were punished with death. H.

VER. 30. Ever. God had promised the priesthood to Aaron's seed (C.) as long as the Jewish religion should subsist. H.—He had also selected the branch of Eleazar, to recompense the zeal of Phinees; (Num. xxv. 13,) and yet we find that the house of Ithamar had possession for a time of the high priesthood. We know not when or by what means they obtained it. The promises of God to them were surely only conditional; and some think that they only meant, that as He had permitted them to acquire this high dignity, so it was an earnest that he would not deprive them of it, unless they proved unworthy. But it is generally supposed that God had expressed his determination on this head. Heli, Achitob, Achias, Achimelech, and Abiathar, (C.) were the only pontiffs of the family of Ithamar. The last was obliged to resign to (H.) Sadoc, under the reign of Solomon, 8 K. ii. 27. Some suppose that Heli usurped this dignity, (Capel) when he entered upon the civil administration, as the people thought none more fit for the office, in a time of trouble. Bertram.—Others think that the descendants of Eleazar forfeited this honour by their crimes or indolence, or because they were not of sufficient age. But this reason would not have excluded them for ever. The Scripture, therefore, insinuates that Heli was appointed by God, and that his descendants would have enjoyed his office, if they had not offended. C.—These promises were of a conditional nature both to Phinees and to Heli, and Sadoc, v. 35. See Num. xxv. &c. H.—God never changes. M.

VER. 31. Arm, strength or children. I will slay some; others I will reduce to extreme want. Some explain it of the ark, which was the protection of Israel. C.—Old men, to govern. D.—It is often a title of dignity. But the four succeeding pontiffs did not live long. In the course of little more than 100 years, the last was deposed. C.

VER. 32. Thy rival. A priest of another race. This was partly fulfilled when Abiathar, of the race of Heli, was removed from the priesthood, and Sadoc, who was of another line, was substituted in his place. But it was more fully accomplished in the New Testament, when the priesthood of Aaron gave place to that 33 However, I will not altogether take away a man of thee from my altar: but that thy eyes may faint, and thy soul be spent: and a great part of thy house shall die, when they come to man's estate.

34 And this shall be a sign to thee, that shall come upon thy two sons, Ophni and Phinees: in one day they shall both of them die.

35 And I will raise me up a faithful priest, who shall do according to my heart, and my soul: and I will build him a faithful house, and he shall walk all days before my anointed.

36 And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall remain in thy house shall come that he may be prayed for, and shall offer a piece of silver, and a roll of bread, and shall say: Put me, I beseech thee, to somewhat of the priestly office, that I may eat a morsel of bread.

CHAP. III.

Samuel is four times called by the Lord: who revealeth to him the evil that shall fall on Heli and his house.

NOW the child Samuel ministered to the Lord before Heli, and the word of the Lord was precious in those days, there was no manifest vision.

2 And it came to pass one day when Heli lay in his place, and his eyes were grown dim, that he could not see:

3 Before the lamp of God went out, Samuel slept in the temple of the Lord, where the ark of God was.

4 And the Lord called Samuel. And he answered: Here am I.

5 And he ran to Heli, and said: Here am I: for thou didst call me. He said: I did not call: go back and sleep. And he went and slept.

6 And the Lord called Samuel again. And Samuel of Christ. Ch.—Some suppose that this rival was Samuel, in whom this prediction was partly fulfilled, though more completely in Christ. Bede, q. W.—Heli saw not in person the exaltation of Eleazar's family. Heb. and other versions are very much embarrassed here. C.—Prot. "and thou shalt see an enemy in my habitation, in all the wealth which God shall give Israel." H.

VER. 33. Spent. Hence we may learn to adore the depth of God's judgments, who knows how to punish both in life and death.—Part. Sept. "the most exalted of thy house shall fall by the sword of men."

VER. 35. Faithful often denotes what shall continue a long time. Isai. xxxiii. 16. and lv. 3. C.—But in the conduct of Sadoc, we find nothing reprehensible. M.—This faithful priest pointed out the Christian priesthood, as the sequel shews. C.—All days. He shall perform his office. H.—Anointed, king Solomon. M.—The priests of the new law ought always to have Christ in view. C.

VER. 36. Bread; like the poorest sort of people. M.—Being degraded, they shall ask the other priests to offer sacrifice for them. Heb. "shall bend before him for a piece of silver, and for a morsel of bread." He shall humbly intreat to be employed as a priest, in order to get a livelihood.—The piece of silver. Heb. agorath, probably denotes the gerah, the smallest coin, or what was given for a day's wages. Agor means to hire, in Chal. Syr. &c. Hence the Greek, αγορασι, "I purchase."—Office. The priests served in their turns; (1 Par. xxiv.) so that the descendants of Heli must have been entitled to a subsistence. But whether God punished them, by requiring that they should ask the high priest for this, as for a favour, or this was required of all the inferior priests before they could be employed, or whether, in fine, the descendants of Abiathar were reduced to the condition of Levites, or wholly degraded, we know not. See 4 K. xxiii. 9. Eze. xlv. 10. C.—They may petition for a part of the victims which fell to the share of the priests, (M.) and might be eaten by any that was not defiled. H.

CHAP. III. VER. 1. Before. Chal. "in the days of Heli." The young Levite slept in an adjoining chamber, to wait on the high priest, not far from the sanctuary.—Precious; that is, rare; (Ch.) as such things are generally more esteemed, (H.) which are granted to few. W.—Some prophets had appeared under the former judges: but they were not so common as they were from the days of Samuel, till a little after the captivity. S. Peter ranks Samuel in the first place. Act. iii. 24. C.—Vision. No prophet was publicly recognized, to whom the people might have recourse. M.

VER. 3. Out, towards morning, (C. Ex. xxvii. 20.) when some of the lamps were to be extinguished. W.—Samuel slept. Some would transpose these words to the end of the verse, as they think it improbable that Samuel should be in the place where the high priest himself could enter only once a year. Vatab. &c.—But this change seems harsh and unnecessary, as Heli and Samuel might be in apartments contiguous to the holy place. Sanctus. M. C.—During the night none of the priests would be in the sanctuary, so that Heli might form a judgment that none of them had called Samuel. T.

VER. 7. Him. He had not before an experimental knowledge of the manner in which God revealed his will to men. C.

VER. 9. Heareth; ready to comply with whatever may be required. H.

VER. 10. Times, (secundo;) a second time, or repeatedly, or mentioning the name twice, (M.) as God does sometimes in urgent cases. Gen. xxii. 11. H.

VER. 11. Tingle, through astonishment and fright. Jer. xix. 3. 4 K. xxi. 12.

VER. 12. House, by the prophet. C. ii. 27.

VER. 13. Wickedly. Sept. "were cursing God." This is one of the places which the Jews have corrected. D.—Judge; or condemn and punish. Prov. xix. 29. C.—Chastise them, not in words only, or in a soft manner, as he had done Heb. "because his sons made themselves despicable, and he did not frown upon them." H.—Ciha denotes, to correct with a wrinkled face. M.—Aquila, "he did not look black at them," nor avert his eyes with horror. All this iniquity was done publicly, and in his presence; (C.) and he suffered his children to proceed without any restraint. It is not sufficient to reprove, when a father can correct. H.

VER. 14. Sworn. We read not of an express oath; (C.) but the denunciation of God was equivalent. H.—Iniquity, or punishment. Nothing could withhold the indignation of the Lord, in correcting the sinner, though he would shew mercy eternally to the penitent. But he saw the obstinacy of these priests, and their unhappy end. The sacrifices of the old law always presupposed suitable internal sentiments, to grant the remission of sin; and even for the avoiding of the legal punishments, they must have been offered in the true spirit of religion, which these abandoned wretches despised and neglected. C.—God threatens that he will punish their crimes for ever, as he abominates the contempt of priests. T.

VER. 15. Slept. Heb. and Sept. "laid himself down to sleep." For how could he take any rest after such terrible threats? (C.) particularly as light was beginning to appear, when he was called by God. v. 3.—Doors. Some walls had probably been built, to enclose the curtains of the tabernacle. A priest would have been employed to open the sanctuary. C.

VER. 17. And so. Lit. "May God do these things to thee, and add these also." It is not certain that he mentioned the particular punishment, (H.)

from me. May God do so and so to thee, and add so and so, if thou hide from me one word of all that were said to thee.

18 So Samuel told him all the words, and did not hide them from him. And he answered: It is the Lord: let him do what is good in his sight.

19 And Samuel grew, and the Lord was with him, and not one of his words fell to the ground.

20 And all Israel, from Dan to Bersabee, knew that Samuel was a faithful prophet of the Lord.

21 And the Lord again appeared in Silo, for the Lord revealed himself to Samuel in Silo, according to the word of the Lord. And the word of Samuel came to pass to all Israel.

CHAP. IV.

The Israelites being overcome by the Philistines, send for the ark of God: but they are beaten again: the sons of Heli are killed, and the ark taken: upon the hearing of the news Heli falleth backward and dieth.

AND it came to pass in those days, *that the Philistines gathered themselves together to fight: and Israel went out to war against the Philistines, and camped by the Stone of help. And the Philistines came to Aphec,

2 And put their army in array against Israel. And when they had joined battle, Israel turned their backs to the Philistines: and there were slain in that fight, here and there in the fields, about four thousand men.

3 And the people returned to the camp: and the ancients of Israel said: Why hath the Lord defeated us to-day before the Philistines? Let us fetch unto us the ark of the covenant of the Lord from Silo, and let though it is most probable. The Scripture refrains from repeating them. Grot. —Ruth i. 17. C.

VER. 18. Sight. Some of the Fathers think that these words proceeded from an habitual indifference, as he was not disposed to molest his sons any farther, let the consequences be what they might. S. Greg. S. Epiphanius, &c.—But others believe, that Heli was actuated by the spirit of humanity and resignation, and saved his soul. C. See C. iv. 18.—Years. The author of the Concord, between the Books of Kings and of Chronicles, thinks Samuel was then 39. D.

VER. 19. Ground, unfilled. This may be understood of the words of the Lord, (C.) which Samuel had announced. His other predictions were constantly verified, so that he was justly regarded as a true prophet. H.

VER. 20. Faithful. Heb. Neeman, may be a title of dignity, or may signify that Samuel was confirmed and continued to be a prophet. C.—According to, or by. God revealed his will to him by word, and not by visions. Sanchez.—Israel. The whole people suffered along with their leaders. H.—They were concerned in the prediction which was denounced against the house of Heli. M.—Sept. “and Samuel was entrusted to be the prophet of the Lord, to all Israel, from the ends of the earth to the ends: And Heli was very old, and his sons going went forward, and their way was wicked before the Lord.” Thus they usher in the following catastrophe. H.

CHAP. IV. VER. 1. And. Heb. inserts here the conclusion of the last verse, whence some would infer that Samuel told the Israelites to make war upon the Philistines. But as it turned out so ill, this would have tended to discredit him; and we find that the Philistines were the aggressors.—Days. This war took place immediately after the threats denounced to Heli; (Serarius) or according to Usher, and the best chronologists, about 27 years after that event. C.—The addition of the Sept. seems to insinuate, that the sons of Heli persevered for a long time in their wicked course. C. iii. 20. H.—Josephus says that Phinees was his father's coadjutor.—Salien observes that this must be considered as a fresh blot in the character of the latter, since he ought to have delivered the delinquents up to execution. Deut. xxi. 16. Tirin, on the contrary, adduces the power of his sons, and the debilitated state of Heli, to excuse his neglect. H.—Help. In Heb. Eben-ezer; so called, from the help which the Lord was pleased afterwards to give to his people, Israel, in that place, by the prayers of Samuel. C. vii. 12. (Ch.) about 21 years afterwards.—Aphec, in the tribe of Judah, not far from Maspha.

VER. 2. Here, &c. Heb. “in the field” of battle. C.—Sept. “in the ranks, in the field.” H.

VER. 3. Ancients; the commanders of the respective tribes. Heli was not able to lead on the people to battle, on account of his blindness and great age.—Enemies. All nations attribute much to the exterior marks of religion. The Israelites had witnessed the victories which had been obtained while the ark was present. Joa. vi. 4. See Num. xiv. 45. But they ought to have considered, that their infidelity rendered them unworthy of the divine protection; and that God it come in the midst of us, that it may save us from the hand of our enemies.

4 So the people sent to Silo, and they brought from thence the ark of the covenant of the Lord of hosts, sitting upon the cherubims: and the two sons of Heli, Ophni and Phinees, were with the ark of the covenant of God.

5 And when the ark of the covenant of the Lord was come into the camp, all Israel shouted with a great shout, and the earth rang again.

6 And the Philistines heard the noise of the shout, and they said: What is this noise of a great shout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they understood that the ark of the Lord was come into the camp.

7 And the Philistines were afraid, saying: God is come into the camp. And sighing, they said:

8 Woe to us: for there was no such great joy yesterday, and the day before: Woe to us. Who shall deliver us from the hand of these high Gods? these are the Gods that struck Egypt with all the plagues in the desert.

9 Take courage, and behave like men, ye Philistines: lest you come to be servants to the Hebrews, as they have served you: take courage and fight.

10 So the Philistines fought, and Israel was overthrown, and every man fled to his own dwelling: and there was an exceeding great slaughter; for there fell of Israel thirty thousand footmen.

11 And the ark of God was taken: and the two sons of Heli, Ophni and Phinees, were slain.

12 And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and came to Silo the same day, with his clothes rent, and his head strewed with dust.

was more displeased at their profanations, than at the indignity to which the sacred vessels would be exposed. He would know how to vindicate his own honour and glory. The symbols of religion were thus carried in the army, by the Persians, &c. Herod. vii.—The Romans regarded their standards as so many deities. Halicar. vi. See 2 K. vi. 21. 2 Par. xiii. 8. C.—The confidence which the Israelites placed in the ark was commendable, but their sins deserved to be punished. W. Num. x. 35.

VER. 4. Ark. On this extraordinary emergency they thought it lawful Abulensis, q. 6.—They easily obtained the consent of Heli; and his sons went to take it down, and to attend it to the army, as he was incapable of doing duty. We know not what ceremonies were used, nor whether the brothers acted as high priests alternately. C.—Cherubim. The Scripture often represents God in this manner. Ex. xxv. 22. Pa. xvii. 10. Ezech. x. 1. The commonality of the Jews attributed bodies to the angels, but to denote that they were not like those with which we are acquainted, they called them cherubim, or complex and unusual figures. C.

VER. 7. God: “Elohim.” Sept. “these gods.” They speak of the true God according to their false ideas. C.—Sighing. Sept. “deliver us, O Lord, this day.”

VER. 8. Joy. A few days ago the Hebrews were dismayed, now they shout for joy, as they did at the taking of Jericho. Heb. and Sept. “it was not so heretofore.” H.—Gods. Heb. may be rendered in the singular, with the Chal. and Arab. But the Sept. and most commentators, explain it in the sense of the Vulg. The title of high, (adirim) or magnificent, was given by the Philistines to Dagon, whom they styled Atergatis. C.—Sept. στεφανω, means, “stable, perfect,” &c. H.—Plagues, till they were overwhelmed in the Red Sea, which is surrounded with deserts. Some supply, “and (his people) in the desert.” Sept. Syr. &c. C.

VER. 9. Fight. To serve those whom they had lately oppressed, would be doubly afflicting. Salien.—If these people had seriously attended to the instructions, which they might have derived from the fall of others, they would surely never have exposed themselves to fight against the high God. But they looked upon him in no other light than their own contemptible idols. Homer often represents them as wounded, and conquered by mortal men.

VER. 10. Footmen. They had no cavalry, (C.) as God seemed to discourage any. H.—Even after Solomon's time, they had not many horsemen. C.—The Israelites had before lost 4,000: now when they were full of confidence, and fought with valour, they behold 30,000 fall. The ark proved thus fatal to them. H.

VER. 11. Slain. Abulensis (q. 17.) thinks they were fighting in defence of the ark, when they might have saved themselves by flight; so that he does not despair of their salvation. God permitted them to lose their lives in the exercise of a holy ministry, which they had so scandalously profaned. C.

VER. 12. Man. The Jews say that Saul carried these melancholy tidings, and that Goliath slew the sons of Heli. H.

13 And when he was come, Heli sat upon a stool over-against the way, watching. For his heart was fearful for the ark of God. And when the man was come into the city, he told it: and all the city cried out.

14 And Heli heard the noise of the cry, and he said: What meaneth the noise of this uproar? But he made haste, and came, and told Heli.

15 Now Heli was ninety and eight years old, and his eyes were dim, and he could not see.

16 And he said to Heli: I am he that came from the battle, and have fled out of the field this day. And he said to him: What is there done, my son?

17 And he that brought the news answered, and said: Israel is fled before the Philistines, and there has been a great slaughter of the people: moreover thy two sons, Ophni and Phinees, are dead: and the ark of God is taken.

18 And when he had named the ark of God, he fell from his stool backwards by the door, and broke his neck and died. For he was an old man, and far advanced in years. And he judged Israel forty years.

19 And his daughter-in-law, the wife of Phinees, was big with child, and near her time: and hearing the news that the ark of God was taken, and her father-in-law, and her husband, were dead, she bowed herself and fell in labour: for her pains came upon her on a sudden.

20 And when she was upon the point of death, they that stood about her said to her: Fear not, for thou hast borne a son. She answered them not, nor gave heed to them.

21 And she called the child Ichabod, saying: The

* A. M. 2388.

VER. 13. Stool. Heb. cisse; "a throne or tribunal," where Heli sat to decide any controversies, and where he had blessed the mother of Samuel. C.—God. He had great reason to fear that this was the day when his sons would perish, and he apprehended that the ark would be in danger. H.

VER. 17. Taken. Every sentence expresses something more distressing to the aged judge and father; the flight and slaughter of his people, the ruin of his children, and the loss of the ark, which must have filled all Israel with a mortal gloom and terror, lest God should have abandoned them. So many dismal circumstances oppressing the heart of Heli, he fainted away, and falling backwards, expired. H.—The Scripture takes notice of his great age, that we might not think that he killed himself in despair. Salien.

VER. 18. Named the ark, &c. There is great reason, by all these circumstances, to hope that Heli died in the state of grace; and by his temporal punishments, escaped the eternal. Ch.—But many of the Fathers condemn him, and the Scripture says nothing of his conversion, or of that of his children, so that the matter is doubtful. C.—Years. Heb. "and heavy."—Forty. Sept. "twenty," in which they are followed by many Fathers. Euseb. Sulpit. &c.—Some reconcile the two texts by saying, that Heli and Samson judged together for twenty years. But the Sept. is probably corrupted, as the other versions agree with the original. C.

VER. 19. Sudden, through extreme affliction. M.—Josephus says the child was only in his seventh month, but alive. Abulensis thinks he did not long survive his mother.

VER. 21. Ichabod. That is, Where is the glory? or, there is no glory. We see how much the Israelites lamented the loss of the ark, which was but the symbol of God's presence amongst them. How much more ought Christians to lament the loss of God himself, when by sin they have drove him out of their souls? Ch.—The ark is often called the glory of Israel. Isai. lxi. 21. Ps. xxv. 8. Ichabod might remind the people that the greatest loss had been sustained by them, as well as by his family. His mother had both in view the ark, Heli, and Phinees, her husband, (H.) when she exclaimed, ichabod, "Woe! or, Alas! the glory." Mendoza.—The Scripture does not mention Ophni's posterity. But besides this posthumous son, Phinees had one elder, who now succeeded Heli in the pontificate, (C. xiv. 3. Josephus. Salien, A. 2940, A. C. 1113,) while Samuel took possession of the civil administration, and almost totally eclipsed the glory of Achitob. Many of the Fathers have even looked upon him as the high priest. But he was only a Levite, though, by dispensation, he acted sometimes as an extraordinary priest. S. Jerom. c. Jov. i. and in 1 Cor. He reduced the people to a sense of their duty, and taught them to trust in the true God alone, and they would be protected, though deprived of the ark. This was also presently restored to them. H.

CHAP. V. VER. 1. Azotus, one of the five principal cities of the Philistines. It is astonishing that God permits these infidels to touch the ark, He who re-glory is gone from Israel, because the ark of God was taken, and for her father-in-law, and for her husband:

22 And she said: The glory is departed from Israel, because the ark of God was taken.

CHAP. V.

Dagon twice falleth down before the ark. The Philistines are grievously afflicted, wherever the ark cometh.

AND the Philistines took the ark of God, and carried it from the Stone of help into Azotus.

2 And the Philistines took the ark of God, and brought it into the temple of Dagon, and set it by Dagon.

3 And when the Azotians arose early the next day, behold Dagon lay upon his face on the ground before the ark of the Lord: and they took Dagon, and set him again in his place.

4 And the next day again, when they rose in the morning, they found Dagon lying upon his face on the earth before the ark of the Lord: and the head of Dagon, and both the palms of his hands, were cut off upon the threshold:

5 And only the stump of Dagon remained in its place. For this cause neither the priests of Dagon, nor any that go into the temple, tread on the threshold of Dagon in Azotus unto this day.

6 And the hand of the Lord was heavy upon the Azotians, and he destroyed them, and afflicted Azotus and the coasts thereof with emerods. And in the villages and fields in the midst of that country, there came forth a multitude of mice, and there was the confusion of a great mortality in the city.

7 And the men of Azotus seeing this kind of plague,

* Psal. lxxvii. 66.

sented the conduct of Oza, and of the Bethsamites, with such severity. But the law regarded the Israelites, and the pagans were ignorant of it. C.—The servant, who knows his master's will, and does not obey, shall suffer many stripes; and those who have the happiness of professing the true religion, and dishonour it by their immorality, must expect to feel the heavy hand of the judge, much more than ignorant unbelievers. H.—The Philistines could not suppose that they had gained a victory over God, since they knew he might be displeased with the conduct of his people; and they soon began to perceive that they had brought the greatest misfortunes upon themselves.

VER. 2. Dagon is the same as Derceto, Atergatis, Venus, and the moon, (C.) and was represented like a woman, (T.) as far as the waist, and a fish below. H. Judg. xvi. 23.—The ark was placed near the idol, out of respect; (C.) or as a trophy of the victory, which they attributed to Dagon. M.—Thus they hung up the arms of Saul in the temple of Asteroth; (C. xxxi. 10,) and David placed the sword of Goliath in the tabernacle.

VER. 3. Lord, as if to acknowledge his superiority. C.—No sooner was the gospel preached, than the power of the idols began to decrease. Bede. W.

VER. 4. Threshold. The idol is treated worse the second time. M.

VER. 5. The stump of, seems to be wanting in Heb. H.—Only the lower part, which resembled a fish, (Dag) was left on its pedestal.—Day. The Philistines themselves established this custom, which was a tacit confession of the imbecility of the idol, which they nevertheless continued to adore. The prophet Sophonias, (i. 9,) is supposed to accuse the Jews of imitating this superstition. The ancient Christians, out of respect, kissed the thresholds of the churches of the apostles and martyrs. Prudentius in S. Romano.—The Persians still refrain from treading on those of certain mosques, which are covered with silver. Tavernier i. 5.

VER. 6. Emerods. The particular disorder which attacked them, (Ps. lxxvii. 66,) is very uncertain. Some say it was the dysentery, or the fistula, or the venereal disease, &c. Eusebius believes that it was in punishment of their incontinency. It was very painful, and sometimes proved mortal, v. 12. Aristophanes assures us that the Athenians were punished with a shameful disorder, because they had not received the mysteries of Bacchus with due respect; and they were ordered, by the oracle, to make and carry aloft some obscene figures, before they could obtain a cure. Acharn. ii. 6.—And in, &c. The remainder of this verse is not found in Heb. Chal. Syr. Arab. &c. nor in many Greek and Latin copies. But it is conformable to the truth of history, since we read that figures of these animals were placed beside the ark, in memory of this event. C. vi. 6.—Mice, or rats. Such vermin have often obliged people to abandon their country. Plin. viii. 28.—Bellon. (ii. 78,) testifies that he saw, near Gaza, such multitudes, as to depopulate whole fields; and, if Providence had not caused the birds, called boudres, to destroy them, the people could have had no harvest.

VER. 7. God. The ark was terrible to this idol, as the relics of S. Babylas were to Apollo. W.

said: The ark of the God of Israel shall not stay with us: for his hand is heavy upon us, and upon Dagon, our god.

8 And sending, they gathered together all the lords of the Philistines to them, and said: What shall we do with the ark of the God of Israel? And the Gethites answered: Let the ark of the God of Israel be carried about. And they carried the ark of the God of Israel about.

9 And while they were carrying it about, the hand of the Lord came upon every city with an exceeding great slaughter: and he smote the men of every city, both small and great, and they had emerods in their secret parts. And the Gethites consulted together, and made themselves seats of skins.

10 Therefore they sent the ark of God into Accaron. And when the ark of God was come into Accaron, the Accaronites cried out, saying: They have brought the ark of the God of Israel to us, to kill us and our people.

11 They sent therefore, and gathered together all the lords of the Philistines: and they said: Send away the ark of the God of Israel, and let it return into its own place, and not kill us and our people.

12 For there was the fear of death in every city, and the hand of God was exceeding heavy. The men also that did not die, were afflicted with the emerods: and the cry of every city went up to heaven.

CHAP. VI.

The ark is sent back to Bethsames: where many are slain for looking through curiosity into it.

NOW *the ark of God was in the land of the Philistines seven months.

2 And the Philistines called for the priests and the diviners, saying: What shall we do with the ark of the Lord? tell us how we are to send it back to its place. And they said:

3 If you send back the ark of the God of Israel, send it not away empty, but render unto him what you owe for sin, and then you shall be healed: and you shall know why his hand departeth not from you.

* A. M. 2883.

VER. 8. Lords, next in dignity to a king, like the Persian surena. Judg. iii. 3. and xvi. 5.—About. Heb. "and they answered, let the ark . . . be carried unto Geth," in which sense the Sept. seem to have taken it. But the Vulg. is more natural. Theodoret (q. 10.) concludes, that the people imagined the mortality proceeded from some natural cause; (C.) otherwise it would have been very absurd to give such advice, as the ark would spread the contagion throughout the country, by being removed. From Geth it was sent to Accaron, when the magistrates of the city objected to its being admitted, v. 10. Josephus says, however, that it visited all the five principal cities, as if to punish them for their impiety. H.

VER. 9. Came upon, to punish, as on other occasions, to protect. Ezecl. i. 3, and xiii. 9. M.—Parts. Lit. "Their lower intestines coming out, rotted," as v. 6. H.—Heb. "their malady was concealed." Grot.—The emerods attacked them inwardly, with the most excruciating pains, for which they could find no remedy.—Skins. The ancients knew no greater luxury. Homer, Odys. i. and iii. The Heb. &c. take no notice of this particular; and there are many other omissions in the Books of Kings, which have been supplied from the Sept. C.—The skins were used instead of breeches, and to hold up the plaster and other medicines. T.

VER. 12. Die, at the sight of the ark, as the Bethsamites did afterwards. M. CHAP. VI. VER. 2. Diviners. The priests generally pretended to a knowledge of magic, among the pagans. C.

VER. 3. If, &c. The lords were already determined to send back the ark. But the priests knew that some still would not believe that it was the cause of their affliction. To convince all, they try an experiment, which would decide the matter; and in case the ark went back, some suitable presents must accompany it, as a propitiation (H.) for the sin which they would not (M.) then doubt had been incurred. H.—Though God stands in need of nothing, all must acknowledge their dependance on him. The pagans always made some present, when they appeared before their idols or monarchs, and God requires the like testimony of submission. Ex. xxiii. 15.

4 They answered: What is it we ought to render unto him for sin? and they answered:

5 According to the number of the provinces of the Philistines you shall make five golden emerods, and five golden mice: for the same plague hath been upon you all, and upon your lords. And you shall make the likeness of your emerods, and the likeness of the mice, that have destroyed the land, and you shall give glory to the God of Israel: to see if he will take off his hand from you, and from your gods, and from your land.

6 Why do you harden your hearts, as Egypt and Pharaoh hardened their hearts? ^bdid not he, after he was struck, then let them go, and they departed?

7 Now, therefore, take and make a new cart: and two kine that have calved, on which there hath come no yoke, tie to the cart, and shut up their calves at home.

8 And you shall take the ark of the Lord, and lay it on the cart, and the vessels of gold, which you have paid him for sin, you shall put into a little box at the side thereof: and send it away, that it may go.

9 And you shall look: and if it go up by the way of his own coasts, towards Bethsames, then he hath done us this great evil: but if not, we shall know that it is not his hand hath touched us, but it hath happened by chance.

10 They did therefore in this manner: and taking two kine, that had sucking calves, they yoked them to the cart, and shut up their calves at home.

11 And they laid the ark of God upon the cart, and the little box that had in it the golden mice, and the likeness of the emerods.

12 And the kine took the straight way, that leadeth to Bethsames, and they went along the way, lowing as they went: and turned not aside neither to the right hand nor to the left: and the lords of the Philistines followed them as far as the borders of Bethsames.

13 Now the Bethsamites were reaping wheat in the valley: and lifting up their eyes, they saw the ark, and rejoiced to see it.

14 And the cart came into the field of Josue, a Beth^b Exod. xii. 31.

VER. 5. Provinces. Heb. seranim, "lords."—Emerods. Theodoret observes, that the tombs of the martyrs were adorned with figures of eyes, &c. in gratitude for their having procured redress for the afflicted.—Israel, whose ark you have treated in an improper manner. C.—You shall thus confess that He chastises, and grants health. M.—Gods. Not only Dagon, but the other idols, were humbled, (H.) though the Heb. word denotes also one god, or princes, &c.

VER. 6. Hearts. Even these confess that obduracy proceeds from men; (W.) though Calvin would make God the author of it. H.

VER. 7. New cart. It would have been deemed irreverent to use one that had been employed for other profane purposes, 2 K. vi. 3.—Home. All these circumstances tended to prevent the ark from being conveyed home, (C.) unless Providence interfered.

VER. 8. Box. Heb. argaz, (which the Sept. retain. H.) means also "a purse or basket." C.—Josephus (vi. 1.) says, "the box was placed upon the ark." H.—We do not read what became of these presents afterwards: but it is supposed that they were kept in the sanctuary till the time of the captivity. C.

VER. 9. Way. Josephus observes, that they stationed the kine at three lane ends; (H.) and, as we may infer from the Heb. (v. 12,) rather with their heads turned from Bethsames. But, by this conduct, did they not tempt God? Some believe that He inspired them on this occasion, (E.) that even his enemies might be convinced, (H.) the grace of prophecy being frequently granted to wicked men, like Balaam: others believe that He gave success to their plan, though it was dictated by superstition. Even the devil sometimes speaks the truth. Mendoza. C.—People frequently used to pitch upon signs, to which God often assented. Prov. xvi. 33. M. Gen. xxiv. 14. H.

VER. 13. Wheat, about Pentecost, in May; so that the ark must have been taken in November. M.

VER. 14. Bethsamite, not the renowned general. C.—Stone, which, served instead of an altar. M.—Lord. Some pretend that the lords of the Philistines followed so far, and offered this holocaust, as the cart belonged to them but the samite, and stood there. And there was a great stone, and they cut in pieces the wood of the cart, and laid the kine upon it a holocaust to the Lord.

15 And the Levites took down the ark of God, and the little box that was at the side of it, wherein were the vessels of gold, and they put them upon the great stone. The men also of Bethsames offered holocausts, and sacrificed victims that day to the Lord.

16 And the five princes of the Philistines saw, and they returned to Accaron the same day.

17 And these are the golden emerods, which the Philistines returned for sin to the Lord: For Azotus one, for Gaza one, for Ascalon one, for Geth one, for Accaron one:

18 And the golden mice, according to the number of the cities of the Philistines, of the five provinces, from the fenced city to the village that was without wall, and to the great Abel (the stone) whereon they set down the ark of the Lord, which was till that day in the field of Josue the Bethsamite.

19 But he slew of the men of Bethsames, because Bethsamites might suppose that they had abandoned their property, as well as the golden figures; and, as the city belonged to the priests, it is most probable that they would perform this office. Males indeed were to be offered in the tabernacle. But this was an extraordinary case; so that, if there were no priests, the sacrifice might be lawful (C.) by dispensation, as we see Samuel and Elias did the like. H.—The kine and cart being consecrated to God, it was thought that they could not be turned to a more suitable purpose. C.—The ark was also present, on account of which, sacrifices were offered in the tabernacle. The arguments of Abulensis, (q. 19,) who accuses the Bethsamites of sin on this account: are not therefore satisfactory. M.

VER. 15. Vessels. Prot. less properly, "jewels of gold." H.

VER. 16. Day. It was distant about 18 miles. C.—Provinces. Heb. "lords." Some think that only five images of each sort were inclosed in the box: others suppose that the people of each village presented a golden mouse, to satisfy their own devotion, and that they might not be infested with such vermin. Clarius thinks they also sent an equal number of the other images of the anns. C. v. H.

VER. 18. Abel. A stone or rock, on which the Jews say Abraham had offered sacrifice; (S. Jer. Trad. T.) Heb. "or mourning," was so called afterwards, on account of so many being slain; (M.) so the place, to which the Egyptians accompanied the remains of Jacob, was styled "Abol," the mourning of Egypt. Gen. i. 11. IL—The Sept. read Abon, "the stone." All the towns belonging to the Philistines, as far as this place, sent each their golden images, or contributed towards those which were presented by the five lords.—Which, ark, according to the Vulg. though some would explain it of the stone. The ark might remain here for some time, and would probably have continued longer, if the people had not been so much afflicted. In the mean time, this record may have been written, as it was afterwards inserted in this book. C.—Which, though of the feminine gender, is referred to stone, because Abol is of that description, (M.) and we find several such allusions to the Heb. in our version. Prot. "unto the great stone of Abel, whereon they set down the ark of the Lord, which stone remaineth unto this day," &c. H. Vatab. &c.—Others think that the ark remained there till it was removed to Cariathiarim. C. vii. 1. Malvenda says, the memory of the transaction was fresh till the author wrote; while others maintain, that the golden figures continued with the ark till that time. C.—The Roman Sept. omits the words till this day; and reads, "where they placed upon it (the stone) the ark . . . upon the stone in the field," &c. Then with the Alex. copy, and Procopius, &c. it subjoins 19. "And the sons of Jeconias did not approve, among the men of Bethsames, that they saw the ark of the Lord, and he slew of them 70 men, and 50,000 of the people." Theodoret suspects that they were more impious than the rest. But we might as well say that they shewed more (C.) reverence, as we may explain slew of them, to denote the two curious citizens, (H.) if any dependance could be had on this addition. C.

VER. 19. Seen; and curiously looked into. It is likely this plague reached to all the neighbouring country, as well as the city of Bethsames. Ch.—For we need not suppose that all these deaths took place in one day. The ark seems to have continued there for some time, v. 18. Heb. "because they had looked into, or at the ark." IL—It was unlawful, even for the Levites, to touch or to look at the ark uncovered; (T. Num. iv. 15, 20,) and the Heb. expression into, is often taken in this sense. Prov. vii. 15. and xi. 4.—Men of rank. S. Greg. &c. "An-elents." Chal. Some would suppose that only these 70 perished, and were of as much value as 50,000 of the common people: for they will not allow that the latter number was slain. Out of that number, 70 were made victims of the divine justice. T. Sa.—Bochart translates, "he slew 70 out of 50,000." The Syr. and Arab. read, "5070 men." Josephus only admits 70 who were slain, "because they dared to touch the ark with their profane hands, as they were not priests." Heb. "and he slew of the people 70 men, 50,000 men." C.—Kennicott seems to suspect that a cipher has been added in the Heb. at the end. Prot. "50,000, and threescore and ten men." IL—Some would insert advent in the Vulg. and 5,000 "were present." D.—The Chal. Sept. &c. constantly retain these numbers, and we must not judge of God's severity by our feeble reason. C.—This decision is the most common. M.—The people had indulged their curiosity, to see whether they had seen the ark of the Lord, and he slew of the people seventy men, and fifty thousand of the common people. And the people lamented, because the Lord had smitten the people with a great slaughter.

20 And the men of Bethsames said: Who shall be able to stand before the Lord this holy God? and to whom shall he go up from us?

21 And they sent messengers to the inhabitants of Cariathiarim, saying: The Philistines have brought back the ark of the Lord, come ye down and fetch it up to you.

CHAP. VII.

The ark is brought to Cariathiarim. By Samuel's exhortation the people cast away their idols and serve God alone. The Lord defeateth the Philistines, while Samuel offereth sacrifice.

AND the men of Cariathiarim came, and fetched up the ark of the Lord, and carried it into the house of Abinadab, in Gabaa: and they sanctified Eleazar, his son, to keep the ark of the Lord.

2 And it came to pass, that from the day the ark of the Philistines had taken the tables of the law out of the ark, &c. Serarius.—As the ark was terrible to the infidels, so it was also to those true believers, who treated it with disrespect. W.

VER. 20. Us. These words may denote that they thought God too severe, or else, that they judged themselves unworthy of his presence. There is no proportion between an offence of God, and what the creature can do to make him satisfaction. C.

VER. 21. Up. This is the import of the Heb. The Vulg. reducite, "bring it back," insinuates, that the Bethsamites desired the people of Cariathiarim to convey the ark to their city, on the road to Silo, where they probably thought it ought to be placed, in the tabernacle. But it seems God ordered it otherwise and the ark was never restored to its former splendid station, surrounded with all the vessels and ornaments of the tabernacle. David made something similar and placed an altar before it, while the Mosaic tabernacle and altar were removed from Silo to Nob, (C. xxi. 1.) and afterwards to Gabaa. 2 Par. i. 5. Salien (A. 3030) doubts not but they were thence translated to Solomon's temple, during the octave of the dedication, along with those of David, from Mount Sion. 2 Par. v. 2. and viii. 3. Why the ark was not placed in this most magnificent abode, but removed from the stone of Abel to the houses of Abinadab, of Obbededom, of David in Sion, till all the original ornaments, prescribed by God to Moses, with a still more splendid apparatus, met to adorn the temple of Solomon, we cannot easily explain. Perhaps it might be to render that event more glorious, and to represent the troubled state of the Jewish Synagogue, immediately preceding the appearance of the great Redeemer, who would establish a church without spot or wrinkle, shining brighter than the sun, and replenished with all heavenly graces. H.—Cariathiarim is the same place as Cariathbaal, and Baala, (Jos. xv. 9. 60.) Baalim Juda, (2 K. vi. 2.) and Sedeiarim, about ten miles from Jerusalem. Gabaa was "a hill," (C.) belonging to the same city, where the house of Abinadab stood; (H.) and Nob was also in the vicinity, while Silo was much farther north. C.—The priests still remained, and offered sacrifice in the tabernacle, though occasionally some of them might come to offer extraordinary victims before the ark, in those private houses which were thus converted, as it were, into the holy of holies. Salien, A. 2941, where he observes from S. Jerom, that the tabernacle was removed to Nob about the same time as the ark was deposited at Cariathiarim; and no doubt both the translations were in consequence of the divine command, signified by the mouth of his prophet Samuel. H.

CHAP. VII. VER. 1. In Gabaa. That is, on the hill, for Gabaa signifieth a hill. Ch. 1 Par. xiii. 6.—It was perhaps the citadel, (H.) or an elevated situation, such as were generally chosen for the temples both of the true and of false gods. C.—Abinadab was a Levite of renowned virtue. M.—The people of this city knew that the ark was a source of blessings to those who received it with respect; and, that the Bethsamites had been punished only for their irreverence. W.—Samuel was first consulted before the people, in a body, undertook to remove the ark; and here he was probably recognized for the judge of Israel, in which character he henceforward appears, exhorting all to obey the Lord with sincerity. He appoints a general assembly at Masphath, to enter into a solemn covenant with the Lord, and to adopt means for recovering their liberty. We have only a very concise account of these important transactions, owing to the modesty of the author, which the Holy Spirit would teach us to imitate. C.—Sanctified. Chal. "set over," (M.) prepared by suitable purifications, &c. C.—Some think, that Eleazar received the priestly or the Levitical consecration, Num. viii. 7. We have no proof that he was of the family of Aaron, nor does his name occur in the genealogies of the Levites, as they are perhaps too short. Josephus (vi. 2.) asserts that he was a Levite. C.—But even a laic, like Obbededom of Geth, might have been the guardian of the ark, as he would not have to touch it. Salien, A. C. 1112.—Eleazar had two brothers, who acted in the same capacity when David intended to remove the ark to Sion. At that time he was perhaps dead, or decrepit, as his father might be on this occasion. H.—It is not improbable but they were of the race of Aaron. T.

VER. 2. Year. Some would date all the subsequent events from this period. But it is credible that Samuel should neglect for twenty years to make this ex-the Lord abode in Cariathiarim, days were multiplied (for it was now the twentieth year) and all the house of Israel rested, following the Lord.

3 And Samuel spoke to all the house of Israel, saying: "If you turn to the Lord with all your heart, put away the strange gods from among you, Baalim and Astaroth: and prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only, and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philistines.

4 Then the children of Israel put away Baalim and Astaroth, and served the Lord only.

5 And Samuel said: Gather all Israel to Masphath, that I may pray to the Lord for you.

6 And they gathered together to Masphath, and they drew water, and poured it out before the Lord, and they fasted on that day, and they said there: We have sinned against the Lord. And Samuel judged the children of Israel in Masphath.

7 And the Philistines heard that the children of Israel were gathered together to Masphath, and the lords of the Philistines went up against Israel. And when the children of Israel heard this, they were afraid of the Philistines.

8 And they said to Samuel: Cease not to cry to the Lord our God for us, that he may save us out of the hand of the Philistines.

hortation to the people! and how will it be true, that God humbled the Philistines during the whole time (C.) of his administration, which perhaps (H.) only lasted so many years? v. 13. C.—It is more probable, therefore, that the power of the enemy was broken by the destruction caused by the presence of the ark, which kept them under due restraint for a long time; and when they attempted, once more, to molest the Israelites, they were entirely discomfited by a miraculous storm, at the prayer of Samuel, v. 10. Salien (A. 2960) allows, that this took place in the twentieth year since the ark came to Cariathiarim, in which year Samuel appointed his children judges at Bersabee, though he continued to act, and was judge for twenty-three years, (some say thirty-eight) and even under the reign of Saul had almost an absolute sway, as the prophet of the Lord. H.—Rested: continued steadfast, (Sanctius) "cried unto," (Pagnin.) "Looked (H.) or returned," Sept. "Lamented after the Lord." Heb. M.—They were not soon induced to break this solemn covenant. Isai. vii. 2. T.

VER. 3. Saying. When the ark was translated, (C.) and on many other occasions, this was the theme of his discourse to the Israelites, pressing them to cease from doing evil, and to perform good works. H.—Thus he preached every year in the different cities. v. 16. Lyran.—Astaroth. These were the principal idols of the country, (Salien, Judg. ii. 11.) under which all the others are included. M.—Prepare. God lays this injunction upon us, to remind us of our liberty, and we beg that he would convert us, acknowledging the necessity of his grace. C.—"God does not require impossibilities, but by his command, admonishes thee to do what thou canst, and to pray for what thou art not able to perform, and he assists thee, that thou mayst be able to perform it." C. Trid. vi. 11. S. Aug. &c.

VER. 5. Masphath lay south of Jerusalem, (C.) and was a convenient place for all to meet at. M. They came armed, and the Philistines (C.) suspecting their designs, proceeded to attack them. H.

VER. 6. Lord, having purified themselves with it. Ex. xix. 24. Others think that it was a kind of a protestation, that they were willing to perish if they proved faithless; (Sa.) or a symbol that they rejected every vestige of idolatry, and every sin, with true repentance. Sanctius. T.—Water was also the most ancient species of libation, before honey, and afterwards wine were adopted. Porphyrius.—Though the law did not prescribe it, there was no prohibition. On the last day of the feast of tabernacles, the people went to the pool of Silo to fetch water, and to pour it out in the temple, as a libation to the Lord; and it is thought that Jesus Christ alludes to this custom, Jo. vii. 24. Lamy. Introd. See 2 K. xxiii. 16. C.—Fasted. They confess their sins and do penance, while Samuel sits as judge, (Salien) and had been endeavouring for twenty years to excite them to repentance, and to adhere to the one true religion. T.

VER. 8. Philistines. Those who distrust their own strength, and join true repentance with prayer, striving to interest the friends of God in their cause, may confidently hope for victory. H.

VER. 9. Sucking lamb. Any might be used, when eight days old, except for the paschal lamb, which must be older; a yearling. Ex. xxiii. 9. Lev. xxii. 27.—Offered it, either by the hands of the priests, or by dispensation, which authorized him to sacrifice out of the tabernacle.—Whole, without blemish; (Ecc. xlvi. 19.) or, not having time to divide it, according to the ritual. Lev. i. 12. He consumed even the skin. Salien.—Sept. "with all the people."

VER. 10. Israel. The princes of the Tyrians had come to the assistance of the enemy; (Ecc. xlvi. 21. C.) but all in vain. The greatness of the army only increases the greatness of the carnage, when the Lord enters the lists. H.—The 9 And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and offered it whole for a holocaust to the Lord: and Samuel cried to the Lord for Israel, and the Lord heard him.

10 And it came to pass, when Samuel was offering the holocaust, the Philistines began the battle against Israel: but the Lord thundered with a great thunder on that day upon the Philistines, and terrified them, and they were overthrown before the face of Israel.

11 And the men of Israel going out of Masphath, pursued after the Philistines, and made slaughter of them till they came under Bethchar.

12 And Samuel took a stone, and laid it between Masphath and Sen: and he called the place The stone of help. And he said: Thus far the Lord hath helped us.

13 And the Philistines were humbled, and they did not come any more into the borders of Israel. And the hand of the Lord was against the Philistines, all the days of Samuel.

14 And the cities which the Philistines had taken from Israel, were restored to Israel, from Accaron to Geth, and their borders: and he delivered Israel from the hand of the Philistines, and there was peace between Israel and the Amorrites.

15 And Samuel judged Israel all the days of his life:

sacred penman speaks with great modesty of this victory, which is nevertheless one of the most important recorded in Scripture. The Philistines could not recover themselves for 20 years; they found it necessary to restore the cities which they had taken (C.) to relinquish the tribute, and to come to such conditions as Samuel imposed upon them. He suffered them, however, to keep possession of some strong holds, such as Gabaa, from which they were expelled by Jonathan. Salien says in the 22d year of Samuel, and the last of Achitub, the high priest, A. 2961.

VER. 11. Bethchar, "the house of the penetrator." Cor denotes the celestial fluid, which the Philistines probably supposed was discharged by the heavens, independently of the great Creator. Hence their punishment was very appropriate. Parkhurst.—The latter heathens always represented their Jupiter armed with thunder and lightning—

"The thunder roared aloud—

Th' affrighted hills from their foundation nod,
And blaze beneath the lightning of the God;
At one regard of his all-seeing eye,
The vanquish'd triumph, and the victors fly."

Pope, Iliad xvii. 596.

VER. 12. Sen, "the tooth," a craggy rock of that appearance. Syr. Beth asan. C.—Some take it to be the same with Bethchar. Malvenda.—It was before ignoble, (Salien) and the situation not known, till this monument was erected, with the inscription, Thus far, &c.—Help; "Aben-ezer," mentioned before, C. iv. 1. These religious monuments were not prohibited by the law. Lev. xxvi. 1. Samuel would take every precaution that they should not become objects of idolatry, as he was under the immediate influence of the Holy Spirit. C.

VER. 13. Any more, for a long time, (M.) during Samuel's administration; for we find them again attacking Saul. C. xiii. This expression is often used to denote a cessation of some continuance. Isai. xxiii. 12. 15. 2 K. vii. 10.

VER. 14. Geth, which two cities still continued in their possession. Others, which had fallen to the share of Dan, they gave up, which explains Judg. xviii. 1. 31.—Philistines. Here ended the forty years' servitude. C.—Salien (A. 2860) rather thinks that it terminated in the death of Samson, when it was judged expedient to entrust the reins of government into the hands of an old man, Eli, the high priest, as there was no need of an expert general, the heads of the Philistines being all destroyed. Judg. xiii. 1. H.—Amorrites: the dispersed nations of Chanaan were all kept under. C.

VER. 15. Life; as sole judge for twenty years, (Gordon. D.) and conjointly with Saul till he died, almost 100 years old, a year or two before the unfortunate king. Saul put him on a level with himself; (C. xi. 7.) and he continued to be regarded as the oracle of Israel ever since he was about forty years old; (C.) or he did not long survive the election of the new king, (M.) as Tirin, Sanctius, &c. reduce his reign to two years, allowing thirty-eight to Samuel, so that both filled up the space of forty years. Act. xiii. 20. The life of Samuel, on this supposition, will not much exceed sixty, and he must have come into power in early life. C. xii. 2. H.—This verse is no proof that the present book was written long after Samuel's time. D.

VER. 16. Places. Sept. "in all these holy places." Some take Bethel to mean the city, where the ark was, (C.) or the holy of holies, in the tabernacle, at Silo, &c. H.—The northern tribes might meet him at Bethel; those on the east of the Jordan, at Galgala, of Benjamin; and the tribes of Juda, Simeon, and Galgai and to Masphath, and he judged Israel in the foresaid places.

17 And he returned to Ramatha: for there was his house, and there he judged Israel: he built also there an altar to the Lord.

CHAP. VIII.

Samuel growing old, and his sons not walking in his ways, the people desire a king.

AND^a it came to pass, when Samuel was old, that he appointed his sons to be judges over Israel.

2 Now the name of his first-born son was Joel: and the name of the second was Abia, judges in Bersabee.

3 And his sons walked not in his ways: but they turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment.

4 Then all the ancients of Israel being assembled, came to Samuel to Ramatha.

5 And they said to him: Behold thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways: ^bmake us a king, to judge us, as all nations have.

6 And the word was displeasing in the eyes of Samuel, that they should say: Give us a king to judge us. And Samuel prayed to the Lord.

7 And the Lord said to Samuel: Harken to the Dan, might have an opportunity of hearing the holy prophet, and decide their controversies, at Masphath. C.—Thus Samuel gave an excellent instruction to pastors and governors, to watch over their people. H.

VER. 17. Ramatha; his native place. His high office would not allow him to remain always near the tabernacle. C. i. 11. and 28. C.—Lord, by his direction, (M.) both to satisfy his own devotion, and that he might consult the Lord when the people wanted advice. C.

CHAP. VIII. VER. 1. Old. Houbigant would translate, "when he was growing old," senectute, as he supposes he was now nearly sixty, having judged about twenty five years, and living other twenty as partner with Saul. Prol. lxii. See C. vii. 15. H.—Judges, as his delegates in the southern parts of the country. C.—Josephus says one of them was stationed at Bethel. Ant. vi. 3.

VER. 2. In, or "as far as" Bersabee, from Dan, that is, throughout Palestine. C.

VER. 3. Judgment. Samuel was not to blame, and hence he was not punished like Heli. M.—However, the misconduct of the children of these two judges, in succession, (H.) gave occasion to the people to demand a king, who might not be tempted by bribes. W.—It is surprising that most of the great men who are mentioned in history, had degenerate children. C.—Such were some of David's sons, as well as Cambyzes, the son of Cyrus, &c. H.—Was it because their fathers were too much taken up with the affairs of state, to watch over the education of their children? or rather, because these young men confided too much on the merits of their family, and took no pains to tread in the footsteps of their parents? C.—"We have here, says Josephus, a manifest proof that children do not always resemble their parents, but sometimes good men spring from the wicked; and on the contrary, the virtuous have an evil progeny."

VER. 5. Judge us, in a different manner from what had been hitherto done. H.—By a crying ingratitude, they reject the government of a wise old man, who had rendered them the most signal services. Perhaps the power of Naas, king of the Ammonites, might afford them some pretext for acting as they did. C.—As all, &c. They seem to prefer the dominion of kings, who ruled over the surrounding barbarous nations as they thought proper, (H.) before one who should be tied down to observe the laws, prescribed by God, (M.) in case the Israelites should wish to have a king. Deut. xvii. H.—In the East, monarchy was the most ancient form of government. Tacit. Hist. iv. Just. i. "Principio, imperium penes Reges erat."

VER. 6. Samuel. Nothing could be more disrespectful to him, nor more ungrateful to God, who had distinguished them from all other nations, and had taken the government upon himself, and appointed the judges as his lieutenants. The foolish Israelites wish to throw off this sweet yoke, and to be ruled in an arbitrary manner, like the infidels, as if God could not otherwise protect them from their enemies.—Lord. Josephus says that he passed the night without food or sleep, and the Lord appeared to him. The will or petition "of the people, filled Samuel with great uneasiness, who on account of his innate justice, did not like the regal power, as being too exorbitant. He rather approved of an aristocracy, as more conducive to the welfare of the people" Ant. vi. 4. He means such an aristocracy as the Israelites had been accustomed to, under the guidance of men divinely commissioned, whence he elsewhere very properly styles it a theocracy, or "the government of God" H.

VER. 7. Thee. "God, in anger, grants a person what he desires wrongfully." S. Aug.—He permits the people to follow their own plans; and the Hebrews believe, that he gave them Saul to punish them, being well apprised of his proud and cruel nature. Cuneus Rep. C.—Rejected, &c. The government of Israel voice of the people in all that they say to thee. For they have not rejected thee, but me, that I should not reign over them.

8 According to all their works, they have done from the day that I brought them out of Egypt until this day: as they have forsaken me, and served strange gods, so do they also unto thee.

9 Now, therefore, hearken to their voice: but yet testify to them, and foretell them the right of the king, that shall reign over them.

10 Then Samuel told all the words of the Lord to the people that had desired a king of him,

11 And said: This will be the right of the king that shall reign over you: He will take your sons, and put them in his chariots, and will make them his horsemen, and his running footmen, to run before his chariots, 12 And he will appoint of them to be his tribunes, and his centurions, and to plough his fields, and to reap his corn, and to make him arms and chariots.

13 Your daughters also he will take to make him ointments, and to be his cooks, and bakers.

14 And he will take your fields, and your vineyards, and your best oliveyards, and give them to his servants.

15 Moreover he will take the tenth of your corn, hitherto had been a theocracy: in which God himself immediately ruled, by laws which he had enacted, and by judges extraordinarily raised up by himself: and therefore he complains that his people rejected him, in desiring a change of government, (Ch.) and wishing to appoint their own magistrates. The priests and judges had been commissioned by God. Ex. xix. Deut. xvii. W.

VER. 8. Thee. He comforts Samuel, by observing that it was not so much any fault of his, as the people's habitual fickle temper, which made them seek for this change. M.

VER. 9. The right. That is, the manner (nishpat) after which he shall proceed, having no one to control him, when he has the power in his hands. Ch.—He intimates that the kings will frequently act in a tyrannical manner, v. 11. M.—But the holy Fathers observe, that herein they do what is unjust, and contrary to God's law. S. Gregory remarks, that Ahab is punished for taking the vineyard of Naboth, (3 K. xxi.) while David will not take a piece of ground belonging to Ornan, even for an altar, without first paying a just price for it. 1 Par. xxi. 25. Some of these rights or customs are prohibited to the king. Deut. xvii. 16. It is true, kings enjoy great prerogatives above judges, but never contrary to the law. They cannot take their subjects' goods; but the latter are bound to contribute to the maintenance of government; and, if they refuse, may be compelled. If kings should be guilty of excesses, "yet they are not to be deposed by the people, . . . but must be tolerated with patience, peace, and meekness, till God, by his sovereign authority, left in his Church, dispose of them, which his divine wisdom and goodness often deferreth to do, as here he expressly forewarneth, (v. 18) because he will punish the sins of the people by suffering evil princes to reign." Job xxxiv. 30. Conc. Later. c. iii. de hæret. W. See S. Thomas, 2. 2. q. 12. a. 2.—We may here also remark, that the people petitioned for a king, yet God made the choice; and, when he proved rebellious, selected another by the hand of Samuel, though he permitted the former to enjoy his dignity till death. C. xiii. and xxxi. H.—Grotius (Jur. i. 1. and 4.) maintains that at Samuel here proposes the just rights of the king, and that the prince has a greater right to any one's personal property, for the public good, than he has himself. In effect, the eastern kings regarded their subjects as slaves. But those who governed the Hebrews were to follow a different conduct; and Samuel is so far from approving of what some of them would do, that he mentions their tyranny, in order to dissuade the people from what they so inconsiderately requested. C.—The misconduct of rulers, is one of the most trying inconveniences to which a nation can be exposed. In such circumstances, "bear, says a pagan historian, (H.) with the luxury and avarice of those who hold dominion, as with other natural evils. There will be vices as long as men subsist, but neither will these continue for ever, and they are compensated by the intervention of better things or men." Meliorum interventu pensantur. Tacit.—Grotius at last seems to conclude, (Sup. c. iv. p. 97) that the right of the king here specified is only apparent, in as much as it includes "the obligation of making no resistance." H.

VER. 11. Chariots; to be drivers, (M.) or will make them fight from them.—Footmen, or guards. Xenophon places 4000 armed with bucklers before, and 2000 with lances all round the chariot of Cyrus. See C. xxii. 17.

VER. 12. Centurions, or body-guards. M.—These offices might be honourable, but at the same time disagreeable, when people were forced to accept of them, and to neglect their more pleasing agricultural employment. The multitude of officers increases the expenses of the prince, and falls heavy upon the people. C.

VER. 14. Vineyards, as Ahab did, though he first proposed to buy it.

VER. 15. Tenth. God had already claimed one tithe, which he had abanand of the revenues of your vineyards, to give to his eunuchs and servants.

16 Your servants also, and handmaids, and your goodliest young men, and your asses, he will take away, and put them to his work.

17 Your flocks also he will tithe, and you shall be his servants.

18 And you shall cry out in that day from the face of the king, whom you have chosen to yourselves: and the Lord will not hear you in that day, because you desired unto yourselves a king.

19 But the people would not hear the voice of Samuel, and they said, Nay: but there shall be a king over us, 20 And we also will be like all nations: and our king shall judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles for us.

21 And Samuel heard all the words of the people, and rehearsed them in the ears of the Lord.

22 And the Lord said to Samuel: Harken to their voice, and make them a king. And Samuel said to the men of Israel: Let every man go to his city.

CHAP. IX.

Saul, seeking his father's asses, cometh to Samuel, by whom he is entertained.

NOW* there was a man of Benjamin, whose name was Cis, the son of Abiel, the son of Seror, the son of Bechorath, the son of Aphia, the son of a man of Jemini, valiant and strong.

2 And he had a son whose name was Saul, a choice and goodly man, and there was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he: from his shoulders and upward he appeared above all the people.

doned to his sacred ministers. We do not read that the kings of the Hebrews ever claimed (C.) a second tithe precisely, (H.) though they might have done it by the example of other kings. Lev. xxvii. 30. Joseph had asserted the fifth part of the revenues of Egypt for its monarchs. Gen. xlvii. 26.—Eunuchs, Heb. saris, denotes an officer of the court. It was not lawful for the Israelites to make any eunuchs, but they might employ foreigners.

VER. 16. Goodliest, in strength (C.) and beauty. M.—Solomon made his people work at his buildings, and David employed an officer in the fields, 1 Par. xxvii. 26. Sept. have read in a different manner. "He will tithe . . . your excellent droves of oxen," C.—They also specify, "the tithe of asses for his work," H.

VER. 17. Servants, or slaves. The Hebrews enjoyed greater liberty than any of the nations in the East, yet they are styled slaves. C. xvii. 8. They were nearly on the same footing as the ancient Germans. "Each governed in his own place of abode. The Lord requires of them a quantity of corn, cattle, or clothing, and so far the slave obeys;" seruus hactenus parat. Tacit. Germ. The Hebrews were also bound to follow the king to battle. The Egyptians, Persians, &c. were under greater oppression. Herodotus (iii. 31.) informs us, that when Cambyzes designed to marry his own sister, his counsellors replied, that they found no express law to this effect; but there was another, "that the king of Persia may do whatever he please." The highest officers, and even his brothers, were styled "slaves, δούλοι, of the great king." Arist. Mund.

VER. 18. The face, privately; for even groans will not be free. M.—The event justified this prediction, as most of the kings of the Hebrews ruled like tyrants, and what was worse, engaged their subjects in idolatry, and drew down the heaviest judgments upon them. C.—Hear you, so as to deliver you from oppression, though he is always willing to hear those who truly repent. W.

VER. 19. Over us. The populace is generally inconstant, and fond of changes. M.

VER. 20. Nations. We are neither better nor worse than the rest. What extravagance! for a people to abandon a state of happiness, and the dominion of God, and to prefer the service of a man! C.—For us. This was the pretext, as Naas threatened them with war. C. xii. 12. M.

CHAP. IX. VER. 1. Abiel, who is also called Ner. 1 Par. viii. 32. Cajetan. —Strong. Heb. "a mighty man of power," either of body, or of riches.

VER. 2. Goodlier, better proportioned, more handsome, (H.) as the daughters of men are styled good, or fair. Gen. vi. 1. People seek for corporal advantages in those who command. The poets always represent their deities and heroes as taller than the rest of men. A king of Sparta was fined for marrying a little woman. Arist. Polit. iv. The Ethiopians give their highest offices to those who have the most engaging appearance. Herod. iii. 20. C.—Little people may be elegant, but never majestic or perfectly beautiful. Arist. Ethic. iv. 3.

3 And the asses of Cis, Saul's father, were lost: and Cis said to his son Saul: Take one of the servants with thee, and arise, go, and seek the asses. And when they had passed through Mount Ephraim,

4 And through the land of Salisa, and had not found them, they passed also through the land of Salim, and they were not there: and through the land of Jemini, and found them not.

5 And when they were come to the land of Suph, Saul said to the servant that was with him: Come, let us return, lest perhaps my father forget the asses, and be concerned for us.

6 And he said to him: Behold there is a man of God in this city, a famous man: all that he saith, cometh certainly to pass. Now, therefore, let us go thither, perhaps he may tell us of our way, for which we are come.

7 And Saul said to his servant: Behold we will go: but what shall we carry to the man of God? the bread is spent in our bags: and we have no present to make to the man of God, nor any thing at all.

8 The servant answered Saul again, and said: Behold there is found in my hand the fourth part of a sicle of silver, let us give it to the man of God, that he may tell us our way.

9 Now in time past in Israel, when a man went to consult God, he spoke thus: Come, let us go to the seer. For he that is now called a prophet, in time past was called a seer.

10 And Saul said to his servant: Thy word is very good, come let us go. And they went into the city, where the man of God was.

11 And when they went up the ascent to the city, they found maids coming out to draw water, and they said to them: Is the seer here?

M.—Choice, is taken in the same sense as goodly, and does not intimate that Saul was one of the elect. Carthus.

VER. 3. Asses. The greatest noblemen rode upon such. Judg. v. 10. A prince of Esau fed asses. Gen. xxx. 24. Agriculture, and keeping sheep, were the employment of men of the first eminence in the heroic ages, as hunting and other equally laborious exercises are now in fashion. C.

VER. 4. Salisa, the ancient Segor, (M.) or rather a place 15 miles from Diospolis. Euseb.—Salim, or Sual, not far from Galgal. C. xiii. 17.

VER. 5. Suph, where Ramatha, the birth-place of Samuel, was situated. C. i. 1. C.

VER. 6. Famous. Chal. "honourable." Sept. "covered with glory." The observations of a servant may often claim attention. Saul seemed to be less acquainted with this extraordinary personage than his servant. H.

VER. 7. What. Were they uninformed of the disinterestedness of Samuel? or did they think that he would sell his oracles? By no means. But the manners of the ancients were very different from ours, and people chose to shew their respect for God, the king, prophets, &c. by making them some present. People still never go to visit one another in Syria without something of the kind, as it would be deemed uncivil or cruel to act otherwise. See 8 K. xiv. 1. Mic. iii. 11.—Bread. They would have made a present of some. Saul received two loaves. C. x. 4. See C. xvi. 20. Hence we may form some idea of the beautiful simplicity of those ages. People were then forced to carry their own provisions, as there were no inns which supplied any. C.—Present. Sportula means a little basket. H.—But here it is taken for a present, as meat was commonly given. M.—Cyrus sent his friends geese half eaten, from his own table, for greater distinction. Xenop. H.—Heb. "what have we?" Syr. "we have none of our provisions left." C.

VER. 8. Silver. About seven-pence English.—Stator, (H.) is put instead of Heb. "sicle." M.

VER. 9. A seer. Because of his seeing, by divine light, hidden things, and things to come, (Ch.) by inspiration. W.—They had the things which they foretold so clearly in view. The Sybil cries out Bella, horrenda bella.

Et Tiberim multo spumantem sanguine cerno. Virg.

The Egyptians had their "seers of the gods." Manetho.—Balaam styles himself "the man seeing visions." Num. xxiv. 4. 16. Some suppose that Samuel wrote this towards the close of his life, when the title of prophet was become more common, though the former was in use many years afterwards. 1 Par. xxi. 9. 2 Par. xvi. 10. Others think that this verse was added by Esdras, &c.

VER. 11. Water, perhaps for the sacrifice. Thus Fab. Victor says, "Rhea, according to the established custom, by which young women went to draw water for the sacrifices, proceeded to the fountain in the grove of Mars." C.

12 They answered and said to them: He is: behold he is before you, make haste now: for he came to-day into the city, for there is a sacrifice of the people to-day in the high place.

13 As soon as you come into the city, you shall immediately find him, before he go up to the high place to eat: for the people will not eat till he come; because he blesseth the victim, and afterwards they eat that are invited. Now, therefore, go up, for to-day you shall find him.

14 And they went up into the city. And when they were walking in the midst of the city, behold Samuel was coming out over-against them, to go up to the high place.

15 Now the Lord had revealed to the ear of Samuel the day before Saul came, saying:

16 To-morrow about this same hour I will send thee a man of the land of Benjamin, and thou shalt anoint him to be ruler over my people Israel: and he shall save my people out of the hand of the Philistines: for I have looked down upon my people, because their cry is come to me.

17 And when Samuel saw Saul, the Lord said to him: Behold the man, of whom I spoke to thee, this man shall reign over my people.

18 And Saul came to Samuel in the midst of the gate, and said: Tell me, I pray thee, where is the house of the seer?

19 And Samuel answered Saul, saying: I am the seer; go up before me to the high place, that you may eat with me to-day, and I will let thee go in the morning: and tell thee all that is in thy heart.

20 And as for the asses, which were lost three days ago, be not solicitous, because they are found. And for whom shall be all the best things of Israel? Shall they not be for thee and for all thy father's house?

21 And Saul answering, said: Am not I a son of Jemini of the least tribe of Israel, and my kindred the last among all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? Why then hast thou spoken this word to me?

22 Then Samuel taking Saul, and his servant, brought them into the parlour, and gave them a place at the head of them that were invited. For there were about thirty men.

23 And Samuel said to the cook: Bring the portion which I gave thee, and commanded thee to set it apart by thee.

24 And the cook took up the shoulder, and set it before Saul. And Samuel said: Behold what is left, set it before thee, and eat; because it was kept of purpose for thee, when I invited the people. And Saul ate with Samuel that day.

25 And they went down from the high place into the town, and he spoke with Saul upon the top of the house: and he prepared a bed for Saul on the top of the house, and he slept.

26 And when they were risen in the morning, and it began now to be light, Samuel called Saul on the top of the house, saying: Arise, that I may let thee go. And Saul arose: and they went out both of them: to wit, he and Samuel.

Acts xiii. 21.

VER. 12. A sacrifice. The law did not allow of sacrifices in any other place, but at the tabernacle, or temple, in which the ark of the covenant was kept; but Samuel, by divine dispensation, offered sacrifices in other places. For which dispensation this reason may be alleged, that the house of God in Silo, having lost the ark, was now cast off; as a figure of the reprobation of the Jews. Psal. lxxvii. 60, 67. And in Cariathiarim, where the ark was, there was neither tabernacle, nor altar. Ch.—At least that of Moses was in the tabernacle. See C. vi. 21. H.—Samuel was just come up to the city, from a place called Naiot, where he instructed some other prophets. C. xix. 19. The maids point him out to Saul; and God, at the same time, reveals to his prophet, that the person who addressed him should be king. C.—The high place. Excelsum. The excelsa, or high places, so often mentioned in Scripture, were places of worship, in which were altars for sacrifice. These were sometimes employed in the service of the true God, as in the present case: but more frequently in the service of idols, and were called Excelsa, which is commonly (though perhaps not so accurately) rendered high places; not because they were always upon hills, for the very worst of all, which was that of Topheth, or Geonnon, (Jer. xix.) was in a valley; but because of the high altars, and pillars, or monuments erected there, on which were set up the idols, or images of their deities; (Ch.) so that they might be called "the high things." H.—Before Solomon built the temple, from the time that the tabernacle was deprived of the honour of having the ark, people immolated on such heights, 3 K. iii. 2. M.—On one of these, at Ramatha, Samuel was going to offer a peace-offering, and to feast with the heads of the city, (C.) or perhaps of the nation, who were expecting the result of his consultation of the Lord, respecting their petition of a king. H.

VER. 13. The victim, begging the blessing, which was the office of the most honourable person at table, as he also gave thanks for all. C.

VER. 14. Midst. That is, simply in the city, or entering the gate, where Samuel met them, v. 18.

VER. 15. Ear, privately. C.—Thus Jonathan promises to give David private information. C. xx. 13. H.

VER. 16. Ruler. Heb. Nagid, "Leader." Sept. "Archon." Chal. "King." The Israelites demanded a king, to lead them, and to fight for them; and Homer (Iliad iii.) gives this idea of the chief magistrate, "a good king and stout warrior," which Alexander so much admired.—Philistines. They had been repressed by Samuel; but they had begun to gain the ascendancy, so as not to suffer the Israelites to have a blacksmith among them, &c. Saul gained some victories over them, and over the other enemies of his people, towards the beginning of his reign. C. xiii. and xiv. C.—To me. God threatened that he would not hear them, when they should grow weary (H.) of their king. C. viii. 18. But he protects his people against the efforts of their foreign enemies. M.—Oppression of the innocent cries to heaven for vengeance. W.

VER. 18. Gate. Sept. "city." Chas. "within the gate," where business was transacted.

VER. 19. Place, while Samuel retired, for a while, to his own house. He sends Saul to the assembly, (C.) where he would meet him to dine. H.—Heart, or desire to know. M.

VER. 20. Best. The regal power, which all desired. Heb. "to or on whom is all the desire of Israel?" Any great felicity is called a desire, as the Messias, the spouse in the Canticle, v. 16. Ag. ii. 8. Sept. "to whom the beautiful things of Israel?"

VER. 21. Jemini, or Benjamin, which was always one of the smallest tribes, and, since the unfortunate war, still more reduced; so that none of the other tribes could well take umbrage, or be filled with jealousy, when they saw a king selected from it.—Last. Though all were equally noble, yet some families were more numerous, possessed greater riches, or had filled the posts of honour more frequently than others. Nothing can be more charming than the modesty of Saul on this occasion. C.—Happy would he have been, had he continued always to cherish the like sentiments. H.—He and his posterity might then have long enjoyed the regal dignity. C. xiii. 18. M.

VER. 22. At the head. Sept. "among the first of those . . . seventy men," which number Josephus also has instead of 30. Saul's servant was probably an Israelite, who had hired himself for a time. The first place, at the head of the table, was the most honourable. Luke xiv. 8. The king of Persia placed his most trusty friend at his left hand, and those of the highest dignity, in order, at his right. Cyropæd. vii. &c. C.

VER. 24. Shoulder. It was the left, (M.) as the right shoulder belonged to the priest, and laymen were not allowed to taste of it after it had been offered in sacrifice. Lev. vii. 32. Some suppose that Samuel had this right shoulder for his portion. But he was not a priest. C.—This part was assigned to the most eminent man at table; and Josephus calls it "the royal portion." M.—Heb. "the shoulder, and what was upon it, (or he held it up) and set it (the whole quarter) before Saul." Aquila, &c. translate "the thigh," left or reserved. Sept. "laid by." It was then the fashion to place large pieces of meat before those who were to be most honoured. Gen. xviii. 6. Homer, &c.—People. Heb. "till now it has been kept for thee, I said, I have invited the people." He insinuates that he knew of his coming, though it seemed so accidental, even when he invited the company. Sept. "eat, for it is placed before thee, as a memorial, by the people, cut it in pieces." H.—As the shoulder supports a burden, so the king was reminded to maintain the interests of the commonwealth. M.

VER. 25. House, probably giving him some instructions respecting his future dignity.—And he, &c. This seems to be a second translation of the former sentence, taken from the Sept. It is omitted in several Latin MSS. C.—Sept. "and he went down from the Bama (perhaps "the steps" or high place, where the sacrifice and feast had been celebrated) into the city; and they made a bed for Saul, on the house top; and he lay down, (26) and when the day dawned, Samuel," &c. The roofs are flat in those countries, and such an airy situation would be most agreeable in such hot climates. H.—The common people, generally, only spread a mat on the ground, and cover themselves with a sheet; to take their rest, either under a gallery, or in the open air. Homer places his strangers, with

CHAP. X.

Saul is anointed. He prophesieth, and is changed into another man. Samuel calleth the people together, to make a king: the lot falleth on Saul.

AND "Samuel took a little vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and kissed him, and said: Behold, the Lord hath anointed thee to be prince over his inheritance, and thou shalt deliver his people out of the hands of their enemies, that are round about them. And this shall be a sign unto thee, that God hath anointed thee to be prince.

2 When thou shalt depart from me this day, thou shalt find two men by the sepulchre of Rachel in the borders of Benjamin to the south, and they shall say to thee: The asses are found which thou wentest to seek: and thy father, thinking no more of the asses, is concerned for you, and saith: What shall I do for my son?

3 And when thou shalt depart from thence, and go farther on, and shalt come to the oak of Thabor, there shall meet thee three men going up to God to Bethel, one carrying three kids, and another three loaves of bread, and another carrying a bottle of wine.

4 And they will salute thee, and will give thee two loaves, and thou shalt take them at their hand.

5 After that thou shalt come to the hill of God, where the garrison of the Philistines is: and when thou

VER. 27. Before us, and. Heb. ("and he passed on,") agreeably to his master's order. H.

CHAP. X. VER. 1. Vial, in the form of a lentil. Plin. xviii. 12.—Oil. This anointing seems to have been peculiar to the kings, priests, and prophets of the Hebrews, who prefigured Jesus, the great anointed of God. S. Aug. in Ps. xlv. The custom was very ancient. Judg. ix. 8. It is thought that those kings, who succeeded their fathers by their birth-right, and without opposition, did not receive any unction. C.—But the silence of Scripture is no proof on this head; and the Fathers seem to be convinced that the custom subsisted till Christ appeared. S. Just. dial. &c. H.—The Rabbins pretend that the sacred ointment was used for the kings of Juda, but not for those of Israel. It is not probable that it was used for either. Ex. xxx. 32. 3 K. i. 39. We read that Jehu was anointed king of Israel; (4 K. ix. 6,) and we may suppose that common oil was used, in his regard, as well as for the other kings. The perfume or balm of Judea, does not spot the garments on which it may fall. Plin. xii. 25. It was poured on the head; the Rabbins say in the form of a crown, (C.) or cross. H.—But this is uncertain. The ceremony has been preserved, with respect to Christian kings, who, according to Innocent I. should be anointed on the shoulders and arms, while prelates receive the unction on the head.—Kissed him, out of respect. Ps. ii. 12. C.—Behold. Heb. "Is it not because?" &c. H.—And thou . . . prince. All this is wanting in the Heb. &c. But it is conformable to the Vat. Sept.; (C.) the Alex. has "to be prince over his people, over Israel: and thou shalt rule over the people of the Lord, and shalt save it from its enemies around;" as we have explained. C. ix. 18. H.—Saul was anointed with a small vessel, to signify that his kingdom should not subsist long; and with oil, to remind him of mercy, light, and health to his people. S. Greg. W.

VER. 2. Rachel, near Bethlehem. Gen. xxxv. 16.—South. Sept. or "mid-day." Heb. Tkeltach, is very obscure. Some take it for a proper name. C.—Prot. "at Zelzach." Others for some musical instrument, as if these travellers were "dancing," as the Sept. insinuate, and playing on musical instruments, like the prophets, v. 5. It does not appear how Saul would come near Bethlehem, in his journey from Ramatha to Jabaa, unless Ramatha lay more to the south than it is represented, which it could not do, being in the tribe of Ephraim; so that we might translate the Heb. "Thou wilt find two men of Zelzelach, a place near the tomb of Rachel, on the borders of Benjamin, and they," &c.

VER. 3. Thabor, very distant from the famous mountain (C.) in Zabulon. M.—Bethel. Where there was at that time an altar of God; it being one of the places where Samuel judged Israel, (Ch.) and which had always been considered as a place of devotion, since Jacob had his vision. Gen. xxviii. 19. It lay to the east of Gabaa, so that Saul might easily meet these pilgrims. C.—Wine, for libations, as the other things were for a sacrifice and feast, as well as for presents to the officiating priests.

shalt be come there into the city, thou shalt meet a company of prophets coming down from the high place, with a psaltery, and a timbrel, and a pipe, and a harp before them, and they shall be prophesying.

6 And the Spirit of the Lord shall come upon thee, and thou shalt prophesy with them, and shalt be changed into another man.

7 When therefore these signs shall happen to thee, do whatsoever thy hand shall find, for the Lord is with thee.

8 And thou shalt go down before me to Galgal, (for I will come down to thee), that thou mayst offer an oblation, and sacrifice victims of peace: seven days shalt thou wait, ^btill I come to thee, and I will shew thee what thou art to do.

9 So when he had turned his back to go from Samuel, God gave unto him another heart, and all these things came to pass that day.

10 And they came to the foresaid hill, and behold a company of prophets met him: and the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he prophesied in the midst of them.

11 And all that had known him yesterday and the day before, seeing that he was with the prophets, and prophesied, said to each other: What is this that hath happened to the son of Cis? is Saul also among the prophets?

12 And one answered another, saying: And who is their father? therefore it became a proverb: "Is Saul also among the prophets?"

^b Infra xiii. 8.—^c Infra xix. 24.

VER. 4. Hand. They would be very acceptable to Saul, who had none. The strangers might suppose that they could purchase more at Bethel. C.

VER. 5. The hill of God. Gabaa, in which there was also at that time, a high place or altar. Ch.—The prophets were not molested by the infidels, in performing their devotions, as people consecrated to the Lord, who do not meddle with war, are privileged by the consent of nations. Grot. Jur. iii. 11. 10. C.—Prophets. These were men whose office it was to sing hymns and praises to God; for such in holy writ are called prophets, and their singing praises to God is called prophesying. See 1 Par. alias 1 Chron. xv. 22. and xxv. 1. Now there were in those days colleges, or schools for training up these prophets; and it seems there was one of these schools at this hill of God; and another at Naioth in Ramatha. See 1 Samuel xix. 20. 21. &c. Ch.—The Jews say there were in every city of Judea congregations of this nature. They lived like monks, abstaining, for the most part, from marriage, though some had children, 4 K. iv. 1. They had a superior at their head, to whom God frequently revealed future things. The rest were instructed how to explain the prophecies, to compose and sing canticles. Some of them were inspired, like Saul, only for a time. It is supposed that Samuel instituted these colleges, and this is the first time we find them mentioned. C.—They were of infinite service in preserving the true religion. H.

VER. 6. Spirit of piety. M.—Man. Thou shalt act, and entertain sentiments worthy of a great prince, (C.) and be no longer employed in rustic works. M.—Cape regis animus et in istam fortunam, quæ dignus es, istam continentiam profer. "Adopt the sentiments of a king, said the deputies of Alexander to Abdolonymus, but carry along with you this moderation, when you assume the dignity which you deserve to enjoy." Curtius iv.

VER. 7. Find. Undertake any enterprise, how difficult soever, which God may propose to thee. C.

VER. 8. Galgal. Here also by dispensation was an altar of God. Ch.—Th do, Saul went thither, after the victory which he had obtained over the Ammonites, when he was confirmed in his dignity. C. xi. 14. But the mention of seven days, seems to indicate that Samuel is here speaking of that event, when the war against the Philistines was at hand, and Saul neglected to wait the appointed term, before he ventured to offer sacrifice. C. xiii. 8. C.—Some think that Samuel engages always to meet him at Galgal, on any important business, within the space of seven days. Serar.—Others translate, "I will be at Galgal with thee, and we will offer sacrifices for seven days." C.—Prot. "I will come down to thee to offer burnt-offerings," &c. which is conformable to the Sept. Indeed Saul was probably blamed for offering the victims himself. H.—Obedience was enjoined him to try his humility. S. Greg. W.

VER. 11. Prophets. This proverb received a fresh confirmation, when Saul was going to seize David, and was forced by the Spirit to join with the college of prophets, in singing God's praises. C. xix. ult. H.—It may be applied to those who are unexpectedly raised to a high dignity, or enabled to speak or to do extraordinary things, like the apostles, when they spoke various languages, &c. Delrio adag. 178. C.

13 And when he had made an end of prophesying, he came to the high place.

14 And Saul's uncle said to him, and to his servant: Whither went you? They answered: To seek the asses: and not finding them, we went to Samuel.

15 And his uncle said to him: Tell me what Samuel said to thee.

16 And Saul said to his uncle: He told us that the asses were found. But of the matter of the kingdom of which Samuel had spoken to him, he told him not.

17 And Samuel called together the people to the Lord in Maspha:

18 And he said to the children of Israel: Thus saith the Lord the God of Israel: I brought up Israel out of Egypt, and delivered you from the hand of the Egyptians, and from the hand of all the kings who afflicted you.

19 But you this day have rejected your God, who only hath saved you out of all your evils and your tribulations: and you have said: "Nay: but set a king over us. Now therefore stand before the Lord by your tribes, and by your families.

20 And Samuel brought to him all the tribes of Israel, and the lot fell on the tribe of Benjamin.

21 And he brought the tribe of Benjamin and the kindreds thereof, and the lot fell upon the kindred of Metri, and it came to Saul, the son of Cis. They sought him therefore, and he was not found.

22 And after this they consulted the Lord whether he would come thither. And the Lord answered: Behold he is hidden at home.

• Supra viii. 19.

VER. 12. Their father. That is, their teacher or superior. As much as to say, Who could bring about such a wonderful change as to make Saul a prophet? (Ch.) but the Lord, whose Spirit breatheth where he will. Jo. iii. 8. H.—Sept. "Who is his father? is it not Cis?" The Jews seem to have been in a like consternation, when they observed respecting Jesus, who wrought such miracles, Is not this the carpenter's son? People are unwilling to reflect, that God can select his instruments and ministers from every profession, and make the tongues of infants eloquent. H.—The spirit of prophecy is a gift of God, not of parents. M.—But a prophet is not without honour, save in his own country. Mat. xiii. 57. H.

VER. 13. Place. Returning to his father's house, after the Spirit had ceased to inspire him, and the prophets had retired home. His relations, suspecting something more than common had been revealed to Saul by Samuel, began to ask him questions: but he had the prudence to keep (C.) his secret to himself, either in obedience to Samuel's injunction, when he sent the servant before, (H.) or out of humility, (M.) or to prevent the dangers of envy from his own kindred. Josephus.

VER. 17. Lord, who always presided over such assemblies. This was convened to elect a king, whom God pointed out by lots. Some assert that the ark, and the high priest, in his pontifical ornaments, were present. C.—Adrichomius says Maspha was only three hours' walk from Cariathiarim. M.

VER. 19. Families. Lots were first drawn to determine the tribe, then to find out which of the great families, and which house, was to give a king to Israel. H.—See Jos. vii. 14. M.—God was pleased thus to convince them that the election proceeded from him. S. Greg. W.

VER. 21. Metri. We find none of this name, 1 Par. viii. 1. It is probably a title which some of the great patriarchs of Benjamin had acquired by shooting, as Metri means "an archer or bowman." C.

VER. 22. Home. Heb. "he hath hidden himself among the stuff," (H.) instruments, or baggage, at Maspath. He acted thus out of modesty, judging himself unfit for the exalted dignity, (C.) and shewed that he did not seek for it. M.

VER. 23. Upwards. God condescended to gratify the desires of the people, who chiefly regarded the stature and corporal qualifications of their king. "Many nations are accustomed to look with veneration on a majestic person, and think none are capable of great exploits except those whom nature has made very handsome." Curtius vi. See C. ix. 2. More civilized nations rather consider the qualities of the mind. Alexander, Agesilaus, &c. were not of a majestic stature.

VER. 24. King. Our favourite song, "God save," &c. is an amplification of this sentiment. H.

VER. 25. Before the Lord. It seems that the ark was therefore present. This record of Samuel is lost, so that we cannot determine what laws he prescribed on this occasion. C.—Josephus (vi. 5.) says that he wrote and read in the hearing of all, and in the presence of the king, what evils would ensue under the regal government; and deposited the writing in the tabernacle, that the truth of the 23 And they ran and fetched him thence: and he stood in the midst of the people, and he was higher than any of the people from the shoulders and upward.

24 And Samuel said to all the people: Surely you see him whom the Lord hath chosen, that there is none like him among all the people. And all the people cried and said: God save the king.

25 And Samuel told the people the law of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the Lord: and Samuel sent away all the people, every one to his own house.

26 Saul also departed to his own house in Gabaa: and there went with him a part of the army, whose hearts God had touched.

27 But the children of Belial said: Shall this fellow be able to save us? And they despoised him, and brought him no presents; but he dissembled as though he heard not.

CHAP. XI.

Saul defeateth the Ammonites, and delivereth Jabes Galaad.

AND 'it came to pass about a month after this, that Naas, the Ammonite, came up, and began to fight against Jabes Galaad. And all the men of Jabes said to Naas: Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee.

2 And Naas, the Ammonite, answered them: On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may pluck out all your right eyes, and make you a reproach in all Israel.

prediction might be ascertained. He probably alludes to the denunciation of tyranny, which had been made C. viii. and which he says Samuel repeated on this occasion. But the prophet would also take a copy of the law of the kingdom, prescribed by Moses, (Deut. xvii.) and deliver it to Saul, that he might make it the rule of his conduct, and not imitate the wicked customs of tyrants. H.—The whole process of this memorable event he would also write down, (M.) as we read it at present in this chapter, placing it in the proper order, as a continuation of the sacred history which Moses and Josue had commenced; and like them, depositing the sacred volume beside the ark, or in the tabernacle. See Jos. xxiv. 26. H.

VER. 26. Touched; to consider the appointment of Saul, as his act. Afterwards they retired home, and the new king returned to his wonted occupations. The army here denotes part of the assembly, as the young men came with their leaders ready, if called, to march to battle. Ex. vi. 26. Deut. xx. 9. C.

VER. 27. Belial; seditious men, perhaps of the tribe of Ephraim, (Judg. xii.) or of Juda, to whom the regal power seemed to belong. Gen. xlix. Salien.—Presents, in testimony of their submission. See Judg. iii. 15. 3 K. iv. 21. The eastern kings still expect that ambassadors should bring noble presents, otherwise they deem themselves insulted. P. Martyr.—Subjects dare not appear before their king, in Thrace, without some such offering. Xenophon, Anab. vii. &c. C.—Not. He knew that the throne is established by mercy. Prov. xx. 28. Hence he chose to pardon these discontented people after he had obtained the victory, and was even solicited to make an example of them. Salien, A. 2962.—Severity might have alienated the minds of many, as he was hardly yet confirmed in his dignity, and the war against Ammon was threatening. M.

CHAP. XI. VER. 1. After this. So far is omitted in the Heb. &c. but we find it in most editions of the Sept. and in Josephus. C.—Fight. He had threatened an invasion before, and had perhaps (H.) attacked some of the tribes on the east side of the Jordan, and treated them with the same cruelty as he intended for those of Jabes, which was a city of the first consequence. Josephus, vi. 5.—Naas, "a serpent." There was a king of this country of the same name, in the days of David. The people had been quiet since Jephthe had made such havoc among them, about ninety years before. Judg. xi. C.—Covenant. They were willing to pay him tribute. But it seems they had offered him some insult, which made the king resolve to punish them more severely. They make no mention of Saul, as they did not wish to let the king know of his election; (Salien) and perhaps had no great confidence in him, (H.) as he was not yet fully confirmed in his dignity, (C.) and had let a whole month pass without taking any measures for the deliverance of his country, though it was on that pretext that he was elected. H.—They considered what had passed as of no consequence. C. xii. 12.

VER. 2. Eyes: strange proposal! He would not render them quite blind, that he might not be deprived of their service. But he wished to render them

3 And the ancients of Jabes said to him: Allow us seven days, that we may send messengers to all the coasts of Israel: and if there be no one to defend us, we will come out to thee.

4 The messengers therefore came to Gabaa of Saul: and they spoke these words in the hearing of the people: and all the people lifted up their voices, and wept.

5 And behold Saul came, following oxen out of the field, and he said: What aileth the people that they weep? And they told him the words of the men of Jabes.

6 And the Spirit of the Lord came upon Saul, when he had heard these words, and his anger was exceedingly kindled.

7 And taking both the oxen, he cut them in pieces, and sent them into all the coasts of Israel, by messengers, saying: Whosoever shall not come forth, and follow Saul and Samuel, so shall it be done to his oxen. And the fear of the Lord fell upon the people, and they went out as one man.

8 And he numbered them in Bezek: and there were of the children of Israel three hundred thousand: and of the men of Judah thirty thousand.

9 And they said to the messengers that came: Thus shall you say to the men of Jabes Galaad: To-morrow, when the sun shall be hot, you shall have relief. The messengers therefore came, and told the men of Jabes, and they were glad.

10 And they said: In the morning we will come out to you: and you shall do what you please with us.

11 And it came to pass, when the morrow was come, that Saul put the people in three companies: and he came into the midst of the camp in the morning watch, and he slew the Ammonites until the day grew hot,

VER. 4. Of Saul. Sept. "to Saul," which may remove the surprise of Abulensis, that the king is not mentioned. Salien.—Saul was absent at the time, so that they made known the threatening danger to the people.

VER. 5. Field. So David fed sheep, even after he was anointed king. The ancients had very different sentiments of royalty from what we have. Their kings and great men did not esteem it beneath them to cultivate the earth. Several of them wrote on the subject.

VER. 8. Bezek, where Adonibezec had reigned, (Judg. i. M.) near the place where they crossed the Jordan, a little below Scythopolis, to go to Jabes, which was about thirty miles distant. C.—Thousand. Josephus makes the army consist of 770,000, who were collected at Bala. Sept. have 600,000 of Israel; and they agree with this author, in allowing also 70,000 to Judah alone. But this is a larger army than what came out of Egypt, and exceeds the limits of probability, unless all assembled, as the preceding verse seems (H.) to insinuate; (M.) and we find far greater numbers, 2 Par. xiii. 3. 17, if no (H.) error have there crept in. have not found any thing in my hand. And they said: He is witness.

6 And Samuel said to the people: It is the Lord, who made Moses and Aaron, and brought our fathers out of the land of Egypt.

7 Now, therefore, stand up, that I may plead in judgment against you before the Lord, concerning all the kindness of the Lord, which he hath shewn to you, and to your fathers:

8 ^aHow Jacob went into Egypt, and your fathers cried to the Lord: and the Lord sent Moses and Aaron, and brought your fathers out of Egypt, and made them dwell in this place.

9 And they forgot the Lord their God, ^band he delivered them into the hands of Sisara, captain of the army of Hasor, and into the hands of the Philistines, and into the hand of the king of Moab, and they fought against them.

10 But afterwards they cried to the Lord, and said: We have sinned, because we have forsaken the Lord, and have served Baalim and Astaroth: but now deliver us from the hand of our enemies, and we will serve thee.

11 ^cAnd the Lord sent Jerobaal, and Badan, and Jephthe, and Samuel, and delivered you from the hand of your enemies round about, and you dwelt securely.

12 But seeing that Naas, king of the children of Ammon, was come against you, you said to me: ^dNay, but a king shall reign over us: whereas the Lord your God was your king.

13 Now, therefore, your king is here, whom you have chosen and desired: Behold the Lord hath given you a king.

14 If you will fear the Lord, and serve him, and hearken to his voice, and not provoke the mouth of the Lord: then shall both you, and the king who reigneth over you, be followers of the Lord your God.

15 But if you will not hearken to the voice of the Lord, but will rebel against his words, the hand of the Lord shall be upon you, and upon your fathers.

16 Now then stand, and see this great thing which the Lord will do in your sight.

17 Is it not wheat-harvest to-day? I will call upon the Lord, and he shall send thunder and rain: and you shall know, and see that you yourselves have done a great evil in the sight of the Lord, in desiring a king over you.

18 And Samuel cried unto the Lord, and the Lord sent thunder and rain that day.

19 And all the people greatly feared the Lord and Samuel. And all the people said to Samuel: Pray for thy servants to the Lord thy God, that we may not die, for we have added to all our sins this evil, to ask for a king.

20 And Samuel said to the people: Fear not, you have done all this evil: but yet depart not from following the Lord, but serve the Lord with all your heart.

21 And turn not aside after vain things, which shall never profit you, nor deliver you, because they are vain.

22 And the Lord will not forsake his people for his great name's sake: because the Lord hath sworn to make you his people.

23 And far from me be this sin against the Lord, that I should cease to pray for you: and I will teach you the good and right way.

24 Therefore fear the Lord, and serve him in truth, and with your whole heart, for you have seen the great works which he hath done among you.

25 But if you will still do wickedly: both you and your king shall perish together.

SAUL ^ewas a child of one year when he began to reign, and he reigned two years over Israel.

^a Gen. xlii. 5.—^b Judges iy. 2.—^c Judges vi. 14.

VER. 6. Made, and appointed them to rule the people. Jerem. xxxvii. 15. Le Clerc.—Egypt. Sept. add, "is witness;" and some Latin copies have, "is present." C.

VER. 7. Stand up, like people cited to the bar. Having undergone his own trial with oppressors, Samuel shews that the people will not come off so well at the tribunal of God, whom they had treated with greater disrespect, injustice, and ingratitude than they had himself, as he convinced them by an astonishing and terrible storm. H.—Kindness. Sept. "justice," as the same Heb. word implies both. God had treated his people with mercy and with justice (C.) alternately. H.

VER. 9. Hasor. See Judg. iv. 1.—Moab. Jephthe delivered the people from the hands of the Ammonites, who claimed all that country. Judg. xi. 15. Eglon had been slain by Aod, before the Chanaanites enslaved Israel. C.

VER. 11. Jerobaal and Badan. That is, Gedeon and Samson, called here Badan or Bedan, because he was of Dan. Ch. Chald. &c. W.—Others think that Jair, (Judg. x. 3. Junius, Usher,) or, according to the Sept. "Baraa," are designated. Jair was a descendant of one Bedan, 1 Par. ii. 21. C.—But we do not read that Jair performed any great exploit. H.—Samuel. He speaks of himself as of any other man: as the interests of God were not to be betrayed by an unseasonable modesty. C.—Josephus only specifies Jephthe and Gedeon. H.—The Israelites thought that they could dispose things better than God had done under the judges; and hence their sin is so often repeated. S. Greg. W.

VER. 13. Desired. S. Aug. (in Ps. li.) considers this as a kind of sarcasm. C.—You will see what advantages you will derive from your choice. M.

VER. 14. Of the Lord, causing him to look upon you and treat you with indignation. C.—Sept. "and do not contend with the mouth," or against the orders of the Lord, which cannot fail to excite his displeasure. M.—If you prove faithful under this new form of government, though it be less agreeable to God, he will still protect you. H.

VER. 15. Fathers. Sept. "king," v. 25. Superiors (W.) are often styled fathers. Syr. &c. "as upon your fathers," (C.) which is adopted by the Prot. "as it was against," &c. H.

VER. 17. Wheat-harvest. At which time of the year it never thunders or rains in those countries. Ch.—The wheat-harvest is towards the end of June.

^a Supra viii. 19. and x. 19.—^e A. M. 2011, A. C. 1093.

The usual seasons for rain are only spring and autumn. S. Jerom in Amos iv. 7, &c.—Thunder. Lit. "voices." Ps. xvii. 14. C.—See. Being fully convinced by the miracle, which declares the will of God in the clearest manner. Though God was pleased thus to manifest his displeasure, at the people's assuming to themselves the right of changing the established form of government, by insisting so much upon having a king at this time, we cannot hence infer, as Paine and some late seditious writers have done, that the regal power is in itself an evil. It might be contrary to a theocracy, and still might suit the manners of some nations better than any other form. To determine precisely what sort of government is the best, would be an arduous task. We admire our own constitution; yet our ally, the prince of the Brazils, has lately forbidden any panegyric of it to be printed in his dominions. All innovations are, generally, attended with the most serious inconveniences. H.

VER. 19. And Samuel, at whose prayer the Lord had sent such a storm, lest he should punish them as they deserved. But the prophet alleviates their fears, and teaches them to refrain from idolatry, and he will still continue to perform his duty in praying for them, and giving them good advice. Salien.—The fear of God is increased by that which the people shew for his servants.

VER. 20. Following, as that would imply despair. To come boldly before him would argue presumption. Therefore, S. Mary Magdalene keeps at the feet of Jesus Christ. W.

VER. 21. Vain and wicked idols. Heb. thohu, full of "confusion" and disorder.

VER. 22. Sake. This motive often proved the salvation of Israel. Ex. xxxii. 12. The Scriptures wholly tend to impress upon our minds, a sense of our own weakness, and of God's infinite glory and perfection. C.—We may all say, "Our hope to rise is all from Thee—our ruin's all our own." Austin.

VER. 23. The Lord. For a pastor to neglect instruction, is not only detrimental to the people, but injurious to God. H.—Way. None contributed more than Samuel to keep the people within due bounds, during the reign of Saul. C.

VER. 25. Together. Sept. "shall be rejected." Saul soon experienced the effect of this prophetic menace; and the Jews were, at last, also cast away. H.

CHAP. XIII. VER. 1. Of one year. That is, he was good, and like an innocent child, and for two years continued in that innocency. Ch. S. Greg. W.

2 And Saul chose him three thousand men of Israel: and two thousand were with Saul in Machmas, and in Mount Bethel: and a thousand with Jonathan in Gabaa of Benjamin: and the rest of the people he sent back every man to their dwellings.

3 And Jonathan smote the garrison of the Philistines which was in Gabaa. And when the Philistines had heard of it, Saul sounded the trumpet over all the land, saying: Let the Hebrews hear.

4 And all Israel heard this report: Saul hath smitten the garrison of the Philistines: and Israel took courage against the Philistines. And the people were called together after Saul to Galgal.

5 The Philistines also were assembled to fight against Israel, thirty thousand chariots, and six thousand horsemen, and a multitude of people besides, like the sand on the sea-shore for number. And going up they camped in Machmas, at the east of Bethaven.

6 And when the men of Israel saw that they were straitened (for the people were distressed), they hid themselves in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in dens, and in pits.

7 And some of the Hebrews passed over the Jordan into the land of Gad and Galaad. And when Saul was yet in Galgal, all the people that followed him were greatly afraid.

8 And he waited seven days, according to the appointment of Samuel, and Samuel came not to Galgal, and the people slipt away from him.

9 Then Saul said: Bring me the holocaust, and the peace-offerings. And he offered the holocaust.

10 And when he had made an end of offering the holocaust, behold Samuel came: and Saul went forth to meet him and salute him.

11 And Samuel said to him: What hast thou done? Saul answered: Because I saw that the people slipt from me, and thou wast not come according to the days appointed, and the Philistines were gathered together in Machmas,

12 I said: Now will the Philistines come down upon

• Supra x. 8.

—Israel. This verse is omitted in some copies of the Sept. It is extremely difficult to explain. Some translate Heb. "Saul was a son of one year old," &c. Syn. Others, "Saul begot a son the first year of his reign, (Raban) Ibozeth, who was 40 years old when his father died, after governing all that while. Serar.—Syr. and Arab. "In the first or second year of the reign of Saul. . he chose," &c. Hardouin supposes that the people dated their years by his reign only so long. Some think that the Heb. is imperfect; and an ancient interpreter has, "Saul was 30 years old, when he began," &c. C.—The Rabbins and many commentators assert, that the reign of Saul lasted only two years. T.—But some of them explain this, as if he reigned alone only that term before he was rejected, when he could only be regarded as an usurper. Others, that he obtained the whole power for two years, after the death of Samuel. Usher concludes that, during the incursions of the Philistines, he could hardly be said to reign, and these commenced after he had been king two years. We might also translate, "Saul was the son of the year of his reign, (when he was confined at Galgal) and in the second year. . he chose," &c. C.—Perhaps the first translation, though somewhat mystical, may be the most literal, shewing that for one year Saul continued to act with the most engaging affability and moderation. But in the second he threw off the yoke, and was, in his turn, rejected by the Lord, as we shall soon behold. H.—Scaliger seems to prefer allowing that the numeral letters have been omitted by some transcriber, and that we should read, Saul was 30 years old. This, and similar variations, he attributes to the compendious method of using numeral letters; (Kennicott) an inconvenience very frequently attending all MSS. both sacred and profane. Taylor.

VER. 2. Dwellings, from Galgal (Salien) or from some other general assembly. C.—These 3000 were to be the king's guards, supported at the expense of the nation, that the people might begin to feel one part of the royal prerogative. Salien, A. C. 1089.

VER. 3. Land. As soon as the next cities had heard the alarm, they sounded the trumpet, and so the news was conveyed to the most distant parts, in a short time. Judg. iii. 27.—Hebrews. Probably those "on the other side" the Jordan, who presently came to the assistance of their brethren, v. 7. Oslander.—It might also be the usual beginning of a proclamation. See Dan. iii. 4. M.—Sept. and Aquila have read a instead of r, in hivrim. "Let the servants (subjects) attend." Ag. "The slaves have rebelled," (Sept.) meaning the Philistines, who ought to have been subject to Israel. H.

VER. 4. Courage. Heb. "and Israel was in abomination (stinking) with the Philistines." See Ex. v. 21. C.—Sept. "despised as nothing the strangers."—Were should be omitted, as the verb is active, clamavit, in the Vulg. and Sept. though the Prot. have "were called," &c. They shouted with alacrity, that Saul would lead them on to battle. H.—Oslander thinks that they "exclaimed against him," for engaging them in this new war.

VER. 5. Chariots. This number seems almost incredible, as the Philistines were but a contemptible nation, compared with various others which never brought so many chariots into the field. Zara, king of Ethiopia, in his army of a million men, had only 300. 2 Par. xiv. 9. Adarezer had 1000, and Sesac 1200 chariots, while Solomon could only boast of 1400. Hence the Syr. and Arab. read "3000;" and it is supposed that the Heb. has im, at the end of shelosh, redundant. Bochart, Capel, &c. The number of horsemen would otherwise bear no proportion to the chariots. We must also observe, that under this name the Scripture denotes those who are upon the chariots. They were drawn by two horses, and one man guided the horses, while another stood on the chariot; and in battle, eight other soldiers attended it. These remarks will tend to explain many difficult passages, in which we read of chariots being slain and hamstringed, which may be understood of the men and horses, 2 K. viii. 4. and x. 18. In one place we read 700, and in another 7000 chariots were slain, (1 Par. xix. 18,) the latter number comprising the 10 attendants; so here, the Philistines might have 3000 chariots, which being each accompanied with ten men, might be counted 30,000. C.—Others think that there were 30,000 men fighting on chariots. Lyran, Salien.—The Tyrians might have come to the assistance of their old friends, as C. vii. 10. See 3 K. iv. 26. M.—Number. Josephus specifies "300,000 infantry." H.—Bethaven. Many copies of the Sept. read "Bethoron," more probably, as Bethel must have been on the east of Machmas, which lay north of Gabaa, C. xiv. 5. (C.) "over-against Bethoron on the south." Graba. H.—Heb. also, "having Bethaven on the east." Bethel was called Bethaven after the schism of Jeroboam, so that this name seems to have been substituted by a later writer, (C.) unless it might have had both names long before. Jos. xviii. 12. H.—This is not contrary to C. vii. 18, as the Philistines had been quiet for a long time. Heb. alom, properly denotes the term of a jubilee or 50 years. D.

VER. 6. Straitened, the people from the northern provinces, and provisions being cut off, by the immense army of the Philistines. C.—Providence was pleased to convince the people that, though they had been able to muster so large a force against the Ammonites, at so short a warning, they must not depend on the efforts of their new king. H.—He suffered many of the army to retire, as he sent away most of Gedcon's soldiers, that the whole glory of the victory might be attributed to him. Salien.—Dens. So the Chal. Some explain the Heb. "high places (H.) or towers." C.—Sept. "ditches or holes." M.—Bethpos. In that country there are many spacious caverns. C. xxiv. Jos. x. H.

VER. 7. Hebrews. Sept. "the people, who came over, (the river) crossed the Jordan." H.—The title of Hebrews, "passengers," seems to be applied to those who lived on the east side of the river, (C.) though probably some others would seek for a retreat in that country, or even hide themselves in the regions of the Ammonites, out of which they had lately driven the inhabitants. H.—Heb. "the Hebrews passed over the Jordan, the land of," &c. C.—Afraid. Sept. in a sort of "ecstasy" of fear.

VER. 8. Of Samuel. Yet the prophet condemns his proceedings, either because he did not wait till the expiration of the seventh day, (C. S. Ignatius, &c. Salien) or because he ventured to offer sacrifice himself. Lyran. after Sulp. Severus, &c. H. W.—He had however the high priest with him; (C. xiv. 3.) so that he might have performed this sacred function, at the request of Saul: and we do not find that the latter is accused of sacrilege. Salien.—The magnitude of the punishment is no proof of the nature of the transgression, as God often punishes, with great severity, sins which to us might appear venial. H.—This is true, particularly with respect to those who first dare to transgress a positive command; (Num. xv. 32. M.) as Saul seems to have done the injunction of the prophet C. x. 8. The regal dignity was a gratuitous gift. Salien.—With a trembling heart, we must consider how he was rejected for neglecting to wait so short a time, (S. Greg.) when the circumstances seemed to plead so strongly in his favour. How impetrateable are the judgments of God! and how punctually does he require his orders to be obeyed! C.

VER. 12. Lord, by sacrifices.—Holocaust. Heb. "I forced myself therefore," &c. It is asked whether Saul offered sacrifice, or caused it to be offered by the priests. The text seems to assert that he did it himself. Samuel and David did the like; and we read that Solomon ascended to the brazen altar, at Gabaa, for the same purpose. 2 Par. i. 6. If it was lawful to erect altars out of the tabernacle, notwithstanding the divine prohibition, why might not individuals also offer sacrifice on certain solemn occasions? The Hebrew kings seem to have exercised some of the sacerdotal functions, particularly before the building of the temple; for afterwards we find one of their kings severely punished for presuming to offer incense, 4 K. xv. 5. C.—Yet the proofs that they ever lawfully offered sacrifice, are not very satisfactory, as, in the Scripture language, a person is often said to do what he enjoins another to perform on his account; and if some prophets have acted in the character of priests, by divine dispensation, we need not extend the privilege to all who have dared to assume the like prerogative. The law is clear. It is the duty of all who do not regulate their conduct by it, to know that they have God's approbation. Their expressing no scruple on the occasion, proves nothing, no more than the sacred writer's omitting to stigmatize their proceedings. But here, if Saul really offered the holocaust, the words of Samuel, Thou hast done foolishly, convey a sufficient reproach: but if he did not, we must suppose that he blames the neglect of waiting the full term of days. H.

me to Galgal, and I have not appeased the face of the Lord. Forced by necessity, I offered the holocaust.

13 And Samuel said to Saul: Thou hast done foolishly, and hast not kept the commandments of the Lord thy God, which he commanded thee. And if thou hadst not done thus, the Lord would now have established thy kingdom over Israel for ever:

14 But thy kingdom shall not continue. *The Lord hath sought him a man according to his own heart: and him hath the Lord commanded to be prince over his people, because thou hast not observed that which the Lord commanded.

15 And Samuel arose and went up from Galgal to Gabaa of Benjamin. And the rest of the people went up after Saul, to meet the people who fought against them, going from Galgal to Gabaa, in the hill of Benjamin. And Saul numbered the people, that were found with him, about six hundred men.

16 And Saul, and Jonathan his son, and the people that were present with them, were in Gabaa of Benjamin: But the Philistines encamped in Machmas.

17 And there went out of the camp of the Philistines three companies to plunder. One company went towards the way of Ephra to the land of Sual.

18 And another went by the way of Bethoron, and the third turned to the way of the border, above the valley of Seboim towards the desert.

19 Now there was no smith to be found in all the land of Israel, for the Philistines had taken this precaution, lest the Hebrews should make them swords or spears.

20 So all Israel went down to the Philistines, to sharpen every man his ploughshare, and his spade, and his axe, and his rake.

* Acts xiii. 22.

VER. 13. Ever. He foresaw this want of obedience, and therefore promised the sceptre to Judah. Gen. xlix. M.—God's foresight of sin, and preordination to punish it, does not take away free-will nor the possibility of a reward. S. Aug. W.

VER. 14. Continue long. This seems to have been a threat, which Saul might still have escaped, if he had not proved disobedient again. S. Greg. says, "he might have been loosed from the bonds of his former disobedience;" prioris inobedientia nexus enodaret. The second rebellion caused him to be entirely rejected, and the prophet was ordered to go and anoint David. C. xv. Salien.

VER. 15. Samuel. Piscator suspects that we ought to read Saul, as no mention is made of the prophet in the sequel of this war, and he is never consulted. C.—Josephus says he returned home. H.—But all the versions are conformable to the text: and Samuel went with the king and his 600 soldiers, to Gabaa, (C.) that he might not appear to retain any ill-will towards Saul, and that his followers might not be quite dispirited, as they knew that he had the thunderbolts of heaven in his hand; and if he was with them, they had nothing to fear from the myriads of their opponents. His presence was very sensible, for they had to cut their way through the enemy. Salien.—And the . . . Benjamin. All this is omitted in Heb. Chal. and in many Greek and Latin copies. C.—It is found in the Alex. and Vat. Sept.—In the hill, is a translation of Gabaa, which alone occurs in those editions. H.

VER. 17. Plunder, seeing that the Israeliter durst not come to an engagement. Jonathan took advantage of their absence. C. xiv.—Land of Sual, "foxes," not far from the birth-place of Gedeon. Judg. vi. 11.

VER. 18. Bethoron, the lower, to the north-west of Gabaa.—Seboim was one of the cities which perished along with Sodom. C.

VER. 19. Smith. The Philistines had taken these precautions before Samuel gained the victory over them, and he consented that the people should employ the Philistines as before, when he made peace with them; (Salien) or they had again begun to get the upper hand at the beginning of Saul's reign, as the Israelites had been long in the enjoyment of peace, and negligent. T.—Josephus extends this species of servitude only to the neighbourhood of Gabaa, and says the major part of Saul's 600 men "was destitute of arms, because that country had neither iron nor people to make arms." The immense army which had so lately discomfited the Ammonites, was surely not without weapons. But most of them had retired, (H.) and those who accompanied the king might rely chiefly on their expertness in using the sling. Judg. xx. 16. M.—The brave men who came to join David, are praised on this account, as well as for shooting with bow and arrow. 1 Par. xii. 2. Furious battles have been also fought with sharpened

21 So that their shares, and their spades, and their forks, and their axes, were blunt, even to the goad, which was to be mended.

22 And when the day of battle was come, there was neither sword nor spear found in the hand of any of the people that were with Saul and Jonathan, except Saul and Jonathan his son.

23 And the army of the Philistines went out in order to advance further in Machmas.

CHAP. XIV.

Jonathan attacketh the Philistines. A miraculous victory. Saul's unadvised oath, by which Jonathan is put in danger of his life, but is delivered by the people.

NOW it came to pass one day that Jonathan, the son of Saul, said to the young man that bore his armour: Come, and let us go over to the garrison of the Philistines, which is on the other side of yonder place. But he told not this to his father.

2 And Saul abode in the uttermost part of Gabaa, under the pomegranate-tree, which was in Magron: and the people with him were about six hundred men.

3 And Achias, the son of Achitob, brother of Ichabod, the son of Phinees, *the son of Heli, the priest of the Lord in Silo, wore the ephod. And the people knew not whither Jonathan was gone.

4 Now there were between the ascents, by which Jonathan sought to go over to the garrison of the Philistines, rocks standing up on both sides, and steep cliffs like teeth on the one side, and on the other, the name of the one was Boses, and the name of the other was Sene:

5 One rock stood out toward the north, over-against Machmas, and the other to the south, over-against Gabaa.

6 And Jonathan said to the young man that bore his armour: Come, let us go over to the garrison of these uncircumcised, it may be the Lord will do for us:

stakes, burnt at the end, (Æn. vii.) and with various implements of husbandry, of which the Hebrews were not deprived. In the defeat of Sisara, they had not a buckler nor a lance among 40,000, (Judg. v. 8. C.) as the Philistines had already begun to deprive the Israelites of such weapons. H.—Other nations have since imitated their policy. 4 K. xxiv. 14. Justin. i. 7.

VER. 20. All Israel, whom the Philistines had conquered, particularly the neighbouring tribes. C.—They were obliged to go to the places where the enemy kept garrisons, (M.) as they did at Gabaa, Bethel, &c.—Share. Sept. Syr. &c. "scythe," or "sickel for corn;" δερσισπιον. H.—The original term, macharesha, may signify all sorts of implements.—Spade. Heb. is supposed to mean, "a coultter." Sept. "instrument," which the prophets often say will be turned into a sword, in times of war. Joel iii. 15. Mic. iv. 3.—Rake. The same generic term is used in Heb. as was before translated a plough-share. Sept. have "scythe;" δερσισπιον. C.

VER. 21. Mended, by the Philistines. H.—The Heb. is variously translated. "Their implements were like saws; or, they had a file to sharpen the," &c. C.—Sept. "and the fruits were ready to be gathered. But the vessels (instruments for labour) were three sicles for a tooth, and the same price (or station, ωστρον, a word used v. 23, in the latter sense) for an axe or a scythe;" as if the Philistines required three sicles for doing the smallest thing, when the harvest was at hand. H.

VER. 23. Further. Heb. "went out to the passage (H.) or defile of Machmas," leading to Gabaa. C.—Sept. "and there came out of the station of the strangers, to the other side (or beyond) Machmas," where they had been fixed. C. vi. 11. 16. H.

CHAP. XIV. VER. 1. Day, while it was yet dark. Josephus.—This action would seem rash, and contrary to military discipline, which requires that the general should be apprised of any hazardous enterprise. C.—But it is thought that Jonathan was directed by God, who granted him success. A. Lapide.—The Rabbins say, "every augury which is not like that of Eleazar and Jonathan, is null. If they had done ill, . . . God would not have heard them." Kimchi.

VER. 2. Magron, a village between Gabaa and Machmas. Isai. x. 28. Heb. reads "Remmon," which means "a pomegranate tree," and denotes a famous impregnable rock, with extensive caverns, where an equal number of men had formerly saved themselves. Judg. xx. 47. C. T. M.

VER. 3. Ephod; or was high priest, v. 18. Achias is called Achimelech, C. xxii. 9. C.—He had succeeded his father, Achitob, in the beginning of Saul's reign, after the former had held the dignity twenty-two years. Salien, A. 2962.

VER. 6. Uncircumcised. The Hebrews looked upon the Gentiles as unclean, (355) because it is easy for the Lord to save either by many, or by few.

7 And his armour-bearer said to him: Do all that pleaseth thy mind: go whither thou wilt, and I will be with thee wheresoever thou hast a mind.

8 And Jonathan said: Behold we will go over to these men. And when we shall be seen by them, 9 If they shall speak thus to us: Stay till we come to you: let us stand still in our place, and not go up to them.

10 But if they shall say: Come up to us: let us go up, because the Lord hath delivered them into our hands, this shall be a sign unto us.

11 So both of them discovered themselves to the garrison of the Philistines: and the Philistines said: Behold the Hebrews come forth out of the holes where-in they were hid.

12 And the men of the garrison spoke to Jonathan, and to his armour-bearer, and said: Come up to us, and we will shew you a thing. And Jonathan said to his armour-bearer: Let us go up, follow me: *for the Lord hath delivered them into the hands of Israel.

13 And Jonathan went up creeping on his hands and feet, and his armour-bearer after him. And some fell before Jonathan, others his armour-bearer slew as he followed him.

14 And the first slaughter which Jonathan and his armour-bearer made, was of about twenty men, within half an acre of land, which a yoke of oxen is wont to plough in a day.

15 And there was a miracle in the camp, in the fields: and all the people of their garrison, who had gone out to plunder, were amazed, and the earth trembled: and it happened as a miracle from God.

* 1 Mac. iv. 30.

and they, in their turn, spoke of the Jews in the most contemptuous manner. C.—It may. Lit. "if perchance." H.—This does not express any doubt. The hero found himself impelled to undertake this work, but he knew not by what means God would crown it with success. He therefore prays to him in this manner, as Abraham's servant had done. Gen. xxiv. 12. He does not tempt God no more than Gideon and Moses, who begged that the Lord would manifest his will by miracles. C.—For. These words are often repeated, (2 Par. xiv. 11. 1 Mac. iii. 18.) and were verified. C. xvii. 47. Judg. vii. 4. M.

VER. 10. This shall be a sign. It is likely Jonathan was instructed by divine inspiration, to make choice of this sign; otherwise, the observation of omens is superstitious and sinful. Ch. M. W.

VER. 11. Philistines, probably on the northern rock, as they afterwards climbed up that on the south, (C.) where they had not been discovered. Salien.

VER. 12. A thing, making you pay dear for this temerity. Herodotus (v.) mentions, that the Persians were commanded by the oracle not to attack the Perinthians, unless they were challenged. They did so, and gained a complete victory.

VER. 14. Day. Varro, &c. allow 120 feet, Columella only 70, for a day's work, so that these twenty men were slain in the space of 60 or 35 feet. Louis de Dieu rejects all the other versions, and would translate the Heb. "in almost the half of the length of a furrow, and in the breadth which is between two furrows in a field," so that the enemy would be very close together. Lit. "almost in the half of a furrow of a yoke of the field," which seems rather to be understood of the length, (C.) if indeed it have any meaning. Prot. are forced to help out the text: "within as it were a half acre of land, which a yoke of oxen might plough." H.—But a whole acre was the usual allowance. M.—Hallet observes, "the Sept. read the Heb. in a different manner, and have rendered the verse thus, 'That first slaughter was . . of about twenty men, with darts, and stones, and flints of the field.' I suppose they read, Betsim ubomouth." Kennicott adds, and ubgomri, as the Arabs still use gomor, to denote "a small flint." Goliath. II.

VER. 15. Miracle. Heb. charada, "consternation or trembling," a panic fear, as the Philistines imagined that all the army of Israel had got into the camp. "In the terrors sent by demons, (or superior beings) even the sons of the gods flee away." Pindar. Nem. The earth quaked (C.) to increase the enemies' apprehensions, so that those who had gone out to plunder, hearing of the disaster, which report had greatly magnified, and all the people feeling this unusual and alarming motion of the earth, perceived that God was fighting against them, and trembled. II.

VER. 16. Gabaa, where they were stationed to observe the enemies' mo-

(356)

16 And the watchmen of Saul, who were in Gabaa of Benjamin looked, and behold a multitude overthrown, and fleeing this way and that.

17 And Saul said to the people that were with him: Look, and see who is gone from us. And when they had sought, it was found that Jonathan and his armour-bearer were not there.

18 And Saul said to Achias: Bring the ark of the Lord. (For the ark of God was there that day with the children of Israel.)

19 And while Saul spoke to the priest, there arose a great uproar in the camp of the Philistines: and it increased by degrees, and was heard more clearly. And Saul said to the priest: Draw in thy hand.

20 Then Saul, and all the people that were with him, shouted together, and they came to the place of the fight: and behold every man's sword was turned upon his neighbour, and there was a very great slaughter.

21 Moreover, the Hebrews that had been with the Philistines yesterday and the day before, and went up with them into the camp, returned to be with the Israelites, who were with Saul and Jonathan.

22 And all the Israelites that had hid themselves in Mount Ephraim, hearing that the Philistines fled, joined themselves with their countrymen in the fight. And there were with Saul about ten thousand men.

23 And the Lord saved Israel that day. And the fight went on as far as Bethaven.

24 And the men of Israel were joined together that day: and Saul adjured the people, saying: Cursed be the man that shall eat food till evening, till I be revenged of my enemies. So none of the people tasted any food.

25 And all the common people came into a forest, in which there was honey upon the ground.

VER. 18. Ark. Sept. "the ephod." Kimchi, &c.—Spencer follows the sentiment of the Rabbins, and explains it of a little box, in which the ephod and pectoral were placed, when they were brought to the army. But what need of this explication? C.—How the oracle was given is uncertain. M.

VER. 19. Hand. He prayed with his hands extended. Saul believed that God had sufficiently intimated his will, by affording such a favourable opportunity. VER. 21. Before; that is, for some time, as slaves. VER. 24. Together. Which interpretation is more natural (C.) than the Prot. "were distressed, . . for Saul had adjured," &c. II.—Sept. "And all the people was with Saul, about 10,000, and the war was spread through all the city in Mount Ephraim, and Saul was guilty of great ignorance that day, and he adjures (H. or cursed) the people," &c. He saw not that he was acting against his own interest. The sequel does not evince that God approved of his conduct. But the people were to be taught not to make light of oaths, nor to neglect the curses which their rulers should denounce. C.—Food. Lit. "bread," which comprises all sorts of food, honey, &c. (v. 25. II.) but not drink, which might lawfully have been taken, as thirst is more difficult to bear. M.—Salien (A. 2964) defends the conduct of Saul, and condemns Jonathan.

VER. 25. Ground. Even still travellers perceive the smell of honey very frequently in that country. Maundrell.—The people use honey almost in every sauce, and in every repast. Virgil assures us, that "bees dwell in holes under 26 And when the people came into the forest, behold the honey dropped, but no man put his hand to his mouth. For the people feared the oath.

27 But Jonathan had not heard when his father adjured the people: and he put forth the end of the rod, which he had in his hand, and dipt it in a honey-comb: and he carried his hand to his mouth, and his eyes were enlightened.

28 And one of the people answering, said: Thy father hath bound the people with an oath, saying: Cursed be the man that shall eat any food this day. (And the people were faint.)

29 And Jonathan said: My father hath troubled the land: you have seen yourselves that my eyes are enlightened, because I tasted a little of this honey:

30 How much more if the people had eaten of the prey of their enemies, which they found? had there not been made a greater slaughter among the Philistines?

31 So they smote that day the Philistines, from Machmas to Aialon. And the people were wearied exceedingly.

32 And falling upon the spoils, they took sheep, and oxen, and calves, and slew them on the ground: and the people ate them with the blood.

33 And they told Saul that the people had sinned against the Lord, eating with the blood. And he said: You have transgressed: roll here to me now a great stone.

34 And Saul said: Disperse yourselves among the people, and tell them to bring me every man his ox and his ram, and slay them upon this stone, and eat, and you shall not sin against the Lord, in eating with the blood. So all the people brought every man his ox with him till the night: and slew them there.

35 And Saul built an altar to the Lord: and he then first began to build an altar to the Lord.

36 And Saul said: Let us fall upon the Philistines by night, and destroy them till the morning light, and let us not leave a man of them. And the people said: Do all that seemeth good in thy eyes. And the priest said: Let us draw near hither unto God.

37 And Saul consulted the Lord: Shall I pursue after the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into the hands of Israel? And he answered him not that day.

38 And Saul said: Bring hither all the corners of the people: and know, and see by whom this sin hath happened to-day.

39 As the Lord liveth, who is the Saviour of Israel. if it was done by Jonathan, my son, he shall surely die. In this none of the people gainsayed him.

40 And he said to all Israel: Be you on one side, and I, with Jonathan, my son, will be on the other side. And the people answered Saul: Do what seemeth good in thy eyes.

41 And Saul said to the Lord: O Lord God of Israel, give a sign, by which we may know, what the meaning is, that thou answerest not thy servant to-day: If this iniquity be in me, or in my son Jonathan, give a proof: or if this iniquity be in thy people, give holiness. And Jonathan and Saul were taken, and the people escaped.

42 And Saul said: Cast lots between me, and Jonathan, my son. And Jonathan was taken.

43 And Saul said to Jonathan: Tell me what thou hast done. And Jonathan told him, and said: I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod, which was in my hand, and behold I must die.

44 And Saul said: May God do so and so to me, and add still more: for dying thou shalt die, O Jonathan.

45 And the people said to Saul: Shall Jonathan then die, who hath wrought this great salvation in Israel? this must not be: As the Lord liveth, there shall not one hair of his head fall to the ground, for he hath wrought with God this day. So the people delivered Jonathan, that he should not die.

46 And Saul went back, and did not pursue after the Philistines: and the Philistines went to their own places.

Mella fluunt illi, ferat & rubus asper anomum. Virg. Ec. iii. Sanctius says, that in Spain, streams of honey may be seen on the ground; and Maldonot observes, that the countrymen get a livelihood by gathering it from the trees in Betica, or Andalusia.

VER. 27. Enlightened. Extreme hunger and fatigue hurt the eyes. Jer. xiv. 6. Sanctius saw a man who through fasting lost his sight, and recovered it again as soon as he had eaten. VER. 32. Blood, contrary to a two-fold law. Gen. ix. 4. Lev. xvii. 14. The blood ought to have been carefully extracted and buried. C.—This was another bad effect of Saul's rash oath. W.

VER. 31. With the blood, as you have done. M.

VER. 35. First. Saul begins to exercise himself in acts of religion, which only belonged to a prophet, &c. He thought he might do so in quality of king, thus consecrating a monument of his victory to the God of armies. It was perhaps the very stone on which the oxen had been just before killed for the people. C.

VER. 39. Gainsayed him, out of respect. Saul gives another proof of his precipitation, in swearing; and the people, by this silence, acquiesce, not suspecting that Jonathan could have offended in what he had done. C.—One of them, at least, knew that he had transgressed the order of his father, v. 28. But extreme necessity might plead his excuse. H.—They might be silent through fear, or reverence, without giving their consent. Salien.

VER. 41. A sign, (judicium); "pass sentence;" declare why, &c. H.—Heb "give purity." Shew who is innocent. C.—Sept. "give the proofs" by the Thaumium, which they seem to have read. C.

VER. 42. Jonathan was taken. Though Jonathan was excused from sin, through ignorance of the prohibition, yet God was pleased on this occasion to let the lot fall upon him, to shew to all, the great obligation of obedience to princes and parents, (Ch.) the sacred nature of an oath, and at the same time to give Saul a warning not to swear rashly. C.—How must he have been afflicted, when he saw that he had brought his beloved son into such danger! M.

VER. 44. Die. We may here admire the respect which the ancients had for an oath, without seeking for any modification; and the blindness of Saul, who condemns his son with as much haste as he had pronounced the curse, thinking thus to honour God. The thing surely required some deliberation, and he ought to have consulted the Lord about it. The action of Jonathan was not criminal, and the former silence of God did not prove that he deserved death. C.—If it had, the people would never have been able to have rescued him, no more than the unhappy Achan. Jos. vii. H.—If Saul had been more enlightened, and more humble, he would have concluded that God was displeased at him, and not at Jonathan. C.—Yet Cajetan and Serarius find fault with the latter. M.

49 And the sons of Saul, were Jonathan, and Jessui, and Melchisua: and the names of his two daughters, the name of the first-born was Merob, and the name of the younger Michol.

50 And the name of Saul's wife was Achinoam, the daughter of Achimaas; and the name of the captain of his army was Abner, the son of Ner, the cousin-german of Saul.

51 For Cis was the father of Saul, and Ner, the father of Abner, was son of Abiel.

52 And there was a great war against the Philistines all the days of Saul. For whomsoever Saul saw to be a valiant man, and fit for war, he took him to himself.

CHAP. XV.

Saul is sent to destroy Amalec: he spareth their king and the best of their cattle: for which disobedience he is cast off by the Lord.

AND Samuel said to Saul: The Lord sent me to anoint thee king over his people Israel: now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the Lord:

2 Thus saith the Lord of hosts: I have reckoned up all that Amalec hath done to Israel: how he opposed them in the way when they came up out of Egypt.

3 Now therefore go, and smite Amalec, and utterly destroy all that he hath: spare him not, nor covet any thing that is his: but slay both man and woman, child and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass.

4 So Saul commanded the people, and numbered them as lambs: two hundred thousand footmen, and ten thousand of the men of Juda.

5 And when Saul was come to the city of Amalec, he laid ambushes in the torrent.

6 And Saul said to the Cinite: Go, depart, and get ye down from Amalec: lest I destroy thee with him.

The great master of life and death (who cuts off one half of mankind whilst they are children) has been pleased sometimes to ordain that children should be put to the sword, in detestation of the crimes of their parents, and that they might not live to follow the same wicked ways. But without such ordinance of God, it is not allowable in any wars, how just soever, to kill children. 7 And Saul smote Amalec from Hevila, until thou comest to Sur, which is over-against Egypt.

8 And he took Agag, the king of Amalec, alive: but all the common people he slew with the edge of the sword.

12 And when Samuel rose early, to go to Saul in the morning, it was told Samuel that Saul was come to Carmel, and had erected for himself a triumphant arch, and returning had passed on, and gone down to Galgal. And Samuel came to Saul, and Saul was offering a holocaust to the Lord, out of the choicest of the spoils, which he had brought from Amalec.

13 And when Samuel was come to Saul, Saul said to him: Blessed be thou of the Lord, I have fulfilled the word of the Lord.

14 And Samuel said: What meaneth then this bleating of the flocks, which soundeth in my ears, and the lowing of the herds, which I hear?

15 And Saul said: They have brought them from Amalec: for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the herds, that they might be sacrificed to the Lord thy God, but the rest we have slain.

16 And Samuel said to Saul: Suffer me, and I will tell thee what the Lord hath said to me this night. And he said to him: Speak.

tribes of Israel? And the Lord anointed thee to be king over Israel.

18 And the Lord sent thee on the way, and said: Go, and kill the sinners of Amalec, and thou shalt fight against them until thou hast utterly destroyed them.

19 Why then didst thou not hearken to the voice of the Lord: but hast turned to the prey, and hast done evil in the eyes of the Lord?

20 And Saul said to Samuel: Yea, I have hearkened to the voice of the Lord, and have walked in the way by which the Lord sent me, and have brought Agag, the king of Amalec, and Amalec I have slain.

21 But the people took of the spoils, sheep and oxen, as the first-fruits of those things that were slain, to offer sacrifice to the Lord their God in Gath.

22 And Samuel said: "Doth the Lord desire holocausts and victims, and not rather that the voice of the Lord should be obeyed? For obedience is better than sacrifices: and to hearken rather than to offer the fat of rams.

23 Because it is like the sin of witchcraft, to rebel: and like the crime of idolatry, to refuse to obey. For as much, therefore, as thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, the Lord hath also rejected thee from being king.

24 And Saul said to Samuel: I have sinned, because I have transgressed the commandment of the Lord, and thy words, fearing the people, and obeying their voice.

25 But now bear, I beseech thee, my sin, and return with me, that I may adore the Lord.

26 And Samuel said to Saul: I will not return with thee, because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, and the Lord hath rejected thee from being king over Israel.

6 And when they were come in, he saw Eliab, and said: Is the Lord's anointed before him?

7 And the Lord said to Samuel: Look not on his countenance, nor on the height of his stature: because I have rejected him, nor do I judge according to the look of man: for man seeth those things that appear, but the Lord beholdeth the heart.

8 And Isai called Abinadab, and brought him before Samuel. And he said: Neither hath the Lord chosen this.

9 And Isai brought Samma, and he said of him: Neither hath the Lord chosen this.

10 Isai therefore brought his seven sons before Samuel: and Samuel said to Isai: The Lord hath not chosen any one of these.

11 And Samuel said to Isai: Are here all thy sons? He answered: There remaineth yet a young one, who principal reason. No one doubted but that he might lawfully offer sacrifice, at a distance from the tabernacle, as he was guided by God. The Jews allow that prophets have this privilege, and may dispense with the ceremonial law, (Grot.) when they act by God's authority, as we ought to believe they do, as long as there is no proof to the contrary. H.

VER. 3. Sacrifice, to partake of the feast, (M.) which must be consumed in two days, or thrown into the fire. Lev. vii. 16. C.

VER. 4. Wondered. Heb. "trembled," being full of consternation, (H.) as the prophet did not now stir much from home; and fearing lest he had some bad news to impart, or had incurred the king's displeasure, (C.) unless he came to punish some of the people at Bethlehem. M.

VER. 5. Sanctified, prepared by aspersions, washing, and continence. Ex. xix. 14. What sorts of uncleanness excluded from the feast, are specified, Lev. xxii. M.—Samuel arrived in the evening, and announced that sacrifice would be offered the ensuing morning. T.

VER. 6. Him. Heb. "surely the Lord's anointed is in his presence." This he spoke by his own spirit, judging from the comeliness of Eliab. C.—But the beauty of Saul's body had concealed a deformed soul. H.

VER. 7. Rejected, or not chosen. M.—God had positively rejected this eldest son, as his pride seems to have been the greatest. C. xvii. 28. H.—Heart. This is one of God's perfections. Glorified saints see man's heart in his light, for their own and our advantage, (S. Greg. Mor. xii. 11. S. Aug.) as the prophets have sometimes done. 3 K. xiv. W.

VER. 10. Seven. David was absent. Isai had eight sons. C. xvii. 12. Yet only seven are mentioned, 1 Par. ii. 13. Perhaps one of those whom he produced on this occasion, might be a grandson, or one is omitted in Chronicles. C.

VER. 11. Young son, (parvulus), "a little one;" (H.) or the youngest, who might be about 15, (C.) or 28. Seder. olam. iii. M.

VER. 12. Ruddy, like the spouse, Cant. v. 10. Some explain it of his hair. So Alexander is said to have had reddish or golden locks.—Behold. Heb. "with the beauty of the eyes."

VER. 13. Brethren. Some say, without informing him, (C.) or them, (M.) what the unction meant. If he told the brothers, he would no doubt take the necessary precautions to keep it secret, as the whole family would have been in imminent danger, if the transaction had come to the ears of Saul, v. 2. Josephus says, that Samuel only informed Isai in private: and David's brothers treat him with no peculiar distinction. Whence it is inferred, that they had not been present when he was anointed. Some witnesses seem, however, to have been requisite, as the title of David to the regal dignity depended on this ceremony, and none were more interested than his own family to assert his pretensions. He now had a right to the kingdom, but not the possession; being like a son expecting his father's estate as his future right, of which, as yet, he cannot dispose. C.—Came upon, to make him prosper. M.—Heb. "came with prosperity; (Sept.) impetuosity." God endued him with all those graces which might render him fit keepeth the sheep. And Samuel said to Isai: Send, and fetch him: for we will not sit down till he come hither.

12 He sent therefore and brought him. Now he was ruddy and beautiful to behold, and of a comely face. And the Lord said: Arise, and anoint him, for this is he.

13 Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him in the midst of his brethren: and the Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward: and Samuel rose up, and went to Ramatha.

14 But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him.

15 And the servants of Saul said to him: Behold now an evil spirit from God troubleth thee.

16 Let our lord give orders, and thy servants who are before thee, will seek out a man skilful in playing on the harp, that when the evil spirit from the Lord is upon thee, he may play with his hand, and thou mayst bear it more easily.

17 And Saul said to his servants: Provide me then some man that can play well, and bring him to me.

18 And one of the servants answering, said: Behold I have seen a son of Isai, the Bethlehemite, a skilful player, and one of great strength, and a man fit for war, and prudent in his words, and a comely person: and the Lord is with him.

19 Then Saul sent messengers to Isai, saying: Send me David, thy son, who is in the pastures.

20 And Isai took an ass laden with bread, and a to command. C.—So David prays himself, "with a princely spirit confirm me;" (Ps. l. 14.) or, strengthen me with a perfect spirit. Salien observes, that he did not now receive the spirit of charity, as if he had hitherto been in enmity with God, (C. xiii. 14.) but he began to advance in virtue with more rapid strides, while Saul became every day more criminal and abandoned to the devil. H.—David received the spirit of fortitude and of prophecy, of which Saul had formerly had some experience, when he was first elevated to that high dignity. C. x. He was changed into a new man, and adorned with all that could render a king most glorious. Though he returned to his wonted occupations, the spirit of the Lord enabled him to destroy wild beasts, as in play, (Eccli. xlvii. 3.) and to compose and sing many of those divine canticles which we still admire. Salien, A. 2069. —Whether he composed all the Psalms, as S. Chrysostom endeavours to prove, (pref.) we shall examine hereafter. H.

VER. 14. From the Lord. An evil spirit, by divine permission, and for his punishment, either possessed or obsessed him. Ch.—We no longer behold in Saul any generous sentiments. He falls a prey to melancholy, anger, suspicion, and cruelty. "He was seized with an illness, inflicted by the devil, says Josephus, (vi. 9.) so that he seemed to be choking; nor could the physicians discover any other means of alleviating his distress, except by employing some person skilled in music. . . David alone could bring the king to his right senses, by singing hymns with the sound of the harp. Wherefore Jesse consented that his son should remain with the king, since he was so much delighted with his company." H.—The Jews, and many Christians, suppose that Saul's illness was melancholy, or "madness," as S. Chrysostom calls it. It was inflicted by an evil, or even by a good angel, as the minister of God's vengeance, (Ex. xi. 4. C.) who punished his former pride and rebellion, by reducing him to so mean a condition. H.—S. Aug. and V. Bede suppose, that the evil spirit troubled him by God's permission. W.

VER. 16. Easily. The effects which have been produced by music are truly surprising, if we may believe what the ancients have related. Our music may not at present be so striking, or we may keep a greater restraint upon our passions, and moderate the exterior demonstrations of our sentiments more than they did. C.—But, in the present case, there was probably some miraculous interference. H.—The disciples of Pythagoras lay a great stress on music, to calm the passions, (Quintil. ix. 4. M.) or to rouse them. p. 439. H.—It may also frequently contribute to restore health. Gallien, &c. See C. x. 10. 4 K. iii. 15. C.—But God made it so efficacious here, to shew the virtue of David, and the injustice of Saul. W.—Thus, by the prayers of the Church, the devil is expelled. Theodoret. T.

VER. 18. Him. Some think that this took place before David's victory over Goliath; others believe, that David was only made armour bearer to Saul, after that event. We must not disturb the order of the sacred historian without some cogent reason: and the courtiers might already have heard of David's prowess and virtue, of which he gave such evident proofs, after he was confirmed by the Holy Spirit, v. 13. C.

bottle of wine, and a kid of the flock, and sent them by the hand of David, his son, to Saul.

21 And David came to Saul, and stood before him: and he loved him exceedingly, and made him his armour-bearer.

22 And Saul sent to Isai, saying: Let David stand before me: for he hath found favour in my sight.

23 So whensoever the evil spirit from the Lord was upon Saul, David took his harp, and played with his hand, and Saul was refreshed, and was better, for the evil spirit departed from him.

CHAP. XVII.

War with the Philistines. Goliath challengeth Israel. He is slain by David.

NOW ^a the Philistines gathering together their troops to battle, assembled at Socho of Juda: and camped between Socho and Azeca, in the borders of Dommim.

2 And Saul and the children of Israel being gathered together, came to the valley of Terebinth, and they set the army in array to fight against the Philistines.

3 And the Philistines stood on a mountain on the one side, and Israel stood on a mountain on the other side: and there was a valley between them.

4 And there went out a man base-born from the camp of the Philistines, named Goliath, of Geth, whose height was six cubits and a span:

VER. 20. Laden. So Chal. M.—Lit. plenum, "full of." H.—Sept. "a gomor," which they seem to have read instead of the Heb. chamor, "an ass of bread," as Sosibius says, "he eats three asses' panniers of loaves." C.—Prot. supply "laden."

VER. 21. Bearer. This was an honourable office. H.—Cyrus had been employed by his grandfather Astyages in the same capacity, before he came to the empire. Athen. xiv. C.

VER. 22. Sight. He had sent him back, as people of a melancholy temper are often hard to please; (M.) and before David married Michol, he did not remain with the king, but only came when his presence was deemed necessary. C.

VER. 23. Departed from him. Chased away by David's devotion. Ch.—"The melody of David's harp, as some of the Fathers remark, represents that sweet and engaging demeanour, which should distinguish the peaceful ministers of the gospel, . . . whether they strive to allay the rage, or dispel the fears of a troubled mind." Reeves.—Nothing can equal the divine harmony of those sublime truths which are contained in the Psalms of David, and nothing can so powerfully contribute to drive away the spirit of pride from our hearts, and awaken them to the voice of heaven. S. Aug.—Some of these truths might make some passing impression even on the mind of Saul; and the devil could not bear to hear the praises of God. H.

CHAP. XVII. VER. 1. Battle. They perhaps had heard of Saul's malady, (Sulien) and bore a constant hatred to the Israelites during his reign. C. xiv. 52. —Azeca, about 15 miles south of Jerusalem.—Dommim, or Phesdomnim, 1 Par. x. 13.

VER. 2. Terebinth. Heb. ela, "the oak." Aquila.

VER. 3. Valley of the Terebinth, which S. Jerom seems to call Magala, v. 20.

VER. 4. Base-born. Heb. "of two sons," or of obscure origin. A. Lapide.—His parents are no where specified, as Arapha is not, as some pretend, the name of his mother, but denotes that he was of the race of the Raphaim. 2 K. xxi. 16. Some translate, a man who challenges to fight a duel, or one who comes into the midst as "a champion," to decide the cause of all the rest. Thus the Gaul defied the most valiant of the Romans, but was slain by M. Torquatus, Livy vii. Sept. "A strong man went out from the station," &c. Chal. "There came out from among them, out of the camp of the Philistines, a man named Goliath." But many able interpreters adhere to the Vulg.—Span, about 12½ feet, so that he was taller than two common men. Those who call in question the existence of giants, will surely have nothing to object to this formal proof from Scripture. C.—The Vat. Sept. and Josephus read, however, "four cubits and a span," or near eight feet. Ken.—Some reduce his height to 11 feet 3 inches, or even to 9 feet 9 inches. English. 11.—His helmet weighed 15 pounds, ivorinpolis; his collar, or buckler, about 30; the head of his spear (26 feet long) weighed about 33 pounds; his sword 4; his greaves on his legs 30; and his coat of mail 156; total, 273 pounds. Button. H.—Goliath was a figure of the devil, or of any arch-heretic, who provoketh the Church of God, but is slain by the bundle with his own weapons. W.

VER. 5. Scutes, like those of fishes. Sept. insinuate, that it was armed with things resembling fish-hooks; ἀλκιδόρω. hamata.—Brass, which was used for the armour of the ancients. Plutarch (in Demetrio) speaks of a coat of mail weighing forty pounds; the usual weight was twenty pounds. Lipsius.—The strength of the giant must have borne proportion with his size. C.

VER. 6. Legs, on the forepart, from the knee to the ankle. Vegetius observes,

5 And he had a helmet of brass upon his head, and he was clothed with a coat of mail with scales, and the weight of his coat of mail was five thousand sicles of brass:

6 And he had greaves of brass on his legs, and a buckler of brass covered his shoulders.

7 And the staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam, and the head of his spear weighed six hundred sicles of iron: and his armour-bearer went before him.

8 And standing, he cried out to the bands of Israel, and said to them: Why are you come out prepared to fight? am not I a Philistine, and you the servants of Saul? Choose out a man of you, and let him come down and fight hand to hand.

9 If he be able to fight with me, and kill me, we will be servants to you: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, you shall be servants, and shall serve us.

10 And the Philistine said: I have defied the bands of Israel this day: give me a man, and let him fight with me hand to hand.

11 And Saul and all the Israelites hearing these words of the Philistine, were dismayed, and greatly afraid.

12 Now David was the son of that Ephrathite, of Bethlehem Juda, before mentioned, ^b whose name was Isai, who had eight sons, and was an old man in the days of Saul, and of great age among men.

^b Supra xvi. 1.

that the infantry wore such greaves of iron, only on one leg. C. Shoulders, when he marched. M.—Some understand a dart, &c. but without any proof. C.

VER. 7. Beam, which was of a very different construction from ours. Hostius concludes, that all the armour of Goliath must have weighed 272 pounds and 13 ounces, including the buckler and spear which his armour-bearer carried before him. Plutarch allows a talent, or 60 pounds, for the usual weight of a soldier's armour. Alcimus was remarked in the army of Demetrius, for having doubtless that weight.—Bearer. Heb. "one bearing a shield," or whose office it was to carry it, or any other part of the armour, when required. It would appear singular that the giant should have two bucklers, though David seems to specify two sorts. Pa. xxxiv. 2. This attendant might carry a large one, which would cover most part of the body, and was of service when a person had not to remove far from his place in battle. The buckler of Ajax was like a tower, and consisted of seven hides, covered with a plate of brass. Homer, Iliad Z. C.

VER. 8. Out; exulting. Eccli. xlvii. 5. M.—Servants; I am free. H.—Hand. Such combats were very common in ancient times. Paris and Menelaus Hector and Ajax. The Horatii and Curiatii fought to decide the fate of contending nations. Iliad γ. and H.—Livy i. 23. C.

VER. 9. Us. It does not appear that this proposal was accepted or ratified by either party. The Israelites had still to pursue the enemy. E.

VER. 12. Now, &c. to v. 32. And when, is omitted in the Vatican Sept. which begins the latter verse thus, "And David said," as the Alex. copy does now the 12th, which leads Kennicott to suspect that the intermediate verses are an interpolation, formerly unknown to the Greek version. Houbigant includes these verses between crochets, "that it may be understood that these are not of the same author as the rest, and that the sacred writer may not be accused of making useless repetitions." It has been observed in the last chapter, that David was the son of Isai, &c. "If, says he, this be omitted, there will be no vacuum in the context," as there is none in the Roman edition: (11) "they were greatly afraid. (32.) And David said to Saul," &c. As he had been appointed Saul's armour-bearer, it is very natural to suppose that he would be near the king's person on such an occasion, rather than feeding sheep. We find also, that he had a tent of his own, (v. 54) which he could not have had, if he had only come to bring provisions to his brethren. The unaccountable conduct of Eliab, the timidity of all Israel for forty days, &c. will thus be avoided. Josephus is supposed to have given occasion to this embellishment, though he takes no notice of many of those particulars which excite the surprise of Pickington, Kennicott &c. Dis. ii. p. 421. These verses were, however, in the Heb. before the days of Aquila, &c. and Origen received them from the Jews as genuine. A Hebrew Bible, (1661) with marginal criticisms, by a Jew, includes these verses within parentheses, as interpolated, as well as from v. 55 to C. xviii. 6, observing that "the history consists at present of different and inconsistent accounts." The Syriac Ms. of Masius generally confirms the Vatican Sept. (Morin) so that we may conclude, that these verses are there asterisked on the authority of Origen as not being in the original Greek, nor consequently in Hebrew. ib. p. 577.—Mentioned. Heb. "Jeda, whose name . . . and the man went among men, an old man in the days of Saul." We have already observed that the Alex. Sept. seems to promise a speech but refers it till v. 32, thus, "And David said, the son of an Ephrathite. He was from," &c. H.—Ven. Chal. "He was an old man, whom they ranked among the young," as still vigorous. Jam senior, sed crudus seni viridique senectus. C.

13 And his three eldest sons followed Saul to the battle: and the names of his three sons that went to the battle, were Eliab, the first-born, and the second, Abinadab, and the third Samma:

14 But David was the youngest. So the three eldest having followed Saul, 15 David went, and returned from Saul, to feed his father's flock at Bethlehem.

16 Now the Philistine came out morning and evening, and presented himself forty days.

17 And Isai said to David, his son: Take for thy brethren an ephi of frumenty, and these ten loaves, and run to the camp to thy brethren, 18 And carry these ten little cheeses to the tribune: and go see thy brethren, if they are well: and learn with whom they are placed.

19 But Saul, and they, and all the children of Israel, were in the valley of Terebinth, fighting against the Philistines.

20 David, therefore, arose in the morning, and gave the charge of the flock to the keeper: and went away loaded, as Isai had commanded him. And he came to the place of Magala, and to the army, which was going out to fight, and shouted for the battle.

21 For Israel had put themselves in array, and the Philistines who stood against them were prepared.

22 And David leaving the vessels which he had brought, under the care of the keeper of the baggage, ran to the place of the battle, and asked if all things went well with his brethren.

23 And as he talked with them, that base-born man, whose name was Goliath, the Philistine, of Geth, shewed himself coming up from the camp of the Philistines: and he spoke according to the same words, and David heard them.

24 And all the Israelites, when they saw the man, fled from his face, fearing him exceedingly.

25 And some one of Israel said: Have you seen this man that is come up, for he is come up to defy Israel. And the man that shall slay him, the king will enrich with great riches, and will give him his daughter, and will make his father's house free from tribute in Israel.

26 And David spoke to the men that stood by him, saying: What shall be given to the man that shall kill this Philistine, and shall take away the reproach from Israel? for who is this uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living God?

27 And the people answered him the same words, saying: These things shall be given to the man that shall slay him.

28 Now when Eliab, his eldest brother, heard this, when he was speaking with others, he was angry with David, and said: Why camest thou hither? and why didst thou leave those few sheep in the desert? I know thy pride, and the wickedness of thy heart: that thou art come down to see the battle.

29 And David said: What have I done? is there not cause to speak?

30 And he turned a little aside from him to another: and said the same word. And the people answered him as before.

31 And the words which David spoke were heard, and were rehearsed before Saul.

32 And when he was brought to Saul, he said to him: Let not any man's heart be dismayed in him: I thy servant will go, and will fight against the Philistine.

33 And Saul said to David: Thou art not able to withstand this Philistine, nor to fight against him: for thou art but a boy, but he is a warrior from his youth.

34 And David said to Saul: Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion, ^b or a bear, and took a ram out of the midst of the flock:

35 And I pursued after them, and struck them, and delivered it out of their mouth: and they rose up against me, and I caught them by the throat, and I strangled, and killed them.

36 For I thy servant have killed both a lion and a bear: and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be also as one of them. I will go now, and take away the reproach of the people: for who is this uncircumcised Philistine, who hath dared to curse the army of the living God?

37 And David said: The Lord who delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. And Saul said to David: Go, and the Lord be with thee.

38 And Saul clothed David with his garments, and put a helmet of brass upon his head, and armed him with a coat of mail.

39 And David having girded his sword upon his armour, began to try if he could walk in armour: for he was not accustomed to it. And David said to Saul: I cannot go thus, for I am not used to it. And he laid them off, 40 And he took his staff, which he had always in his hands: and chose him five smooth stones out of the brook, and put them into the shepherd's scrip, which he had with him, and he took a sling in his hand, and went forth against the Philistine.

41 And the Philistine came on, and drew nigh against David, and his armour-bearer went before him.

42 And when the Philistine looked, and beheld David, he despised him. For he was a young man, ruddy, and of a comely countenance.

43 And the Philistine said to David: Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with a staff? And the Philistine cursed David by his gods.

44 And he said to David: Come to me, and I will give thy flesh to the birds of the air, and to the beasts of the earth.

45 And David said to the Philistine: Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, which thou hast defied

46 This day, and the Lord will deliver thee into my hand, and I will slay thee, and take away thy head from thee: and I will give the carcasses of the army of the Philistines this day to the birds of the air, and to the beasts of the earth: that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel.

47 And all this assembly shall know, that the Lord saveth not with sword and spear: for it is his battle, and he will deliver you into our hands.

48 And when the Philistine arose, and was coming, and drew nigh to meet David, David made haste, and ran to the fight to meet the Philistine.

49 And he put his hand into his scrip, and took a stone, and cast it with the sling, and fetching it about, struck the Philistine in the forehead, and he fell on his face upon the earth.

50 And David prevailed over the Philistine, with a sling and a stone, and he struck, and slew the Philistine. And as David had no sword in his hand, 51 He ran, and stood over the Philistine, and took his sword, and drew it out of the sheath, and slew him, and cut off his head. And the Philistines seeing that their champion was dead, fled away.

52 And the men of Israel and Juda rising up shouted, and pursued after the Philistines till they came to the valley and to the gates of Accaron, and there fell many wounded of the Philistines in the way of Saraim, and as far as Geth, and as far as Accaron.

53 And the children of Israel returning, after they had pursued the Philistines, fell upon their camp.

54 And David taking the head of the Philistine, brought it to Jerusalem: but his armour he put in his tent.

55 Now at the time that Saul saw David going out against the Philistines, he said to Abner, the captain of the army: Of what family is this young man descended, Abner? And Abner said: As thy soul liveth, O king, I know not.

56 And the king said: Inquire thou, whose son this young man is.

57 And when David was returned, after the Philistine was slain, Abner took him, and brought him in before Saul, with the head of the Philistine in his hand.

58 And Saul said to him: Young man, of what family art thou? And David said: I am the son of thy servant Isai, the Bethlehemite.

* Eccl. xlvii. 4. 1 Mac. iv. 30.

VER. 39. Armour. Heb. "he tried to go." Sym. "he went lame." Sept. "he laboured in walking once and twice." C.—Salien supposes that the armour was not made for Saul, as he was much more bulky than young David. Yet we find that the latter could use the sword of the giant without difficulty. S. Chrys. &c. H.

VER. 40. Smooth. Louis de Dieu translates broken "pieces of stones," as he pretends, contrary to the common opinion, that rough stones are more suitable for the sling. C.—The learned Jew, whom we have cited above, (v. 12.) and several others, have inferred from this verse, that David seems to have just come from the flock. But Kennicott justly observes, that slingers were of great service in the army; and the "vessel of shepherds," the bag or scrip, might well be used to contain the stones; as the staff, makel, denotes a military weapon. (Taylor, Coce.) Diss. ii. p. 555. David was very expert in using these weapons, and the ordinary armour was encumbering to him. H.—"Valour depends more on his own efforts than on armour," tegumentis. S. Amb. Off. i.

VER. 43. Gods. Dagon or Baalim. M.—Sept. Alex. has, "idols." The beauty and accoutrements of David, made the rough warrior suppose that he was not coming to fight, but only to laugh at him and run away. H.

VER. 44. Earth. The heroes of modern days refrain from such compliments. Homer frequently describes his champions making long speeches in praise of their former exploits. David displays his piety and confidence in God. C.

VER. 47. Battle, whose armies thou hast defied, (v. 45. H.) or in general, He is the God of war, who grants victory to whom He pleases. C.

VER. 48. Arose. The Roman Triarii and the Gauls expected the hour of battle sitting. C.

VER. 49. Forehead. "The soul . . . more probably resides in the callous body of the brain," (Eyre, Thesis 1797,) between the eyes. H.—Earth, quite lifeless, (Salien) or unable to resist. M.—The Balearic slingers scarcely ever missed their mark. Livy, viii. 4. The Chaldee supposes that David hit the eye, which was not covered with brass: but the stone might penetrate or kill Goliath through his helmet. Even a buckler is not capable of withstanding their violence. Diodorus, v. 207. See Judg. xx. 16. C.—Pride sits on the forehead, and manifests itself by impudent behaviour. We must destroy it by humility, and by the cross of Christ. S. Aug. W.

VER. 54. Tent, or the tabernacle of the Lord, which David erected in his honour, at Jerusalem, many years afterwards. Jun. Piscator, &c. The lower part of Jerusalem was already in the hands of the Israelites. He might place the armour for the present in the tent of his brethren. We find that the sword was deposited in the tabernacle, at Nob. C. See v. 12. H.—The head was carried about to various cities. It would serve to strike terror into the Jebusites, at Jerusalem, and others. M.—The Vat. Sept. &c. immediately subjoin, C. xviii. 6. Now, &c. Lit. "And the women dancing, came to meet David." H.—These five last verses occur only in the Alex. MS. though Theodoret (q. 43.) seems to have read them. In some other Greek copies, there is a long addition respecting David's combat. See the New Hexapla. These verses are found, however, in Heb. Chal. &c. It is astonishing that Saul should not have known David. He was now more interested to be acquainted with his family, as he had engaged to give him his daughter in marriage. We must reflect that his malady might have impaired his memory, and David was still growing, so that a few months absence might produce a wonderful alteration, &c. C.—Know not. Lit. "if I know." The different dress, in which David now appeared, gave rise to this ignorance. M.—Abner was not surely affected with the same malady as the king, who was obliged to ask David who was his father. But courtiers easily forget those from whom they have no expectations. H.—These strange proceedings make others conclude that this history is interpolated. Kennicott.—Huet maintains the contrary. D.—Saul only enquires about David's parentage. Mariana. T.

CHAP. XVIII.

The friendship of Jonathan and David. The envy of Saul, and his design upon David's life. He marries him to his daughter Michol.

AND it came to pass, when he had made an end of speaking to Saul, the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul.

2 And Saul took him that day, and would not let him return to his father's house.

3 And David and Jonathan made a covenant, for he loved him as his own soul.

4 And Jonathan stripped himself of the coat with which he was clothed, and gave it to David, and the rest of his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle.

5 And David went out to whatsoever business Saul sent him, and he behaved himself prudently: and Saul set him over the soldiers, and he was acceptable in the eyes of all the people, and especially in the eyes of Saul's servants.

6 Now when David returned, after he slew the Philistine, the women came out of all the cities of Israel, singing and dancing, to meet king Saul, with timbrels of joy, and cornets.

7 And the women sung as they played, and they said: "Saul slew his thousands, and David his ten thousands."

8 And Saul was exceeding angry, and this word was displeasing in his eyes, and he said: They have given David ten thousands, and to me they have given but a thousand, what can he have more but the kingdom?

9 And Saul did not look on David with a good eye from that day and forward.

10 And the day after, the evil spirit from God came upon Saul, and he prophesied in the midst of his house.

CHAP. XVIII. VER. 1. Soul. Pythagoras said, "that friendship is an equality, and one soul, and that the friend is another self." It would be difficult to find two souls more tender and generous than those of David and Jonathan. C.—Josephus speaks of their friendship on another occasion, as these five verses are omitted in the Rom. Sept. &c. Ken.

VER. 3. For he, Jonathan. II.—Soul. "Friends have one soul." Arist. Met. ix. 8.

VER. 4. Girdle, which perhaps was of great value. Job xii. 18. He wished that David should lay aside his shepherd's dress, and appear like himself at court, that all might know how much he loved him. M

VER. 5. Prudently, or with success. C.—Especially. Heb. "also," which enhances his praise, as courtiers are but too apt to envy those who are taken from a low condition and set over them in the king's favour. David must have displayed great wisdom and moderation. H.

VER. 6. Philistine. Some explain this of some fresh achievement against that nation, (Malven-la. W.) but without reason.—Dancing. Heb. also playing on the flute, or on some such instrument of music. C.—So Mary sung after the Israelites had crossed the Red Sea. Ex. xv. 20. 2 K. i. 20. Judg. xi. 34.

VER. 7. Sung. The chorus of their song is given. C.—"The women sung, Saul slew his thousands; and the virgins answered, And David," &c. Josephus.—The death of Goliath was equivalent to the slaughter of thousands, as he had filled the whole army of Israel with dismay. H.

VER. 8. A thousand. These women were guilty of an indiscretion, through excess of zeal, as it is always displeasing for the sovereign to hear any of his subjects preferred before him. S. Chrys. hom. i. b. Saul.—The jealousy of Saul was the more excited, as he had been threatened with the loss of his kingdom, and perceived in David all the qualifications of a king. A malo principe tanquam successor timetur quinquis est dignior. Pliny in Traj.—But was David responsible for what was spoken in his praise? C.—The Vat. Sept. omit what follows till v. 12. "And Saul feared David (18) and he removed," &c. The Alex. copy agrees with the Vulg. H.—Those who are proud, cannot bear the praises of others. W.

VER. 9. Eye. Sept. "and Saul suspected." H.—Chal. "laid snares for David." C.

VER. 10. Prophesied. Acted the prophet in a mad manner, (Ch.) like an enthusiast, (C. 2 K. ix. 11.) or one possessed by the devil, as the Sybil was (1361)

And David played with his hand as at other times. And Saul held a spear in his hand, 11 And threw it, thinking to nail David to the wall: and David stept aside out of his presence twice.

12 And Saul feared David, because the Lord was with him, and was departed from Saul himself.

13 Therefore Saul removed him from him, and made him a captain over a thousand men, and he went out and came in before the people.

14 And David behaved wisely in all his ways, and the Lord was with him.

15 And Saul saw that he was exceeding prudent, and began to beware of him.

16 But all Israel and Juda loved David, for he came in and went out before them.

17 And Saul said to David: Behold my elder daughter Merob, her will I give thee to wife: only be a valiant man, and fight the battles of the Lord. Now Saul said within himself: Let not my hand be upon him, but let the hands of the Philistines be upon him.

18 And David said to Saul: Who am I, or what is my life, or my father's family in Israel, that I should be son-in-law of the king?

19 And it came to pass at the time when Merob, the daughter of Saul, should have been given to David, that she was given to Hadriel, the Molathite, to wife.

20 But Michol, the other daughter of Saul, loved David. And it was told Saul, and it pleased him.

21 And Saul said: I will give her to him, that she may be a stumbling-block to him, and that the hand of the Philistines may be upon him. And Saul said to David: In two things thou shalt be my son-in-law this day.

22 And Saul commanded his servants to speak to David privately, saying: Behold, thou pleasest the VER. 13. People, as their leader. Saul gave him an honourable, but dangerous office, to procure his destruction. This is frequently the manner in which men of superior talents have been treated, (C.) as Corbulo, Germanicus, and Agricola were by three Roman emperors. Tacit. Ann. ii. &c.

VER. 15. Began. Sept. "he was filled with awe in his presence." Heb. "he was afraid of him," as he perceived that God protected him in all perils.

VER. 17. And Saul. This and the two following verses are omitted in the Rom. Sept. which subjoins, "And Michol, the daughter of Saul, loved David," &c. H. Wife. He had promised her already, (M) if the verses in the preceding chapter be genuine. But why then had he delayed so long, and why does he require other conditions? The comparison made by the woman, (v. 7,) and the inconstant temper of Saul, might account for this. H. The Lord defends his people. As long as the Israelites followed the orders of God, their wars might justly be attributed to him; but not when they were waged to satisfy the cravings of ambition. C.

VER. 18. Life. What exploits have I performed deserving such an honour? or what offices have my relations yet enjoyed? C.—David considers only his abject condition, and forgets his victories. H.

VER. 19. Wife. If this were the case, the character of Saul is rendered more despicable and perfidious. David never reclaims Merob, as he did Michol. H.—All the children of the former were gibbeted, 2 K. xxi. 9. The latter was given to David for his destruction, like Cleopatra (Dan. xi. 17,) to Ptolemy. T.

VER. 20. Other, is not found in the Heb. Sept. &c. H.—Some Latin copies read, "David loved Michol," (C.) as the Douay Bible translates; the authors living before the Popes had published their authentic editions. H.—Both might be true. Drus.

VER. 21. Day. Heb. "In two thou shalt," &c. C.—Prot. "in the one of the twain," Merob or Michol. H.—Saul had deceived him with respect to the first; but he promises that he shall have "the second," (C.) or two motives induced the king to make him this offer, the victory over Goliath, and the slaughter of 100 Philistines. M. T.—The Sept. omit this sentence, and read, "And the hand of the Philistines was upon Saul, and Saul commended," &c.

king, and all his servants love thee. Now, therefore, be the king's son-in-law.

23 And the servants of Saul spoke all these words in the ears of David. And David said: Doth it seem to you a small matter to be the king's son-in-law? But I am a poor man, and of small ability.

24 And the servants of Saul told him, saying: Such words as these hath David spoken.

25 And Saul said: Speak thus to David: The king desireth not any dowry, but only a hundred foreskins of the Philistines, to be avenged of the king's enemies. Now Saul thought to deliver David into the hands of the Philistines.

26 And when his servants had told David the words that Saul had said, the word was pleasing in the eyes of David to be the king's son-in-law.

27 And after a few days David rose up, and went with the men that were under him, and he slew of the Philistines two hundred men, and brought their foreskins and numbered them out to the king, that he might be his son-in-law. Saul therefore gave him Michol, his daughter, to wife.

28 And Saul saw, and understood that the Lord was with David. And Michol, the daughter of Saul, loved him.

29 And Saul began to fear David more: and Saul became David's enemy continually.

30 And the princes of the Philistines went forth: and from the beginning of their going forth, David behaved himself more wisely than all the servants of Saul, and his name became very famous.

CHAP. XIX.

Other attempts of Saul upon David's life. He cometh to Samuel. Saul's messengers, and Saul himself, prophesy.

AND Saul spoke to Jonathan, his son, and to all his servants, that they should kill David. But Jonathan, the son of Saul, loved David exceedingly.

2 And Jonathan told David, saying: Saul, my father, seeketh to kill thee: wherefore look to thyself, I beseech thee, in the morning, and thou shalt abide in a secret place, and shalt be hid.

3 And I will go out and stand beside my father in the field where thou art: and I will speak of thee to my father, and whatsoever I shall see, I will tell thee.

4 And Jonathan spoke good things of David to Saul, his father: and said to him: Sin not, O king, against thy servant, David, because he hath not sinned against thee, and his works are very good towards thee.

5 And he put his life in his hand, and slew the Philistine, and the Lord wrought great salvation for all Israel. Thou sawest it and didst rejoice. Why therefore wilt thou sin against innocent blood, by killing David, who is without fault?

6 And when Saul heard this, he was appeased with the words of Jonathan, and swore: As the Lord liveth, he shall not be slain.

7 Then Jonathan called David, and told him all these words: and Jonathan brought in David to Saul, and he was before him, as he had been yesterday and the day before.

8 And the war began again, and David went out, and fought against the Philistines, and defeated them with a great slaughter, and they fled from his face.

9 And the evil spirit from the Lord came upon Saul; and he sat in his house, and held a spear in his hand: and David played with his hand.

10 And Saul endeavoured to nail David to the wall with his spear. And David slept away out of the presence of Saul: and the spear missed him, and was fastened in the wall, and David fled, and escaped that night.

11 Saul therefore sent his guards to David's house to watch him, that he might be killed in the morning. And when Michol, David's wife, had told him this, saying: Unless thou save thyself this night, to-morrow thou wilt die:

12 She let him down through a window. And he went and fled away, and escaped.

13 And Michol took an image, and laid it on the bed, and put a goat's skin, with the hair at the head of it, and covered it with clothes.

14 And Saul sent officers to seize David; and it was answered that he was sick.

* A. M. 2944.

VER. 23. Ability, or riches. Sept. "without glory." H. See v. 18.

VER. 25. Dowry. Among the Hebrews, the man had to purchase his wife. Philistines. They were the nearest nation of those who were not circumcised; and thus Saul would prove that David had attacked them, which would greatly irritate them against him. C.—Josephus specifies six hundred heads, (II.) falsely, (Horn) as he frequently disguises what might give his readers offence, as being either mean or incredible. C.—Hundred is not specified in the oriental Heb. copies, (Capel, in 17.) and David gives 200, v. 27. But Saul only stipulated for 100. See 2 K. iii. 14. C.—Wife, "thinking it mean to be guilty of an untruth," &c. says Josephus; "yet his disposition was not altered. He resolved, therefore, to take away his life, and wished Jonathan and his most trusty servants to put his designs in execution." He then mentions the friendship of these two. But he takes no notice of the proffered marriage of Merob, and he seems not to have known that she was ever promised. See v. 17. and 19. and C. xvii. 12. H.

VER. 28. David. Of the subsequent verses, the Rom. Sept. has only the following words. "And all Israel loved him; (29) and Saul still continued to be in awe of him." The Alex. MS. agrees with the Heb. only, instead of Michol, &c. it reads, "all Israel." If the contested passages were omitted, the history would be less perplexed. But we must wait for the decision of the Church in matters of this nature, and never decide too peremptorily. H.

VER. 30. Furth, probably to revenge the recent insult. C.

CHAP. XIX. VER. 1. Jonathan. He was most interested, as David might be feared as a competitor; (M.) and, under the cloak of friendship, he might more easily destroy him. Saul was a stranger to the generous sentiments of his son, or he would never have made the proposal. H.—Grotius compares him with Germanicus. C.

VER. 2. Morning. Sept. add, "to-morrow" M.

VER. 3. Field. Saul would come thither, or Jonathan would sound his father's disposition, and give David information in the place appointed. C.

VER. 3. Hand, in danger. M.

VER. 6. Slain. His inconstant temper might cause him to be moved with the expostulation of his son; but he presently relapsed, if he were ever sincere. C.—The Scripture seems to insinuate that he was. M.

VER. 9. Saul. His jealousy was again enkindled by the success of David. C.—Hand, on music, to assuage the paroxysms of the king's fury. H.

VER. 11. Morning, fearing lest they might miss him in the night, (Salien) and perhaps desiring to see his execution, after he had been tried. Joseph.—The Philistines would not attack Samson at night. See Judg. xvi. 2. Ex. xiv. 20. The Parthians and Mahometans will do nothing at that time; moved perhaps by some superstitious notion. C.

VER. 13. Image. Heb. Teraphim. Aquila, "figures." Sym. "idols." Some believe that David had idols in his house, as ornaments, or to treat them with ignominy. Mercer.—But others cannot persuade themselves that he would keep such dangerous things. What Michol took, might therefore be some sacred representation, or a statue of some great man. Genebrad. (Kimchi. Maim.) Or it might be some piece of wood, or clothes folded up, so as to make the guards believe that David was in bed. Bochart, Anim. i. 2. 51. See Gen. xxxi. 19. C.—They would not examine very narrowly. H.—The Teraphim denote both idolatrous and sacred things. Ose. iii. 4. M.—Skin. Vat. and Alex. Sept. "liver," still warm and in motion. T.—But they have followed a false reading, as well as Josephus and Aquila. C.—Some have inferred that the hair of goats in that country is reddish, because it was designed to resemble David's hair, of the same colour. T.—This is, however, uncertain. The skin might form his pillow or coverlet. C.

VER. 14. Sick. This is an officious lie. She tells another to excuse herself, 15 And again Saul sent to see David, saying: Bring him to me in the bed, that he may be slain.

16 And when the messengers were come in, they found an image upon the bed, and a goat skin at his head.

17 And Saul said to Michol: Why hast thou deceived me so, and let my enemy go and flee away? And Michol answered Saul: Because he said to me: Let me go, or else I will kill thee.

18 But David fled and escaped, and came to Samuel in Ramatha, and told him all that Saul had done to him: and he and Samuel went and dwelt in Najoth.

19 And it was told Saul by some, saying: Behold David is in Najoth, in Ramatha.

20 So Saul sent officers to take David: and when they saw a company of prophets prophesying, and Samuel presiding over them, the Spirit of the Lord came also upon them, and they likewise began to prophesy.

21 And when this was told Saul, he sent other messengers: but they also prophesied. And again Saul sent messengers the third time: and they prophesied also. And Saul being exceedingly angry, 22 Went also himself to Ramatha, and came as far as the great cistern, which is in Socho, and he asked, and said: In what place are Samuel and David? And it was told him: Behold they are in Najoth, in Ramatha.

23 And he went to Najoth, in Ramatha, and the Spirit of the Lord came upon him also, and he went on, and prophesied till he came to Najoth, in Ramatha.

24 And he stripped himself also of his garments, and prophesied with the rest before Samuel, and lay down naked all that day and night. This gave occasion to a proverb: *What! is Saul too among the prophets?

* Supra x. 12.

v. 17. The children of Saul strive to prevent their father's cruelty, by taking part with the innocent David. H.—It is thought that David composed the 68th Psalm, Eripe, &c. on this occasion. C.

VER. 19. Najoth. It was probably a school or college of prophets, in or near Ramatha, under the direction of Samuel. Ch.—Chal. "in the house of doctrine." See C. x. 5. M.

VER. 20. Prophesying. That is, singing praises to God by a divine impulse. God was pleased on this occasion that both Saul's messengers and himself should experience the like impulse, that he might understand, by this instance of the divine power, how vain are the designs of man against him whom God protects. Ch.—The messengers did not return. M.—They were seized by the spirit only when they arrived at Najoth. But Saul felt the impression even at Socho, threw aside his garments, and began to act and to speak as one inspired. C.

VER. 24. Naked. Divested of his regal ornaments, (T.) though not in an indecent posture. People are said to be undressed, when they have not such clothes on as might be expected. Hesiod and Virgil say, Nudus ara, sere nudus; hiems ignava colono. "Plough and sow naked; choose a fine season for work, and rest in winter." H. See Mic. i. 8. 2 K. vi. 20.—Yet some assert (C.) that Saul was entirely undressed, as some pretended prophets and slaves go in the hot countries. Isai. xx. 1. We are not to judge of the indecency of such behaviour from our own manners. Some copies read cecinit, (C.) and the Douay Bible has "and sang naked." H.—Saul had not the gift of prophecy, like holy men, but only like Balaam's ass, for a time. S. Aug. ad Simp. ii. 1. W.—Prophets. This is something wonderful. M.—The proverb was now confirmed. CHAP. XX. VER. 1. To Jonathan, at Gabaa. He thought it no longer safe to remain at Najoth.

VER. 2. Be. The recent machinations and orders of Saul had been concealed from his son, with whom he used to consult on all important matters. C.—Perceiving, however, that Jonathan was unwilling to come into his measures, Saul, in his phrenzy, tried to destroy David. H.—But Jonathan, forming his judgment of others by his own upright heart, relied on the oath of his father, (C.) and on the information he had lately communicated to him, when he desired David to be slain. M.—Abulensis believes that the particulars of a preceding reconciliation have been lost, which Salien supplies, A. 2973.

CHAP. XX.

Saul being obstinately bent upon killing David, he is sent away by Jonathan.

BUT David fled from Najoth, which is in Ramatha, and came and said to Jonathan: What have I done? what is my iniquity, and what is my sin against thy father, that he seeketh my life?

2 And he said to him: God forbid, thou shalt not die: for my father will do nothing, great or little, without first telling me: hath then my father hid this word only from me? no, this shall not be.

3 And he swore again to David. And David said. Thy father certainly knoweth that I have found grace in thy sight, and he will say: Let not Jonathan know this, lest he be grieved. But truly as the Lord liveth, and thy soul liveth, there is but one step (as I may say) between me and death.

4 And Jonathan said to David: Whatsoever thy soul shall say to me, I will do for thee.

5 And David said to Jonathan: Behold to-morrow is the new moon, and I, according to custom, am wont to sit beside the king to eat: let me go then that I may be hid in the field till the evening of the third day.

6 If thy father look and inquire for me, thou shalt answer him: David asked me that he might run to Bethlehem, his own city: because there are solemn sacrifices there for all of his tribe.

7 If he shall say: It is well: thy servant shall have peace: but if he be angry, know that his malice is come to its height.

8 Deal mercifully then with thy servant: for thou hast brought me, thy servant, into a covenant of the Lord with thee. But if there be any iniquity in me, do thou kill me, and bring me not in to thy father.

9 And Jonathan said: Far be this from thee: for if kept according to the law, as a festival; and therefore Saul feasted on that day; and expected the attendance of his family. Ch. Num. x. 10.—Moon. Lit. "calends," a Greek word, intimating that the people were informed, or "called" together, on that occasion; as many nations followed the lunar system in the regulation of the year. H.—The Rabbins say that people were stationed on the highest hills to observe the first appearance of the moon, and to give notice of it. But for fear of a mistake, two days were observed, as here we see that Saul gave a feast for such a length of time. This, however, is very uncertain. David speaks without any reference to the watchmen, as of a thing well known to all. The reason of Saul's feasting two days, was because one of them was the sabbath. The following work-day David came to Nobe, (v. 19.) and partook of the loaves which had been changed on the sabbath day. C. xxi. 6. Lev. xxiv. 8.—Sit. The custom of sitting at table seems to have been more ancient than that of lying. The Persians chiefly introduced the latter. They had very low tables, so that one of them was placed under the feet of Alexander, when he sat upon the throne of Darius, which was too high for him. Curt. v. Both customs frequently prevailed at the same time. Eccl. ix. 12. and xxxi. 12. Women probably always sat, as the Chaldee says Esther did. Est. vii. 8. See Athen. i. 14. V. Max. ii. 1.—Day. The second of the month, after the sabbath was ended. C.—Pezron thinks that both the last and first days of the month were festivals. D.

—Saul might pretend that his throwing his spear at David, was an effect of his distemper; and as the latter had returned to his palace after the first attempt, he might judge that he would do the like now, though he had so lately sought his life. David probably retired to Bethlehem, and returned the third day, when he bid adieu to Jonathan and to the court of Saul for ever, (v. 21. C.) though he saw Jonathan once more at Ziph. I should certainly know that evil is determined by my father against thee, I could do no otherwise than tell thee.

10 And David answered Jonathan: Who shall bring me word, if thy father should answer thee harshly concerning me?

11 And Jonathan said to David: Come, and let us go out into the field. And when they were both of them gone out into the field,

12 Jonathan said to David: O Lord God of Israel, if I shall discover my father's mind, to-morrow, or the day after, and there be any thing good for David, and I send not immediately to thee, and make it known to thee,

13 May the Lord do so and so to Jonathan, and add still more. But if my father shall continue in malice against thee, I will discover it to thy ear, and will send thee away, that thou mayst go in peace, and the Lord be with thee, as he hath been with my father.

14 And if I live, thou shalt shew me the kindness of the Lord: but if I die, 15 Thou shalt not take away thy kindness from my house for ever, when the Lord shall have rooted out the enemies of David, every one of them from the earth, may he take away Jonathan from his house, and may the Lord require it at the hands of David's enemies.

16 Jonathan therefore made a covenant with the house of David: and the Lord required it at the hands of David's enemies.

17 And Jonathan swore again to David, because he loved him: for he loved him as his own soul.

18 And Jonathan said to him: To-morrow is the new moon, and thou wilt be missed:

19 For thy seat will be empty till after to-morrow. So thou shalt go down quickly, and come to the place where thou must be hid, on the day when it is lawful to work, and thou shalt remain beside the stone, which is called Ezel.

20 And I will shoot three arrows near it, and will shoot as if I were exercising myself at a mark.

VER. 12. After. Sept. "The Lord . . has known that I will sift my father, as opportunity shall serve, thrice," or repeatedly. H.

VER. 13. Father, at the beginning of his reign. Jonathan foresees that David will be his father's successor. C.—Hence he commends himself and family to his protection. M.

VER. 14. Die. Heb. lit. "If I live, thou shalt not shew me, &c. . . and if I die, (15) thou shalt not," &c. It seems there is a negation too much. Jonathan requests that David would shew mercy to him and to his family; or he is willing that neither should partake of his kindness, if he prove a traitor to his friend. C.—Prot. "And thou shalt not only, while yet I live, shew me the kindness of the Lord, that I die not: (15) But also thou shalt not cut off thy kindness from my house for ever, no not when the Lord hath cut off," &c. H.

VER. 15. May he. It is a curse upon himself, if he should not be faithful to his promise.—It. That is, revenge it upon David's enemies, and upon me, if I should fail of my word given to him. Ch.—The Heb. and several Latin MSS. stop at earth; and what follows, is not found in some Greek and Latin editions. C.—Enemies. May God punish David's enemies, and me among the rest. M.

VER. 16. Enemies. This seems to be a second translation of the former sentence, with a small variation.—Required may be expressed in the future, as an imprecation made by the two friends against those who should attempt to break the covenant, or to oppose David's reign. Sept. omit this verse entirely, and translate the following, (17) "and Jonathan continued to swear to David, inasmuch as he loved him, because he loved the soul of the man who loved him." He had such an affection for David, that he extended his love to all his friends. Prot. "so Jonathan made a covenant with . . David, saying: Let the Lord even require it at," &c. H.—He did so in due time, and the covenant between these two had its effect. C.

VER. 19. Morrow. Heb. "and after three days (H. or, on the third day) thou shalt," &c. Syr. and Arab. "Thou wilt be called for at table, at the third hour." C.—Sept. use the same word, πρωινοισι: as in the following verse: "I will shoot thrice at wild beasts, with arrows, sending as far as Laarmattarai," so here they 21 And I will send a boy, saying to him: Go and fetch me the arrows.

22 If I shall say to the boy: Behold the arrows are on this side of thee, take them up: come thou to me, because there is peace to thee, and there is no evil, as the Lord liveth. But if I shall speak thus to the boy: Behold the arrows are beyond thee: go in peace, for the Lord hath sent thee away.

23 And concerning the word which I and thou have spoken, the Lord be between thee and me for ever.

24 So David was hid in the field, and the new moon came, and the king sat down to eat bread.

25 And when the king sat down upon his chair, (according to custom) which was beside the wall, Jonathan arose, and Abner sat by Saul's side, and David's place appeared empty.

26 And Saul said nothing that day, for he thought it might have happened to him, that he was not clean, nor purified.

27 And when the second day after the new moon was come, David's place appeared empty again. And Saul said to Jonathan, his son: Why cometh not the son of Isai to meat neither yesterday, nor to-day?

28 And Jonathan answered Saul: He asked leave of me earnestly to go to Bethlehem.

29 And he said: Let me go, for there is a solemn sacrifice in the city, one of my brethren hath sent for me: and now if I have found favour in thy eyes, I will go quickly, and see my brethren. For this cause he came not to the king's table.

30 Then Saul being angry against Jonathan, said to him: Thou son of a woman that is the ravisher of a man, do I not know that thou lovest the son of Isai to thy own confusion, and to the confusion of thy shameless mother?

31 For as long as the son of Isai liveth upon earth, thou shalt not be established, nor thy kingdom. Therefore now presently send, and fetch him to me: for he is the son of death.

may insinuate that David must "wait three days" (H.) or come on each of those days, that he may not slip an opportunity. Cajet.—Work. Le Clerc translates, "in the day of the business." Prot. "where thou didst hide thyself when the business was in hand, and shalt remain by the stone Ezel." Sept. Alex. "by this affair." Vat. "Ergab," a word which Grabe admits instead of εργον, in his edition. H.—Other copies, with the Syr. and Arab. have simply, "near this stone," which Junius styles speculam, as if it were a butt or landmark, (C.) or a stone to shew the road, (Lyran) or mile-stone, (T.) which latter supposition is not probable, as David desired to be concealed. M.—He would therefore choose some cavern, so as to be able to hear what Jonathan said, without being seen. H.—This precaution was necessary for the safety of both. M.

VER. 23. Ever. Let us always inviolably adhere to our covenant. H.

VER. 24. Field, on the third day, having gone in the mean time to Bethlehem, v. 6.

VER. 25. Arose, out of respect. Sept. "he had the precedence over Jonathan" alone, as the latter sat "on the king's right hand, and Abner on the left." Arab. C.—David's place was after Abner. M.

VER. 26. Purified, having perhaps touched some dead body, &c. Lev. xi. 24.

VER. 27. To-day, which was the sabbath. C.—On the new moons people did not travel far. M.

VER. 29. Sacrifice. Heb. "my family hath a sacrifice," &c. v. 5. H.

VER. 30. A man. Heb. "of an unjust revolt." Thou hast taken part against thy father. C.—Prot. "son of the perverse rebellious woman." Sept. "of the fugitive, (H.) or of those girls who go in quest of men." We must not suppose that Jonathan's mother was really of this description. Saul, in rage, wishes to affront his son, (C.) as some frantic parents call their children bastards, not reflecting that the reproach would fall upon themselves.—Isai, as he styles him out of contempt, v. 27.—Mother. Heb. &c. "of thy mother's nakedness or shame." M.—Instead of a crown, thou must expect to be reduced to a private station, to the disgrace of my family. H.

VER. 31. The son of death. That is, one that deserveth death, and shall surely be put to death. Ch.—So people are often styled sons of perdition, of hell, &c.

32 And Jonathan answering Saul, his father, said: Why shall he die? what hath he done?

33 And Saul caught up a spear to strike him. And Jonathan understood that it was determined by his father to kill David.

34 So Jonathan rose from the table in great anger, and did not eat bread on the second day after the new moon. For he was grieved for David, because his father had put him to confusion.

35 And when the morning came, Jonathan went into the field according to the appointment with David, and a little boy with him.

36 And he said to his boy: Go, and fetch me the arrows which I shoot. And when the boy ran, he shot another arrow beyond the boy.

37 The boy therefore came to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had shot: and Jonathan cried after the boy, and said: Behold the arrow is there further beyond thee.

38 And Jonathan cried again after the boy, saying: Make haste speedily, stand not. And Jonathan's boy gathered up the arrows, and brought them to his master:

39 And he knew not at all what was doing: for only Jonathan and David knew the matter.

40 Jonathan therefore gave his arms to the boy, and said to him: Go, and carry them into the city.

41 And when the boy was gone, David rose out of his place, which was toward the south, and falling on his face to the ground, adored thrice: and kissing one another, they wept together; but David more.

42 And Jonathan said to David: Go in peace: and let all stand that we have sworn both of us in the name of the Lord, saying: The Lord be between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed for ever.

43 And David arose, and departed: and Jonathan went into the city.

light, &c. (C.) when they are worthy of such things. H.—All the crime of David, was his too exalted merit, which, under a jealous prince, is often fatal. Nec minus periculum ex magnâ fââ, quam ex malâ. Tacit. Agricola.

VER. 34. Great. Lit. "in the anger of fury." H.—Him, either David or Jonathan. C.—Indeed the crime of rebellion had been imputed to both. H.—Jonathan was grieved on account of the affront and danger (M.) to which he had been publicly exposed, as well as for his friend, upon whose destruction he perceived that his father was now deliberately bent, and not merely during his fits of madness. —Confusion. Sept. "because his father had completed his malice against him;" (H.) or, "had resolved to make an end of him." C.

VER. 36. Another. The Heb. &c. do not express this distinctly; (C.) but we find, v. 38 "the lad gathered up the arrows."

VER. 40. Arms. Prot. "artillery" but the bow and arrow, &c. are meant. The boy was sent away under this pretext.

VER. 41. Place. Prot. "out of a place towards," &c. II.—Chal. "from the side of the rock Asha;" (or Ezel, v. 19.) though the name is written rather differently in Hebrew. But this was the place appointed. C.—Sept. "from sleep, . . . and adored him, . . . and each bewailed his neighbour, to great perfection." H.—More. Jonathan strove to comfort him, as he was leaving wife, friends, and all. M.

VER. 42. Stand. This is not expressed in the text, which is left imperfect, (H.) to denote the anguish of the parting friends, (M.) very beautifully. Salien.—David did not exactly comply with this covenant, and his grandson lost half the kingdom. 2 K. xix. T.

CHAP. XXI. VER. 1. Nobe. A city in the tribe of Benjamin, to which the tabernacle of the Lord had been translated from Silo. Ch.—It was about 12 miles south-west of Gabaa. Tudelensis.—There was another Nebe on the east side of the Jordan, to which Serarius thinks David was three days in travelling. But when David made that assertion, he wished to conceal the real state of his affairs, as he had not seen Saul since he was at Najoth, v. 5. Nobe was afterwards accounted a sacerdotal city, v. 19. 2 Esd. xi. 32.—Achimelech, who is perhaps the same with Achia (C. xiv. 3.) and Abiathar. Mark ii. 32.—With thee. He would not expose his men to the resentment of Saul. (C.) though he afterwards gave the priest to understand that he had some attendants (v. 2) as the gospel relates. Mat. xii. 8. He dismissed them before he entered Geth. C.

CHAP. XXI.

David receiveth holy bread of Achimelech, the priest: and feigneth himself mad before Achis, king of Geth.

AND David came to Nobe, to Achimelech, the priest: and Achimelech was astonished at David's coming. And he said to him: Why art thou alone, and no man with thee?

2 And David said to Achimelech, the priest: The king hath commanded me a business, and said: Let no man know the thing for which thou art sent by me, and what manner of commands I have given thee: and I have appointed my servants to such and such a place.

3 Now therefore if thou have any thing at hand, though it were but five loaves, give me, or whatsoever thou canst find.

4 And the priest answered David, saying: I have no common bread at hand, but only holy bread, if the young men be clean, especially from women?

5 And David answered the priest, and said to him: Truly, as to what concerneth women, we have refrained ourselves from yesterday and the day before, when we came out, and the vessels of the young men were holy. Now this way is defiled, but it shall also be sanctified this day in the vessels.

6 The priest therefore gave him hallowed bread: for there was no bread there, but only the loaves of proposition, which had been taken away from before the face of the Lord, that hot loaves might be set up.

7 Now a certain man of the servants of Saul was there that day, within the tabernacle of the Lord: and his name was Doeg, an Edomite, the chiefest of Saul's herdsmen.

8 And David said to Achimelech: Hast thou here at hand a spear, or a sword? for I brought not my own sword, nor my own weapons with me, for the king's business required haste.

b Mat. xii. 8. 4.

VER. 2. The king, &c. This was an untruth, which David, like many other great men, might think lawful in such an emergency. But it is essentially evil. C.—And such, which he deems it unnecessary to specify. Sept. retain the Heb. words, "Phelanni almoni." See Ruth iv. 1.

VER. 4. If the young men be clean, &c. If this cleanness was required of them that were to eat that bread, which was but a figure of the bread of life which we receive in the blessed sacrament; how clean ought Christians to be when they approach to our tremendous mysteries? And what reason hath the Church of God to admit none to be her ministers, to consecrate and daily receive this most pure sacrament, but such as devote themselves to a life of perpetual purity. Ch.—Women. God required this on many occasions. Ex. xix. 15. Urgent necessity determined Achimelech to grant the loaves, as our Saviour intimates, though it is probable that he first consulted the Lord. C. xxii. 16. C.—David perhaps went to Nobe on purpose to ask advice. M.—We have here an example of a dispensation, and of the distinction between lay, or common, and holy bread. W.

VER. 5. Vessels, i. e. the bodies, have been holy; that is, have been kept from impurity: (Ch.) in which sense S. Paul uses the word. 1 Thess. iv. 4. It also includes garments, arms, &c. All was to be clean. Sept. "my men are all purified." C.—Defiled. Is liable to expose us to dangers of uncleanness, (Ch.) as we shall perhaps have to fight. H.—Sanctified. That is, we shall take care, notwithstanding these dangerous circumstances, to keep our vessels holy; that is, to keep our bodies from every thing that may defile us. Ch.—The text is very obscure. Heb. "the way is impure, because to-day it shall be purified in the vessel." C.—Prot. "and the bread is in a manner common, yea though it were sanctified this day in the vessel." We might eat of it in a case of such necessity. H.—Though laics be commonly debarred from tasting of it, we will partake of it with all due respect. C.—Sept. "the journey is (of a disagreeable nature, or) impure, therefore it will be rendered holy by my vessels," or arms, in the king's cause. H.—He seemed to be going towards the infidel nations. M.

VER. 7. Within. Heb. nehtsar, "detained, or assembled before the Lord" Theodoret thinks he was possessed; others believe he had made a vow, &c.—Edomite. Some Greek copies read, a Syrian, as also C. xxii. 9. C.—He had embraced the Jewish religion. M.

9 And the priest said: Lo here is the sword of Goliath, the Philistine, whom thou slewest in the valley of Terebinth, wrapped up in a cloth behind the ephod: if thou wilt take this, take it, for here there is no other but this. And David said: There is none like that, give it me.

10 And David arose and fled that day from the face of Saul: and came to Achis, the king of Geth:

11 And the servants of Achis, when they saw David, said to him: Is not this David, the king of the land? Did they not sing to him in their dances, saying: "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands?"

12 But David laid up these words in his heart, and was exceedingly afraid at the face of Achis, the king of Geth.

13 And he changed his countenance before them, and slipt down between their hands: and he stumbled against the doors of the gate, and his spittle ran down upon his beard.

14 And Achis said to his servants: You saw the man was mad: why have you brought him to me?

15 Have we need of mad men, that you have brought in this fellow, to play the madman in my presence? shall this fellow come into my house?

CHAP. XXII.

Many resort to David. Doeg accuseth Achimelech to Saul. He ordereth him and all the other priests of Nobe to be slain. Abiathar escapeth.

DAVID^b therefore went from thence, and fled to the cave of Odollam. And when his brethren, and all his father's house, had heard of it, they went down to him thither.

VER. 9. This. Chaldee observes, he gave this sword "after he had consulted the Lord with the ephod." In a just war, the ornaments of the temples may be used. Pro republic i pierumque templa nudantur. Seneca. Grot. Jur. iii. 5. 2. C.—Tostatus believes that David would restore this sword, as soon as he had procured other arms.

VER. 10. Achis. He is elsewhere called Achimelech. This bold step was taken by God's order, (Salien) or secret impulse, as the high priest and Doeg knew not whither David had directed his course. H.—Sanchez thinks David received no express declaration, as the event was not very prosperous. M.—Many great men have taken refuge among their greatest enemies, as Themistocles, Alcibiades, and Coriolanus fled respectively to the Persians, Lacedæmonians, and Volscians, and were received with great respect. Indeed the acquisition of such men is equivalent to a victory. C.—Though David might expect that his name would be hateful at Geth, as he had slain their great champion, &c. yet he had done it in an open manner, and had displayed the most heroic courage, so that the king and nobility might raise their thoughts above the vulgar sentiments of jealousy and revenge. Salien.—David only retired from the court of this king, to avoid the hatred of the courtiers; he returned again, and was kindly received. C. xxvii. 1. C.

VER. 11. Land, equal to a king in glory. M.—Perhaps they had heard of the rejection of Saul, and reflected that their own country belonged to him, according to the terms proposed by Goliath. C.

VER. 13. Countenance. Heb. "sentiment, (C.) or, behaviour." H.—Chal. "reason." He no longer acted as a prudent man, but like a fool.—Down; not fainting, (C.) but like one in an epileptic fit. H.—Heb. "he feigned himself mad." Chal. "stupid."—Stumbled. Heb. "wrote, or made figures upon." Sept. "beat the drum upon the gates of the city, and he was carried about, or acted the fool, in his hands, (παρασπαστορ εν ταις χειρσιν, αυτου: Anama would have, αυτου, their) and he fell against the doors of the gate," &c. They seem to give a double translation. S. Aug. says, "we cannot understand how David could be carried in his own hands. But we understand how it was verified in Christ. For Christ was carried in his own hands at his last supper, when he gave, or commending, his own body, he said, This, &c. for he then carried his own body in his own hands." In Ps. xxxiii. conc. 1. Ferebat enim illud corpus in manibus suis. Anama may laugh at S. Augustine's ignorance of Hebrew, but the holy doctor was at least a sincere Catholic. H.—Beard. We find some wretched objects doing the same. Mar. ix. 17. The spittle was deemed infectious. Et illic isti qui sputatur, morbus interdum venit. Plautus in Captivia.

VER. 15. House. David had not rushed into the palace of his own accord, but wished to remain concealed. Some of the people however knew him, and would have him to enlist as one of the soldiers of Achis; (M.) or even designed to get him put to death, which made him have recourse to this expedient. Some of the wits have imitated him, to avoid worldly honours and dignities of the Church.

unto him: and he became their prince, and there were with him about four hundred men.

3 And David departed from thence into Maspha of Moab: and he said to the king of Moab: Let my father and my mother tarry with you, I beseech thee, till I know what God will do for me.

4 And he left them under the eyes of the king of Moab, and they abode with him all the days that David was in the hold.

5 And Gad, the prophet, said to David: Abide not in the hold, depart, and go into the land of Juda. And David departed, and came into the forest of Haret.

6 And Saul heard that David was seen, and the men that were with him. Now whilst Saul abode in Gabaa, and was in the wood, which is by Rama, having his spear in his hand, and all his servants were standing about him,

7 He said to his servants that stood about him: Hear me now, ye sons of Jemini: will the son of Isai give every one of you fields, and vineyards, and make you all tribunes, and centurions:

8 That all of you have conspired against me, and there is no one to inform me, especially when even my son hath entered into league with the son of Isai? There is not one of you that pitieth my case, nor that giveth me any information: because my son hath raised up my servant against me, plotting against me to this day.

9 And Doeg, the Edomite, who stood by, and was the chief among the servants of Saul, answering, said: I saw the son of Isai, in Nobe, with Achimelech, the son of Achitob, the priest.

10 And he consulted the Lord for him, and gave him victuals, and gave him the sword of Goliath, the Philistine.

VER. 2. Men. His title to the crown was incontestable, so that he might justly make war, particularly in his own defence, and receive those who flocked to him to screen themselves from the persecution of Saul, and from their debtors, whom they would thus enable themselves to repay in time, by the plunder which they would take from the enemy. David maintained the strictest discipline, and withheld his men from making any disturbance, always manifesting the greatest respect for the person of the king. VER. 3. Of Moab, to distinguish it from the city of Benjamin, where Samuel had assembled the people; (M.) and perhaps also from the birth-place of Jephthe, unless the Moabites had taken possession again of that part of Galaad. C.—Saul had made war upon this king, so that he was more ready to protect David, who departing soon after, by the admonition of Gad, (v. 5. C.) left those who could not follow him under his care. In the mean time he lived on plunder, taken from the surrounding enemies, (Tostat) and was joined by 200 men from the tribes of Benjamin and of Juda, (1 Par. xii. 16.) with Amasai, his nephew, by his sister Abigail, at their head. 11 Then the king sent to call for Achimelech, the priest, the son of Achitob, and all his father's house, the priests that were in Nob, and they came all of them to the king.

12 And Saul said to Achimelech: Hear, thou son of Achitob. He answered: Here I am, my lord.

13 And Saul said to him: Why have you conspired against me, thou, and the son of Isai, and thou hast given him bread and a sword, and hast consulted the Lord for him, that he should rise up against me, continuing a traitor to this day.

14 And Achimelech answering the king, said: And who amongst all thy servants is so faithful as David, who is the king's son-in-law, and goeth forth at thy bidding, and is honourable in thy house?

15 Did I begin to-day to consult the Lord for him? far be this from me: let not the king suspect such a thing against his servant, or any one in all my father's house: for thy servant knew nothing of this matter, either little or great.

16 And the king said: Dying thou shalt die, Achimelech, thou and all thy father's house.

17 And the king said to the messengers that stood about him: Turn, and kill the priests of the Lord, for their hand is with David, because they knew that he was fled, and they told it not to me. And the king's servants would not put forth their hands against the priests of the Lord.

18 And the king said to Doeg: Turn thou, and fall upon the priests. And Doeg, the Edomite, turned, and fell upon the priests, and slew in that day eighty-five men that wore the linen ephod.

19 And Nob, the city of the priests, he smote with the edge of the sword, both men and women, children and sucklings, and ox, and ass, and sheep, with the edge of the sword.

20 But one of the sons of Achimelech, the son of Achitob, whose name was Abiathar, escaped, and fled to David,

CHAP. XXIII.

David relieveth Ceila, besieged by the Philistines. He fleeth into the desert of Ziph. Jonathan and he confirm their former covenant. The Ziphites discover him to Saul, who pursuing close after him, is called away by an invasion from the Philistines.

AND they told David, saying: Behold the Philistines fight against Ceila, and they rob the barns.

2 Therefore David consulted the Lord, saying: Shall I go and smite these Philistines? And the Lord said to David: Go, and thou shalt smite the Philistines, and shalt save Ceila.

3 And the men that were with David, said to him: Behold we are in fear here in Judea, how much more if we go to Ceila against the bands of the Philistines?

4 Therefore David consulted the Lord again. And he answered and said to him: Arise, and go to Ceila: for I will deliver the Philistines into thy hand.

5 David, therefore, and his men, went to Ceila, and fought against the Philistines, and brought away their cattle, and made a great slaughter of them: and David saved the inhabitants of Ceila.

6 Now at that time, when Abiathar, the son of Achimelech, fled to David, to Ceila, he came down, having an ephod with him.

7 And it was told Saul that David was come to Ceila: and Saul said: The Lord hath delivered him into my hands, and he is shut up, being come into a city that hath gates and bars.

8 And Saul commanded all the people to go down to fight against Ceila, and to besiege David and his men.

9 Now when David understood that Saul secretly prepared evil against him, he said to Abiathar, the priest: Bring hither the ephod.

Saul thinks this is a fit opportunity for taking them all prisoners; and he supposes that God was on his side, though, after his repeated crimes, he had little reason to flatter himself with hopes of this nature. The wicked, however, easily delude themselves. H.

VER. 8. People, in the neighbourhood. It is hardly probable that all Israel should be put in motion to take a few men. C.

VER. 9. Secretly. He might have pretended that the armament was against the Philistines. M.—Ephod. Some say that David put it on. But this was the privilege of the high priest, who gave the answer to David's consultation, which

10 And David said: O Lord God of Israel, thy servant hath heard a report, that Saul designeth to come to Ceila, to destroy the city for my sake:

11 Will the men of Ceila deliver me into his hands? and will Saul come down, as thy servant hath heard? O Lord God of Israel, tell thy servant. And the Lord said: He will come down.

12 And David said: Will the men of Ceila deliver me and my men into the hands of Saul? And the Lord said: They will deliver thee up.

13 Then David and his men, who were about six hundred, arose, and departing from Ceila, wandered up and down, uncertain where they should stay: and it was told Saul that David was fled from Ceila, and had escaped: wherefore he forbore to go out.

14 But David abode in the desert in strong holds, and he remained in a mountain of the desert of Ziph, in a woody hill. And Saul sought him always: but the Lord delivered him not into his hands.

15 And David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life. And David was in the desert of Ziph, in a wood.

16 And Jonathan, the son of Saul, arose, and went to David, into the wood, and strengthened his hands in God: and he said to him:

17 Fear not: for the hand of my father, Saul, shall not find thee, and thou shalt reign over Israel, and I shall be next to thee; yea, and my father knoweth this.

18 And they two made a covenant before the Lord: and David abode in the wood: but Jonathan returned to his house.

19 And the Ziphites went up to Saul, in Gabaa, saying: Lo, doth not David lie hid with us in the strong holds of the wood, in Mount Hachila, which is on the right hand of the desert.

20 Now therefore come down, as thy soul hath desired to come down: and it shall be our business to deliver him into the king's hands.

21 And Saul said: Blessed be ye of the Lord, for you have pitied my case.

22 Go, therefore, I pray you, and use all diligence, and curiously inquire, and consider the place where his foot is, and who hath seen him there: for he thinketh of me, that I lie craftily in wait for him.

24 And they arose, and went to Ziph before Saul. and David and his men were in the desert of Maon, in the plain at the right hand of Jesimon.

25 Then Saul and his men went to seek him: and it was told David, and forthwith he went down to the rock, and abode in the wilderness of Maon: and when Saul had heard of it, he pursued after David in the wilderness of Maon.

26 And Saul went on this side of the mountain: and David and his men were on the other side of the mountain: and David despaired of being able to escape from the face of Saul: and Saul and his men encompassed David and his men round about, to take them.

27 And a messenger came to Saul, saying: Make haste to come, for the Philistines have poured in themselves upon the land.

28 Wherefore Saul returned, leaving the pursuit of David, and went to meet the Philistines. For this cause, they called that place the rock of division.

CHAP. XXIV.

Saul seeketh David in the wilderness of Engaddi: he goeth into a cave, where David hath him in his power.

THEN David went up from thence, and dwelt in strong holds of Engaddi.

2 And when Saul was returned from following the Philistines, they told him, saying: Behold; David is in the desert of Engaddi.

3 Saul, therefore, took three thousand chosen men out of all Israel, and went out to seek after David and his men, even upon the most craggy rocks, which are accessible only to wild goats.

4 And he came to the sheep-cotes which were in his way. And there was a cave, into which Saul went, to ease nature: now David and his men lay hid in the inner part of the cave.

5 And the servants of David said to him: Behold the day, of which the Lord said to thee: I will deliver thy enemy unto thee, that thou mayst do to him as it shall seem good in thy eyes. Then David arose, and secretly cut off the hem of Saul's robe.

7 And he said to his men: The Lord be merciful unto me, that I may do no such thing to my master, the Lord's anointed, as to lay my hand upon him, because he is the Lord's anointed.

8 And David stopped his men with his words, and suffered them not to rise against Saul: but Saul, rising up out of the cave, went on his way.

9 And David also rose up after him: and going out of the cave, cried after Saul, saying: My lord the king. And Saul looked behind him: and David bowing himself down to the ground, worshipped,

10 And said to Saul: Why dost thou hear the words of men that say: David seeketh thy hurt?

11 Behold this day thy eyes have seen, that the Lord hath delivered thee into my hand, in the cave, and I had a thought to kill thee, but my eye hath spared thee. For I said: I will not put out my hand against my lord, because he is the Lord's anointed.

12 Moreover, see and know, O my father, the hem of thy robe in my hand, that when I cut off the hem of thy robe, I would not put out my hand against thee. Reflect, and see, that there is no evil in my hand, nor iniquity, neither have I sinned against thee: but thou liest in wait for my life, to take it away.

13 The Lord judge between me and thee, and the Lord revenge me of thee: but my hand shall not be upon thee.

15 After whom dost thou pursue? After a dead dog, after a flea.

David ought to have embraced it, and put an end to these troubles, by the death of the usurper. 17 And when David had made an end of speaking these words to Saul, Saul said: Is this thy voice, my son David? And Saul lifted up his voice, and wept:

18 And he said to David: Thou art more just than I: for thou hast done good to me, and I have rewarded thee with evil.

19 And thou hast shewed this day what good things thou hast done to me: how the Lord delivered me into thy hand, and thou hast not killed me.

20 For who when he hath found his enemy, will let him go well away? But the Lord reward thee for this good turn, for what thou hast done to me this day.

21 And now as I know that thou shalt surely be king, and have the kingdom of Israel in thy hand:

22 Swear to me by the Lord, that thou wilt not destroy my seed after me, nor take away my name from the house of my father.

3 Now the name of the man was Nabal: and the name of his wife was Abigail. And she was a prudent and very comely woman: but her husband was churlish, and very bad and ill natured: and he was of the house of Caleb.

4 And when David heard in the wilderness, that Nabal was shearing his sheep,

5 He sent ten young men, and said to them: Go up to Carmel, and go to Nabal, and salute him in my name with peace.

6 And you shall say: Peace be to my brethren, and to thee, and peace to thy house, and peace to all that thou hast.

7 I have heard that thy shepherds that were with us in the desert were shearing: we never molested them, neither was there ought missing to them of the flock at any time, all the while they were with us in Carmel.

8 Ask thy servants, and they will tell thee. Now therefore let thy servants find favour in thy eyes: for we are come in a good day, whatsoever thy hand shall find give to thy servants, and to thy son David.

9 And when David's servants came, they spoke to Nabal all these words in David's name, and then held their peace.

10 But Nabal answering the servants of David, said: Who is David? and what is the son of Isai? servants are multiplied now a days who flee from their masters.

11 Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and the flesh of my cattle, which I have killed for my shearers, and give to men whom I know not whence they are?

12 So the servants of David went back their way, and returning came and told him all the words that he said.

13 Then David said to his young men: Let every man gird on his sword. And they girded on every man his sword. And David also girded on his sword: and there followed David about four hundred men, and two hundred remained with the baggage.

14 But one of the servants told Abigail, the wife of Nabal, saying: Behold, David sent messengers out of the wilderness, to salute our master: and he rejected them.

15 These men were very good to us, and gave us no trouble: neither did we ever lose any thing all the time that we conversed with them in the desert.

16 They were a wall unto us, both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep.

17 Wherefore consider, and think what thou hast to do: for evil is determined against thy husband, and against thy house, and he is a son of Belial, so that no man can speak to him.

18 Then Abigail made haste and took two hundred loaves, and two vessels of wine, and five sheep ready dressed, and five measures of parched corn, and a hundred clusters of raisins, and two hundred cakes of dry figs, and laid them upon asses:

19 And she said to her servants: Go before me: behold, I will follow after you: but she told not her husband, Nabal.

20 And when she had gotten upon an ass, and was coming down to the foot of the mountain, David and his men came down over against her, and she met them.

21 And David said: Truly in vain have I kept all that belonged to this fellow in the wilderness, and nothing was lost of all that pertained unto him: and he hath returned me evil for good.

22 May God do so and so, and add more to the foes of David, if I leave of all that belong to him till the morning, any that pisseth against the wall.

23 And when Abigail saw David, she made haste and lighted off the ass, and fell before David, on her face, and adored upon the ground.

24 And she fell at his feet, and said: Upon me let this iniquity be, my lord: let thy handmaid speak, I beseech thee, in thy ears, and hear the words of thy servant.

26 Now therefore, my lord, the Lord liveth, and thy soul liveth, who hath withholden thee from coming to blood, and hath saved thy hand to thee: and now let thy enemies be as Nabal, and all they that seek evil to my lord.

27 Wherefore receive this blessing, which thy handmaid hath brought to thee, my lord: and give it to the young men that follow thee, my lord.

28 Forgive the iniquity of thy handmaid: for the Lord will surely make for my lord a faithful house, *because thou, my lord, fightest the battles of the Lord: let not evil therefore be found in thee all the days of thy life.

29 For if a man at any time shall rise, and persecute thee, and seek thy life, the soul of my lord shall be kept, as in the bundle of the living, with the Lord thy God: but the souls of thy enemies shall be whirled, as with the violence and whirling of a sling.

30 And when the Lord shall have done to thee, my lord, all the good that he hath spoken concerning thee, and shall have made thee prince over Israel, 31 This shall not be an occasion of grief to thee, and a scruple of heart to my lord, that thou hast shed innocent blood, or hast revenged thyself: and when the Lord shall have done well by my lord, thou shalt remember thy handmaid.

32 And David said to Abigail: Blessed be the Lord the God of Israel, who sent thee this day to meet me, and blessed be thy speech:

33 And blessed be thou, who hast kept me to-day from coming to blood, and revenging me with my own hand.

34 Otherwise, as the Lord liveth, the God of Israel, who hath withholden me from doing thee any evil, if thou hadst not quickly come to meet me, there had not been left to Nabal by the morning light, any that pisseth against the wall.

35 And David received at her hand all that she had acknowledged. C.—But Abigail plainly alludes to it, v. 28. H.—Name, Nabal, in Hebrew, signifies a fool. C.—Thus she extenuates his fault, by attributing it to a deficiency in understanding.

VER. 26. To thee. She felicitates David on not having put his design in execution. C.—Theodoret thinks he might lawfully have done it; but others believe that the fault bore no proportion with the intended punishment. T.—As Nabal, devoid of sense. Abigail displays the eloquence of nature. C.

VER. 27. Blessing, or present. M. See 2 Cor. ix. 5. C.

VER. 28. House. Thy family shall long continue in the enjoyment of the royal power. Chal. "an established kingdom." H.—Lord, as his general.—Evil. Do no manner of injustice. Heb. "and evil has not been found," &c. Hitherto thy life has been irreproachable. C.

VER. 29. Bundle. Such things are more secure than those which are loose. W.—Of the living, or predestinate, over whom Providence watches in a particular manner. She seems to allude to the method of carrying pieces of silver in bundles. Prov. vii. 20. Chal. "the soul of my lord shall be in the treasury of the lives of the age, before the Lord God." C.—It shall be preserved for length of days, like something most precious, (H.) while the wicked shall be in continual danger and anxiety, like a stone in a sling. Zac. ix. 15. By substituting c for b in Heb the sense may be still more striking: "the soul of my lord shall be preserved like a living (precious, serviceable,) stone. But the soul of thy enemies shall be whirled in a sling." The Hebrews had a great esteem for slingers, so that this comparison would be sufficiently noble. A living stone is often mentioned both in sacred and in profane authors, 1 Pet. ii. 4. Virgil Æneid i. 171. Vivogue sedilia saxo.

VER. 30. Israel, a thing which all expected, and even Saul himself. C. xxiv. 21. VER. 31. Scruple. Heb. "scandal," or sin, for David might defend himself, but ought not to attack or take revenge, like a king. Grot.—Innocent. Many of Nabal's family were such, and even his fault did not deserve death. Heb. "shed blood without cause." C.—Handmaid, who has suggested this good advice. M.—David was so much pleased with her prudence and beauty, that he afterwards married her.

VER. 32. Speech. Heb. "advice, or wisdom." Sept. "conduct." C.

brought him, and said to her: Go in peace into thy house behold I have heard thy voice, and honoured thy face.

36 And Abigail came to Nabal: and behold he had a feast in his house, like the feast of a king: and Nabal's heart was merry, for he was very drunk: and she told him nothing less or more until morning.

37 But early in the morning, when Nabal had digested his wine, his wife told him these words, and his heart died within him, and he became as a stone.

38 And after ten days had passed, the Lord struck Nabal, and he died.

39 And when David had heard that Nabal was dead, he said: Blessed be the Lord, who hath judged the cause of my reproach, at the hand of Nabal, and hath kept his servant from evil, and the Lord hath returned the wickedness of Nabal upon his head. Then David sent and treated with Abigail, that he might take her to himself for a wife.

40 And David's servants came to Abigail, to Carmel, and spoke to her, saying: David hath sent us to thee, to take thee to himself for a wife.

41 And she arose, and bowed herself down with her face to the earth, and said: Behold, let thy servant be a handmaid, to wash the feet of the servants of my lord.

42 And Abigail arose, and made haste, and got upon an ass, and five damsels went with her her waiting maids, and she followed the messengers of David, and became his wife.

43 Moreover David took also Achinoam of Jezrahel: and they were both of them his wives.

44 But Saul gave Michol, his daughter, David's wife, to Phalti, the son of Laïs, who was of Gallim.

CHAP. XXVI.

Saul goeth out again after David, who cometh by night where Saul and his men are asleep, but suffereth him not to be touched. Saul again confesseth his fault, and promiseth peace.

AND ^b the men of Ziph came to Saul in Gabaa, saying: Behold David is hid in the hill of Hachila, which is over-against the wilderness.

VER. 35. Face. I have been pleased with thy coming, and granted thy request. H.—David had sworn with too much haste. C.—"It is sometimes wrong to perform what has been promised, and to keep an oath." S. Amb. Off. i. C. ult.

VER. 36. Morning. Admirable pattern of discretion, and how reprimands may be made with advantage. C.—A medicine given at an improper time often does harm. Plin. xvii. 27. When a person said to Cleostratus, "Are you not ashamed to get drunk?" he replied, "Are you not ashamed to rebuke a drunken man?"

VER. 37. Stone. Stupified at the thought of the imminent danger to which he had foolishly exposed himself. So the poets represent Niobe as metamorphosed into a stone, at hearing of her children's death. T.—Josephus intimates that Nabal was killed by the malignant influence of the stars, sideratus. Ant. vi. 14. Thus, says he, David "learnt that no wicked person can escape the vengeance of God, and that Providence does not neglect human affairs, and abandon them to chance."

VER. 39. Blessed be, &c. David praises God on this occasion, not out of joy for the death of Nabal, (which would have argued a raucour of heart) but because he saw that God had so visibly taken his cause in hand, in punishing the injury done to him; whilst, by a merciful providence, he kept him from revenging himself. Ch. Ps. lvii. 10.

VER. 41. Thy servant. She speaks to David's representatives, as if he had been present. H.—The marriage was proposed probably a month or two after the death of Nabal; and Abigail followed the messengers, in a short time. M.

VER. 43. Took, or "had taken before," according to Josephus. Hence she is placed first, (C.) as the mother of David's first-born, Amnon. 2 K. iii. 2. M.—Michol, whom he married first, had no children. H.—Jezrahel, a city of Juda. M. Jos. xv. 56.—There was another more famous place of this name in Issachar.

VER. 44. Phalti, or Phaltiel, 2 K. iii. 15. Saul violated all laws by so doing, and David took her back when he came to the throne, which he could not have done if he had given her a bill of divorce. Deut. xxiv. 4. C.—Michol was not blameless in living thus with another man. M.—The Rabbins say that a sword hindered Phalti from approaching to her. Horn in Sulp.—Gallim, a city of Benjamin. Isai. x. 30. C.

CHAP. XXVI. VER. 1. Ziph. Having declared themselves so decidedly against

2 And Saul arose, and went down to the wilderness of Ziph, having with him three thousand chosen men of Israel, to seek David in the wilderness of Ziph.

3 And Saul encamped in Gabaa Hachila, which was over-against the wilderness in the way: and David abode in the wilderness. And seeing that Saul was come after him into the wilderness,

4 He sent spies, and learned that he was most certainly come thither.

5 And David arose secretly, and came to the place where Saul was: and when he had beheld the place, wherein Saul slept, and Abner, the son of Ner, the captain of his army, and Saul sleeping in a tent, and the rest of the multitude round about him,

6 David spoke to Achimelech, the Hethite, and Abisai, the son of Sarvia, the brother of Joab, saying: Who will go down with me to Saul into the camp? And Abisai said: I will go with thee.

7 So David and Abisai came to the people by night, and found Saul lying and sleeping in the tent, and his spear fixed in the ground at his head: and Abner and the people sleeping round about him.

8 And Abisai said to David: God hath shut up thy enemy this day into thy hands: now then I will run him through with my spear, even to the earth at once, and there shall be no need of a second time.

9 And David said to Abisai: Kill him not: for who shall put forth his hand against the Lord's anointed, and shall be guiltless?

10 And David said: As the Lord liveth, unless the Lord shall strike him, or his day shall come to die, or he shall go down to battle, and perish:

11 The Lord be merciful unto me, and keep me that I never put forth my hand against the Lord's anointed. But now take the spear which is at his head, and the cup of water, and let us go.

12 So David took the spear, and the cup of water which was at Saul's head, and they went away: and no man saw it, or knew it, or awaked, but they were all asleep, for a deep sleep from the Lord was fallen upon them.

13 And when David was gone over to the other side, and stood on the top of the hill afar off, and a good space was between them,

David, they apprehended the utmost danger if he should ascend the throne.—Hill. Heb. "Gaba," as the Vulg. leaves it, v. 3. It lay to the right hand of Ziph, (C. xxiii. 19,) or "of Jesimon." Sept.

VER. 4. Certainly, or in a place strongly secured by nature. Sept. "well armed."

VER. 5. Tent, or covered chariot, such as the Scythians use in their marches. Justin. i. or in a "royal tent." Sept. λαυρήν, (Pollux. M.) "richly ornamented," (Lædior of Cagliari) "in the midst" (Aquila) of his troops. C.—David might see all was quiet from an eminence, or he might be informed by his spies. M.

VER. 6. Hethite. He had probably embraced the Jewish religion.—Abisai was the son of Sarvin, David's sister, and made a great figure at court. C.—David was directed by God to manifest his clemency (M.) and reverence for Saul in this perilous attempt. H.

VER. 8. My. Heb. "the spear," which was fixed in the ground at Saul's pillow. Prot. "let me smite him, I pray thee, with the spear, even to the earth, at once, and I will not smite him the second time." H.

VER. 9. Guiltless. Saul was still his king, how wicked soever, and this title rendered his person inviolable. The eastern nations are very seldom guilty of rebellion, or of murdering their kings; a thing of which we find so many examples in the Roman, English, and French histories. C.—A private man could not lay violent hands upon the king without a crime; and therefore David represses Abisai, and commits his cause to God. C. xxiv. 13. M.—He will not permit any one to destroy the life of the king, though he was already anointed to succeed him. W.

VER. 10. To die a natural death. Thus those who are slain, are said to die before their day. Ps. lvi. 28. Jesus was not taken, because his hour was not yet come. John ii. 4, and vii. 30. C.—David waits with patience, that God might take off his adversary by sickness, old age, or the sword. M.—He will not ascend 14 David cried to the people, and to Abner, the son of Ner, saying: Wilt thou not answer, Abner? And Abner answering, said: Who art thou, that criest, and disturbest the king?

15 And David said to Abner: Art not thou a man? and who is like unto thee in Israel? why then hast thou not kept thy lord the king? for there came one of the people in to kill the king thy lord.

16 This thing is not good, that thou hast done: as the Lord liveth, you are the sons of death, who have not kept your master, the Lord's anointed. And now where is the king's spear, and the cup of water, which was at his head?

17 And Saul knew David's voice, and said: Is this thy voice, my son David? And David said: It is my voice, my lord the king.

18 And he said: Wherefore doth my lord persecute his servant? What have I done? or what evil is there in my hand?

19 Now therefore hear, I pray thee, my lord the king, the words of thy servant: If the Lord stir thee up against me, let him accept of sacrifice: but if the sons of men, they are cursed in the sight of the Lord, who have cast me out this day, that I should not dwell in the inheritance of the Lord, saying: Go, serve strange gods.

20 And now let not my blood be shed upon the earth before the Lord: for the king of Israel is come out to seek a flea, as the partridge is hunted in the mountains.

21 And Saul said: I have sinned; return, my son David, for I will no more do thee harm, because my life hath been precious in thy eyes this day: for it appeareth that I have done foolishly, and have been ignorant in very many things.

22 And David answering, said: Behold the king's spear: let one of the king's servants come over and fetch it.

23 And the Lord will reward every one according to his justice, and his faithfulness: for the Lord hath delivered thee this day into my hand, and I would not put forth my hand against the Lord's anointed.

24 And as thy life hath been much set by this day the throne before the time appointed, and he will not kill Saul, except it be in battle, in his own defence. H.

VER. 12. Water, for refreshment, or for purifications.—Lord. It is not necessary to have recourse to a miracle, (C.) though it must have been by a special providence that all continued in such a deep sleep, (H.) to give David an opportunity of manifesting his innocence. W.

VER. 15. Israel. This was a cutting irony. C.—Saul attributes to it the enmity which Abner bore to David for above seven years. M.

VER. 16. Death; i. e. you deserve to die. Such negligence was punishable with death, according to the Roman laws; & qui ex cubias. Grot.

VER. 19. Sacrifice, that he may be appeased; (Jonathan. Vatsb.) or rather I am willing to fall a victim, (M.) and pray that thy sacrifice may be acceptable, and all thy designs against me succeed. Ps. xix. 4.—They are. The opposition of this sentence to the preceding seems to require "let them be," &c. What in effect did not those deserve who wished to make David adore false gods? C.—Lord is the land of Israel.—Gods. They said so, at least by their actions. M.—All other countries were in a manner abandoned to idol-worship, so that a person could not dwell in them, without the most imminent danger. See 2 K. xiv. 16. Ps. lxxxiii. 12. C.

VER. 20. Before, and contrary to the decrees of the Lord, (H.) who will be my avenger.—Hunted, (persequitur) is here used in a passive sense; (C.) or it may be rendered, "as a partridge pursues" what it feeds upon. H.

VER. 21. Precious, and treated as such, with care and respect. See 4 K. i. 14. Ps. xlviii. 9. Isai. xlii. 4.—Ignorant. Yet Saul was inexcusable. 2 K. xxiv. 10, &c.

VER. 22. It. He would not keep the spear, lest it might seem disrespectful.

VER. 24. Set by. Lit. "magnified," or deemed very precious. H.—Distress.

in my eyes, so let my life be much set by in the eyes of the Lord, and let him deliver me from all distress.

25 Then Saul said to David: Blessed art thou, my son David: and truly doing thou shalt do, and prevailing thou shalt prevail. And David went on his way, and Saul returned to his place.

CHAP. XXVII.

David goeth again to Achis, king of Geth, and obtaineth of him the city of Siceleg.

AND David said in his heart: I shall one day or other fall into the hands of Saul: is it not better for me to flee, and to be saved in the land of the Philistines, that Saul may despair of me, and cease to seek me in all the coasts of Israel? I will flee then out of his hands.

2 And David arose, and went away, both he and the six hundred men that were with him, to Achis, the son of Maach, king of Geth.

3 And David dwelt with Achis at Geth, he and his men; every man with his household, and David with his two wives, Achinoam, the Jezrahelitess, and Abigail, the wife of Nabal of Carmel.

4 And it was told Saul that David was fled to Geth, and he sought no more after him.

5 And David said to Achis: If I have found favour in thy sight, let a place be given me in one of the cities of this country, that I may dwell there: for why should thy servant dwell in the royal city with thee?

6 Then Achis gave him Siceleg that day: for which reason Siceleg belongeth to the kings of Juda unto this day.

7 And the time that David dwelt in the country of the Philistines, was four months.

* A. M. 2947.—^b A. M. 2949, A. C. 1055.

These were the last words which David addressed to Saul; and they seem to have made a deep impression upon him. But as no dependance could be placed on Saul's most solemn promises, David resolved, by God's advice, to retire to the country of Geth. Salien. A. 2978.

VER. 25. Prevail, and mount the throne.—Place, Gabaon. M.

CHAP. XXVII. VER. 1. Hands. God requires that we should act with prudence. D.—David probably consulted the Lord, and sent ambassadors to Achis, before he went into his dominions, (M.) where he had been in such danger before. D.

VER. 2. Maach, or Maacha. 3 K. ii. 29. This king had perhaps seen David, when he counterfeited madness. But now he was convinced that, by granting him protection, he would greatly annoy Saul, and draw many brave men out of his dominions.

VER. 3. Household. They were aware of the cruelty of Saul. The names of these valiant men are specified, 1 Par. xii. 1. &c.

VER. 5. Country, less peopled, and more remote from the sea.—With thee. David was attended like a king, so that he wished to avoid giving umbrage to Achis, and, at the same time, keep his own men at a greater distance from the contagious morals of the idolaters.

VER. 6. Day. This was written some time after the death of Samuel.—Siceleg belonged at first to Juda, and was afterwards given to the tribe of Simeon, till it fell into the hands of the Philistines, and being restored by them to David, was considered afterwards as the property of the kings of Juda. It lay not far from Horma. Jos. xix. 4.

VER. 7. Months. Heb. "days and four months." The former expression denotes a year; though some would have it that David remained "four months, and a few days" in the country. He probably continued so many months at Geth, (v. 9. 11,) and about a year at Siceleg. C.—Sept. have "days, four months;" and Salien adopts that term. H. See C. xxix. 3. D.

VER. 8. Pillaged Gessuri, &c. These probably were enemies of the people of God; and some, if not all of them, were of the number of those whom God had ordered to be destroyed; which justifies David's proceedings in their regard. Though it is to be observed here, that we are not under an obligation of justifying every thing that he did: for the Scripture, in relating what was done, doth not say that it was well done. And even such as are true servants of God, are not to be iniquated in all they do. Ch.—The nations of Chanaan, who inhabited as far as Egypt, and the Amalecites, who had escaped the arms of Saul, were devoted to destruction. Ex. xvii. &c. In such cases, any man might fall upon them, without any other formal declaration of war. C.—There was another Gessuri of Syria, in the tribe of Manasse, across the Jordan. M.—The country (378)

8 And David and his men went up, and pillaged Gessuri, and Gerzi, and the Amalecites: for these were of old the inhabitants of the countries, as men go to Sur, even to the land of Egypt.

9 And David wasted all the land, and left neither man nor woman alive: and took away the sheep, and the oxen, and the asses, and the camels, and the apparel, and returned and came to Achis.

10 And Achis said to him: Whom hast thou gone against to-day? David answered: Against the south of Juda, and against the south of Jerameel, and against the south of Ceni.

11 And David saved neither man nor woman, neither brought he any of them to Geth, saying: Lest they should speak against us. So did David, and such was his proceeding all the days that he dwelt in the country of the Philistines.

12 And Achis believed David, saying: He hath done much harm to his people Israel: Therefore he shall be my servant for ever.

CHAP. XXVIII.

The Philistines go out to war against Israel. Saul being forsaken by God, hath recourse to a witch. Samuel appeareth to him.

AND it came to pass in those days, that the Philistines gathered together their armies, to be prepared for war against Israel: And Achis said to David: Know thou now assuredly, that thou shalt go out with me to the war, thou, and thy men.

2 And David said to Achis: Now thou shalt know what thy servant will do. And Achis said to David: And I will appoint thee to guard my life for ever.

3 Now Samuel was dead, and all Israel mourned for him, and buried him in Ramatha, his city. And which these people inhabited, to the south of Palestine, was afterwards depopulated by the kings of Egypt and of Syria, in their continual wars, so that many of the cities which are mentioned in Scripture, were never known to profane geographers. C.—S. Jerom. (Trad.) Sa, and others, think that David attacked some of the Philistines. But it is as probable at least that he would abstain from molesting them, who had so generously afforded him an asylum. Salien concludes, that he did not attack the other nations, (except the Amalecites, who were sufficiently marked out for destruction, Dr. t. xxv. 19,) without consulting the Lord, by the high priest, as he was accustomed to do in every difficulty. A. 2979. M.—They all dwelt in part of the land of Chanaan, (W.) which was sufficient. H.

* Supra xxv. 1. Eccli. xvi. 23.

VER. 9. Apparel. Saul alone had been ordered to destroy all the property of Amalec. Abulensis.

VER. 10. Jerameel, the son of Esron, inhabited the most southern parts of Juda.—Ceni, or the Cinites, descendants of Jethro, (C.) who dwelt at Arad and the environs. The words of David might signify that he attacked these people of Israel, as Achis understood him; or that he made inroads upon those who dwelt to the south of them, which was really the case. H.—At his return, he passed by Siceleg, where he left the spoil, carrying some of the choicest things, as a present, to Achis. M.—But he suffered none of the human race to be carried away captive, lest any of them might disclose the true state of affairs to the king, who might have apprehended that the injured nations would make an attack upon his dominions. Salien.

VER. 12. Harm. Heb. "he hath made himself stinking (an object of horror) to his people." A strong expression used, Gen. xxxiv. 30. Ex. v. 21. C.—Sept. "he is quite covered with confusion." Achis supposed that David had thus forfeited all his pretensions to dwell among, much less, to reign over, Israel; so that he might keep him always in his service. H.—In the mean time, Saul was exterminating the people of Gabaon, which brought a pestilence on Israel, 40 years after. Theodore.—He perhaps supposed that the oath of Josue had not been yet put in execution, as it ought to be, herein indulging too much his cruel temper. Salien.

CHAP. XXVIII. VER. 1. Israel. God made use of the ill-will of the Philistines to punish Saul, and to make way for David to the throne. Salien.—Each of the five lords brought their armies into the field, where they were united, Achis, placing the greatest confidence in David, requires his attendance. C.

VER. 2. Do; or "can do." Thou wilt be convinced of my valour and fidelity. H.—But could David lawfully fight against his brethren? or could he desert Achis in the heat of the engagement? His answer is ambiguous. C.—He prudently committed his cause into the hands of Providence, resolved to do

Saul had put away all the magicians and soothsayers out of the land:

4 And the Philistines were gathered together, and came and encamped in Sunam: and Saul also gathered together all Israel, and came to Gelboe.

5 And Saul saw the army of the Philistines, and was afraid, and his heart was very much dismayed.

6 And he consulted the Lord, and he answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by priests, nor by prophets.

7 And Saul said to his servants: Seek me a woman that hath a "divining spirit, and I will go to her, and enquire by her. And his servants said to him: There is a woman that hath a divining spirit at Endor.

8 Then he disguised himself: and put on other clothes, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night, and he said to her: Divine to me by thy divining spirit, and bring me up him whom I shall tell thee.

9 And the woman said to him: Behold thou knowest all that Saul hath done, and how he hath rooted out the magicians and soothsayers from the land: why then dost thou lay a snare for my life, to cause me to be put to death?

10 And Saul swore unto her by the Lord, saying: As the Lord liveth, there shall no evil happen to thee for this thing.

11 And the woman said to him: Whom shall I bring up to thee? And he said, Bring me up Samuel.

12 And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried out

* Lev. xx. 27. Dent. xviii. 11. Acts xvi. 16.

nothing contrary to his duty, and to abide by God's decision, in this critical juncture, so that Cajetan blames him unjustly. Salien. M. T.—Guard. Sept. "captain of my body guard."

VER. 3. Samuel. His death is here recorded, as well as the abolition of magic, to explain what follows, when Saul, not being able to obtain an answer from God, as his prophet had been withdrawn in anger, had recourse to the devil. H.—Land, while he reigned virtuously, (M.) according to the law. Lev. xix. 31. Dent. xviii. 11.

VER. 4. Gelboe. So that he occupied the parts south of the vale of Jezrahel, while the Philistines were encamped on the north, in the tribe of Issachar. M.

VER. 5. Dismayed. It was so numerous, while his own conscience upbraided him with being at enmity with God, who increased his fears. Salien.

VER. 6. Dreams. During which God often revealed his will. See Dent. xiii. 2.—Priests. Heb. "nor by Urim." It seems Saul had appointed some priests, and had fabricated a fresh ephod, with the Urim, &c. after the departure of Abiathar. C.—But Salien calls this in question, and there might neither be priests nor prophets for Saul to consult. H.—God despised a man, who had slain so many of his sacred ministers. M.

VER. 7. Spirit. Heb. "an ob," or vessel distended, as such impostors seemed to swell at the presence of the spirit. Sept. "a belly talker." They endeavour to speak from that part. We read of some who, without magic, have possessed the art in great perfection, so as to deceive the company, and make them think that some one was calling them from a great distance; as was the case with one Farming in England, 1645. Dickinson, c. 9.—Brodeus mentions that the valet of Francis I. could thus counterfeit the speech of people deceased, and by these means prevailed upon a rich young woman to marry him, and a banker of Lyons to give him a large sum of money. James Rodoginus, a possessed person in Italy, 1513, could make articulate sounds from the hollow of his belly, when his lips and nostrils were closed up. The oracles of idols were generally given in a low tone, as if they proceeded from the earth. Submissi petimus terram et vox fertur ad aures. Virg.—Those of Apollo were the most famous, and hence a divining spirit is called a Python. Saul must have been stupidly blind, thus to depend on what he had formerly banished with such care. C.—He flattered himself that some would still be left, especially among the women, who are most addicted to superstition, as well as to religion. M.—Endor was distant from Gelboe about four hours' walk. Adrichomius.—But Saul made a long circuit to avoid the enemy. Salien, v. 20.

VER. 8. Clothes, that he might not fill the woman or his army with dismay. C.

VER. 10. Thing. He adds this crime of swearing unjustly, to all the rest. Salien.

VER. 11. Samuel. Here we behold the antiquity of necromancy, which is a proof that people believed the soul's immortality; animas responsa daturas. Horne i. sat. 8. C.—Protestants sometimes deny (H.) that souls appear again, contrary to this history and Mat. xvii. S. Aug. W.

VER. 12. Woman. The Rabbins pretend that she was Abner's mother, (C.) which is extremely improbable, as he was of the tribe of Benjamin, and a man of such renown. Salien.—Theodoret follows their opinion, in supposing that the woman was startled, because Samuel appeared in a standing posture, and not with a loud voice, and said to Saul: Why hast thou deceived me? for thou art Saul.

13 And the king said to her: Fear not: what hast thou seen? and the woman said to Saul: I saw gods ascending out of the earth.

14 And he said to her: What form is he of? And she said: An old man cometh up, and he is covered with a mantle. And Saul understood that it was Samuel, and he bowed himself with his face to the ground, and adored.

15 And Samuel said to Saul: "Why hast thou disturbed my rest, that I should be brought up? And Saul said: I am in great distress: for the Philistines fight against me, and God is departed from me, and would not hear me, neither by the hand of prophets, nor by dreams: therefore I have called thee, that thou mayst shew me what I shall do.

16 And Samuel said: Why askest thou me, seeing the Lord has departed from thee, and is gone over to thy rival?

17 For the Lord will do to thee as he spoke by me, and he will rend thy kingdom out of thy hand, and will give it to thy neighbour David:

18 Because thou didst not obey the voice of the Lord, neither didst thou execute the wrath of his indignation upon Amalec. Therefore hath the Lord done to thee what thou sufferest this day.

19 And the Lord also will deliver Israel with thee into the hands of the Philistines: and to-morrow thou with his feet upwards, or lying down on his back, as in a coffin, which they say (C.) is the usual manner of spirits appearing to people of her character. Bellarm. Purgat. ii. 6.—She cried out, because he appeared before she had begun her incantations, and was arrayed like a priest, according to Josephus, (H.) in great majesty, or she pretended to see him, the better to impose upon the king; for some think that all was a delusion. C.—Said. This she learnt either from Samuel, (Josephus) or from her familiar spirit. M.

VER. 13. Gods, or one venerable and divine personage. W.—Elohim, is applied to Samuel for greater honour. It is a title given to the true God, to idols, and people in dignity. C.

VER. 14. Understood that it was Samuel. It is the more common opinion of the holy fathers, and interpreters, that the soul of Samuel appeared indeed; and not, as some have imagined, an evil spirit in his shape. Not that the power of her magic could bring him thither, but that God was pleased for the punishment of Saul, that Samuel himself should denounce unto him the evils that were falling upon him. See Ecclesiasticus xlv. 23. Ch.—The passage is decisive; (T.) he slept and he made known to the king, and shewed him the end of his life, and he lifted up his voice from the earth, in prophecy, &c. Those who have called in question the reality of Samuel's apparition, seem not to have remembered this passage. H.—Yet his soul was not united to his body, (Salien) nor was he adduced by the power of the devil, but (D.) by a just judgment of God, to denounce destruction to the wicked king. S. Aug. &c. T.—The woman, beholding Samuel, fled out of the place, to Saul's companions, and left him alone with the king, v. 21.—Adored Samuel with an inferior honour, as the friend of God, exalted in glory. Salien.—That Samuel really appeared, is the more common opinion of the fathers. S. Aug. Cura. xv. W.

VER. 15. Up. To inform a person of something very terrible, is distressing; and though the saints deceased cannot partake in the afflictions of mortals, yet we read that "the angels of peace will weep, but they will approve of the just sentence of the judge" against the reprobate. H.—The Scripture language conforms itself to the opinions of the people, who thought that such avocations disturbed the soul's repose. Hence the fathers at Elvira (C. xxxi) forbid "the lighting of wax candles in church-yards during the day, for the spirits of the saints are not to be disquieted." Isaias (xiv. 9.) represents hell all in commotion, at the approach of the king of Babylon. These expressions are figurative. C.—God does not encourage magical arts, on this occasion, but rather prevents their operation, as he did, when Balaam would have used some superstitious practices. Num. xxiv. D.

VER. 16. Rival. How vain is it to expect that a prophet can give an answer, when the Lord is silent! Heb. "is become thy enemy." H.

VER. 17. To thee. Heb. "to him." This was only a repetition of what Samuel had before denounced. C. xv. 28. If the evil spirit spoke this, he was not guilty of falsehood, no more than Mat. viii. 29. C.—But would he dare so often to repeat the name of the Lord? H.—Could he know what would happen to Saul, &c. the next day? W.

VER. 19. To-morrow. Usher supposes some days afterwards. But all might take place the day after this was spoken. C.—Sons, except Ishbosheth, who en-and thy sons shall be with me: and the Lord will also deliver the army of Israel into the hands of the Philistines.

20 And forthwith Saul fell all along on the ground; for he was frightened with the words of Samuel, and there was no strength in him, for he had eaten no bread all that day.

21 And the woman came to Saul, (for he was very much troubled) and said to him: Behold thy handmaid hath obeyed thy voice, and I have put my life in my hand: and I hearkened unto the words which thou spokest to me.

22 Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou also to the voice of thy handmaid, and let me set before thee a morsel of bread, that thou mayst eat and recover strength, and be able to go on thy journey.

23 But he refused, and said: I will not eat. But his servants and the woman forced him, and at length hearkening to their voice, he arose from the ground, and sat upon the bed.

24 Now the woman had a fatted calf in the house, and she made haste and killed it: and taking meal, kneaded it, and baked some unleavened bread,

25 And set it before Saul, and before his servants. And when they had eaten they rose up, and walked all that night.

David going with the Philistines, is sent back by their princes.

NOW "all the troops of the Philistines were gathered together to Aphec: and Israel also encamped by the fountain, which is in Jezrahel.

2 And the lords of the Philistines marched with their hundreds and their thousands: but David and his men were in the rear with Achis.

3 And the princes of the Philistines said to Achis: What mean these Hebrews? And Achis said to the princes of the Philistines: Do you not know David, who was the servant of Saul, the king of Israel, and hath been with me many days, or years, and I have found no fault in him, since the day that he fled over to me until this day?

joyed, for a time, part of his father's kingdom. H.—With me. That is, in the state of the dead, and in another world, though not in the same place. Ch.—Saul was guilty of suicide, so that he could not be with Samuel in happiness, (C. xxxi. 4. T.) though he was in the other world. W.—See S. Aug. ad Simp. ii. 3. Cura pro mort. c. xv. S. Justin. Dial. Origen. &c.

VER. 20. Day, through excessive anguish. H.—He fainted away; upon which his attendants and the woman rushed in. Salien.

VER. 21. Hand, in the most imminent danger. See Judg. xii. 3.

VER. 24. Calf, destined for a victim or feast. Luke xv. 23. Prov. xv. 17. C.—The generosity of this woman deserves commendation. Josep. vi. 15. H.

CHAP. XXIX. VER. 1. Aphec. Hence they proceeded to Sunam, and attacked Saul, near the fountain, which were all places in the vale of Jezrahel. The sacred writer thus leaves the two armies ready to engage, being intent on giving the particulars of David's history, and only relating the affairs of Saul, &c. in as much as they may refer to him. C.—David had retired from the army of the Philistines before Saul went to Endor, and some of the tribe of Manasses went after him, and were present in the battle, in which the Amalecites were slain and plundered. 1 Par. xii. 19. Salien.

VER. 2. Thousands, making the troops pass in review, as the Heb. insinuates. Their army seems to have been divided, in the same manner as that of the Israelites, each company of 10, 50, &c. having its respective officer, under the five lords. —Were. Heb. "passed." David's band was connected with the troops of Achis, yet so that they might be easily distinguished by their dress, &c. C.—The Roman Triarii, who were esteemed the bravest soldiers, occupied the rear. M.—Josephus gives us to understand that Achis was the commander in chief. Ant. vi. 14. T.

VER. 3. Know David. It seems they were not unacquainted with him, since they knew that Achis had given him a place, (v. 4.) or city. H.—But they prudently judged that it would be very hazardous to employ him on this occasion. Providence thus brought him honourably out of the scrape, as he could not have 4 ^b But the princes of the Philistines were angry with him, and they said to him: Let this man return, and abide in his place, which thou hast appointed him, and let him not go down with us to battle, lest he be an adversary to us, when we shall begin to fight: for how can he otherwise appease his master, but with our heads?

5 Is not this David, to whom they sung in their dances, saying: Saul slew his thousands, and David his ten thousands?

6 Then Achis called David, and said to him: As the Lord liveth, thou art upright and good in my sight: and so is thy going out, and thy coming in with me in the army: and I have not found any evil in thee, since the day that thou camest to me unto this day: but thou pleasest not the lords.

7 Return therefore, and go in peace, and offend not the eyes of the princes of the Philistines.

8 And David said to Achis: But what have I done, or what hast thou found in me thy servant, from the day that I have been in thy sight until this day, that I may not go and fight against the enemies of my lord the king?

9 And Achis answering, said to David: I know that thou art good in my sight, *as an angel of God: But the princes of the Philistines have said: He shall not go up with us to the battle.

10 Therefore arise in the morning, thou, and the servants of thy lord, who came with thee: and when you are up before day, and it shall begin to be light, go on your way.

11 So David and his men arose in the night, that they might set forward in the morning, and returned to the land of the Philistines: and the Philistines went up to Jezrahel.

CHAP. XXX.

The Amalecites burn Siceleg, and carry off the prey: David pursueth after them, and recovereth all out of their hands.

NOW "when David and his men were come to Siceleg on the third day, the Amalecites had made remained even inactive, among the troops of the Philistines, without rendering himself suspected both to them and to his own people. C.—Years. Abulensis thinks that Achis told an untruth, to persuade the lords that he had been long witness of David's fidelity. He might also allude to the first time, when he came to his court, or the four months specified C. xxvii. 9, might fall into different years. Sept. "he has been with us days, this is the second year." M.—Syr. "two years (Arab. "one year,") and some months." C.—The true term was only four months. W.

VER. 4. Adversary. Heb. Satan, "a calumniator, enemy," &c. C.—Tacitus (Hist. iv.) speaking of the Batavian corps, says, "which, being bribed, pretended to be faithful, that it might flee, and become more acceptable after it had betrayed the Romans in the heat of the engagement."

VER. 6. Lord. Heb. Jehova. H.—Achis speaks of the true God, as David was accustomed to do. Salien.—Perhaps he adored him, like his other gods; as the Israelites are accused of swearing by the Lord and by Melchom. Soph. i. 5.—The pagans often appealed to the gods of those with whom they were treating. C.

VER. 8. King. He speaks thus that he might not increase the suspicions of the Philistines. M.—In the mean time, God called him to fight against Amalec, and to defend his own property, which was actually, or the next day, taken from Siceleg; (H.) so that nothing could have been more desirable to him, than to be thus dismissed with applause. Salien.

VER. 9. Angel of God, equally incapable of any meanness. The pagans admitted the existence of good and of evil spirits. Sanctius. This exaggerated compliment occurs, Gen. xxxiii. 10. 2 K. xiv. 17. and xix. 27.

VER. 10. Thy Lord. He may allude to Saul, (v. 3.) or to himself, (C. v. 8.) or to God, as David was under obligations to all three. H.—Light, that none might know or be detected, in the rest of the army. M.

CHAP. XXX. VER. 1. Day. It was distant from Aphec about 90 miles—Smitten, yet without killing any. C.—We may adore a merciful Providence.

an invasion on the south side upon Siceleg, and had smitten Siceleg, and burnt it with fire,

2 And had taken the women captives that were in it, both little and great: and they had not killed any person, but had carried them with them, and went on their way.

3 So when David and his men came to the city, and found it burnt with fire, and that their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, were taken captives,

4 David and the people that were with him, lifted up their voices, and wept till they had no more tears.

5 For the two wives also of David were taken captives, Achinoam, the Jezrahelitess, and Abigail, the wife of Nabal of Carmel.

6 And David was greatly afflicted: for the people had a mind to stone him, for the soul of every man was bitterly grieved for his sons and daughters: but David took courage in the Lord his God.

7 And he said to Abiathar, the priest, the son of Achimelech: Bring me hither the ephod. And Abiathar brought the ephod to David.

8 And David consulted the Lord, saying: Shall I pursue after these robbers, and shall I overtake them, or not? And the Lord said to him: Pursue after them: for thou shalt surely overtake them and recover the prey.

9 So David went, he and the six hundred men that were with him, and they came to the torrent Besor: and some, being weary, stayed there.

10 But David pursued, he and four hundred men: for two hundred stayed, who, being weary, could not go over the torrent Besor.

11 And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David: and they gave him bread to eat, and water to drink, 12 As also a piece of a cake of figs, and two bunches of raisins. And when he had eaten them, his spirit returned, and he was refreshed: for he had not eaten bread, nor drunk water, three days and three nights.

13 And David said to him: To whom dost thou belong; or whence dost thou come? and whither art thou going? He said: I am a young man of Egypt, the which prevented these barbarians from treating David's men as he had treated theirs. C. xxvii. 11. Salen. A. C. 1074.—He would allow them to burn the city, &c. that David might be roused to execute the divine vengeance upon them. Theoderet.

VER. 4. Tears. Heb. "till they had no more power to weep." M.—See Lament. ii. 11. Cicero exclaims, Hei mihi! consumptis enim lacrymis, infixus tamen heret in corde dolor. Phil. ii.

VER. 6. Stone him, as the author of all their losses, because he had not left a sufficient garrison at Siceleg, and had irritated the Amalecites. Inconstant people! they thought that he was indebted to them for all that he possessed! C.—David, without being too much dejected, sought out for an immediate remedy, and led them on to battle. Their ancestors had once threatened to stone Moses. Ex. xvii. &c. T.

VER. 7. To David. Some think that David put on the ephod; but this was the function of the high priest, who, according to Grotius, turned towards David, that he might see the brightness of the precious stones. See Ex. xxviii. 30. By means of the priest David was enlightened. W.

VER. 9. Besor is formed by the water falling from the mountains of Idumea, and discharges itself into the Mediterranean, below Gaza. C.—Some take it to be the torrent of the desert, or the river of Egypt. Adrichomius makes it run from the mountains of Juda, so as to form the southern boundary of the tribe of Simeon. H.

VER. 10. Weary. Heb. pigru, denotes those who are "lazy and dead." Sept. "some sat down on the other side of the torrent." Syr. and Arab. insinuate, to defend the passage. But why then do the rest complain? C.—They acted irrationally, as David shewed afterwards. Some of the 600 might well be more exhausted than others, and these were selected to guard the baggage, v. 24. This was only the third day since they left Aphee, v. 1. H.

VER. 12. Raisins. Heb. trimmukim. See C. xxv. 18. C.—The soldiers very prudently took some provisions with them, as they were going into a desert country, M.

servant of an Amalecite: and my master left me, because I began to be sick three days ago.

14 For we made an invasion on the south side of Cerethi, and upon Juda, and upon the south of Caleb, and we burnt Siceleg with fire.

15 And David said to him: Canst thou bring me to this company? and he said: Swear to me by God, that thou wilt not kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my master, and I will bring thee to this company. And David swore to him.

16 And when he had brought him, behold they were lying spread abroad upon all the ground, eating and drinking, and as it were keeping a festival day, for all the prey and the spoils which they had taken out of the land of the Philistines, and out of the land of Juda.

17 And David slew them from the evening unto the evening of the next day, and there escaped not a man of them, but four hundred young men, who had gotten upon camels, and fled.

18 So David recovered all that the Amalecites had taken, and he rescued his two wives.

19 And there was nothing missing small or great, neither of their sons or their daughters, nor of the spoils, and whatsoever they had taken, David recovered all.

20 And he took all the flocks and the herds, and made them go before him: and they said: This is the prey of David.

21 And David came to the two hundred men, who, being weary, had stayed, and were not able to follow David, and he had ordered them to abide at the torrent Besor: and they came out to meet David, and the people that were with him. And David coming to the people, saluted them peaceably.

22 Then all the wicked and unjust men, that had gone with David, answering, said: Because they came not with us, we will not give them any thing of the prey which we have recovered: but let every man take his wife, and his children, and be contented with them, and go his way.

23 But David said: You shall not do so, my brethren.

VER. 13. Agō. His master's inhumanity was justly punished, and God provided for the safety of this poor slave, while he sent a guide for David. H.

VER. 14. Cerethi, denotes the Philistines, (R. David. See v. 16. H.) who came originally from Crete. 2 K. xv. 18. Eze. xxv. 16. C.—They might be natives of some province of the Philistines, (Vatab.) belonging to Gaza, (M.) or Geth. H.—Caleb. Hebron and Cariath-sepher fell to his share. The enemy had a good opportunity to ravage all those places, as most of the soldiers were absent (C.) at Jezrahel. E.

VER. 15. Him. David did not require this slave to betray his master, for the latter had lost all his claim, and David had acquired it by relieving the distressed. Si herus negaverit servo suo alimenta, & alius suppediet, sit occupantis. See Martyr. and the Roman laws. The Amalecites dwelt in tents, and the slave knew where they commonly lodged. C.—Perhaps his master had told him where to meet him, in case he recovered.

VER. 16. Drinking. Heb. adda, "and dancing," (Salen) in honour of their gods. M.

VER. 17. Evening. Heb. "twilight," in the morning (C.) or evening. H.—Some think that the pursuit lasted three days; others only from three till five in the evening. But David more probably slaughtered the intoxicated people, during the space of a whole day, from morning till evening. C. Sept. "from the morning or evening star rising, and ἡσπέρου, till the afternoon, and on the following day," (H.) which commenced at sun-set. C.—It was no battle, but fight and carnage. M.

VER. 19. All, excepting what had been eaten, or consumed with fire. M.

VER. 20. And made. Heb. "which they drove before those things (or cattle," taken from the Amalecites. H.) "which were separated from those which David had recovered." Each one reclaimed what he had lost. Perhaps David's portion was placed by itself. C.—Grotius thinks that, as the things taken in war cannot be reclaimed by the former proprietors, all was equally divided. See Seld. Jur. vi. 16.

VER. 22. Unjust. Heb. Belial. See Deut. xiii. 18. C.—David saluted those who had remained at Besor, to shew that he approved of their conduct, unless we may attribute it to his great clemency. M.

ren, with these things, which the Lord hath given us, who hath kept us, and hath delivered the robbers that invaded us into our hands:

24 And no man shall hearken to you in this matter. But equal shall be the portion of him that went down to battle, and of him that abode at the baggage, and they shall divide alike.

25 And this hath been done from that day forward, and since was made a statute and an ordinance, and as a law in Israel.

26 Then David came to Siceleg, and sent presents of the prey to the ancients of Juda, his neighbours, saying: Receive a blessing of the prey of the enemies of the Lord.

27 To them that were in Bethel, and that were in Ramoth to the south, and to them that were in Jether,

28 And to them that were in Aroer, and that were in Sephamoth, and that were in Esthamo,

29 And that were in Rachal, and that were in the cities of Jerameel, and that were in the cities of Ceni,

30 And that were in Arama, and that were in the lake Asan, and that were in Athach, 31 And that were in Hebron, and to the rest that were in those places, in which David had abode with his men.

* A. M. 2949.

VER. 24. Alike. Nothing could be more just and prudent; as this decision prevents continual murmurs and inconveniences. Those who are left behind, are bound to defend the baggage at the hazard of their lives, and each man must obey the orders of the general. Hence all nations seem to have adopted similar regulations, though Achilles declaims against it. Iliad i.—Coriolanus observes, that formerly the Romans brought all the spoil into the public treasury. Halicar. vii.—The soldiers promised on oath to bring all they should take, and an equal division was made to the whole army. Polyb. x.—The sick and absent also partook of the plunder. C.—The same was observed by the Machabees, 2 B. viii. 28. H.

VER. 25. A law. Custom, (C.) and a particular injunction, had long before made way for it. Num. xxxi. 27. H. Jos. xxii. 8.—We might translate the Heb. "And this law had been observed in Israel from that day and before." David restored to its full vigour this ancient regulation. The Hebrews have no compound verbs, such as re-establish, re-build, &c. instead of which, they say, to establish, (C.) and build again. Thus, by the addition of adverbs, they can explain the same thing. Prot. "from that day forward he made it a statute," &c. H.—It is not, therefore, unlawful to make new laws, provided they be conformable to those of God. Deut. iv. and xii. W.

VER. 26. Neighbours. Heb. "friends;" some were at a distance, v. 28. H.—The number of presents shews the quantity of spoil, and the generosity of David towards those who had formerly assisted him. C.

VER. 27. Bethel, "the house of God," as the priests had afforded him protection. H.—It is not certain whether he speaks of a town of Ephraim, or of the cities where the ark and the tabernacle were now fixed.—Ramoth, in the tribe of Simeon: (C.) there was another in the tribe of Gad. M.—Jether, or "Jethira," (Euseb.) a priests' town, called Ether. Jos. xv. 42.

VER. 28. Aroer, on the Arnon. David had sojourned among the Moabites.—Sephamoth: perhaps Sephana, (Num. xxiv. 10,) though it was a great way beyond the Jordan. C.—Abulensis assigns Sephamoth to Juda. M.—Esthamo was in the same tribe, belonging to the priests. Jos. xxi. 14.

VER. 29. Rachal: perhaps the same with Hachila. C. xxiii. 19, and xxvi. 1.—Jerameel. See C. xxvii. 10.—Oeni, a canton to the south of the Dead Sea.

VER. 30. Arama, or Horma. Num. xxi. 3.—Lake. Heb. "at Chor Aschan." It is called Asan, Jos. xv. 42, and xix. 7.—Athach, or Athar. Jos. xix. 7.

VER. 31. Hebron, twenty miles south of Jerusalem.—Rest. David remunerated all his old friends, which was the sure way to procure more. H.—He was still uncertain what would be the event of the war between Saul and the Philistines; and desirous to make friends, who might smooth his way to the throne, according to God's appointment. Salien.

CHAP. XXXI. VER. 1. Fled. They make but a feeble resistance, as God was not with them. H.—The first onset was made by the archers, and Saul's three sons fell, while the king himself was dangerously wounded. C.—The death of his sons would increase his anguish. M.—He seems not to have told them of the divine decree, as he might deem it irrevocable and unavoidable, so that flight would have been of no service to them. H.

VER. 2. Jonathan. Ven. Bede, &c. doubt not of his salvation. Salien.

VER. 3. Overtook. Heb. "attacked, found, or hit him." He was running away. H.—Wounded. Some translate Heb. "terrified," as they believe the words of the Amalekites, "my whole life is in me." But that wretch deserves no credit; and

CHAP. XXXI.

Israel is defeated by the Philistines: Saul and his sons are slain.

AND the Philistines fought against Israel, and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and fell down slain in Mount Gelboe.

2 And the Philistines fell upon Saul, and upon his sons, and they slew Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Melchisua, the sons of Saul.

3 And the whole weight of the battle was turned upon Saul: and the archers overtook him, and he was grievously wounded by the archers.

4 Then Saul said to his armour-bearer: Draw thy sword, and kill me: lest these uncircumcised come, and slay me, and mock at me. And his armour-bearer would not: for he was struck with exceeding great fear. Then Saul took his sword, and fell upon it.

5 And when his armour-bearer saw this, to wit, that Saul was dead, he also fell upon his sword and died with him.

6 So Saul died, and his three sons, and his armour bearer, and all his men that same day together.

7 And the men of Israel, that were beyond the valley, and beyond the Jordan, seeing that the Israelites were fled, and that Saul was dead, and his sons, forsook their cities, and fled: and the Philistines came and dwelt there.

8 And on the morrow the Philistines came to strip

Saul would probably not take the desperate resolution of killing himself, till he saw there was no possibility of escaping. Sept. "the archers find him, and they wounded him in the lower belly." Theodotion, "in the part near the liver."

VER. 4. Bearer. The Rabbinis say he was Doeg. They were not yet come to a close engagement.—Mock at me, as was then customary. See Joa. viii. 29. Judg. i. 7. He might recollect the treatment of Samson. C.—Fear. "To spill the royal blood's a direful thing." Homer.

VER. 5. With him. Thus to avoid a little sh-me and temporal punishment, they rushed into those which are inconceivably great and eternal. H.—The Jews in vain attempt to excuse Saul, as they deem suicide in such cases lawful, though in others they deprive those of burial, who have been guilty of it. Joseph. Ant. vi. 14.—This author applauds the behaviour of Saul; and indeed, his courage called forth the praises of David. But even the pagans have deemed those no better than cowards, who have killed themselves to avoid misery.

Rebus in adversis facile est contemnere mortem:

Fortiter ille facit, qui miser esse potest. —Martial.

The civil laws deny suicides the rites of burial, as they are also guilty of a crime against the state, which they deprive of their labours. They unjustly abandon what God has only committed to their care. Saul seems to have been afraid of receiving any insult himself, rather than to have been desirous of preventing the blasphemies of the infidels against God, as the Jews pretend. He gave no signs of repentance, and the spirit of God pronounces his condemnation. So Saul died for his iniquities, because he transgressed; (C. Heb. and Sept. in his iniquities, by which he prevaricated. T.) . . . and moreover consulted also a witch, and trusted not in the Lord: therefore he slew him. 1 Par. x. 13, 14. Saul prefigured those, who having yielded to temptations, persist and die in their evil ways. S. Greg. W.

VER. 6. His men. Paral. his house fell together. The hopes of his family were at an end, (H.) though Ishobeth, Abner, and some few survived him, (M.) who had fled, (C.) or had not been in the engagement. H.

VER. 7. Beyond, or about "the passage" or fords of the Jordan, as the Heb. means. M.—The Philistines did not pursue after them, as God set bounds to their ambition. It might otherwise have proved very fatal to his people, who were now so much divided and terrified. In the parallel passage, in Chronicles, it is only said, When the men . . . that dwell in the plains (of Jezrahel) saw this, they fled. 1 Par. x. 7. The Philistines seized the abandoned cities, particularly Bethsan, (v. 10. H.) which had been retained by the Chananeites in the days of the judges, and which David took back. Judg. i. 27. 3 K. iv. 12.

The Philistines insulted Saul's body, and blasphemed the true God, as much as if they had taken the king alive. He only avoided the mortification of hearing them while he was forced to attend to the furies below.—Body, with those of his three sons, v. 12. H.—Saul's head was hung up in the temple of Dagon, at Azotus: (1 Par. x. 10.) his body was suspended on the wall or street of Bethsan; (2 K. xxi. 12,) or in the most public place, near the gate of the city.

9 And they cut off Saul's head, and stripped him of his armour, and sent into the land of the Philistines round about, to publish it in the temples of their idols, and among their people.

10 And they put his armour in the temple of Ashtaroth, but his body they hung on the wall of Bethsan.

this mark of attention to the deceased monarch. See Jer. xxxiv. 5. 2 Par. xxxv. 25. The usual term of mourning was seven days. Eccli. xxii. 13. C.—It is very difficult to ascertain the length of Saul's reign. Sanctius and Tirin allow him only 2 years, Petau 12, Calvisius 15, Salien 18, Bucholeer, and probably Josephus 20, though most copies of the latter have 38, S. Aug. Serarius, Usher, &c. 40, which is the term mentioned Acts xiii. 20. But most chronologers suppose that the time of Samuel's administration is there also included. H.—Sulpitius thinks that Saul only "reigned a very short time," as "the ark was brought to Cariathiarim before he appeared on the throne, and was removed by David, after it had been there twenty years."

THE SECOND BOOK OF SAMUEL;

OTHERWISE CALLED,

THE SECOND BOOK OF KINGS.

THIS Book contains the transactions of David till the end of the pestilence, occasioned by his numbering the people. C. xxiv. The last six chapters of the preceding book were probably written by Gad, who delivered God's orders to David, after he was deprived of the company of Samuel. Gad, Nathan, and other prophets, continued the sacred history, 1 Par. xxix. 29. After the unfortunate death of Saul, his general, Abner, instead of submitting quietly to the dominion of David, (H.) set the son of the deceased monarch upon the throne, at Mahanaim; and two years elapsed before the rival kings came to open war. C. ii. 10. Salien.—David was 30 years old when he was anointed at Hebron, (C. v. 4.) where he reigned seven years and a half over Juda. On the death of Ishboeth, he was anointed a third time, as king of all Israel, and reigned in that character 37 years. H.—The partisans of Ishboeth might be excused in their adherence to him, as he was the son of the late king, and the election of David was not sufficiently notified to them. Salien.—We here behold the many virtues of David, and his repentance for some faults into which he had fallen. His predictions, and the names and exploits of many of his valiant men, are likewise recorded. W.

CHAP. I.

David mourneth for the death of Saul and Jonathan: he ordereth the man to be slain who pretended he had killed Saul.

NOW *it came to pass, after Saul was dead, that David returned from the slaughter of the Amalecites, and abode two days in Siceleg.

2 And on the third day, there appeared a man who came out of Saul's camp, with his garments rent, and dust strewed on his head: and when he came to David, he fell upon his face, and adored.

3 And David said to him: From whence comest thou? And he said to him: I am fled out of the camp of Israel.

4 And David said unto him: What is the matter that is come to pass? tell me. He said: The people are fled from the battle, and many of the people are fallen and dead: moreover Saul, and Jonathan, his son, are slain.

* A. M. 2949, A. C. 1055.

CHAP. I. VER. 1. Siceleg, though it had been burnt down. Salien, A. 2949. VER. 6. Chance. He feigned this to obtain the favour of David; but the king punished him as he deserved. W.—Spear, or sword, as it is before expressed. M.

VER. 8. Amalecite. The Rabbins say he was the son of Doeg; and has this appellation because Amalec sprung from Esau. Gen. xxxvi. 12. But this is all very uncertain. The man seems to have gotten possession of the marks of the royal dignity in the night, as the Philistines deferred till the next day stripping the bodies of the deceased. C.

VER. 9. Anguish. Heb. "the coat of mail withholds me." Sept. "horrid darkness encompasses me." Shubah, signifies a coat of mail, made of cloth, very thick, and boiled in vinegar, to render it more impenetrable. The Greek em-

5 And David said to the young man that told him: How knowest thou that Saul, and Jonathan, his son, are dead?

6 And the young man that told him, said: I came by chance upon Mount Gelboe, and Saul leaned upon his spear: and the chariots and horsemen drew nigh unto him,

7 And looking behind him, and seeing me, he called me. And I answered: Here am I.

8 And he said to me: Who art thou? And I said to him: I am an Amalecite.

9 And he said to me: Stand over me, and kill me: for anguish is come upon me, and as yet my whole life is in me.

10 So standing over him, I killed him: for I knew that he could not live after the fall: and I took the diadem that was on his head, and the bracelet that was on his arm, and have brought them hither to thee, my lord.

perors and the French formerly wore them much, instead of iron. C.—Prot. however agrees with us.—In me. I have yet received no mortal wound. H.

VER. 10. I killed him. This story of the young Amalecite was not true, as may easily be proved by comparing it with the last chapter of the foregoing book. Ch.—Fall. This he says, apprehending that David would perhaps disapprove of what he had done.—Diadem, or ribband, which was tied round his head, as a badge of his dignity. Heb. "the crown." But it was not of metal, though such were already common. Ex. xxviii. 36. 1 Par. xx. 2. Some pretend that Doeg gave these insignia to his son, that he might ingratiate himself with the future king. But they were upon Saul, so that the enemy could easily distinguish him.—Bracelet. The Hebrews took a great many from the Madianites. Num. xxxi

11 Then David took hold of his garments and rent them, and likewise all the men that were with him:

12 And they mourned, and wept, and fasted until evening, for Saul, and for Jonathan, his son, and for the people of the Lord, and for the house of Israel, because they were fallen by the sword.

13 And David said to the young man that told him: Whence art thou? He answered: I am the son of a stranger of Amalec.

14 David said to him: "Why didst thou not fear to put out thy hand to kill the Lord's anointed?"

15 And David calling one of his servants, said: Go near and fall upon him. And he struck him so that he died.

16 And David said to him: Thy blood be upon thy own head: for thy own mouth hath spoken against thee, saying: I have slain the Lord's anointed.

17 And David made this kind of lamentation over Saul, and over Jonathan, his son.

18 (Also he commanded that they should teach the children of Juda the use of the bow, as it is written in the Book of the just.) And he said: Consider, O Israel, for them that are dead wounded on thy high places.

19 The illustrious of Israel are slain upon thy mountains: how are the valiant fallen?

VER. 11. Rent them, in sign of grief, as many other nations did.

Tum pius Aeneas humeris abscondere vestem. Aeneid v. C.

VER. 12. Of the Lord, the priests; (Abulensis) thought it seems to be explained by the following words, of all the Israelites. H.

VER. 13. Stranger, residing among the Hebrews.

VER. 16. Head. None but thyself can be answerable for thy death. See Mat. xxvii. 25. David was already supreme magistrate, and he wished that all should be convinced that he rejoiced not at the death of the king, and that none might imitate the example of this wretch. C.—Thus Vitellius punished the murderers of Galba, "not out of respect to Galba; but, according to the custom of princes, as a protection for the present, and a threat of vengeance for the future," in case any should dare to treat him in like manner. Tacit. i. Tradito principibus more, munimentum in præsens, in posterum ultionem.

VER. 18. Bow. So this canticle was entitled, because it spoke in praise of the bow and arrows of Saul and Jonathan, v. 22. So one of the works of Hesiod is called "a buckler;" of Theocritus "a flute;" of Simmius "a wing;" &c. Sept. have neglected this word entirely (C.) in the Roman edition. But it is found in the Alex. copy, which reads "Israel," instead of Juda, perhaps properly. Grabe, prol. iv. 2. H.—Chal. "to shoot with the bow." Many suppose that David cautioned his men to exert themselves in that art, (M.) as they might soon expect to have to encounter the Philistines, (T.) who were very expert bowmen. W.—But the former interpretation seems preferable. C.—The bow might be also the beginning of some favourite song, to the tune of which (D.) David would have his men to sing this canticle, (H.) particularly when they went to battle. Grotius. —Just. See Jos. x. 3. M.—It seems this was a more ancient record, to which the author of this book refers. C.—He might have in view the canticle of Anna, (1 K. ii. 4.) or some other. H.—The custom of composing canticles, on such solemn occasions, is very ancient and frequent. See 3 K. iii. 33. and xiii. 29. Jer. xlviii. 31. Iliad ψ & χ. The style of this piece can hardly be equalled by the most polite writers. C.—David is chiefly occupied with the praises of Jonathan. H.—Consider . . . places. This sentence is omitted in Heb. Chal. Sept. and in some copies of S. Jerom's version. T. i. p. 365, Nov. edit. op. It is a further explication of the subsequent verse. C.—Yet the Sept. read, "Erect a pillar, O Israel, [upon thy heights; the Vat. Sept. places this after slain. H.] in honour of the slain, thy wounded soldiers. How are the mighty fallen!" The Heb. seems to be different from what the Sept. Chal. &c. read, as the Masora now adopts etibi, instead of etib, which has greatly puzzled interpreters. Hence Aquila translates ἀπεθνήσκων, with the Sept. of Ximenes, i. e. "Execute or consider with attention," this sepulchral monument on which you shall inscribe, "For the dead and for thy wounded." It was to be placed on some "eminence," according to custom. The present Heb. is very indeterminate, denoting "glory, a honey-comb," &c. Ezeck. xx. 6. Dan. xi. 16. 41. See Grabe, Prol. II.

VER. 19. Illustrious. Heb. "the glory (beauty, hart, &c.) of Israel hath been pierced," &c. The comparison of Saul with a hart, is noble enough in the ideas of the ancients. Ps. xvii. 34. Cant. ii. 9. and viii. 14. Syr. and Arab. "O hart of Israel, they have been slain," &c. C.—Slain. Heb. chalah, signifies also "a soldier," and this word agrees perfectly well with giborim, "valiant," both here and v. 22. and 25. Kennicott would apply it to Jonathan, upon whom David's attention is mostly fixed. "O ornament of Israel! O warrior, upon thy high places! How," &c. H.—In this manner many such pieces commence. Lami. i. T.

20 Tell it not in Geth, publish it not in the streets of Ascalon: lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph.

21 Ye mountains of Gelboe, let neither dew nor rain come upon you, nor let there be in you fields of first-fruits: for there was cast away the shield of the valiant, the shield of Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil.

22 From the blood of the slain, from the fat of the valiant, the arrow of Jonathan never turned back, and the sword of Saul did not return empty.

23 Saul and Jonathan, lovely, and comely in their life, even in death they were not divided. they were swifter than eagles, stronger than lions.

24 Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul, who clothed you with scarlet in delights, who gave ornaments of gold for your attire.

25 How are the valiant fallen in battle? how was Jonathan slain in the high places?

26 I grieve for thee, my brother Jonathan, exceeding beautiful, and amiable to me above the love of women. As the mother loveth her only son, so did I love thee.

27 How are the valiant fallen, and the weapons of war perished?

VER. 20. Triumph. He was aware of the exultation of the infidels. H.

VER. 21. Fruits, which may be offered to the Lord. Inanimate things could not offend, nor does David curse them in earnest. But (T.) nothing could more strikingly express his distress and grief, than this imprecation. It is false that those mountains have since been barren. This caution is one of the most fruitful of the country. Brocard. C.—Job (iii.) speaks with the same animation, and curses his day. M.—Of Saul, or "Saul, the shield of his people, was cast away, as," &c. Prot. "as though he had not been anointed with oil." H.—He is not reproached for throwing away his buckler, for nothing was deemed more shameful. The ancient Germans would not allow such a one to enter their temples or places of assembly. Tacit. mor. Germ.—A woman of Sparta told her son, when she delivered one to him, "Bring this back, or be brought upon it" dead. Impositum scuto referunt Pallanta frequentes. Aeneid x. Sanctius. C.—As though. Heb. seems to have sh, instead of s, (as it is in several MSS. correctly, in noshug) and bli, instead of eli, (Delany) as the former word seems no where else to signify quasi non; and the Syr. Arab. and Chal. omit the negation. It might therefore be the shield of Saul, "the arms of him who has been anointed with oil." Ken. nicott.—Some would refer this unction to the shield, (Vatab.) as this was some times done: (M.) but the reflection would be here too trifling. C.

VER. 22. From. Heb. "without the blood of soldiers, without the fat of the valiant, the bow of Jonathan had never returned." Kennicott.—Fat. The entrails. It might also denote the most valiant of the soldiers, as we read of "the fat or marrow of corn" for the best. Ps. lxxx. 17. C.—Jonathan attacked the most courageous, and laid them dead at his feet. H.—Empty. Saul carried destruction wherever he went.

Et nos tela, pater, ferrumque haud debile dextra,

Sparginus & nostro sequitur de vulnere sanguis. Aen. xii. 50.

VER. 23. Lovely, or united. Jonathan always behaved with due respect towards his father, though he could not enter into his unjust animosity against David. C.—The latter passes over in silence all that Saul had done against himself, and seems wholly occupied with the thought of the valour and great achievements of the deceased. H.—Sanchez believes that these epithets were introduced of course into funeral canticles, like Atlas! my noble one, (Jer. xxii. 18. M.) as Saul could have no pretensions to be styled lovely, or friendly, towards the latter part of his reign; since he treated the priests, David, and even his son Jonathan, with contumely, and even with unrelenting fury. But all this David would willingly bury in oblivion. He will not even notice how different was the end of the two heroes. Jonathan died like a virtuous soldier in his country's cause; Saul was wounded, but impiously accelerated his own death, through dread of torments and of insult. Though they died, therefore, on the same field of battle, their end was as different as that of the saint and of the impenitent sinner. H.

VER. 25. Battle. Heb. "in the midst of battle! O Jonathan, thou warrior upon thy high places!" Kennicott, Diss. i. p. 123.

VER. 26. Brother. So they lamented, Alas! my brother, Jer. xxii. 18. M.—Women. He indicates the ardour of his love, not any inordinate affection. D.—I love thee more than any person can love a woman, (C.) more than women can love their husbands or children. M.—Chal. "thy love is more wonderful to me than the love of two who are espoused."—As, &c. This is not found in Heb. Sept. or S. Jerom. C.

VER. 27. Perished, falling into the hands of the enemy; though Saul and Jonathan may be styled the arms, as well as the shield, of Israel. M.—No character could be more worthy of praise than the latter. His breast was ne

CHAP. II.

David is received and anointed king of Juda. Isboseth, the son of Saul, reigneth over the rest of Israel. A battle between Abner and Joab.

AND after these things David consulted the Lord, saying: Shall I go up into one of the cities of Juda? And the Lord said to him: Go up. And David said: Whither shall I go up? And he answered him: Into Hebron.

2 So David went up, and his two wives, Achinoam, the Jezrahelitess, and Abigail, the wife of Nabal of Carmel:

3 And the men also that were with him, David brought up, every man with his household: and they abode in the towns of Hebron.

4 And the men of Juda came, and anointed David there, to be king over the house of Juda. And it was told David, that the men of Jabes Galaad had buried Saul.

5 David therefore sent messengers to the men of Jabes Galaad, and said to them: Blessed be you to the Lord, who have shewed this mercy to your master, Saul, and have buried him.

6 And now the Lord surely will render you mercy and truth, and I also will requite you for this good turn, because you have done this thing.

7 Let your hands be strengthened, and be ye men of valour: for although your master, Saul, be dead, yet the house of Juda hath anointed me to be their king.

8 But Abner, the son of Ner, general of Saul's army, took Isboseth, the son of Saul, and led him about through the camp.

9 And made him king over Galaad, and over Gessuri, agitated by envy, though he seemed to be the most interested to destroy David. Even Saul had many excellent qualities; which makes Ven. Bede compare him in those respects with Jesus Christ; as most of the memorable persons and events of the Old Testament had a view to Christ on the one hand, and to the Synagogue on the other. Saul is one of the most striking figures of the reprobation and conduct of the Jewish church. As he was adorned with many glorious prerogatives, and chosen by God, yet he no sooner beheld the rising merit of David, than he began to persecute him: so the Jews had been instructed by the prophets, and had been selected as God's peculiar inheritance; and nevertheless took occasion from the virtues and miracles of the Son of God, to conspire his ruin. The Romans were sent to punish the Jews, who are now become the most abject of all mankind, and are filled with rage, seeing the exaltation of the Christian Church, as Saul was reduced by the Philistines to the greatest distress, and his children were forced to implore the protection of the man whom he had so cruelly persecuted, &c. C.—Saul and Judas may be a warning to us, that no person ought to live without fear, since they perished so miserably, though they had been elevated by the hand of God. S. Amb. &c. H.

CHAP. II. VER. 1. Juda. David thought it was his duty to co-operate with the designs of Providence. He consults the Lord (C.) by means of Abiathar, (Abul.) or by a prophet, Joseph.—Hebron, ennobled by the patriarchs. Grot.—Samuel had before anointed David, and given him a right to the crown, (W.) ius ad regnum. But this anointing gives him a right to govern, ius in regno; (C.) or rather it proves, that the tribe submitted voluntarily to his dominion, which he had already (H.) lawfully begun to exercise, when he put the Amalecite to death. Abulensis. VER. 7. King. He invites them to concur with the men of Juda, hoping that all Israel would be influenced by their example. But his hopes proved abortive, as Abner caused Isboseth to be proclaimed king in the vicinity at Mahanaim.

VER. 8. Camp. Heb. Machanayim, which many take for a proper name (C.)

and over Jesrahel, and over Ephraim, and over Benjamin, and over all Israel.

10 Isboseth, the son of Saul, was forty years old when he began to reign over Israel; and he reigned two years; and only the house of Juda followed David.

11 And the number of the days that David abode, reigning in Hebron over the house of Juda, was seven years and six months.

12 And Abner, the son of Ner, and the servants of Isboseth, the son of Saul, went out from the camp to Gabaon.

13 And Joab, the son of Sarvia, and the servants of David went out, and met them by the pool of Gabaon. And when they were come together, they sat down over-against one another: the one on the one side of the pool, and the other on the other side.

14 And Abner said to Joab: Let the young men rise, and play before us. And Joab answered: Let them rise.

15 Then there arose and went over twelve in number of Benjamin, of the part of Isboseth, the son of Saul, and twelve of the servants of David.

16 And every one catching his fellow by the head, thrust his sword into the side of his adversary, and they fell down together: and the name of the place was called: The field of the valiant, in Gabaon.

17 And there was a very fierce battle that day: And Abner was put to flight, with the men of Israel, by the servants of David.

18 And there were the three sons of Sarvia there, Joab, and Abisai, and Asael: now Asael was a most swift runner, like one of the roes, that abide in the woods.

of the town, on the river Jabok, where Jacob had encamped. Gen. xxxii. 2. H.—Abner was aware that he should not retain his authority under David, and therefore conducted Isboseth to the camps in various places, (M.) but chiefly on the east side of the Jordan, (H. v. 29.) where the people were particularly attached to Saul's family. Isboseth seems to have been a fit tool for his purpose.

VER. 9. Gessuri. There was one south of Judah: but this country was probably near Hermon, and might be tributary to Israel. David perhaps married this king's daughter, in order to detach him from the party of Isboseth. C. iii. 3. Heb. reads, "Assuri;" and S. Jerom observes, that many explained it of the tribe of Asser, (Trad. Heb.) with the Chaldee, (D. M.) or of the Assurians. Gen. xxv. 3.—Israel, by degrees. In the mean time the Philistines occupied many cities, which might prevent Isboseth from attempting to fix his residence on the west side of the Jordan, v. 19.

VER. 10. He reigned two years, viz. before he began visibly to decline: but in all he reigned seven years and six months: for so long David reigned in Hebron. Ch. W.—The Jews admit of an interregnum in Israel of above five years, which is by no means probable. Two years elapsed before the two houses came to an open war; (Salien) soon after which, the power of Isboseth was greatly weakened by the defeat, and afterwards by the defection, of Abner. H.—Hence the anored historian refers to the commencement of hostilities, and not to the end of Isboseth's dominion. E. T. C.

VER. 12. Servants; guards, army. M.—Camp; or from Machanayim to Gabaon, in the tribe of Benjamin, about six miles from Jerusalem. C.—Sept. leave the former word untranslated, "Manacim." H.

VER. 14. Play, like the gladiators with drawn swords, which formed one of the principal diversions at Rome, (C.) while it was pagan. This might be considered as a prelude to the ensuing engagement; or like a detachment of twelve on each side, fighting to shew the prowess of their respective armies; as the three Horatii and Curiatii did afterwards, to spare the effusion of blood. But there is no mention that Abner and Joab had authority to agree that these champions should decide the fate of the two kingdoms, (H.) whence they are generally accused of ostentation; though the soldiers, not being acquainted with their motives, were obliged to obey. T. M.

VER. 16. Together. Some understand this only of Abner's soldiers, as the original may be explained: "And they (David's men) caught every one his," &c. But it is more generally believed that all fell. C.—Rufin has erroneously translated Josephus in the former sense, and has led Comestor, Lyran, &c. into this opinion. T.—Valiant. Heb. "the portion of the smooth stones, (hateurim, 1 K. xvii. 40. or) of the brave." C.

VER. 18. Woods. Swiftess was one great qualification of a warrior. C. i. 23. Homer generally styles Achilles, "the swift-footed."

19 And Asael pursued after Abner, and turned not to the right hand nor to the left from following Abner.

20 And Abner looked behind him, and said: Art thou Asael? And he answered: I am.

21 And Abner said to him: Go to the right hand, or to the left, and lay hold on one of the young men, and take thee his spoils. But Asael would not leave off following him close.

22 And again Abner said to Asael: Go off, and do not follow me, lest I be obliged to stab thee to the ground, and I shall not be able to hold up my face to Joab, thy brother.

23 But he refused to hearken to him, and would not turn aside: wherefore Abner struck him with his spear, with a back stroke in the groin, and thrust him through, and he died upon the spot: and all that came to the place where Asael fell down and died, stood still.

24 Now while Joab and Abisai pursued after Abner, the sun went down: and they came as far as the hill of the aqueduct, that lieth over-against the valley, by the way of the wilderness in Gabaon.

25 And the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together to Abner: and being joined in one body, they stood on the top of a hill.

26 And Abner cried out to Joab, and said: Shall thy sword rage unto utter destruction? knowest thou not that it is dangerous to drive people to despair? how long dost thou defer to bid the people cease from pursuing after their brethren?

27 And Joab said: As the Lord liveth, if thou hadst spoke sooner, even in the morning the people should have retired from pursuing after their brethren.

28 Then Joab sounded the trumpet, and all the army stood still, and did not pursue after Israel any farther, nor fight any more.

29 And Abner and his men walked all that night through the plains: and they passed the Jordan, and having gone through all Beth-horon, came to the camp.

30 And Joab returning, after he had left Abner, assembled all the people: and there were wanting of David's servants nineteen men, beside Asael.

31 But the servants of David had killed of Benjamin, and of the men that were with Abner, three hundred and sixty, who all died.

32 And they took Asael, and buried him in the sepulchre of his father, in Bethlehem: and Joab, and the men that were with him, marched all the night, and they came to Hebron at break of day.

CHAP. III.

David groweth daily stronger. Abner cometh over to him: he is treacherously slain by Joab.

NOW *there was a long war between the house of Saul and the house of David: David prospering and growing always stronger and stronger, but the house of Saul decaying daily.

2 *And sons were born to David in Hebron: and his first-born was Amnon, of Achinoam, the Jezrahelitess.

3 And his second, Cheleab, of Abigail, the wife of Nabal, of Carmel: and the third, Absalom, the son of Maacha, the daughter of Tholmai, king of Gessur.

4 And the fourth, Adonias, the son of Haggith: and the fifth, Saphathia, the son of Abital.

5 And the sixth, Jethraam, of Eglä, the wife of David: these were born to David in Hebron.

6 Now while there was war between the house of Saul and the house of David, Abner, the son of Ner, ruled the house of Saul.

7 And Saul had a concubine named Respha, the daughter of Aia. And Isboseth said to Abner:

8 Why didst thou go in to my father's concubine? And he was exceedingly angry for the words of Isboseth, and said: Am I a dog's head against Juda this day, who have shewn mercy unto the house of Saul, thy father, and to his brethren and friends, and have not delivered thee into the hands of David, and hast thou sought this day against me, to charge me with a matter concerning a woman?

9 So do God to Abner, and more also, unless as the Lord hath sworn to David, so I do to him,

10 That the kingdom be translated from the house of Saul, and the throne of David be set up over Israel, and over Juda, from Dan to Bersabee.

louja." H.—Others, "Abia."—Gessur, not far from Damascus. The lady probably first embraced the true religion, though the Scripture seldom enters into these details. C.—David is never blamed for marrying strange women. Salien supposes that he entered into this alliance before the civil war broke out, that Isboseth, who had fixed his court at Mahanaim, might have an opponent near at hand. The fruits of this marriage were very unfortunate, and brought great distress upon David: so little do men know what will be the event of the most splendid connections! H.

VER. 4. Adonias was slain by Solomon, (8 K. ii. 24. M.) for arrogating to himself the right of the first-born, and pretending that the crown belonged to him. H.—The names of his mother, and of those who follow, are barely known. Salien.

VER. 5. Wife. She was otherwise of no nobility, but perhaps loved by David more than the rest, as Rachel was by Jacob. The Rabbins would infer that Eglä and Michol are the same person. But the latter had no children, (C. vi. 23. Salien) and is mentioned v. 13.

VER. 8. Concubine. To marry the king's widow was deemed an attempt upon the throne. 3 K. ii. 22. Hence Solomon was so displeased at Adonias, v. 24. Some think that Isboseth formed the accusation on mere conjecture; but Abner does not deny the fact. C.—Dog's head: of no account, like a dead dog; (H.) or no better than a servant, who leads a dog. The Jews considered the dog as one of the vilest of animals. C. ix. 8. Job xxx. 1.—Juda. This word is neglected by the Sept. Some would substitute Liduth, "to be cast away." C.—God permits the defenders of a wrong cause to fall out, that the right one may be advanced. W.

VER. 9. Sworn. It seems therefore that he knew of God's appointment, and had hitherto resisted it for his own temporal convenience. H.—If both he and Isboseth were ignorant of this decree, Abner had no right to deprive the latter of the crown. Abulensis, q. 7. M.

11 And he could not answer him a word, because he feared him.

12 Abner "therefore sent messengers to David for himself, saying: Whose is the land? and that they should say: Make a league with me, and my hand shall be with thee: and I will bring all Israel to thee.

13 And he said: Very well: I will make a league with thee: but one thing I require of thee, saying: Thou shalt not see my face before thou bring Michol, the daughter of Saul; and so thou shalt come, and see me.

14 And David sent messengers to Ishboseth, the son of Saul, saying: "Restore my wife, Michol, whom I espoused to me for a hundred fore-skins of the Philistines.

15 And Ishboseth sent, and took her from her husband, Phaltiel, the son of Lais.

16 And her husband followed her, weeping, as far as Bahurim: And Abner said to him: Go and return. And he returned.

17 Abner also spoke to the ancients of Israel, saying: Both yesterday and the day before you sought for David, that he might reign over you.

18 Now then do it: because the Lord hath spoken to David, saying: By the hand of my servant David I will save my people Israel from the hands of the Philistines, and of all their enemies.

19 And Abner spoke also to Benjamin. And he went to speak to David, in Hebron, all that seemed good to Israel, and to all Benjamin.

20 And he came to David, in Hebron, with twenty men: and David made a feast for Abner, and his men that came with him.

21 And Abner said to David: I will rise, that I may gather all Israel unto thee, my lord the king, and may enter into a league with thee, and that thou mayst reign over all as thy soul desireth. Now when David had brought Abner on his way, and he was gone in peace,

22 Immediately David's servants and Joab came, after having slain the robbers, with an exceeding great booty: And Abner was not with David in Hebron, for he had now sent him away, and he was gone in peace.

23 And Joab and all the army that was with him, came afterwards: and it was told Joab, that Abner, the son of Ner, came to the king, and he hath sent him away, and he is gone in peace.

24 And Joab went in to the king, and said: What hast thou done? Behold Abner came to thee: Why didst thou send him away, and he is gone and departed?

25 Knowest thou not Abner, the son of Ner, that to this end he came to thee, that he might deceive thee, and to know thy going out, and thy coming in, and to know all thou dost?

26 Then Joab going out from David, sent messengers after Abner, and brought him back from the cistern of Sira, David knowing nothing of it.

27 And when "Abner was returned to Hebron, Joab took him aside to the middle of the gate, to speak to him, treacherously: and he stabbed him there in the groin, and he died, in revenge of the blood of Asael his brother.

28 And when David heard of it, after the thing was now done, he said: I, and my kingdom are innocent before the Lord for ever of the blood of Abner, the son of Ner:

29 And may it come upon the head of Joab, and upon all his father's house: and let there not fail from the house of Joab one that hath an issue of seed, or that is a leper, or that holdeth the distaff, or that falleth by the sword, or that wanteth bread.

30 So Joab, and Abisai, his brother, slew Abner, because he had killed their brother Asael, at Gabaon, in the battle.

31 And David said to Joab, and to all the people that were with him: Rend your garments, and gird yourselves with sackcloths, and mourn before the funeral of Abner. And king David himself followed the bier.

VER. 13. Thee. Could David thus authorize treachery? It is answered, that Abner knew that the throne belonged to him, and he was already responsible for all the evils of the civil war. David does not approve of his conduct, but only makes use of him to obtain his right.—Michol. He might justly think that the people would have less repugnance to acknowledge him for their sovereign, when they saw that he had married the daughter of Saul. She had never been repudiated by him. C.

C.—Abisai was ready to assist him to murder Abner, v. 30. 32 And when they had buried Abner in Hebron, king David lifted up his voice, and wept at the grave of Abner: and all the people also wept.

33 And the king, mourning and lamenting over Abner, said: Not as cowards are wont to die, hath Abner died.

34 Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet loaden with fetters: but as men fall before the children of iniquity, so didst thou fall. And all the people repeating it, wept over him.

35 And when all the people came to take meat with David, while it was yet broad day, David swore, saying: So do God to me, and more also, if I taste bread or any thing else before sun-set.

36 And all the people heard, and they were pleased, and all that the king did seemed good in the sight of all the people.

37 And all the people, and all Israel understood that day, that it was not the king's doing, that Abner, the son of Ner, was slain.

38 The king also said to his servants: Do you not know that a prince and a great man is slain this day in Israel?

39 But I as yet am tender, though anointed king: and these men, the sons of Sarvia, are too hard for me: the Lord reward him that doeth evil according to his wickedness.

Isboseth is murdered by two of his servants: David punisheth the murderers.

AND ^aIsboseth, the son of Saul, heard that Abner was slain in Hebron: and his hands were weakened, and all Israel was troubled.

2 Now the son of Saul had two men captains of his bands; the name of the one was Baana, and the name of the other Rechab, the sons of Remmon, a Berothite, of the children of Benjamin: for Beroth also was reckoned in Benjamin.

4 And Jonathan, the son of Saul, had a son that was lame of his feet: for he was five years old, when the tidings came of Saul and Jonathan from Jezrahel. And his nurse took him up and fled: and as she made haste to flee, he fell and became lame: and his name was Miphiboseth.

5 And the sons of Remmon, the Berothite, Rechab and Baana, coming, went into the house of Isboseth in the heat of the day: and he was sleeping upon his bed at noon. And the door-keeper of the house, who was cleansing wheat, was fallen asleep.

6 And they entered into the house secretly, taking ears of corn; and Rechab, and Baana, his brother, stabbed him in the groin, and fled away.

7 For when they came into the house, he was sleeping upon his bed in a parlour; and they struck him and killed him: and taking away his head, they went off by the way of the wilderness, walking all night.

8 And they brought the head of Isboseth to David, to Hebron: and they said to the king: Behold the head of Isboseth, the son of Saul, thy enemy, who sought thy life: and the Lord hath revenged my lord the king this day of Saul, and of his seed.

VER. 5. At noon, "to divide the day," as Varro (iii. 2.) writes. This custom is very prevalent in hot countries.—And the, &c. is all omitted in Heb. and in the most ancient MSS. of S. Jerom's version. It is taken from the Sept. (C.) who do not notice any farther the taking ears of corn, v. 6. H.—Probably the Heb. had this sentence formerly. D.—It was customary to have women to keep the doors; (Mat. xxvi. 69.) and they were often employed in cleansing wheat. Petronius says, in lance argenteo pium purgabat. VER. 8. Life. They wish to recall to David's remembrance what Saul had done against him, that he may approve the more of what they had perpetrated. M.—They supposed that, as Abner had been well received, they should obtain still greater favour. Salien.

VER. 11. Innocent. Isboseth was such, at least, in their regard. He might also have mounted his father's throne, bona fide; and, at any rate, it was not their business to decide the matter (C.) in this treacherous manner. CHAP. V.

David is anointed king of all Israel. He taketh Jerusalem, and dwelleth there. He defeateth the Philistines.

WHEN all the tribes of Israel came to David, in Hebron, saying: "Behold we are thy bone and thy flesh.

2 Moreover yesterday also and the day before, when Saul was king over us, thou wast he that did lead out and bring in Israel: and the Lord said to thee: Thou shalt feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be prince over Israel.

3 The ancients also of Israel came to the king, to Hebron and king David made a league with them in Hebron before the Lord: "and they anointed David to be king over Israel.

4 David was thirty years old when he began to reign, "and he reigned forty years.

5 In Hebron he reigned over Juda seven years and six months: and in Jerusalem he reigned three and thirty years over all Israel and Juda.

cut off were fastened to a cross; as the head and right hand of Cyrus were by his brother Artaxerxes, Xenop. Anab. iii. C.—Josephus seems to be of the former opinion, saying, "he ordered them to be executed in the most excruciating torments," "while the head of Jeboseth (Isboseth) was buried with all honour." Ant. vii. 2.—Thus David convinced the people that he would punish crimes, when it was in his power, and that he would give no encouragement to the treason or perfidy of any one. H.

CHAP. V. VER. 1. Tribes. Thus were God's promises sweetly fulfilled, and David obtained the quiet dominion over all Israel, excepting perhaps a few of the tribe of Benjamin, according to the Vulgate. 1 Par. xii. 29. An army of 340,822 was collected on this occasion; and David signalized the commencement of his reign, by the taking of Jerusalem. C.—The tribe of Issachar is not specified in the text; but Josephus asserts, that 20,000 of them assembled; so that the army would amount to 359 (Salien) or 60 thousand, besides the 822. C.—These might be considered as the deputies of all the rest of their brethren. 1 Par. xii. 38. They were abundantly supplied with all necessaries. Salien.—Flesh, of the same nation, as Moses had specified. Deut. xvii. 15. C.—They now relinquish all the seeds of division, which had before hindered them from joining with their brethren of Juda. Kennicott discovers several important alterations, by comparing this history with 1 Chron. xi. Dissert. i. H.

VER. 2. Lead out to battle. His experience in war was a great recommendation. M.—Feed, as a shepherd, under which character he is first represented. H.—Other rulers were afterwards honoured with the same title, (C.) particularly the governors of the Church, Act. xx. &c. David's name is written without i, in the books before the captivity; whence Kennicott would infer, that the canticles were perhaps not the work of Solomon, as i occurs there; Duid for Dnd. H.

VER. 3. Ancients; princes of the tribes, and officers, (C.) with all the chief magistrates. H.—The high priest, Abiathar, received the oaths of allegiance from the people, and of the king, who promised to govern according to the laws of God. The ark was probably present, and innumerable sacrifices offered on this solemn occasion, as was usual. 1 Par. xii. 26. Hebron continued to be a place for sacrifices. C. xv. 7. C.—David had erected here a temporary altar and tabernacle, where Abiathar officiated in his pontifical robes, as it was not safe for the people to go into the dominions of Isboseth, either to Gabaon or to Cariathiarim. Tostat.—Israel, acknowledging the right which David had to the throne, by God's appointment. H. W.

VER. 4. Forty, a round number, as another half year is specified below; (C.) or Solomon might be crowned at the expiration of the 40th year. D.

VER. 5. Land. This was the only canton which the infidels still retained, as they had still possession of the citadel of Jebus, (C.) though the Israelites had been in the country above 400 years. Ken.—Nothing could reflect greater glory on the beginning of David's reign, than the seizing of this place, (C.) which was deemed so impregnable, that the Jebusites thought the blind and the lame were sufficient to defend it. H.—They placed some upon the walls, (M.) "despising him, on account of the strength of their walls."

VER. 7. Castle: "the lower city," (Josephus) spread over Mount Sion.

VER. 8. Gutters. Heb. Tainnor, "through (Noldius) the subterraneous passage," (leading to the tops of the houses.) Hugo of Vienna.—Thus Babylon was taken by Cyrus, who passed through the channel of the Euphrates, the waters of which he had let off; though the inhabitants had derided his attempt to take the city by siege, as the men of Jebus do here. Polybius says, "Rabatamana, a city of Arabia, could not be taken, till one of the prisoners shewed the besiegers a subterraneous passage, (βύθρον) through which the besieged came down for water." Of the same nature were the gutters here spoken of. Ken.—"The king promised to give the command of the army to the man who would pass through the cavities (σφαγγύων) below, and take the citadel." Josephus.—This went to Jerusalem, to the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land: and they said to David: Thou shalt not come in hither, unless thou take away the blind and the lame, that say David shall not come in hither.

7 But David took the castle of Sion: the same is the city of David.

8 For David had offered that day a reward to whoever should strike the Jebusites, and get up to the gutters of the tops of the houses, and take away the blind and the lame that hated the soul of David: Therefore it is said in the proverb: The blind and the lame shall not come into the temple.

9 "And David dwelt in the castle, and called it, The city of David: and built round about from Mello and inwards.

10 And he went on prospering and growing up; and the Lord God of hosts was with him.

11 "And Hiram, the king of Tyre, sent messengers to David, and cedar trees, and carpenters, and masons for walls: and they built a house for David.

12 And David knew that the Lord had confirmed him king over Israel, and that he had exalted his kingdom over his people Israel.

reward is expressly mentioned in 1 Paral. xi. 6, with the person who obtained it; (S. Jer. Trad.) and it seems, after David, this ought to be inserted, "shall be the head and captain." And Joab, the son of Sarvia, went up first, and was made the general." H.—Hated. Heb. "that are hated by David's soul." Cajetan supposes that the Jebusites in the citadel, are thus distinguished from those who dwelt peaceably in the lower town, with the Israelites. C.—Proverb. Prot. insert, "He shall be head and captain." Wherefore they said, the blind . . . into the house." What is translated temple, may denote also, "the house" of David, or "the place" where this provocation had been given. H.—Idols shall never be adored in the true Church. W.—Some think that the blind and the lame were excluded from the temple, or from David's palace. But we find that they had free access to the temple; (Mat. xxi. 14. Acts iii. 2.) and Miphiboseth ate at David's table, though he was lame. If the Jebusites be designated, they were already excluded from the temple, like other infidels of Chanaan. C.—Josephus (vii. 3.) insinuates, that "David drove them from Jerusalem," though we read of Areuna residing there. C. xxiv. 16. But he might be proselyte before, and not dwell in the fort. The expression seems however be proverbial, to signify any very difficult enterprise, which proves successful, and contrary to expectation. H.—The Jebusites were thus derided (Sanctius) in their turn. T.—Whether Joab took this strong place by a subterraneous passage, (H.) or scaled the walls, and so got to the top, whence the water falls, as from a gutter; (C.) it is certain that he displayed the utmost valour, and thus obtained the confirmation of his authority, which David would perhaps have willingly taken from him, (Salien) if another had offered himself, and performed this hazardous enterprise. H.—He made a fair offer to all Israel, as they probably expected. Kennicott.

VER. 9. Inwards. He built or repaired the higher "city of David," beginning at Mello, to "fill up" the valley, which Solomon finished, and adorned with a palace. 3 K. ix. 15. 4 K. xii. 20. The place is probably called Asaramel. 1 Mac. xiv. 27. C.—Sept. and Josephus generally understand Mello to designate the citadel of Sion, or "a complete fortification," to defend the city. Instead of inwards, the Sept. have, "and his house." But ubithe means, "and to the house," temple, or fort, whence he began the enclosure, so as to make a complete communication. Ken.—This city became "the most famous in all the East." Plin. v. 14.—"Walls, built in a crooked manner, according to the rules of art, enclosed two hills, immensely high." Tacit. Hist. v.—These hills were multiplied, on account of their different summits, so that Josephus speaks of five hills. The palace of David stood on Sion, and the temple on Moria, which was a part of it still more elevated, towards the east. The other hill is often called Acra, by Josephus, and lay southward of Sion. Here the ancient town of Jebus was built. The Machabees took in an adjoining eminence. Joseph. Bel. vi. 6.—Bethsetta, or the new city, was afterwards enclosed. Herod adorned the city with many superb monuments, both of a public and of a private nature. C.—We read of ten gates, and of four towers, belonging to this city. It was not well supplied with water, and what it had was brackish. The walls seem never to have exceeded four and a half miles; now they are only three, and include Mount Calvary, which was formerly no part of the city. Button says a valley run from west to east, between the two hills of Zion on the south, and Acra on the north; which contradicts the former statement. H.—Villalpand supposes that the citadel was nine and a half stadia, and all the city thirty-five stadia in circumference, eight of which make an Italian mile. M.

VER. 11. Hiram was a magnificent prince, who kept up a correspondence with Solomon. He greatly adorned the city of Tyre. See Joseph. c. Ap. 1.

VER. 12. Over. Heb. "for." The king is bound to promote the welfare of his people. C.—But the same word means "over," as the Prot. allow. H.—Success constantly attending David, was an earnest that the Lord had not rejected him. C.

13 *And David took more concubines and wives of Jerusalem, after he was come from Hebron: and there were born to David other sons also and daughters:

14 And these are the names of them that were born to him in Jerusalem, Samua, and Sobab, and Nathan, and Solomon,

15 And Jebahar, and Elisua, and Nepheg,

16 And Japhia, and Elisama, and Elioda, and Eliphalet.

17 And the Philistines heard that they had anointed David to be king over Israel: and they all came to seek David: and when David heard of it, he went down to a strong hold.

18 *And the Philistines coming, spread themselves in the valley of Raphaim.

19 And David consulted the Lord, saying: Shall I go up to the Philistines? and wilt thou deliver them into my hand? And the Lord said to David: Go up, for I will surely deliver the Philistines into thy hand.

20 *And David came to Baal Pharism: and defeated them there, and he said: The Lord hath divided my enemies before me, as waters are divided. *Therefore the name of the place was called Baal Pharism.

21 And they left there their idols: which David and his men took away.

22 And the Philistines came up again, and spread themselves in the valley of Raphaim.

23 And David consulted the Lord: Shall I go up against the Philistines, and wilt thou deliver them into my hands? He answered: Go not up against them, but fetch a compass behind them, and thou shalt come upon them over-against the pear trees.

24 And when thou shalt hear the sound of one going in the tops of the pear trees, then shalt thou join battle: for then will the Lord go out before thy face, to strike the army of the Philistines.

25 And David did as the Lord had commanded him, and he smote the Philistines from Gabaa, until thou come to Gezer.

CHAP. VI.

David fetcheth the ark from Cariathiarim. Oza is struck dead for touching it. It is deposited in the house of Obbedom: and from thence is carried to David's house.

AND David again gathered together all the chosen men of Israel, thirty thousand.

2 *And David arose, and went, with all the people that were with him of the men of Juda, to fetch the ark of God, upon which the name of the Lord of hosts is invoked, who sitteth over it between the Cherubims.

3 And they laid the ark of God upon a new cart: and took it out of the house of Abinadab, who was in Gabaa; and Oza, and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab, drove the new cart.

4 *And when they had taken it out of the house of Abinadab, who was in Gabaa, Ahio, having care of the ark of God, went before the ark.

5 But David and all Israel played before the Lord on all manner of instruments made of wood, on harps, and lutes, and timbrels, and cornets, and cymbals.

6 And when they came to the floor of Nachon, Oza put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it: because the oxen kicked, and made it lean aside.

7 And the indignation of the Lord was enkindled against Oza, and he struck him for his rashness: and he died there before the ark of God.

8 *And David was grieved because the Lord had struck Oza, and the name of that place was called: The striking of Oza, to this day.

* 1 Par. iii. 1. and 2.—* 1 Par. xiv. 9.—Isaiah xxviii. 21.—* 1 Par. xiv. 11.

VER. 13. David took more concubines and wives of Jerusalem. Not harlots, but wives of an inferior condition: for such in Scripture are styled concubines. Ch.—He had in all eight wives, and ten whom he married with less solemnity. He might desire to attach the principal families of the nation, as well as some foreign princes, to his interests. Moses forbids a king to have too many wives. Deut. xvii. 17. C.—But David is never blamed for the transgression of this precept. See C. iii. 1. M.

VER. 16. Eliphalet. Sept. reckon twenty instead of eleven. C.—The Vat. copy has twenty-four, as some of the names have been read differently, so as to make two persons, and thus frequently a double translation occurs in the Sept. the one being taken either from Aquila, &c. or from some more early version, of which we know not the author. Grabe. Kennicott, Diss. ii. p. 404.

VER. 17. Seek, or attack David. He went out to meet them. Par. But receiving an order not to join battle as yet, retired to Odollam, (C. xxiii. 18. 1 Par. xi. 15. C.) a strong hold, with which he was perfectly acquainted. H.

VER. 18. Raphaim. Sept. "of Titans" (C.) or giants who had dwelt there. M.—It lay to the west (M.) or south of Jerusalem, and extended as far as Bethlehem. David was still more to the south, (C.) so that he seemed to be cut off from his capital. But it was secure enough. H.—On this occasion, three of his brave men went through the midst of the enemies' ranks, to fetch water from the spring of Bethlehem. C. xxiii. 16.

VER. 20. Baal-Pharism, "the master of the divisions, or god of the scattered;" as the place was afterwards called, in memory that David became master, and put the enemy to flight, taking their idols, (C.) which were unable to save themselves. H.

VER. 21. Away, and burnt. Par. The ark had on the contrary proved fatal to the gods, and to the people of the Philistines; who might hence perceive the difference there was between the true God and their false gods.

VER. 23. Shall, &c. This consultation is omitted in Heb. C.—Prot. "and when David inquired of the Lord, he said, Thou shalt not," &c. Sept. "and David," &c. H.—Trees. Heb. Becaim. Sept. "of lamentation." Judg. ii. 1.

VER. 24. Trees. Many translate the Heb. "mulberry trees," or leave the original word, becaim, "the heights of Bochim." Sept. seem to give a double version: "the sound of the agitation (or Alex. "shutting up," (H.) as with an army on all sides) of the woods, of the lamentation." M.—Theodoret supposes, "the woods put in motion, without any wind." It is thought that an army of spirits went before David, and threw the enemy into a panic. Storms of hail, &c. seem to have also cut them down. Isai. xxviii. 21. Ps. xvii. 9.

VER. 25. Gabaa, which some would understand of "the hill" of Bochim. C. (1388)

* 1 Par. xiii. 5. A. M. 2959.—1 Kings vii. 1.—* 1 Par. xiii. 11.

—But in Sept. (Alex.) and in Par. we read Gabaon, a city near the birth-place of Saul. H.—David pursued the enemy by Gabaa, and took from them all the cities of which they had taken possession, after their victory. C.—Gezer was in the tribe of Ephraim, (M.) on the confines of the Philistines. C.

CHAP. VI. VER. 1. Again, after he had been anointed. David consulted his officers, &c. (1 Par. xiii. 1.) and called a numerous assembly of the priests and people to meet him at Cariathiarim.—Thousand, in arms, to protect the rest, (C.) who might probably amount to 300,000. H.—This number Capel and Grotius would substitute for the one here mentioned. Some copies of the Sept. read 70,000. In the former assembly, there were 340, or 359, (C.) or 60 thousand. C. v. 1. H.

VER. 2. Juda. But why are not the other tribes mentioned? and whither did they go? We should probably translate, "from the city of Baalim, in Juda;" which is another name of Cariathiarim, as the Par. intimate, v. 6. See Jos. xv. 9. 60.—Invoked; or which is called "the ark of the Lord."

VER. 3. Cart, out of respect, as the Philistines had done, 1 K. vi. 7. But God had ordered the Levites to carry it themselves, and the neglect here proved so dreadful; for which reason, David required the priests to attend when he removed the ark from the house of Obbedom, 1 Par. xv. 12.—Gabaa means "the hill of Cariathiarim," where the ark had been in the house of Abinadab, from the time of its being restored back by the Philistines. Ch.—Hunnius would multiply the places where the ark was fixed, to show, against Catholics, that the Church is not confined to one place; (Amama) as if Catholics did not maintain the universality of the Church! H.

VER. 5. Wood. Heb. specifies "fir wood," of which the instruments were, perhaps, usually made.

VER. 6. Nachon. 1 Par. Chidon. Heb. may be rendered, "prepared;" (Chal.) as they were almost arrived at the end (C.) of the procession.—His hand, is wanting in Heb. Kennicott.—Kicked. Prot. "shook it." H.

VER. 7. Rashness. Heb. shal, means also "error, ignorance," &c. Syr. and Arab. better, "because he put forth his hand." Ken.—Oza had touched the ark uncovered, (Serarius) shewing too little confidence in God, as if he could not have hindered it from falling; (Rabbins) or perhaps he was the adviser of the ark's being placed upon a cart, instead of the Levites' shoulders. T.—It is not certain that he was a Levite; and the privilege belonged to the sons of Caath, who could claim this honour only after the ark had been folded up with three covers. Moreover, the priests seem to have been always selected to carry the ark, as they came into the promised land, v. 3. 1 K. iv. 4. &c. It is hoped that the of Oza would be expiated by his sudden death, (C.) as his intention was 9 And David was afraid of the Lord that day, saying: How shall the ark of the Lord come to me?

10 And he would not have the ark of the Lord brought in to himself into the city of David: but he caused it to be carried into the house of Obbedom, the Gethite.

11 And the ark of the Lord abode in the house of Obbedom, the Gethite, three months: and the Lord blessed Obbedom, and all his household.

12 *And it was told king David, that the Lord had blessed Obbedom, and all that he had, because of the ark of God. So David went, and brought away the ark of God out of the house of Obbedom, into the city of David, with joy. And there were with David seven choirs, and calves for victims.

13 *And when they that carried the ark of the Lord had gone six paces, he sacrificed an ox and a ram:

14 And David danced with all his might before the Lord: and David was girded with a linen ephod.

15 And David and all the house of Israel brought the ark of the covenant of the Lord with joyful shouting, and with sound of trumpet.

16 And when the ark of the Lord was come into the city of David, Michol, the daughter of Saul, looking out through a window, saw king David leaping and dancing before the Lord: and she despised him in her heart.

17 And they brought the ark of the Lord, and set it in its place in the midst of the tabernacle, which David had pitched for it: and David offered holocausts, and peace-offerings before the Lord.

18 And when he had made an end of offering holocausts and peace-offerings, he blessed the people in the name of the Lord of hosts.

19 And he distributed to all the multitude of Israel, both men and women, to every one, a cake of bread, and a piece of roasted beef, and fine flour fried with oil: and all the people departed, every one to his house.

* 1 Par. xv. 25.—b 1 Par. xv. 26.

ble. T.—But God would teach his ministers with what caution they were to treat sacred things, (C.) and how exactly all his injunctions were to be observed. H.

VER. 10. Gethite, a native of Geth-remmon, a Levitical city; (Jos. xxi. 24.) or he might have been born at Geth; (C.) or his father might have resided there a long time, (Serar. T.) unless he was there with David. Salien.—He was a Levite, 1 Par. xv. 13. and xvi. 5. and xxvi. 4. C.

VER. 12. Choirs. Or companies of musicians. Ch.—This sentence is not found in Heb. nor in S. Jeron's version. C.—The Vat. and Alex. Sept. have, 'David brought the ark of the Lord from the house of Obbedara, into the city of David, with joy; (13) and there were seven choirs with him, taking up the ark, and the sacrifice, a calf and lamb; (14) and David played on tuneful organs before the Lord; and David had on a beautiful stole.' H.

VER. 13. Paces. So altars of turf (Grot.) were erected at this distance from each other, on each side of the road. The pagans have sometimes treated their emperors and deities with the like respect. Sueton. in Otho and Calig.—Paris thus addresses Helena in Ovid's Heroic Epistles.

*Ibis Dardaniæ ingens Regina per urbes,
Teque novam vulgus credet adesse Deam,
Quaque feres graecus, adolebunt cymnana flammæ,
Cæsare sanguineam victima planget humum.*

VER. 14. Ephod which ordinarily was the habit of priests. But no law restrained others from using it, (C.) particularly on sacred occasions; as we often see laics in a surplice, when they have to sing Church music, &c. M.—David had also on a cloak of byssus; (Paral.) and still Michol speaks as if he had been uncovered; because in this solemn ceremony, he was inspired to divest himself of his royal robes, and to act with a degree of enthusiasm; (H.) which would not have been otherwise becoming in a king. David is considered by some of the fathers as a figure of the priests of the new law; as he ate the loaves of proposition, was dressed like priests, &c. Sacerdos scitus erat David. 1 Iræn. iv. 8. Amb. v. in Luc. vi. C.

VER. 16. Leaping. Sept. "beating" musical instruments. . . she counted him as nothing, &c. H.—She rather partook of her father's disposition and pride. M.

VER. 18. Blessed. Wishing all sorts of happiness. Only priests and kings perform this function publicly, 3 K. viii. 55. Afterwards David went to his 20 And David returned to bless his own house: and Michol, the daughter of Saul, coming out to meet David, said: How glorious was the king of Israel to-day, who uncovered himself before the handmaids of his servants, and was undressed, as if one of the vain fellows should strip himself.

21 And David said to Michol: Before the Lord, who chose me rather than thy father, and than all his house, and commanded me to be ruler over the people of the Lord in Israel, 22 I will both play, and make myself meaner than I have done: and I will be little in my own eyes: and with the handmaids, of whom thou speakest, I shall appear more glorious.

23 Therefore Michol, the daughter of Saul, had no child to the day of her death.

CHAP. VII.

David's purpose to build a temple is rewarded with the promise of great blessings in his seed: His prayer and thanksgiving.

AND *it came to pass when the king sat in his house, and the Lord had given him rest, on every side, from all his enemies,

2 He said to Nathan, the prophet: "Dost thou see that I dwell in a house of cedar, and the ark of God is lodged within skins?"

3 And Nathan said to the king: Go, do all that is in thy heart: because the Lord is with thee.

4 But it came to pass that night, that the word of the Lord came to Nathan, saying:

5 Go, and say to my servant David: Thus saith the Lord: Shalt thou build me a house to dwell in?

6 Whereas I have not dwelt in a house from the day that I brought the children of Israel, out of the land of Egypt, even to this day: but have walked in a tabernacle, and in a tent.

7 In all the places that I have gone through with all the children of Israel, did I ever speak a word to any one of the tribes of Israel, whom I commanded to feed palace, to impart the same blessing to his family, and particularly to the women, who had not been present. This is a vestige of the sacerdotal power, which masters of families formerly enjoyed.

VER. 19. Cake, made very thin, with a mixture of oil.—Beef, sufficient for a meal.—Oil. This was much esteemed in those days. Many would translate the Heb. "a bottle of wine."

VER. 20. Fellows. Sept. "dancers." Michol exaggerates, as David had been guilty of no indiscretion, v. 14. C.—S. Gregory (Mor. xxvii. 27.) styles her "insane." Yet Abulensis does not sufficiently approve of David's conduct. M.

VER. 22. Eyes. Humility in a king is truly noble.—Glorious. He accepts the compliment of Michol, though she had spoken ironically. H.

VER. 23. Death. Thus was she punished. The five sons who are attributed to her (C. xxi. 8.) were only adopted; or perhaps we ought to read Merob, instead of Michol; (C.) as the latter had been connected with Phaltiel, and not with Adriel, who was the former's husband. H.

CHAP. VII. VER. 1. Enemies, before he had made war upon the surrounding nations. 1 Par. xviii. 1.

VER. 2. Nathan. An admirable courtier, (Grot.) and a great saint. Eccli. xlvii. He was neither too rough, nor too complaisant.—Cedar. This was the most esteemed species of wood. The palace of the Persian kings, at Ecbatana, was chiefly built of it, and of cypress wood. Polyb. x.—Houses were not there built in such a solid manner, as they are in colder climates. They consisted mostly of wood.—Skins. The outer veils of the tabernacle were made of skins, as others generally were. C.—Heb. and Chal. "of curtains."

VER. 3. Thee. David did not, perhaps, consult him as a prophet; and Nathan thought that the proposal was so just, that it might be safely carried into effect. The prophets are not inspired in all their actions. Joseph was of a different opinion from his father. Gen. xlviii. 19. Samuel supposed that Eliab should have been king; (1 K. xvi. 6.) and Eliseus confesses, that God had concealed from him the affliction of the woman with whom he lodged. 4 K. iv. 27. C.—God afterwards sent the same Nathan to rectify his former decision, that he might not pass sentence, in future, without consulting him. M.

VER. 7. Tribes. 1 Paral. xvii. 6, by the substitution of p for b, reads Shophete, "judges," which seems more natural. Some farther information is there given, my people Israel, saying: Why have you not built me a house of cedar?

8 And now thus shalt thou speak to my servant David: Thus saith the Lord of hosts: "I took thee out of the pastures from following the sheep, to be ruler over my people Israel:

9 And I have been with thee wheresoever thou hast walked, and have slain all thy enemies from before thy face: and I have made thee a great name, like unto the name of the great ones that are on the earth.

10 And I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and I will plant them, and they shall dwell therein, and shall be disturbed no more: neither shall the children of iniquity afflict them any more, as they did before, 11 From the day that I appointed judges over my people Israel: and I will give thee rest from all thy enemies. And the Lord foretelleth to thee, that the Lord will make thee a house.

12 ^b And when thy days shall be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom.

13 ^c He shall build a house to my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever.

14 ^d I will be to him a father, and he shall be to me a son: and if he commit any iniquity, I will correct him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men.

15 ^e But my mercy I will not take away from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I removed from before my face.

16 And thy house shall be faithful, and thy kingdom for ever before thy face, ^f and thy throne shall be firm for ever.

17 According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak to David.

18 And David went in, and sat before the Lord, and

^a 1 Kings xvi. 13. Ps. lxxvii. 70.—^b 3 Kings viii. 19.—^c 3 Kings v. 5.

and we learn that the reason why David was denied the privilege of building a temple, was because he had been so much engaged in war. C.

VER. 10. Before, provided they be faithful. These promises are conditional.

VER. 11. House, or give thee children, who shall hold the sceptre. M.

VER. 12. I will establish his kingdom. This prophecy partly relates to Solomon; but much more to Christ, who is called the Son of David in Scripture, and the builder of the true temple, which is the Church, his everlasting kingdom, which shall never fail, nor be cast off for any iniquity of her children. Ch.—God passes over all the children whom David had already, 3 K. ii. 15. The temporal kingdom was enjoyed by David's posterity for a long time, sufficient to verify the expression for ever, as it is often used in Scripture. C.—But the spiritual kingdom of the Messias will last till the end of time, and be perfected in eternity. H.—In these predictions we must always distinguish the type from the reality. C.

VER. 14. Men, who are not to be entirely destroyed, like the Chanaanites. C.—This is not unlike the human temptation of which St. Paul speaks, 1 Cor. x. 13. See Ps. lxxii. 5. and lxxxviii. 33. H.—The rod of men denotes war, and stripes signify those punishments which God inflicts. S. Jer. Trad.—Some parts of this declaration regard Christ; others Solomon. Heb. i. 5. D.

VER. 16. Faithful; or continue a long time. M. 3 K. xi. 38.—Where is now the house of David? or how is this accomplished, except in the Church?—Thy face. Sept. "before me," which is conformable to Ps. lxxxviii. 38. David saw Solomon on the throne, and beheld the Messias in spirit. C.—Souls departed still see what regards them, (Sa.) if they be happy. H.

VER. 18. Lord. "More in soul, than by this posture of the body, remaining quiet in meditation and prayer." Cajet.—Vatable says only kings were allowed to pray sitting, (Sa. M.) and they must be of the house of Juda. Maimon.—They say the priests always stood in the temple. But Josephus mentions seats of lead for them. Bel. vii. 11. The Heb. expression may denote no more, than that David continued for a long time in fervent prayer; Josephus says, prostrate on the ground before the ark. It is not so much the posture of the body as the fervour of the soul, which God regards. See S. Aug. ad Simp. ii. q. 4. Pythia said: Who am I, O Lord God, and what is my house, that thou hast brought me thus far?

19 But yet this hath seemed little in thy sight, O Lord God, unless thou didst also speak of the house of thy servant for a long time to come; for this is the law of Adam, O Lord God.

20 And what can David say more unto thee? for thou knowest thy servant, O Lord God.

21 For thy word's sake, and according to thy own heart, thou hast done all these great things, so that thou wouldst make it known to thy servant.

22 Therefore thou art magnified, O Lord God, because there is none like to thee, neither is there any God besides thee, in all the things that we have heard with our ears.

23 And what nation is there upon earth, as thy people Israel, whom God went to redeem for a people to himself, and to make him a name, and to do for them great and terrible things, upon the earth, before the face of thy people, whom thou redeemedst to thyself out of Egypt, from the nation and its god?

24 For thou hast confirmed to thyself thy people Israel, to be an everlasting people: and thou, O Lord God, art become their God.

25 And now, O Lord God, raise up for ever the word that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant, and concerning his house: and do as thou hast spoken, 26 That thy name may be magnified for ever, and it may be said: The Lord of hosts is God over Israel. And let the house of thy servant, David, be established before the Lord.

27 Because thou, O Lord of hosts, God of Israel, hast revealed to the ear of thy servant, saying: I will build thee a house: therefore hath thy servant found in his heart to pray this prayer to thee.

28 And now, O Lord God, thou art God, and thy words shall be true: for thou hast spoken to thy servant these good things.

^a 1 Par. xxii. 10, Heb. i. 5.—^b Psal. lxxxviii. 4. and 37.—^c Heb. i. 8.

goras ordered his disciples to pray sitting; and Homer represents Thetis in that attitude. C.—Far, in power and glory. H.

VER. 19. God. Thus man wishes to be treated. This maxim prevails universally. People seek for their own and their children's happiness; a favour which thou hast graciously promised unto me. C.—Thus immortality, and all happiness, were proposed unto the first man. M.—Some use an interrogation; "Is this the law of Adam?" C.—Prot. "manner of man." Can this felicity attend a man in his fallen state? Does the greatest friend treat his companion with so much condescension and regard? H.—In 1 Par. xvii. 17, it is thus expressed, and hast made me remarkable above all men, O Lord God. Osiander translates, "Behold the law of man, of the Lord God." I now discern the mysterious union of the godhead with our humanity, in the person of the Son. C.—Luther attributes this version, Hæc est ratio hominis, qui Dominus Deus est, to Ziegler; and hence proves the incarnation. Amama and Tarnovius shew the weakness of the proof, though the article of faith be otherwise indubitable. H.—David is full of admiration that God should treat a weak mortal in such a manner. D.

VER. 20. Unto thee. To express his sentiments of gratitude. M.—What more can he desire?

VER. 21. Word's sake. Some copies (H.) of the Sept. read "servant's sake," as 1 Par. xvii. C.

VER. 23. A name. So that all might praise God, for the favours which he had bestowed upon his people, (H.) and admire his power and glory.—Gods, whom thou didst cast out of Chanaan. Par. C.—From, is not expressed in the Vulg. or Heb. though Prot. also supply it. H.—Some explain Elohim, "gods," of the chief men of the Hebrew nation. The power of the idols was overthrown; (Num. xxiii. 4.) and the Israelites were rescued both from oppression, and from the service of false gods. Eze. xvi. C.—Adonai is often substituted for Jehova; as appears from 1 Par. xvii. 21. 22. Kennicott.

VER. 25. Raise up. As long as the promises were not fulfilled, they seemed to be dormant. M.

VER. 27. In his heart. Lit. "has found his heart," (H.) following the inspirations of divine grace, to pray with attention and love, (C.) and confidence. H

29 And now begin, and bless the house of thy servant, that it may endure for ever before thee: because thou, O Lord God, hast spoken it, and with thy blessing let the house of thy servant be blessed for ever.

CHAP. VIII.

David's victories, and his chief officers.

AND it came to pass after this, that David defeated the Philistines, and brought them down, and David took the bridle of tribute out of the hand of the Philistines.

2 And he defeated Moab, and measured them with a line, casting them down to the earth: and he measured with two lines, one to put to death, and one to save alive: and Moab was made to serve David under tribute.

3 David defeated also Adarezer, the son of Rohob, king of Soba, when he went to extend his dominion over the river Euphrates.

4 And David took from him a thousand and seven hundred horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen, and houghed all the chariot horses: and only reserved of them for one hundred chariots.

5 And the Syrians of Damascus came to succour Adarezer, the king of Soba: and David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

6 And David put garrisons in Syria of Damascus: and Syria served David under tribute: and the Lord preserved David in all his enterprizes, whithersoever he went.

* 1 Par. xviii. 1.—b A. M. 2960.—c 1 Par. xviii. 8.

VER. 29. Begin. Heb. "please, or deign to bless." Sept. and Jonathan, "begin." C. CHAP. VIII. VER. 1. Tribute. Aquila, and probably S. Jeron, translated, "cubit." Others suppose that Amna, or Meteg-ana, is some unknown place, which David wrested from the hands of the Philistines. It is hardly probable that the Israelites would have paid the latter tribute till the 20th year of his reign, (C.) or even till the 12th. Salien.—He might now force them to pay tribute. S. Jeron, &c. H.—Perhaps a letter may have been transposed, and instead of Meteg, we should read, "Geth, the mother," or metropolis, and its dependencies; (1 Par. xviii. 1.) or "he took Meteg, (Num. xxxiii. 28.) and its mother," Geth, which reconciles the two passages. Chal. &c. "he deprived them of the advantage of the rivulet." Sept. "David took the separated" place, (Serar.) or the city of Geth. M.

VER. 2. Earth, like criminals condemned to die. Theodoret.—Some of them he chose to spare, and made tributary, having levelled the strong places with the ground. Den. the Carthusian.—Sept. intimate that half were destroyed. C.—But the Heb. rather implies that the greatest part was saved, "a full cord to save alive;" (M.) unless there were three lots, and only one of them, larger indeed than the rest, spared. H.—Death, or slavery, were the portion of all who were taken in war. Grot. Jur. iii. 4. 20.—Lex nulla capto parciat aut penam impendit. Seneca.—Tribute. Heb. "brought gifts," which is a softer term. The Moabites were thus punished for former and, probably, for some recent offences. H.

VER. 3. Adarezer. He is styled Adadezer in Heb. and this seems to have been his true name, though it is written Adarezer in Paral. Adad, or "the sun," was the chief idol of Syria, and the kings inserted the name with their own; as Benadad did. Josephus produces a fragment from Nicolaus of Damascus, in which he says that "Adad was king of Damascus, and of all Syria, except Phoenicia, and was defeated by David. . . His successors took his name, as the kings of Egypt did that of Ptolemy; and that the third in descent from this king, made an attack upon Samaria," and upon Ahab. Ant. vii. 6.—Euphrates, which had been promised by God, Gen. xv. 18. Num. xxiv. 17. C.—Adadezer was probably the aggressor. Salien. M.

VER. 4. A thousand. Prot. supply chariots, (H.) after the Sept. and 1 Par. (xviii. 4.) which have 7000 horsemen. See how we have attempted to reconcile these texts, 1 K. xiii. 5. Perhaps the numbers were expressed by single letters; and the Heb. final n, (700) has been mistaken for z, (7000) both here and C. x. 18. Littere numeralibus non verbis antiquitus numeri concipiebantur. Scaliger, apud Walton prol.—"Will any other hypothesis so naturally solve this repeated difficulty?" Kennicott, Diss. on 1 Chron. xi. p. 96 and 463.—Kimchi thinks that the king's horse-guards are only specified here; and Salien supposes, that those who fought on chariots are also included in Chronicles, as they are often styled horsemen. Isai. xxi. 7. 9. M.—Houghed. Aquila, "destroyed." He rendered them unfit for war, as Josue had done, (Jos. xi. 6.) supposing that this was the import of the decree, forbidding many horses to be kept. Dent. xvii. 16.—Horses is not expressed in Heb. though the Prot. supply the word; as also, for. We should translate lit. "He left out of them 100 chariots;" (H.) as we read elsewhere, that Adarezer had 1000. M.—But this expression being unintelligible, so less than, "he houghed all the chariots," as the text stands at present in the 7 And David took the arms of gold, which the servants of Adarezer wore, and brought them to Jerusalem.

8 And out of Bete, and out of Beroth, cities of Adarezer, king David took an exceeding great quantity of brass.

9 And Thou, the king of Emath, heard that David had defeated all the forces of Adarezer.

10 And Thou sent Joram, his son, to king David, to salute him, and to congratulate with him, and to return him thanks; because he had fought against Adarezer, and had defeated him. For Thou was an enemy to Adarezer, and in his hand were vessels of gold, and vessels of silver, and vessels of brass.

11 And king David dedicated them to the Lord, together with the silver and gold that he had dedicated of all the nations which he had subdued:

12 Of Syria, and of Moab, and of the children of Ammon, and of the Philistines, and of Amalec, and of the spoils of Adarezer, the son of Rohob, king of Soba.

13 David also made himself a name, when he returned after taking Syria, in the valley of the salt-pits, killing eighteen thousand:

14 And he put guards in Edom, and placed there a garrison: and all Edom was made to serve David. and the Lord preserved David in all enterprizes he went about.

15 And David reigned over all Israel. and David did judgment and justice to all his people.

original, may lead us to suspect that this verse has been inaccurately printed. Sept. "David paralyzed, (or rendered useless) all the chariots; and 100 chariots were reserved for himself out of them." Josephus says the rest of the 1000 chariots were burnt, 5000 horse slain, and 20,000 foot. H.

VER. 5. Men. As Adarezer had brought upon himself the arms of David, perhaps by attempting to succour the Moabites, as he afterwards did the children of Ammon; (C. x.) so the king of Damascus was ruined by coming too late to his assistance. This king may be the Adad mentioned by Nicolaus. B. 4. Salien, A. 2993, the 14th year of David. See v. 1 and 8.

VER. 7. Arms. "Quivers." Paral. and Syr. "Bucklers." Heb. and Chal. "Bracelets." Sept. C.—These bucklers might be for ornament, like those of Solomon. 3 K. x. 16. Salien.—They were taken afterwards by Sesac, king of Egypt. Joseph. vii. 6. H.

VER. 8. Beroth, or Beroe. C.—Brass. All for the use of the temple. 1 Par. xviii. 8. The battle seems to have been fought near Beroth. Salien.

VER. 9. Emath, or Emesa. Its king, Thou, being alarmed at the ambition of his neighbour Adarezer, (C.) was pleased with the victories of a prince from whom he thought he had less to fear, as he lived at a greater distance. H.

VER. 10. Joram, called Adoram in Chron. C.—His Joram's hand. M.

VER. 11. Subdued. This was the custom of most conquerors. But no prince was ever more religious in this respect than David. He had an officer appointed over the sacred treasure, which contained the presents of Samuel, Saul, &c. 1 Par. xxvi. 26. 28.

VER. 13. Name, or triumphal arch. Rabbins.—He acquired great fame. C. vii. 9. 1 Mac. v. 57. M.—Syria, which is styled Aram in Heb. The Sept. have read Edom, or Idumea, as the two names have often been confounded, on account of the similarity of the letters. The following verse seems favourable to this reading, as well as the title of the Ps. lix.; and 1 Par. xviii. 12, says, Abisai . . slew of the Edomites, in the valley of the salt-pits, 18,000. It is probable that David was present. This Idumea was on the east of the Dead Sea, and had Bosra for its capital. The salt-pits might be a great plain, about three miles south of Palmyra or Thadmor, which supplies almost all Syria with salt. Brun. C.—Others think that the borders of the most salt lake of Sodom are denoted. M. See Gen. xiv. 10.

VER. 14. Guards, or officers to administer justice in his name, after Joab had killed all the males, during six months. 3 K. xi. 15. C.

VER. 15. All Israel, not only over Juda. M.—All the people who dwelt within the promised land, as far as the Euphrates, were forced to acknowledge his dominion. H.—People, settling their differences, &c. Kings formerly performed, in person, the most important office of rendering justice; whence three kings of Crete are mentioned as judges in the realms below. C.—David acted with wisdom and justice. M.

VER. 16. Sarvia, sister of David. 1 Par. ii. 16.—Army. Joab had acquired such influence over it, that his power was formidable even to David. He was a great warrior, and had contributed more than any other person to establish the throne of his uncle; 't he was devoid of justice, and not much unlike Achilles. Jura negat sibi nata, nihil non arrogat armis. Horace.

17 And Sadoc, the son of Achitob, and Achimelech, the son of Abiathar, were the priests: and Saraias was the scribe:

18 And Banaias, the son of Joiada, was over the Cerethi and Phelethi: and the sons of David were the princes.

CHAP. IX.

David's kindness to Miphiboseth for the sake of his father Jonathan.

AND David said: Is there any one, think you, left of the house of Saul, that I may shew kindness to him for Jonathan's sake?

2 Now there was of the house of Saul, a servant named Siba: and when the king had called him to him, he said to him: Art thou Siba? And he answered: I am Siba, thy servant.

3 And the king said: Is there any one left of the house of Saul, that I may shew the mercy of God unto him? And Siba said to the king: There is a son of Jonathan left, who is lame of his feet.

4 Where is he? said he. And Siba said to the king: Behold he is in the house of Machir, the son of Ammiel, in Lodabar.

5 Then king David sent, and brought him out of the house of Machir, the son of Ammiel, of Lodabar.

6 And when Miphiboseth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, was come to David, he fell on his face and worshipped. And David said: Miphiboseth? And he answered: Behold thy servant.

7 And David said to him: Fear not, for I will surely shew thee mercy for Jonathan thy father's sake, and I will restore the lands of Saul, thy father, and thou shalt eat bread at my table always.

8 He bowed down to him, and said: Who am I, thy servant, that thou shouldst look upon such a dead dog as I am?

9 Then the king called Siba, the servant of Saul, and said to him: All that belonged to Saul, and all his house, I have given to thy master's son.

10 Thou therefore, and thy sons, and thy servants, shall till the land for him: and thou shalt bring in food for thy master's son, that he may be maintained: and Miphiboseth, the son of thy master, shall always eat bread at my table. And Siba had fifteen sons and twenty servants.

11 And Siba said to the king: As thou, my lord the king, hast commanded thy servant, so will thy servant do: and Miphiboseth shall eat at my table, as one of the sons of the king.

12 And Miphiboseth had a young son, whose name was Micha: and all the kindred of the house of Siba served Miphiboseth.

13 But Miphiboseth dwelt in Jerusalem: because he ate always at the king's table: and he was lame of both feet.

CHAP. X.

The Ammonites shamefully abuse the ambassadors of David: they hire the Syrians to their assistance: but are overthrown with their allies.

AND it came to pass after this, that the king of the children of Ammon died, and Hanon, his son, reigned in his stead.

2 And David said: I will shew kindness to Hanon, the son of Naas, as his father showed kindness to me. So David sent his servants to comfort him for the death of his father. But when the servants of David were come into the land of the children of Ammon,

3 The princes of the children of Ammon said to Hanon, their lord: Thinkest thou that for the honour of thy father, David hath sent comforters to thee, and hath not David rather sent his servants to thee to search, and spy into the city, and overthrow it?

4 Wherefore Hanon took the servants of David, and

VER. 17. Achimelech is also called the father of Abiathur, as these two had both names indiscriminately. 1 K. xxi. 2. During the contest between the families of Saul and of David, two high priests were acknowledged, in their respective dominions. Sadoc was also permitted to officiate at Gabaon, during the reign of David; and, as Abiathar took part against Solomon, he was invested with the whole authority, and thus were accomplished the predictions made to Phinees and to Heli. Num. xxv. 12. 1 K. ii. 35. C.—Yet Salien considers Abiathar as the sole pontiff, from the time that his father was murdered by Saul. Sadoc, in the mean while, was his arch-priest or delegate, at Gabaon; (H.) though Abulensis and Josephus acknowledge both as high priests, (1 Par. xxiv. 3.) officiating by turns. M.—Scribe, or secretary. Ch. See Judg. v. 14.—Sept. "counsellor." He is called Susa, in Chronicles. H.

VER. 18. The Cerethi and Phelethi. The king's guards. Ch.—They were Philistines, and had attached themselves to David while he was at Geth, continuing always faithful to him. We read of them in the Vulgate, under the reign of Joas. 4 K. xi. 19. David selected some out of all Israel, towards the end of his reign. 1 Par. xxvii.—Princes: literally, priests; (Cohen) so called, by a title of honour, and not from exercising the priestly functions. Ch.—Sanctius translates, they "were like priests." The book of 1 Par. (xviii. 17.) explains, were chief about the king. Sept. "masters of the palace." CHAP. IX. VER. 1. Saul. David was solicitous only about the descendants of Jonathan, who was the eldest son. The rest he afterwards gave up to be crucified, while he ordered the patrimony of Saul to be given to Miphiboseth, who was now about twenty years old. Salien. A. C. 1058.—It is rather wonderful that David had not thought of his old friend sooner. But we are not obliged to suppose that he had reigned fifteen years, without being mindful of his repeated promises to Jonathan. 1 K. xx. 42. H.—This event took place towards the beginning of his reign. C.

VER. 2. Servant, or free man of Saul, and a convert. Josephus. M.—Yet he might very well be a Hebrew, who refused to accept of his liberty, and continued as superintendent over the rest in his master's house, (v. 10,) like Eleazar, Joseph (Gen. xxiv. and xxxix.) or the servant of whom our Saviour speaks. Luke xii. 42. C.

VER. 4. Lodabar, probably on the east side of the Jordan. C.—Machir was a powerful man of the tribe of Manasse. M.

VER. 7. Father, or grandfather. H.—It is thought that all his goods had been confiscated, in consequence of Isboseth's assuming the regal dignity. VER. 10. Servants under him, though all belonged to Miphiboseth. H.

VER. 11. My table, if the king shall please so to order. Sanchez.—It would seem that Siba did not properly understand the king. C.—The Sept. Syr. and Arab. read, perhaps more correctly u, "his," instead of i, "my table," in shulehani. "And Mephiboseth ate at David's table, as one," &c. H.—He did not merely eat of the king's table, (v. 13.) but at it, super mensam, as the Heb. Chal. and Sept. express. M.

VER. 13. Feet, from five years of age. C. iv. 4. If we add the seven years and a half of his uncle's reign, and suppose that David would take this notice of him, as soon as he had it in his power, after the taking of Jerusalem, we may conclude that he was about thirteen years old when he was presented to the king, and behaved with the most engaging modesty and respect. If he had already a son, (v. 12.) we may allow a few years more. H.

CHAP. X. VER. 2. Naas, whom Saul had defeated, and who on that account is supposed to have received his rival more willingly, (C.) when he had retreated into the country of Moab. 1 K. xxii. 3. After receiving many presents from Naas, he retired to Odollam. S Jer Tradit. M.—Though the Israelites were not to seek the friendship of these nations, (Deut. xxiii. 6,) they were not forbidden to make a return of gratitude. M.

VER. 3. It. Thus, by their insinuations they pervert the good dispositions of their prince, and by too much policy bring ruin on the nation. H.—History affords many examples of similar effects of worldly wisdom. M.

VER. 4. Away, having forced them as it were to go into mourning for the de shaved off the one half of their beards, and cut away half of their garments, even to the buttocks, and sent them away.

5 When this was told David, he sent to meet them: for the men were sadly put to confusion, and David commanded them, saying: Stay at Jericho, till your beards be grown, and then return.

6 And the children of Ammon seeing that they had done an injury to David, sent and hired the Syrians of Rohob, and the Syrians of Soba, twenty thousand footmen, and of the king of Maacha a thousand men, and of Istob twelve thousand men.

7 And when David heard this, he sent Joab, and the whole army of warriors.

8 And the children of Ammon came out, and set their men in array at the entering in of the gate: but the Syrians of Soba, and of Rohob, and of Istob, and of Maacha, were by themselves in the field.

9 Then Joab, seeing that the battle was prepared against him, both before and behind, chose of all the choice men of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians:

10 And the rest of the people he delivered to Abisai, his brother, who set them in array against the children of Ammon.

11 And Joab said: If the Syrians are too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon are too strong for thee, then I will help thee.

12 Be of good courage, and let us fight for our people, and for the city of our God: and the Lord will do what is good in his sight.

13 And Joab, and the people that were with him, began to fight against the Syrians: and they immediately fled before him.

14 And the children of Ammon seeing that the Syrians were fled, they fled also before Abisai, and entered into the city: and Joab returned from the children of Ammon, and came to Jerusalem.

15 Then the Syrians, seeing that they had fallen before Israel, gathered themselves together.

16 And Adarezer sent and fetched the Syrians, that were beyond the river, and brought over their army: and Sobach, the captain of the host of Adarezer, was their general.

17 And when this was told David, he gathered all Israel together, and passed over the Jordan, and came to Helam: and the Syrians set themselves in array against David, and fought against him.

18 And the Syrians fled before Israel, and David slew of the Syrians the men of seven hundred chariots, and forty thousand horsemen: and smote Sobach, the captain of the army: who presently died.

19 And all the kings that were auxiliaries of Adarezer, seeing themselves overcome by Israel, were afraid, and fled away, eight and fifty thousand men, before Israel. And they made peace with Israel, and served them: and the Syrians were afraid to help the children of Ammon any more.

CHAP. XI.

David falleth into the crime of adultery with Bethsabee: and not finding other means to conceal it, causeth her husband, Urias, to be slain: then marrieth her, and she beareth him a son.

AND ^b it came to pass at the return of the year, at the time when kings go forth to war, that David sent Joab, and his servants with him, and all Israel, and they ravaged the country of the children of Ammon, and besieged Rabba: but David remained in Jerusalem.

2 In the mean time it happened that David arose from his bed after noon, and walked upon the roof of the king's house: and he saw from the roof of his house, ceased king. These nations adopted the same customs as the Hebrews: they cut their hair, and rent their garments, to express their deep affliction. Isai. xv. 2. The Arabs would deem it a great insult, and a piece of irreligion, to shave their beard. Darvieux vii. p. 175. Plutarch (Agesil) observes, that the Lacedemonians obliged those who acted in a cowardly manner in war, to wear only one whisker: and Herodotus (ii. 121), takes notice of a person who, in contempt, cut off the beard on the right cheeks of some soldiers, who were placed to guard the body of his brother, who had been gibbeted, having first made them drunk, that he might take away the body. The garments (Aquila says, "the tunic," Sept. "the cloak, or mandua," which is a military garment used in Persia) were cut (C.) for the same purpose, like our apencers, (H.) that the ambassadors might be exposed to derision, as breeches were not usually worn, (C.) except by priests officiating. D.—This was in contempt of circumcision. M.—Yet we cannot suppose, but that the ambassadors would procure something to cover themselves before they arrived at Jericho, where they remained till their beard and the hair of their head (1 Par. xix.) were grown. The city was not rebuilt, but there were some houses in the territory of that devoted place. Jos. vi. 26. H.

VER. 6. Rohob, the capital, between Libanus and Antilibanus.—Soba was subject to Adarezer. C. viii. 8.—Maacha, at the foot of Hermon.—Istob (Heb. ish tob) signifies, the man, or prince, or "the master of Tob," (C.) where Jephthe lived. Judg. xi. 5. D. Salien.—Josephus thinks that Istob is the name of a fourth king, who, together with the king of Micha, brought 22,000 into the field. The first he styles king "of the Mesopotamians," (1 Par. xix. 6.) which Salien explains of the country between Abana and Pharphar, the two great rivers of Syria, (4 K. v. 12,) though, on this occasion, he allows that Adarezer hired forces from the utmost parts beyond the Euphrates. H.

VER. 7. Warriors. The outrage offered to the ambassadors was a sufficient reason. The king of Ammon might have refused to receive them; but he could not, with any propriety, treat them with scorn. "The right of ambassadors has both a divine and human sanction." Cicero, c. Verrem 3.—The Romans have frequently waged war to revenge such wrongs. Grot. Jur. ii. 18.

VER. 8. Ammon. David was disposed to have lived in peace with this nation: but they voluntarily provoke his arms, after he had made such havoc upon all the neighbouring idolaters, and thus draw down the scourge of Providence; who suffers those to be blinded whom he has resolved to punish. The preparations for this war seem to have been greater than usual, and it continued for a longer period, and in the end proved destructive to all. H.—Gate of Medaba. Paral. Besides the 32,000 auxiliaries (v. 6) and the natives, 32,000 chariots of war were hired from beyond the Euphrates. 1 Par. xix. 7.

VER. 12. City, Jerusalem, the metropolis; or, all the cities of Israel. Paral.

VER. 15. Together, expecting that David would punish them farther. M.

VER. 17. Helam. Ptolemy mentions Alamata, on the Euphrates. But perhaps we ought to read the Heb. Lehem, "he came upon them." See 1 Par. xix. 17. Some translate, "he came to their army."

VER. 18. Hundred. Paral. thousand, allowing ten men for each chariot. D. M.—The men is omitted in both texts. See C. viii. 4. H.—Horsemen. Paral. reads, footmen, supplying what is here omitted, (Salien) so that 87,000 Syrians perished, unless there be a mistake of the transcribers. C.—Smote, though not perhaps with his own hand, as he slew so many thousands by means of his army. M.

VER. 19. Before Israel. Heb. and Sept. only read, "And when all the kings, servants of Adarezer, saw that they were smitten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and served them," &c. H.—The addition is not found in the ancient version of S. Jerom. These tributary kings lived in Syria, and some perhaps beyond the Euphrates. See Ps. lix. C.—The army had consisted of 145,000 men. After the loss of 87,000, the servants of Adarezer went over to David, and served him. Paral. M.

CHAP. XI. VER. 1. Year. Heb. "at the end of the year," (Chal. Syr.) which may be explained either of the year after the preceding engagement, or at the end of the civil year, in the autumnal equinox, (C.) or of the sacred year, which begins in the spring, (H.) when kings more commonly go to battle, about the month of March. M.—In hot countries they make a campaign also in autumn.—Ammon. They had not been sufficiently chastised, as they had saved themselves within their strong cities. They had added to their other crimes, that of stirring up the Syrians against David. C.—Rabba, the capital of Ammon, which Polybius calls "Rabatamana." See C. v. 8. H.

VER. 2. Noon. He had been reposing, according to custom. C. iv. 7. C.—But the devil was not idle. He was meditating a temptation and crime, which involved a great part of the remainder of David's life in misery. H.—He had reigned 18 years, and lived 48, almost without blame. Salien, A. 2998.—House, as the Heb. explains it. The Vulg. might insinuate that the woman was upon "the roof of her house." But she was probably in her garden, as the Jews a woman washing herself, over-against him: and the woman was very beautiful.

3 And the king sent, and inquired who the woman was. And it was told him, that she was Bethsabee, the daughter of Eliam, the wife of Urias, the Hethite.

4 And David sent messengers, and took her, and she came in to him, and he slept with her: "and presently she was purified from her uncleanness:

5 And she returned to her house, having conceived. And she sent and told David, and said: I have conceived.

6 And David sent to Joab, saying: Send me Urias, the Hethite. And Joab sent Urias to David.

7 And Urias came to David. And David asked how Joab did, and the people, and how the war was carried on.

8 And David said to Urias: Go into thy house, and wash thy feet. And Urias went out from the king's house, and there went out after him a mess of meat from the king.

9 But Urias slept before the gate of the king's house, with the other servants of his lord, and went not down to his own house.

10 And it was told David by some that said: Urias went not to his house. And David said to Urias: Didst thou not come from thy journey? why didst thou not go down to thy house?

11 And Urias said to David: The ark of God, and Israel, and Juda dwell in tents, and my lord Joab, and the servants of my lord, abide upon the face of the earth: and shall I go into my house, to eat and to drink, and to sleep with my wife? by thy welfare, and by the welfare of thy soul, I will not do this thing!

12 Then David said to Urias: Tarry here to-day also, and to-morrow I will send thee away. Urias tarried in Jerusalem that day and the next.

13 And David called him to eat and to drink before him, and he made him drunk: and he went out in the evening, and slept on his couch, with the servants of his lord, and went not down into his house.

14 And when the morning was come, David wrote a letter to Joab: and sent it by the hand of Urias, 15 Writing in the letter: Set ye Urias in the front of the battle, where the fight is hottest: and leave ye him, that he may be wounded, and die.

16 Wherefore, as Joab was besieging the city, he put Urias in the place where he knew the bravest men were.

17 And the men coming out of the city, fought against Joab, and there fell some of the people of the servants of David, and Urias, the Hethite, was killed also.

18 Then Joab sent, and told David all things concerning the battle.

19 And he charged the messenger, saying: When thou hast told all the words of the battle to the king, 20 If thou see him to be angry, and he shall say: Why did you approach so near to the wall to fight? knew you not that many darts are thrown from above, off the wall?

21 Who killed Abimelech, the son of Jerobaal? ^b did not a woman cast a piece of a mill-stone upon him from the wall, and slew him in Thebes? Why did you go near the wall? Thou shalt say: Thy servant Urias, the Hethite, is also slain.

22 So the messenger departed, and came and told David all that Joab had commanded him.

23 And the messenger said to David: The men prevailed against us, and they came out to us into the field: and we vigorously charged and pursued them, even to the gate of the city.

24 And the archers shot their arrows at thy servants, from off the wall above: and some of the king's servants are slain, and thy servant Urias, the Hethite, is also dead.

25 And David said to the messenger: Thus shalt thou say to Joab: Let not this thing discourage thee, have their baths in the open air. They are frequently obliged to purify themselves. C.—The house must have been very near David's palace. Salien.

VER. 3. Eliam. By a transposition of letters, he is called Ammiel, in 1 Par. iii. 5. Both words signify "my people is God's." This son of Achitophel (C. xxiii. 34.) was one of David's valiant men, as well as Urias, who is styled the Hethite, being born at Eth; (S. Jer. Salien) or on account of his extraction, or because he or his ancestors (H.) had performed some great exploit against that nation; as Germanicus, Africanus, &c. received those titles among the Romans, for conquering the Germans, &c. C.—Eth was a place near Hebron. Adrie. 128. M.—The name of Bethsabee is also different in Paral.; the last b in Heb. being changed into v. Both-shua, both-al-i-am; instead of Both-shobâ, both-âm-i-al. H. Kennic.—The grandfather of Bethsabee is supposed to have revolted against David, to revenge the wrong done to her. T. A. Lapidé. "Let the weak tremble at the fall of the strong." S. Aug. in Ps. 1.

VER. 4. Purified. Lit. "sanctified." Heb. and Sept. "for she was," &c. H.—Hoc ideo additum ne miramur illic eam conceptisse. Grot. Arist. Anim. vii. 20.—Women were obliged to bathe after such actions. Lev. xv. 18.

VER. 8. Feet. As they did not wear stockings, this practice was very common after a journey. David thus insinuated that Urias might take his rest, and go to his wife, that so he might suppose that the child was his own, and the crime of Bethsabee might be concealed. C.—King, as a mark of honour, but in reality that he might be more excited to indulge his pleasures. Abulensis. M.

VER. 9. House, in the court, for the guards. See Athen. v. 2. &c.

VER. 10. Journey, of thirty hours' length. Adrichomius.

VER. 11. Ark. Most people suppose that the ark and the priests were before Rabba, as they seem to have been present in all expeditions of consequence. M. C.—But, at any rate, the ark was covered with skins or veils, even in the tabernacle at Gabaon, or at Sion. H.—Thing. He binds himself by an oath not to gratify his natural inclinations, that the king might desist from pressing him any farther. Salien.—But David resolves to endeavour to make him forget his oath, during the moments of intoxication. The valour and temperance of Urias, and divine Providence, render all his craft useless; and a concatenation of crimes cannot hide the original offence. H.

VER. 13. Couch. It seems he was one of the guards. Josephus says he was Joab's armour-bearer, (Ant. vii. 7.) and one of David's heroes. C. xxiii. 39.

VER. 14. Morning of the fourth day, as Urias staid three nights at Jerusalem. It is not clear that he was intoxicated the last of them. On that night David permitted him to act as he should think proper; and finding that he obstinately persisted in the resolution of not going to sleep with his wife, he had recourse to the last and most barbarous expedient of making way for his own marriage with the woman, as he saw this was the only method left for him to save her honour. The utmost expedition was requisite, as many days must have elapsed before she perceived her situation; (H.) and if many more should pass over, it would be manifest to the world that she had been guilty of adultery, and must either be stoned, or, if David spared her, he must bear the blame. Salien.—Urias. The fable of Bellerophon being sent by Proetus to Jobates, king of Syria, with a letter, desiring the king to put the bearer to death, seems to have been copied from this history. Their letters have become proverbial. Chry.

Aha Bellerophontem jam tuus me fecit filius, Egomet tabellas detuli ut vincirer.—Plaut. Bacchide.

VER. 15. Die. We no longer behold the genius of that David who would not hurt his persecutor. What a change does a shameful passion introduce in the whole conduct of a man! and how does one false step conduct from one abyss to another! Proprium humani ingenii est odisse quem laeseris. Tacit.—David could no longer bear the sight of a man whom he had injured so grievously. C.

VER. 17. Also. Hence David prays with reason; Deliver me from blood (sanguinibus) of many slain. He was answerable for all. Cajetan.

VER. 21. Jerobaal? Hebrews write Jeroboseth, to avoid the mention of Baal, as they also do with respect to the name of Isboseth, who was probably called Isbaal. C. See Judg. ix. 57.—Joab supposed that David might probably adduce this instance, to shew the danger of approaching too near the wall, as it had proved destructive to part of his army, and had been fatal to Abimelech. But it seems the messenger did not allow him time to express any resentment, before he told him the agreeable news, which he desired so much to hear, v. 24. H.

for various is the event of war: and sometimes one, sometimes another, is consumed by the sword: encourage thy warriors against the city, and exhort them, that thou mayst overthrow it.

26 And the wife of Urias heard that Urias, her husband, was dead, and she mourned for him.

27 And the mourning being over, David sent and brought her into his house, and she became his wife, and she bore him a son: and this thing which David had done, was displeasing to the Lord.

CHAP. XII.

Nathan's parable. David confesseth his sin, and is forgiven: yet so as to be sentenced to most severe temporal punishments. The death of the child. The birth of Solomon. The taking of Rabbath.

AND *the Lord sent Nathan to David: and when he was come to him, he said unto him: There were two men in one city, the one rich, and the other poor.

2 The rich man had exceeding many sheep, and oxen.

3 But the poor man had nothing at all but one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought and nourished up, and which had grown up in his house, together with his children, eating of his bread, and drinking of his cup, and sleeping in his bosom: and it was unto him as a daughter.

4 And when a certain stranger was come to the rich man, he spared to take of his own sheep and oxen, to make a feast for that stranger, who was come to him; but took the poor man's ewe, and dressed it for the man that was come to him.

VER. 26. For him. We may apply to her tears those words of Lucan:

Lachrymas non sponte cadentes Effudit, gemitusque expressit pectore lato.

"None affected more sorrow for the death of Germanicus, than those who rejoiced the most at that event." Tacit. An. ii.—The mourning for the dead usually lasted seven days; (Eccli. xxii.) and after that period, David seems to have married Bethsabee. Abulen. q. 21.

VER. 27. Lord; not that David had married the woman, but on account of his former conduct towards her and her husband. M.—The canon law forbids the marriages of those who have been accomplices in the death of their former partner; and some have thought that this marriage of David was null. But this is inaccurate; and the fruits of it were (C.) all deemed legitimate. See 1 Par. iii.

5. H.—The Rabbins even pretend that David was guilty of no sin in marrying Bethsabee during the life-time of Urias; as the latter, they say, must have given her a bill of divorce when he went to war. Grotius.—But why should we excuse an action which was so severely condemned and punished by God? C. xii. 1. &c. Ps. l. C.—In David's conduct, we here behold a complication of the basest passions of lust and cruelty; which make David neglect the sanctity of an oath, (v. 11) and attempt to ruin, by drunkenness, the soul of one to whom he was much indebted; and, afterwards, to expose him to an untimely death, perhaps without repentance; if indeed Urias exceeded the bounds of moderation. This however is not certain; as the word drunk is often used to denote a degree of blameless conviviality. Gen. xliii. 34. Yet the design of David was equally criminal. How soon may the man according to God's own heart, fall from his elevated station into the depth of the abyss! Wherefore let him that thinketh himself to stand, take heed lest he fall. 1 Cor. x. 12. H.

CHAP. XII. VER. 1. Unto him, after the birth of the child. A whole year had nearly elapsed, and David continued blind and impenitent. The spirit of prophecy had left him; and, though he was clear-sighted, and equitable enough to punish the faults of others, he could not discern his own picture, till Nathan had removed the veil. The prophet acted with the utmost prudence, and did not condemn the king till he had pronounced sentence on himself. It is commonly supposed that the interview was private. But S. Chrysostom believes that the chief lords of the court were present; which would enhance the discretion of Nathan, as well as David's humility. C.

VER. 2. Daughter. All these expressions tended to shew the affection of the owner for this pet lamb. H.—In Arabia, one of the finest is commonly fed in the house along with the children. Bochart, Anim. T. i. B. ii. 46.—It is not necessary that every word of this parable should have been verified in Bethsabee. C.—Many things are usually added for ornament. M.—Yet she had been treated in the most tender manner by her husband, who had her alone, while David had nineteen wives. H.

VER. 4. To him. This wanton cruelty caused David to pronounce him de-against that man, he said to Nathan: As the Lord liveth, the man that hath done this is a child of death.

6 *He shall restore the ewe four-fold, because he did this thing, and had no pity.

7 And Nathan said to David: Thou art the man. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel: I anointed thee king over Israel, and I delivered thee from the hand of Saul,

8 And gave thee thy master's house, and thy master's wives into thy bosom, and gave thee the house of Israel and Juda: and if these things be little, I shall add far greater things unto thee.

9 Why therefore hast thou despised the word of the Lord, to do evil in my sight? Thou hast killed Urias, the Hethite, with the sword, and hast taken his wife to be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon.

10 Therefore, the sword shall never depart from thy house, because thou hast despised me, and hast taken the wife of Urias, the Hethite, to be thy wife.

11 Thus saith the Lord: Behold, I will raise up evil against thee out of thy own house, and I will take thy wives before thy eyes, *and give them to thy neighbour, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun.

12 For thou didst it secretly: but I will do this thing in the sight of all Israel, and in the sight of the sun.

13 And David said to Nathan: I have sinned against the Lord. And Nathan said to David: "The Lord also hath taken away thy sin: thou shalt not die.

serving of death; as simple theft was punished with only a four-fold restitution. Ex. xxii. 1. Judges sometimes diminish, and at other times increase, the severity of the law, according to the dispositions of the offenders, which lawgivers could not exactly foresee. C.

VER. 6. Fold. Sept. "seven-fold," which Grabe corrects by the Heb. H.—David lost four of his sons; the first born of Bethsabee, Amnon, Absalom, and Adonias: and saw his daughter Thamar, (C.) and his ten inferior wives, dishonoured, in punishment of his crime. M.

"I will moreover give thee like unto these;" a continuation of prosperity. H.—This singular love, which God was still disposed to manifest unto David, touched his heart with peculiar force. Salien.

VER. 10. House. What a dismal scene opens itself to our view during the remaining part of David's reign! H.—Scarcely one of his successors was free from war; even Solomon was disturbed by the rebellion of Jeroboam, &c. and many of David's family and descendants came to an untimely end, v. 6. C.—Six sons of Josaphat, all Joram's, except one, Josias, the children of Sedecias, &c. 4 K. xxv. &c. W.

VER. 11. I will raise, &c. All these evils, inasmuch as they were punishments, came upon David by a just judgment of God, for his sin; and therefore God says, I will raise, &c. But inasmuch as they were sins, on the part of Absalom and his associates, God was not the author of them, but only permitted them. Ch.—God permitted the wicked prince to succeed for some time, that he might punish David. C.—Neighbour, most dearly beloved. To be treated ill by such a one, is doubly severe. Ps. liv. 15. M.

VER. 12. Sun, publicly. C. xvi. 22. How abominable soever this conduct of an unnatural son must have been to God, he says, I will do this; because, when he might have prevented it by a more powerful grace, or by the death of the delinquent, he suffered him to carry his infernal project into execution. H.

VER. 13. Sinned. His confession was sincere, and very different from that of Saul, 1 K. xv. 24. "The expression was the same; but God saw the difference of the heart." S. Aug. con. Faust. xxii. 27.—Sin. He has remitted the fault and the eternal punishment, and he has greatly diminished the temporal chastisement, and will not inflict instant death, as he seemed to have threatened, v. 10. C.—"The speedy remission shewed the greatness of the king's repentance." S. Amb. Apol. 2.

VER. 14. Occasion. Lit. "made" almost, in the same sense as God threatened to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, for this thing, the child that is born to thee, shall surely die.

15 And Nathan returned to his house. The Lord also struck the child which the wife of Urias had borne to David, and his life was despaired of.

16 And David besought the Lord for the child: and David kept a fast, and going in by himself, lay upon the ground.

17 And the ancients of his house came to make him rise from the ground: but he would not, neither did he eat meat with them.

18 And it came to pass on the seventh day that the child died: and the servants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead. For they said: Behold, when the child was yet alive, we spoke to him, and he would not hearken to our voice: how much more will he afflict himself, if we tell him that the child is dead?

19 But when David saw his servants whispering, he understood that the child was dead: and he said to his servants: Is the child dead? They answered him: He is dead.

20 Then David arose from the ground, and washed and anointed himself: and when he had changed his apparel, he went into the house of the Lord, and worshipped; and then he came into his own house, and he called for bread, and ate.

21 And his servants said to him: What thing is this that thou hast done? thou didst fast and weep for the child, while it was alive: but after the child was dead, thou didst rise up and eat bread.

22 And he said: While the child was yet alive, I fasted and wept for him: for I said: Who knoweth whether the Lord may not give him to me, and the child may live?

23 But now that he is dead, why should I fast? Shall I be able to bring him back any more? I shall go to him rather: but he shall not return to me.

to do, what was effected by Absalom, v. 12. David did not co-operate with the malice of infidels; but he was responsible for it: in as much as he had committed an unlawful action, which gave them occasion to blaspheme God, as if he had not been able to foresee this scandalous transaction. Thus God and religion are often vilified, on account of the misconduct of those who have the happiness to be well informed, but do not live up to their profession: but this mode of argumentation is very fallacious and uncandid. It ought, however, to be a caution to the servants of the true God, never to do any thing which may have such fatal consequences; and alienate the minds of weak men from the truth.—Die. Thus infidels would see, that God did not suffer David to pass quite unpunished. VER. 23. To me. No instance of any one being raised from the dead had yet occurred; though David did not disbelieve its possibility. M.

VER. 24. Wife. She had partaken in his affliction and repentance. The Jews say that David told her the divine oracle, which is mentioned 3 K. i. 13. 17, that her next son should succeed to the throne. Salien (A. 3000) supposes that he was conceived in May, two months after the death of Bethsabee's first-born, and came into the world about the time of the Passover.—Solomon, "the pacific." See 1 Par. xxii. 9. M.

VER. 25. Amiable to the Lord. Or beloved of the Lord. In Hebrew, Yedideya. Ch.—Loved him, is not expressed in Heb., "because of the Lord." H.—Theodotion, "in the word, or agreeably to, the order of the Lord." Solomon never went by the name which God here gives him, (C.) except in this place. VER. 27 The city of waters. Rabbath, the royal city of the Ammonites, was called the city of waters, from being encompassed with waters. Ch. See C. v. 8. —The Heb. in the preceding verse seems to insinuate, (H.) that "he had taken the royal city." But he was only on the point of doing it, or had, perhaps, made himself master of some part of it. Here the Heb. "I have taken," may be 24 And David comforted Bethsabee, his wife, and went in unto her, and slept with her: *and she bore a son, and he called his name Solomon, and the Lord loved him.

25 And he sent, by the hand of Nathan, the prophet, and called his name Amiable to the Lord, because the Lord loved him.

26 *And Joab fought against Rabbath, of the children of Ammon, and laid close siege to the royal city.

27 And Joab sent messengers to David, saying: I have fought against Rabbath, and the city of waters is about to be taken.

28 Now, therefore, gather thou the rest of the people together, and besiege the city and take it: lest, when the city shall be wasted by me, the victory be ascribed to my name.

29 Then David gathered all the people together, and went out against Rabbath: and after fighting, he took it.

30 And he took the crown of their king from his head, the weight of which was a talent of gold, set with most precious stones; and it was put upon David's head, and the spoils of the city, which were very great, he carried away.

31 And bringing forth the people thereof, he sawed them, and drove over them chariots armed with iron: and divided them with knives, and made them pass through brick-kilns: so did he to all the cities of the children of Ammon. And David returned with all the army to Jerusalem.

Amnon ravisheth Thamar. For which Absalom killeth him, and flieth to Gessur

VER. 28. Take it. The higher, and more impregnable part; which honour Joab reserved for David.

VER. 30. King. Heb. Malcam, "their king." Moloc, "king," or the chief idol of the Ammonites. It was forbidden to use the ornaments of the idols of Chanaan, but not of other nations. This crown might be worth a talent, on account of the gold and precious stones; (1 Par. xx. 2. Sanchez Bochart,) or it might weigh so much as almost 87 pounds, (C.) or above 113 pounds English. H.—Such immense crowns were sometimes suspended for ornament, over the throne, as Benjamin of Tudela says was done by the emperor Commenes. Pliny describes one of nine pounds; and Athenæus (v. 8,) another of 80 cubits, or 40 yards (H.) in circumference. C.—The idol, or the king of Ammon, (M.) might have one of the like nature, suspended. The Rabbins say David caused it to hang in the air by means of a load-stone; as if it would attract gold! C.

VER. 31. Sawed. Heb. "he put them under saws, and under rollers of iron, and under knives," &c. H.—The Jews say that Isaias was killed by being sawed asunder; to which punishment S. Paul alludes. Heb. xi. 37. M.—Brick-kilns, or furnaces. Pa. xx. 10. Muis.—Daniel and his companions were thrown into the fiery furnace. Dan. iii. 6. 11. Est. xiii. 7. C.—Some condemn David of excessive cruelty on this occasion. T. Sanctius.—But the Scripture represents his conduct as irreproachable, except in the affair of Urias; (3 K. xv. 5,) and at this distance of time, we know not the motives which might have actuated him to treat his enemy with such severity. The Ammonites had probably exercised similar cruelties on his subjects. See 1 K. xi. 2. Amos i. 13. C.—They had shamefully violated the law of nations, and had stirred up various kings against David. M.—Salien blames Joab for what may seem too cruel. But, though he was barbarous and vindictive, we need not condemn him on this occasion, no more than his master; as we are not to judge of former times by our own manners. H.—War was then carried on with great cruelty. C.

CHAP. XIII. VER. 1. Thamar was born of Maacha, as well as Absalom.

VER. 2 Her. He had seen her on some solemn occasion, when virgins were fell sick for the love of her: for as she was a virgin, he thought it hard to do any thing dishonestly with her.

3 Now Amnon had a friend, named Jonadab, the son of Semmaa, the brother of David, a very wise man:

4 And he said to him: Why dost thou grow so lean from day to day, O son of the king? why dost thou not tell me the reason of it? And Amnon said to him: I am in love with Tamar, the sister of my brother Absalom.

5 And Jonadab said to him: Lie down upon thy bed, and feign thyself sick: and when thy father shall come to visit thee, say to him: Let my sister Tamar, I pray thee, come to me, to give me to eat, and to make me a mess, that I may eat it at her hand.

6 So Amnon lay down, and made as if he were sick: and when the king came to visit him, Amnon said to the king: I pray thee, let my sister Tamar come, and make in my sight two little messes, that I may eat at her hand.

7 Then David sent home to Tamar, saying: Come to the house of thy brother Amnon, and make him a mess.

8 And Tamar came to the house of Amnon, her brother: but he was laid down: and she took meal and tempered it: and dissolving it in his sight, she made little messes.

9 And taking what she had boiled, she poured it out, and set it before him, but he would not eat: and Amnon said: Put out all persons from me. And when they had put all persons out, 10 Amnon said to Tamar: Bring the mess into the chamber, that I may eat at thy hand. And Tamar took the little messes which she had made, and brought them into her brother Amnon, in the chamber.

11 And when she presented him the meat, he took hold of her, and said: Come, lie with me, my sister.

12 She answered him: Do not so, my brother, do not force me: for no such thing must be done in Israel. Do not thou this folly.

13 For I shall not be able to bear my shame, and thou shalt be as one of the fools in Israel: but rather speak to the king, and he will not deny me to thee.

14 But he would not hearken to her prayers, but being stronger, overpowered her, and lay with her.

15 Then Amnon hated her with an exceeding great hatred: so that the hatred, wherewith he hated her, was greater than the love with which he had loved her before. And Amnon said to her: Arise, and get thee gone.

16 She answered him: This evil, which now thou dost against me, in driving me away, is greater than that which thou didst before. And he would not hearken to her.

17 But calling the servant that ministered to him he said: Thrust this woman out from me: and shut the door after her.

18 And she was clothed with a long robe: for the king's daughters, that were virgins, used such kind of garments. Then his servant thrust her out; and shut the door after her.

19 And she put ashes on her head, and rent her long robe, and laid her hands upon her head, and went on crying.

20 And Absalom, her brother, said to her: Hath thy brother Amnon lain with thee? but now, sister, hold thy peace, he is thy brother: and afflict not thy heart for this thing. So Tamar remained pining away in the house of Absalom her brother.

21 And when king David heard of these things he was exceedingly grieved: and he would not afflict the spirit of his son Amnon, for he loved him, because he was his first-born.

22 But Absalom spoke not to Amnon, neither good nor evil: for Absalom hated Amnon, because he had ravished his sister Tamar.

23 And it came to pass, after two years, *that the allowed to go out, well attended. At other times they were so strictly guarded, that Amnon thought it almost impossible to gratify his passion, (C.) which made him grow pale. He afterwards feigned himself to be more sickly than he really was, v. 6. H.

VER. 3. A very wise man. That is, a crafty and subtle man: for the counsel he gave on this occasion shews that his wisdom was but carnal and worldly. Ch.—Jonadab seems to be styled Jonathan, C. xxi. 21. C.

VER. 9. Out. This conveys the idea of something liquid. C.—It was a thin wafer, (H.) or cake, of which there were different sorts.

VER. 10. Chamber. Heb. Chadera, "bed-place," (Cant. i. 4.) where Amnon was lying. C.

VER. 12. Folly, or impiety, so directly contrary to the law. Levit. xviii. 6. and 9. and 11. H.

VER. 13. Thee. Was she ignorant that such marriages could not be allowed? C.—Some think she was. Grot. M.—Others believe that, in her present situation, she said what first came into her head, to get out of the hands of her brother. The Rabbins pretend that she was conceived before David married her mother, and that the latter was a pagan; so that they suppose there was no relationship between Tamar and Amnon. But this is all asserted without proof. C.

VER. 15. Before. Such changes are not unfrequent in those who give way to disorderly passions, as Aristotle (prob. iv.) proves. Semiramis slew her lovers, and among the rest her own son. T.—God caused Amnon to be stung with remorse, and the evil spirit pushed him on to extremities, which filled the palace with scandal and bloodshed. M.

VER. 16. Greater, as being more public; (T.) and all would think her guilty of some horrible misdemeanor. H.—It made the divulging of the crime in some degree necessary. M.—Unhappy woman! why did she not cry out, at least, before the perpetration of the act, as the law directed? Deut. xxii. 24. Salien, A. 3000.

VER. 18. Robe. Heb. passim; long and variegated, like Joseph's. Gen. xxxvii. 3. The Sept. call it, καρπυριος, to insinuate that it was "adorned with fruits," &c. H.

VER. 19. Head, as if to hide her face. Eze. xxvii. 30. Jer. ii. 37. So Mezentius: "Cautiem immundo deformat pulvere et ambas Ad Cœlum tendit palmas."—Virgil, Æneid x. See Iliad 2. C.—Crying, that no one might think she had consented. M.—She probably went directly to her brother's house, and related the affair to him; or he met her in this condition. Salien.

VER. 20. Brother. His disgrace will fall upon the whole royal family, and the king will not bring him to punishment, like another. C.—Away. Heb. and Chal. "desolate." M.—Sept. "like a widow."

VER. 21. And he, &c. This is not in Heb. &c. nor in S. Jerom's version. Josephus and some copies of the Sept. read it. But the reason here alleged would not suffice to excuse David. C.—He might think that, as he had shewn such a bad example himself, he could not with a good grace punish others. Sanctius.—This however was requisite, as long as he was king. Whatever faults he might have fallen into, he was not on that account to suffer crimes to remain unpunished; (H.) and it is supposed that he testified his resentment to Amnon; (Salien, &c.) though the Scripture be silent thereon. H.—Abulensis condemns him for too great remissness. M.

VER. 23. Two. Heb. "full years." He waited so long, that he might put his murderous designs in execution with less suspicion. H.—Sheep It was esteemed the best husbandry, "to have fine flocks:" bonè pascere: (Cato) even for the nobility.—Ephraim, or Ephrem; (Jo. ii. 54.) probably near Bethel. Joseph. Bel. v. 33. C.—Nabal had made a feast on a similar occasion. 1 K. xxv Ab (397) sheep of Absalom were shorn in Baalhasor, which is near Ephraim: and Absalom invited all the king's sons:

24 And he came to the king, and said to him: Behold thy servant's sheep are shorn: Let the king, I pray, with his servants, come to his servant.

25 And the king said to Absalom: Nay, my son, do not ask that we should all come, and be chargeable to thee. And when he pressed him, and he would not go, he blessed him.

26 And Absalom said: If thou wilt not come, at least let my brother, Amnon, I beseech thee, come with us. And the king said to him: It is not necessary that he should go with thee.

27 But Absalom pressed him, so that he let Amnon and all the king's sons go with him. And Absalom made a feast, as it were the feast of a king.

28 And Absalom had commanded his servants, saying: Take notice when Amnon shall be drunk with wine, and when I shall say to you: Strike him, and kill him; fear not: for it is I that command you: take courage, and be valiant men.

29 And the servants of Absalom did to Amnon, as Absalom had commanded them. And all the king's sons arose, and got up every man upon his mule, and fled.

30 And while they were yet in the way, a rumour came to David, saying: Absalom hath slain all the king's sons, and there is not one of them left.

31 Then the king rose up, and rent his garments, and fell upon the ground: and all his servants, that stood about him, rent their garments.

32 But Jonadab, the son of Semmaa, David's brother, answering, said: Let not my lord the king think, that all the king's sons are slain: Amnon only is dead, for he was appointed by the mouth of Absalom from the day that he ravished his sister, Tamar.

33 Now, therefore, let not my lord the king take this thing into his heart, saying: All the king's sons are slain: for Amnon only is dead.

34 But Absalom fled away: and the young man that kept the watch, lifted up his eyes and looked: and behold there came much people by a bye-way on the side of the mountain.

35 And Jonadab said to the king: Behold the king's sons are come: as thy servant said, so it is.

36 And when he had made an end of speaking, the king's sons also appeared: and, coming in, they lifted up their voice, and wept: and the king also, and all his servants, wept very much.

37 But Absalom fled, and went to Tholomai, the son of Ammiud, the king of Gessur. And David mourned for his son every day.

38 And Absalom, after he was fled, and come into Gessur, was there three years. And king David ceased to pursue after Absalom, because he was comforted concerning the death of Amnon.

CHAP. XIV.

Joab procureth Absalom's return, and his admittance to the king's presence.

AND *Joab, the son of Sarvia, understanding that the king's heart was turned to Absalom,

2 Sent to Thecua, and fetched from thence a wise woman: and said to her: Feign thyself to be a mourner, and put on mourning apparel, and be not anointed with oil, that thou mayst be as a woman that had a long time been mourning for one dead.

3 And thou shalt go in to the king, and shalt speak to him in this manner. And Joab put the words in her mouth.

4 And when the woman of Thecua was come in to the king, she fell before him upon the ground, and worshipped, and said: Save me, O king.

5 And the king said to her: What is the matter with thee? She answered: Alas, I am a widow woman: for my husband is dead.

6 And thy handmaid had two sons: and they quarrelled with each other in the field, and there was none to part them: and the one struck the other, and slew him.

7 And behold the whole kindred rising against thy handmaid, saith: Deliver him that hath slain his brother, that we may kill him for the life of his brother, whom he slew, and that we may destroy the heir: and they seek to quench my spark which is left, and will leave my husband no name; nor remainder upon the earth.

8 And the king said to the woman: Go to thy house, and I will give charge concerning thee.

9 And the woman of Thecua said to the king: Upon salom invites his father to avoid suspicion; (M.) though he would be glad at his refusing to come, unless perhaps he would not have hesitated to order his brother to be murdered in his very presence, in order to punish both. H.

VER. 25. Blessed him, wishing him joy. Absalom kept a separate establishment, and had many children. C. xiv. 27. M.

VER. 26. Amnon. He mentions him as the eldest, and that David might suppose that they were perfectly reconciled. C.—The unhappy father seems for a long time to have expressed a reluctance and foreboding. H.

VER. 28. It is I: the blame will fall on me; I will rescue all from danger. These servants were probably infidels, of Gessur, and fled with their master. M.

VER. 29. Mule. This is the first time we find these animals used to ride on. The judges had fair asses. These mules were not the offspring of horses and asses. They bear young in Syria, (Aristot. anim. vi. 24.) and are little inferior to horses in size, though they are shaped like our mules. Ibid. c. xxxvi.

VER. 30. Left. Fame often magnifies. M.—Crescit eundo. H.

VER. 32. Mouth. Chal. Syr. "heart." Aquila, "because Absalom was in wrath against him." He had resolved upon his destruction. C.—Perhaps he had expressed his intention to some of the court; and this Jonadab (by whose means the crime had been committed, v. 5) had heard of it. H.

VER. 34. Mountain. Olivet. C.—They had not kept the high road through fear of Absalom; (Abul.) who, on his part, fled out of the country, as no city of refuge was able to protect wilful murderers. H.

VER. 37. Tholomai, or Tholmai, (H. C. iii. 3.) his maternal grandfather. C.

VER. 38. Ceased. We do not read that he had pursued Absalom before. C.—Now he laid aside all thoughts of punishing him, as he began even to desire to see him again, when he reflected that Amnon had deserved death. H.—Heb. also, "he burnt with a secret desire to receive Absalom." C. xiv. 1. Jonathan. Vatab. &c. C.—Prot. "the soul of king David longed to go forth unto," &c. H.

CHAP. XIV. VER. 2. Thecua, twelve miles south of Jerusalem. S. Jer.—Joab causes this unknown woman to come from the country to conceal his design, (C.) hoping that Absalom would be his father's successor. M.

VER. 4. Save me. So the Jews frequently repeated Hosanna; and David addressed God, Save us. 1 Par. xvi. 35. T.

VER. 5. Dead. Some conclude from v. 16, that this is a true history; but it appears rather, that it was only a parable, (v. 19. C.) invented by Joab. M.

VER. 7. Heir. She expresses their sentiments more than their words. C.—Some of the relations might desire to obtain the inheritance. M. See Num. xxxv. 18.—Spark. Posterity is often denoted by a lamp. C. xxi. 17. Heb. and Sept. "my coal," reserved to enkindle my fire, (C.) or to perpetuate our name in Israel, (H.) or that of his father to whose title the son succeeded. The mother could claim no inheritance. M.

VER. 9. Guiltless, if the murderer be not brought to execution. I am willing to bear all the blame and punishment. C.—Abigail and Rebecca speak in the same manner. 1 K. xxv. 24. Gen. xxvii. 13. T.—Though kings may not pardon as they please, yet in this instance David might protect the widow's son, as there was no witness to prove that he had committed the murder. M.—The woman was not satisfied with the former promise. She wished to extort something more decisive. She intimates that the danger is pressing, and if any misfortune should arrive, she cannot impute it to the king, (C.) which gives him occasion to encourage her the more. H.

me, my lord, be the iniquity, and upon the house of my father: but may the king and his throne be guiltless.

10 And the king said: If any one shall say ought against thee, bring him to me, and he shall not touch thee any more.

11 And she said: Let the king remember the Lord his God, that the next of kin be not multiplied to take revenge, and that they may not kill my son. And he said: As the Lord liveth, there shall not one hair of thy son fall to the earth.

12 Then the woman said: Let thy handmaid speak one word to my lord the king. And he said: Speak.

13 And the woman said: Why hast thou thought such a thing against the people of God? and why hath the king spoken this word, to sin, and not bring home again his own exile?

14 We all die, and like unto waters that return no more, we fall down into the earth: "neither will God have a soul to perish, but recalleth; meaning that he that is cast off, should not altogether perish.

15 Now therefore I am come, to speak this word to my lord the king, before the people. And thy handmaid said: I will speak to the king; it may be the king will perform the request of his handmaid.

16 And the king hath hearkened to me, to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of all that would destroy me, and my son together, out of the inheritance of God.

17 Then let thy handmaid say, that the word of my lord the king be made as a sacrifice. ^bFor even as an angel of God, so is my lord the king, that he is neither moved with blessing nor cursing; wherefore the Lord thy God is also with thee.

18 And the king answering, said to the woman: Hide not from me the thing that I ask thee. And the woman said to him: Speak, my lord the king.

19 And the king said: Is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this? The woman answered, and said: By the health of thy soul, my lord king, it is neither on the left hand, nor on the right, in all these things, which my lord the king hath spoken: for thy servant Joab, he commanded me, and he put all these words into the mouth of thy handmaid.

20 That I should come about with this form of speech, thy servant Joab commanded this: but thou, my lord the king, art wise, according to the wisdom of an angel of God, to understand all things upon earth.

21 And the king said to Joab: Behold I am appeased, and have granted thy request: Go, therefore, and fetch back the boy Absalom.

22 And Joab falling down to the ground upon his face, adored, and blessed the king: and Joab said: This day thy servant hath understood, that I have found grace in thy sight, my lord the king: for thou hast fulfilled the request of thy servant.

23 Then Joab arose and went to Gessur, and brought Absalom to Jerusalem.

24 But the king said: Let him return into his house, and let him not see my face. So Absalom returned into his house, and saw not the king's face.

25 But in all Israel there was not a man so comely, and so exceedingly beautiful, as Absalom: from the sole of the foot to the crown of his head there was no blemish in him.

26 And when he polled his hair (now he was polled once a year, because his hair was burdensome to him) he weighed the hair of his head at two hundred sicles, according to the common weight.

27 And there were born to Absalom three sons, and one daughter, whose name was Tamar; and she was very beautiful.

28 And Absalom dwelt two years in Jerusalem, and saw not the king's face.

b 1 Kings xxix. 9.

VER. 11. Multiplied, or overwhelm me with their numbers. C.

VER. 13. Exile, the banished Absalom, (H.) who, in similar circumstances, has only committed a crime like that which the king is willing to pardon at the entreaty of a poor widow; though all the people of God seem interested for the welfare of Absalom, whom they look upon as the heir apparent. This was the drift of the whole parable. C.—To sin, may be referred to Absalom, who might be driven by despair to worship idols. M.

VER. 14. Earth; so great was the distress of the people at the absence of their darling prince. H.—His death would not bring Amnon to life again. We must not cherish sentiments of eternal enmity.—Perish. Chal. "a just judge cannot take the money of iniquity." Le Clerc, "And cannot this prince (or judge) pardon a man, and devise means to leave his son no longer in exile!" C.—Prot. "neither doth God respect any person; yet doth he devise means, that his banished son be not expelled from him." Let the king imitate this example. H.

VER. 15. Before the people. Heb. also, "through fear, or respect for the people," who generally wished that Absalom might return. H.—Joab was present, (v. 21) and no doubt many others; who, if requisite, might join their prayers with her. C.

VER. 16. Me. She identifies her cause with that of her son, as if she could not survive his death; or, at least, could not retain the inheritance, if he should perish. H.

VER. 17. Sacrifice; perfect and inviolable. T.—Cursing, provided he be in the right. M.—Heb. "the king to discern (hear) good and bad;" of consummate wisdom; (v. 20. H.) so that no one can impose upon him.

VER. 19. Right, but he hath ordered me to say all these things. Joab had given her leave to make this declaration, as he perceived that the king's heart was already inclined towards Absalom, v. 1. M.

VER. 21. Boy. This expression might tend to excuse what he had done amiss as it shewed also the tenderness of David for Absalom. M.

VER. 22. Blessed. That is, praised, and gave thanks to the king.

VER. 24. Face, though he lived at Jerusalem. C.—This was done, in order that he might enter seriously into himself, and avoid similar excesses. M.—He felt this privation more than exile. H.

VER. 26. A year. Heb. and Sept. "from the end of days to days."—Chal. "as it was convenient." But the Vulg. seems the best, (C.) and is followed by the Prot. version. H.—Sicles, including all his hair. The Hebrews wore their hair very long. It does not commonly grow above four inches in a year; so that the hair which was cut off could not weigh 200 sicles. C.—Weight. Heb. "after the king's stone," Beeben; but one MS. has Boahkol, with the Sept. "after the king's siele (Ken.) weight," at Babylon, as Pelletier supposes that this work was written towards the end of the captivity. He allows that Absalom's hair might weigh almost 81 ounces. Some women wear above 32 ounces, if we may believe the hair-dressers. Some suppose that r (200) has been substituted instead of d, (4) or e, (20) &c. But all are not convinced that the Hebrews formerly marked the numbers by letters. Sept. have, "100 sicles," (C.) which some attempt to reconcile with the common reading, by saying, that they speak of the sicles of the sanctuary, which were double the weight of the king's siele. Yet the Alex. and Vat. copies agree with the Vulgate; (H.) and of this distinction of weights there is no proof. The Rabbins assert that the value, and not the weight, of Absalom's hair is given; (C.) and that he made a present of his hair to some of his friends, who sold it to the ladies of Jerusalem, to adorn their heads. Sanctius.—Tirin adopts this sentiment, and ridicules those who say that the weight is meant; as he says, 200 sicles would be equivalent to 84 Roman pounds, which comes near to Arbuthnot's calculation in English. H.—Bochart reduces the weight to four such pounds, each consisting of twelve ounces; and he supposes that the hair was so heavy, on account of the gold dust with which it was covered, according to the fashion of those times. Joseph. viii. 1.—But this weight would be only accidental. C.—Josephus (vii. 8.) intimates, that Absalom's hair was "cut every eight days," or "for the space of eight days." It is quite incredible that it should weigh 200 sicles, or five minas of Alexandria, each consisting of twenty ounces. The Latin interpreter reads, "every eight months." C.—S. Epiphanius and Hero have 125 sicles, or about 31 ounces. H.—The Babylonian siele, here mentioned, was only the third part of that used by the Hebrews. D.

VER. 27. Sons, who all died before their father. C. xviii. 18.—Tamar, in memory of his sister; (Abul.) or this Tamar received the name from her aunt, who resided with Absalom. M.—Some Greek and Latin copies add, that she was married to Roboam, the son of Solomon, by whom he had Abias. But this addition is of no authority, and can hardly be reconciled with chronology. We read that Roboam espoused Maaca, the daughter of Absalom; (2 Par. xi. 20.)

29 *He sent therefore to Joab, to send him to the king: but he would not come to him. And when he had sent the second time, and he would not come to him, 30 He said to his servants: You know the field of Joab, near my field, that hath a crop of barley: go now and set it on fire. So the servants of Absalom set the corn on fire. And Joab's servants coming, with their garments rent, said: The servants of Absalom have set part of the field on fire.

31 Then Joab arose, and came to Absalom to his house, and said: Why have thy servants set my corn on fire?

32 And Absalom answered Joab: I sent to thee, beseeching thee to come to me, that I might send thee to the king, to say to him: Wherefore am I come from Gessur? It had been better for me to be there. I beseech thee, therefore, that I may see the face of the king: and if he be mindful of my iniquity, let him kill me.

33 So Joab going in to the king, told him all: and Absalom was called for, and he went in to the king: and prostrated himself on the ground before him: and the king kissed Absalom.

Absalom's policy and conspiracy. David is obliged to flee.

NOW *after these things Absalom made himself chariots, and horsemen, and fifty men, to run before him.

but she might be only his grand-daughter, by Thamar. C.—Josephus had adopted this addition. H.

VER. 29. To him. Joab, like a crafty courtier, would neither disoblige the king nor the prince, and therefore wished not to meddle in this affair; as he might either excite the suspicions of the one, or the resentment of the other. C.

VER. 32. Kissed Absalom, and thus was reconciled to his prodigal son. Luke xv. 20. The ungrateful wretch only took occasion, from his father's goodness, to alienate the minds of the people from him, by insinuating that he neglected the welfare of the people. H.

CHAP. XV. VER. 1. Before him. Romulus instituted the 300 guards, whom he called Coleras, for the like purpose. C.—Absalom's ambition could not wait patiently for the death of his father, who was not yet sixty years old, and had been first anointed forty years before, v. 7. He looked upon himself as the heir apparent, Amnon being now slain, and Cheliab (or Daniel) either dead, as it is thought, or unfit for government, while Solomon was only eight years old. Salien.—The quality of his mother, and his own personal qualifications, made him despise his brethren, and he began to assume the equipage of a king. C.—David considered this as only the effect of juvenile vanity, and he had not a mind to irritate him, without the utmost necessity. Salien.—Heb. "Absalom prepared for himself a chariot, (Prot. chariots) and horses," &c. H.—It is not certain whether he had any other horsemen but those who mounted the chariots. Horses were then very scarce in Israel. C.—Adonias afterwards imitated his brother's ambition, during his father's life; (8 K. i. 5.) so that evil was continually raised up against David, out of his own house. C. xii. 11.

VER. 2. Israel. Absalom rises early for wickedness. He assumes the character of a most zealous and disinterested judge, as if to contrast his conduct with the remissness of some appointed by the king; though the Holy Ghost bears witness to the integrity of David. C. viii. 15. Who would not be deceived by such appearances, if the arts of hypocrites had not taught us to examine things to the bottom, and to be upon our guard? If thy eye be evil, thy whole body will be darkness. The intention decides all! H.

VER. 5. Kissed him. Engaging affability! How often abused by the ambitious, for similar purposes! H.—Thus acted Otho. Protendens manum, adorare vulgus, jacere oscula et omnia serviliter pro dominatione. Tacit. Hist. i.—"Stretching out his hand, he bowed to the common people, dispensed his kisses at random, and performed all the acts of servility to obtain the throne." H.

VER. 6. Enticed. Heb. "stole." The people were not aware of his designs. C.—Absalom rendered them dissatisfied with the present government, and led them to expect better days, under his administration. H.

VER. 7. Forty, which Vatable dates from the time when the people petitioned for a king; Salien, from the first anointing of David. M.—It is probable enough that this number has been substituted instead of four, which Josephus, Theodoret, him, and said: Of what city art thou? He answered, and said: Thy servant is of such a tribe of Israel.

3 And Absalom answered him: Thy words seem to me good and just. But there is no man appointed by the king to hear thee. And Absalom said:

4 O that they would make me judge over the land, that all that have business might come to me, and I might do them justice.

5 Moreover, when any man came to him to salute him, he put forth his hand, and took him, and kissed him.

6 And this he did to all Israel that came for judgment, to be heard by the king, and he enticed the hearts of the men of Israel.

7 And after forty years, Absalom said to king David: Let me go, and pay my vows which I have vowed to the Lord in Hebron.

8 For thy servant made a vow, when he was in Gessur of Syria, saying: If the Lord shall bring me again into Jerusalem, I will offer sacrifice to the Lord.

9 And king David said to him: Go in peace. And he arose, and went to Hebron.

10 And Absalom sent spies into all the tribes of Israel, saying: As soon as you shall hear the sound of the trumpet, say ye: Absalom reigneth in Hebron.

11 Now there went with Absalom two hundred men out of Jerusalem that were called, going with simplicity of heart, and knowing nothing of the design.

12 Absalom also sent for Achitophel, the Gilonite, David's counsellor, from his city, Gilo. And while he was offering sacrifices, there was a strong conspiracy, and the people running together increased with Absalom.

* A. M. 2980, A. C. 1024.

Syr. Arab. and many Latin MSS. read; and Absalom would employ this term in securing the interest of Israel, before he declared himself openly their king. C.—He had been so long at Jerusalem, since his return. Salien.—The canon of Heb. verity, supposed to be made about the ninth century, is said (by Martinay. H.) to be altered by some correcting hand, from four to forty. Kennicott.—This is the famous Memmian canon, which Theodulph, bishop of Orleans, is believed to have ordered, as the standard of truth, according to the Hebrew copies of that day: (H.) and this seems to have guided the Ben. editor of S. Jerom's works, and of his translation; so that it is no wonder if "the printed copies agree in so many places with the corrupted Heb." Canon Memmianus purè legat juxta Hebræum, quod nos edidimus. Note on 2 Par. xiii. 3. 17. The Vulgate of Sixtus V. in that passage, as well as in the present, reads the smaller numbers, as he was guided by the best Latin copies, whereas Clement VIII. has also consulted "the Heb. fountains." The former, says Kennicott, (Diss. ii. p. 205) "seems to have been printed on a juster plan . . . and the old Latin version is likely to be found more pure in the edition of Sixtus than in that of Clement, since the latter seems to have corrected his Latin by the modern (i. e. the corrupted) Heb. copies." Dr. James observes, that "almost all the Latin editions received in the Church, for many years, (preceeding 1590) agree with Sixtus," who here reads quatuor, with many others; so that Grotius is well supported in having pronounced so decisively, "without doubt there is a mistake, two letters having been added at the end of arba. The thing itself declares that four years had elapsed." Kennicott.—It appears to be indubitable, that some mistakes have taken place with regard to numbers. But that this place is incorrect may not be so certain, as the chronology of Salien, Usher, &c. explains it well enough. The Hebrew text was esteemed more correct when the last editions of S. Jerom, and of the Vulg. were given, than it is at present. H.

VER. 8. Lord. The pretext seemed very bad, since he ought not to have delayed so long to perform his vow. Moreover, the usual places for sacrifice were Gabaa or Sion. But Absalom might plead a respect for the patriarchs, who were buried at Hebron. S. Jer. Trad. M.

VER. 10. Spies, or men to give a plausible appearance to his ambition, and to insinuate that all was done according to order, and with David's approbation. "The first word (or step) is the most difficult," on such occasions; (Tacit. Hist. ii. Grot.) and those who find themselves incautiously entangled, find a repugnance to recede. H.—Reigneth. He was solemnly anointed. C. xix. 10. M.

VER. 11. Design. Their hearts had been stolen, v. 6. They only meant to do honour to the prince, but by no means to join in his rebellion, like the rest. C.

VER. 12. Achitophel, the grandfather of Bethsabée; to revenge whose dishonour, he had instigated the young prince to revolt, and had planned his rebellion; (Salien) so that he was ever ready to lend his assistance.

13 And there came a messenger to David, saying: All Israel, with their whole heart, followeth Absalom.

14 And David said to his servants, that were with him in Jerusalem: Arise, and let us flee: for we shall not escape else from the face of Absalom: make haste to go out, lest he come and overtake us, and bring ruin upon us, and smite the city with the edge of the sword.

15 And the king's servants said to him: Whatsoever our lord the king shall command, we, thy servants, will willingly execute.

16 And the king went forth, and all his household, on foot: and the king left ten women, his concubines, to keep the house.

17 And the king going forth, and all Israel, on foot, stood afar off from the house:

18 And all his servants walked by him, and the bands of the Cerethi, and the Phelethi, and all the Gethites, valiant warriors, six hundred men, who had followed him from Geth on foot, went before the king.

19 And the king said to Ethai, the Gethite: Why comest thou with us? return and dwell with the king; for thou art a stranger, and art come out of thy own place.

20 Yesterday thou camest, and to-day shalt thou be forced to go forth with us? but I shall go whither I am going: return thou, and take back thy brethren with thee, and the Lord will shew thee mercy, and truth, because thou hast shewed grace and fidelity.

21 And Ethai answered the king, saying: As the Lord liveth, and as my lord the king liveth: in what place soever thou shalt be, my lord the king, either in death, or in life, there will thy servant be.

22 And David said to Ethai: Come, and pass over. And Ethai, the Gethite, passed, and all the men that were with him, and the rest of the people.

23 And they all wept with a loud voice, and all the people passed over: the king also himself went over the brook Cedron, and all the people marched towards the way that looketh to the desert.

24 And Sadoc, the priest, also came, and all the Levites with him, carrying the ark of the covenant of God, and they set down the ark of God: and Abiathar went up, till all the people that was come out of the city had done passing.

25 And the king said to Sadoc: Carry back the ark of God into the city: if I shall find grace in the sight of the Lord, he will bring me again, and will shew me both it, and his tabernacle.

26 But if he shall say to me: Thou pleasest me not; I am ready: let him do that which is good before him.

27 And the king said to Sadoc, the priest: O seer, return into the city in peace: And let Achimaas, thy son, and Jonathan, the son of Abiathar, your two sons, be with you.

28 Behold I will lie hid in the plains of the wilderness, till there come word from you to certify me.

29 So Sadoc and Abiathar carried back the ark of God into Jerusalem: and they tarried there.

30 But David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, going up and weeping, walking barefoot, and with his head covered; and all the people that were with him, went up with their heads covered, weeping.

31 And it was told David, that Achitophel also was in the conspiracy with Absalom; and David said: Infatuate, O Lord, I beseech thee, the counsel of Achitophel.

32 And when David was come to the top of the mountain, where he was about to adore the Lord, behold Chusai, the Arachite, came to meet him with his garment rent, and his head covered with earth.

33 And David said to him: If thou come with me, thou wilt be a burden to me.

34 But if thou return into the city, and wilt say to Absalom, I am thy servant, O king: as I have been thy father's servant, so I will be thy servant: thou shalt defeat the counsel of Achitophel.

* A. M. 2981.

VER. 13. Absalom. How came they to abandon a king, appointed by heaven, and adorned with so many virtues? God was resolved to punish him. Many are always desirous of novelty. David had lately been guilty of two scandalous crimes. Joab remained unpunished, and arrogant; the judges neglected their duty, &c. v. 3. Some had still a partiality for the family of Saul. C. Grotius.

VER. 14. Ruin, of a house falling. Heb. "evil." David gives way to the fury of the rebels, hoping that they will enter into themselves, without bloodshed. He departs on foot, like a penitent, acknowledging the justice of God. Fear does not prompt him to leave Jerusalem, which was a place of such strength, (C. v. 6.) nor are his attendants abandoned on a sudden by that courage, which made some of them a match for a whole army. David disposes of all things with great coolness and prudence. C.—He wishes to appease God. M.

VER. 16. Concubines. That is, wives of an inferior degree, (Ch. Gen. xxv. W.) who might perhaps have some influence to pacify the rioters.

VER. 17. House, or palace, (H.) at the foot of the walls, (C.) that all who were well disposed, might join the king's standard. Heb. "in a place that was far off;" (H.) or, "this house of flight (this family of David, in flight) stopped." C.

VER. 18. Phelethi, the king's foreign guards, of Philistine extraction. C. viii. 18.—Gethites, who had been probably induced to enter his service by Ethai. v. 19. C.—Men. This number David kept up, in honour of those valiant companions who had defended him at Odollam, &c. Salien.—It is observable, that David is attended only by his own family, and by strangers; representing Jesus Christ, who rejects the Synagogue and its sacrifices, while he makes choice of the Gentiles. C.

VER. 19. Ethai. Many assert that he was the son of Achis, and had embraced the true religion. M.—King; Absalom, who will not molest you. H.—Some translate the Heb. "Return from the king." Syr. Arab.

VER. 20. The Lord. Heb. "mercy and truth with thee." As thou hast acted towards me, so mayest thou be rewarded. H.

VER. 23. Cedron. Heb. nahal Kidron, may signify, "the shady torrent," or "vale," as it is styled by Josephus. It does not take its name from cedars. It is dry in summer, and when filled with water, is only three steps across. Doubdan xxvii.—Desert, of Bethel, (C.) or of Jericho, where S. John Baptist and our Saviour dwelt for some time. David passed over Kedron, only after he had dismissed the priests. M.

VER. 24. Went up to the ark, or along with the rest. C.

VER. 25. City. Abiathar had consulted the Lord for David, and received no answer; whence the king concluded that he had not suffered enough. M.—David displays a faith which could hardly have been expected of the carnal Jews. He confesses that God will reward the virtuous, and punish the wicked, independently of the ark, the symbol of his presence, and of which he deemed himself unworthy. C.

VER. 27. Seer, supposing he was high priest, along with Abiathar, he might be thus addressed as one who consulted God by the ephod, as he might also, if he presided over the prophets, like Chonenias. 1 Par. xv. 22. Dionysius. M.—Heb. "Art not thou a seer?" a prudent man, who may be of greater service to me in the city; (H. or) seest thou not "the state of my affairs?" Sept. "See and return." Follow my advice, or then act as your own wisdom dictates. C.

VER. 30. Weeping, &c. David on this occasion wept for his sins, which he knew were the cause of all his sufferings. Ch.—Barefoot, like a criminal, or one in mourning. Isai. xl. 4. Ezech. xxiv. 17. C.—Covered, that the people might not see him. W.

VER. 31. Infatuate: "render useless;" (Theodotion) "dissipate." Sept. C.—God hindered the wise counsel of Achitophel from being regarded. H.

VER. 32. The Lord, before he lost sight of the holy city, where the ark was kept. C.—Arachite, a convert, (M.) from Arach, or Edessa. S. Jerom. Trad. in Gen. x.

VER. 33. To me, as he was perhaps advanced in years, though very prudent. M.

VER. 34. Defeat; (dissipabis) "render of no effect." H.—Thus princes keep spies in an enemy's country. C.

35 And thou hast with thee Sadoc, and Abiathar, the priests: and what thing soever thou shalt hear out of the king's house, thou shalt tell it to Sadoc, and Abiathar, the priests.

36 And there are with them their two sons, Achimaas, the son of Sadoc, and Jonathan, the son of Abiathar: and you shall send by them to me every thing that you shall hear.

37 Then Chusai, the friend of David, went into the city, and Absalom came into Jerusalem.

CHAP. XVI.

Siba bringeth provisions to David. Semei curseth him. Absalom defileth his father's wives.

AND "when David was a little past the top of the hill, behold Siba, the servant of Miphiboseth, came to meet him, with two asses, laden with two hundred loaves of bread, and a hundred bunches of raisins, a hundred cakes of figs, and a vessel of wine.

2 And the king said to Siba: What mean these things? And Siba answered: The asses are for the king's household to sit on: and the loaves and the figs for thy servants to eat, and the wine to drink, if any man be faint in the desert.

3 And the king said: Where is thy master's son? *And Siba answered the king: He remained in Jerusalem, saying: To-day will the house of Israel restore me the kingdom of my father.

4 And the king said to Siba: I give thee all that belongeth to Miphiboseth. And Siba said: I beseech thee, let me find grace before thee, my lord the king.

5 And king David came as far as Bahurim: and behold there came out from thence a man of the kindred of the house of Saul, named Semei, the son of Gera; and coming out, *he cursed as he went on.

6 And he threw stones at David, and at all the servants of king David: and all the people, and all the warriors walked on the right, and on the left side of the king.

7 And thus said Semei, when he cursed the king: Come out, come out, thou man of blood, and thou man of Belial.

8 The Lord hath repaid thee for all the blood of the house of Saul: because thou hast usurped the kingdom in his stead, and the Lord hath given the kingdom into the hand of Absalom, thy son: and behold thy evils press upon thee, because thou art a man of blood.

9 And Abisai, the son of Sarvia, said to the king: Why should this dead dog curse my lord the king? I will go, and cut off his head.

10 And the king said: What have I to do with you, ye sons of Sarvia? let him alone, and let him curse: for the Lord hath bid him curse David: and who is he that shall dare say, why hath he done so?

11 And the king said to Abisai, and to all his servants: Behold my son, who came forth from my bowels, seeketh my life: how much more now a son of Jemini? let him alone, that he may curse as the Lord hath bidden him:

12 Perhaps the Lord may look upon my affliction, and the Lord may render me good for the cursing of this day.

13 And David, and his men with him, went by the way. And Semei, by the hill's side, went over-against him, cursing, and casting stones at him, and scattering earth.

14 And the king, and all the people with him, came weary, and refreshed themselves there.

15 But Absalom and all his people came into Jerusalem, and Achitophel was with him.

16 And when Chusai, the Arachite, David's friend, was come to Absalom, he said to him: God save thee, O king; God save thee, O king.

17 And Absalom said to him: Is this thy kindness to thy friend? why wentest thou not with thy friend?

18 And Chusai answered Absalom: Nay: for I will be his whom the Lord hath chosen, and all this people and all Israel, and with him will I abide.

19 Besides this, whom shall I serve? is it not the king's son? As I have served thy father, so will I serve thee also.

20 And Absalom said to Achitophel: Consult what we are to do.

21 And Achitophel said to Absalom: Go in to the concubines of thy father, whom he hath left to keep the CHAP. XVI. VER. 1. Siba was a mean character, but of sufficient discernment to judge that David would gain the day. He came to calumniate his master; and David paid too much attention to him, though his testimony would not have been received in a court of judicature. Mic. vii. 1.

VER. 2. Loaves. Heb. "and to fight." But the Sept. and the Masorets reject the letter l, which causes the difference. C.

VER. 7. Belial; contemner of the laws, and murderer. M.

VER. 9. Dog. David's nephew was moved with indignation. He could easily have punished the insolence of Semei. H.

VER. 10.—11. Hath bid him curse. Not that the Lord was the author of Semei's sin, which proceeded purely from his own malice, and the abuse of his free-will: but that knowing and suffering his malicious disposition to break out on this occasion, he made use of him as his instrument to punish David for his (402) sins. Ch.—He adored the justice of God; who is often said to do what he does not hinder, or what he only permits. E.—David is here a noble figure of Jesus Christ, excusing his executioners, (H.) and receiving the insults of the Jews, without complaining. C.—If Semei had not been guilty of sin, but acted according to God's will, he could not have been justly punished. 3 K. ii. W.

VER. 13. Earth, like a man in fury. Acts xxii. 23.

VER. 14. There, on the hill side, (H.) at Bahurim, v. 5. M.

VER. 16. Arachite; perhaps descended from the ancient Arachites, who dwelt near Arad and Tripoli, where the pretended Sabbathic river is said to flow; (Jos. Bel. xii. 13.) or rather, as the names are written in a different manner, this person might be a native of Arachi, in Benjamin, west of Bethel. Jos. xvi. 2. C. See C. xv. 32.—Friend. This was his peculiar title of office. 1 Par. xxvii. 33. C.—King. (Sabe.) Lit. "Hail, O king," in both places. The salutation is repeated for greater emphasis. H.

VER. 17. Friend. He rather accuses him of treachery. H.—But he does not mention the name of king, or of father, lest it should too plainly speak his own condemnation, as an ungrateful rebel. Salien.

VER. 18. Chosen. (Vox populi, vox Dei.) Private people are not commonly able, or allowed, to judge of the right, which the prince has to the throne. But here Absalom was manifestly an usurper; and many still adhered to David. C.—Chusai assumes the character of a courtier, and flatters the prince; (Salien) who ought to have been on his guard. See C. xv. 34. C.

VER. 21. Their hands may be strengthened, &c. The people might apprehend lest Absalom should be reconciled to his father; and therefore they followed him with some fear of being left in the lurch, till they saw such a crime committed, house: that when all Israel shall hear that thou hast disgraced thy father, their hands may be strengthened with thee.

22 *So they spread a tent for Absalom on the top of the house; and he went in to his father's concubines before all Israel.

23 Now the counsel of Achitophel, which he gave in those days, was as if a man should consult the oracle of God: so was all the counsel of Achitophel, both when he was with David, and when he was with Absalom.

CHAP. XVII.

Achitophel's counsel is defeated by Chusai: He sendeth intelligence to David. Achitophel hangeth himself.

AND^b Achitophel said to Absalom: I will choose me twelve thousand men, and I will arise and pursue after David this night.

2 And coming upon him, (for he is now weary, and weak-handed) I will defeat him: and when all the people is put to flight that is with him, I will kill the king, who will be left alone.

3 And I will bring back all the people, as if they were but one man: for thou seekest but one man: and all the people shall be in peace.

4 And his saying pleased Absalom, and all the ancients of Israel.

5 But Absalom said: Call Chusai, the Arachite, and let us hear what he also saith.

6 And when Chusai was come to Absalom, Absalom said to him: Achitophel hath spoken after this manner: shall we do it or not? what counsel dost thou give?

7 And Chusai said to Absalom: The counsel that Achitophel hath given this time is not good.

8 And again Chusai said: Thou knowest thy father, and the men that are with him, that they are very valiant, and bitter in their mind, as a bear raging in the wood when her whelps are taken away: and

VER. 23. Absalom. It tended to promote the end which was desired, (H.) whether good or bad. His prudence is hyperbolically compared with the divine oracles; (M.) and his authority must have had great weight, since David began to take precautions, only after he had heard that Achitophel had joined the rebels; and Absalom was persuaded (C.) to perpetrate so foul and unnatural a crime publicly, no one daring to make any opposition. Chusai was silent; as he was aware that, if he began to contradict this counsellor at first, he would only incur suspicion. H.—The unjust commonly endeavour by all means to attach people to themselves: but God, in the end, turns their counsels against themselves. W.

CHAP. XVII. VER. 1. This night. Achitophel has a mind to shew that he is not only an able statesman, but a good general. H.—On such occasions, expedition is of the utmost consequence, that the people may not have time to enter into themselves, or to concentrate about their lawful king. "Nothing is more delightful than haste in civil discord, where action is more requisite than consultation." M.—David was the one man whom his son desired to kill, as the latter was the only one whom David ordered to be spared. C. xviii. 5. H.—Heb. seems, ather transposed: "I will bring back all the people to thee, as all the people, whom thou seekest, are returned; and all the people shall be in peace:" or, "when all those, whom thou desirest, shall be returned," &c. thy father is a warrior, and will not lodge with the people.

9 Perhaps he now lieth hid in pits, or in some other place where he list: and when any one shall fall at the first, every one that heareth it, shall say: There is a slaughter among the people that followed Absalom.

10 And the most valiant man, whose heart is as the heart of a lion, shall melt for fear: for all the people or Israel know thy father to be a valiant man, and that all who are with him are valiant.

11 But this seemeth to me to be good counsel: Let all Israel be gathered to thee, from Dan to Bersabee, as the sand of the sea, which cannot be numbered: and thou shalt be in the midst of them.

12 And we shall come upon him in what place soever he shall be found: and we shall cover him, as the dew falleth upon the ground; and we shall not leave of the men that are with him, not so much as one.

13 And if he shall enter into any city, all Israel shall cast ropes round about that city, and we will draw it into the river: so that there shall not be found so much as one small stone thereof.

14 And Absalom, and all the men of Israel, said: The counsel of Chusai, the Arachite, is better than the counsel of Achitophel: and by the will of the Lord, the profitable counsel of Achitophel was defeated, that the Lord might bring evil upon Absalom.

15 And Chusai said to Sadoc, and Abiathar, the priests: Thus and thus did Achitophel counsel Absalom, and the ancients of Israel: and thus and thus did I counsel them.

16 Now therefore send quickly, and tell David, saying: Tarry not this night in the plains of the wilderness, but without delay pass over: lest the king be swallowed up, and all the people that are with him.

VER. 7. This time, though he displays such prudence on all other occasions; or, "at this time" the situation of affairs is such, that it may prove dangerous to push people, who are already desperate, to extremities. Here we behold, how different sentiments may appear equally plausible. H.—Mind, reduced to despair. The maxim is beautiful, as well as the comparison. See Osee xiii. 7. Prov. xvii. 12. Lam. iii. 10.—People. Heb. adds, "in the night;" or, "he will not suffer the people to pass the night" in repose. VER. 12. Dew, which there falleth every night, in summer, like rain. Deut. xxxiii. 28. Some of the light armed troops of the Romans were called Rorarii, because they fell upon the enemy, and began the battle.

VER. 13. Ropes, armed with hooks, to pull down the walls, and to move the battering engines. All the discourse of Chusai tends to fill the mind of the young prince with vanity; as if he could overcome all opposition when surrounded with the armies of Israel, (C.) at the head of which he would appear, instead of Achitophel, v. 1. M.

VER. 14. Profitable, to the cause of Absalom, more than that of Chusai, which was also very plausible. H.—Lord. The Scripture always directs us to fix our thoughts on God, as the arbiter of all human affairs. C.—Heb. "for the Lord had ordained to dissipate the good counsel," &c. VER. 15. Thus. He discloses the secrets of the person who had consulted tain Rogel: and there went a maid and told them: and they went forward, to carry the message to king David, for they might not be seen, nor enter into the city.

18 But a certain boy saw them, and told Absalom: but they making haste, went into the house of a certain man in Bahurim, who had a well in his court, and they went down into it.

19 And the woman took, and spread a covering over the mouth of the well, as it were to dry sodden barley: and so the thing was not known.

20 And when Absalom's servants were come into the house, they said to the woman: Where is Achimaas, and Jonathan? and the woman answered them: They passed on in haste, after they had tasted a little water. But they that sought them, when they found them not, returned into Jerusalem.

21 And when they were gone, they came up out of the well, and going on, told king David, and said: Arise, and pass quickly over the river: for this manner of counsel has Achitophel given against you.

22 So David arose, and all the people that were with him, and they passed over the Jordan, until it grew light, and not one of them was left that was not gone over the river.

23 But Achitophel, seeing that his counsel was not followed, saddled his ass, and arose, and went home to his house and to his city: and putting his house in order, hanged himself, and was buried in the sepulchre of his father.

24 But David came to the camp, and Absalom passed over the Jordan, he and all the men of Israel with him.

25 Now Absalom appointed Amasa in Joab's stead, over the army: and Amasa was the son of a man who was called Jethra of Jezrael, who went in to Abigail, the daughter of Naas, the sister of Sarvia, who was the mother of Joab.

26 And Israel encamped with Absalom in the land of Galaad.

27 And when David was come to the camp, Sobi, the son of Naas, of Rabbath, of the children of Ammon, and Machir, the son of Ammihel of Lodabar, and Berzellai, the Galaadite, of Rogelim, 28 Brought him beds, and tapestry, and earthen vessels, and wheat, and barley, and meal, and parched corn, and beans, and lentils, and fried pulse,

29 And honey, and butter, and sheep, and fat calves; and they gave to David and the people that were with him, to eat: for they suspected that the people were faint with hunger and thirst in the wilderness.

CHAP. XVIII.

Absalom is defeated, and slain by Joab. David mourneth for him.

AND^a David having reviewed his people, appointed over them captains of thousands, and of hundreds,

2 And sent forth a third part of the people under the hand of Joab; and a third part under the hand of Abisai, the son of Sarvia, Joab's brother; and a third part under the hand of Ethai, who was of Geth: and the king said to the people: I also will go forth with you.

3 And the people answered: Thou shalt not go forth: for if we flee away, they will not much mind us: or if half of us should fall, they will not greatly care: for thou alone art accounted for ten thousand: it is better, therefore, that thou shouldst be in the city to succour us.

4 And the king said to them: What seemeth good to you, that will I do. And the king stood by the gate: and all the people went forth by their troops, by hundreds and by thousands.

5 And the king commanded Joab, and Abisai, and Ethai, saying: Save me the boy Absalom. And all the people heard the king giving charge to all the princes concerning Absalom.

6 So the people went out into the field against Israel, and the battle was fought in the forest of Ephraim.

7 And the people of Israel were defeated there by David's army, and a great slaughter was made that day of twenty thousand men.

But it is almost universally believed that he set a pattern to Judas, the traitor, in this mode of dying, as well as in perfidy. He was aware that Absalom was undone, and vexed that his counsel had been disregarded. The most prudent of this world are often blind to their own welfare. The Jews had not yet begun to refuse the rites of sepulture to suicides. C.

VER. 24. To the camp. The city of Mahanaim, the name of which in Hebrew, signifies The Camp. It was a city of note at that time; as appears from its having been chosen by Ishobeth for the place of his residence. Ch.—The Vulgate often translates Mahanaim, or Manaim. See C. ii. 8. 12. Precious metals were then rarely used in the kitchen.—Pulse, (cicer) or “parched peas.” Heb. kali, is thus twice translated, as it had been rendered parched corn. CHAP. XVIII. VER. 1. Hundreds. Josephus only allows David 4000 men. But his army seems to have been pretty numerous, since he divides it into three parts, and appoints three head commanders, with officers of a thousand, &c. under them. See v. 4. C.—He designed to lead them to battle himself, if the people had not dissuaded him. Salien.

VER. 5. Save me: do not hurt, v. 12. S. Aug. (Doct. iii. 23.) concludes, that David wished to allow his son time for repentance. M.—He seems to have been sure of victory. Abul.

8 And the battle there was scattered over the face of all the country, and there were many more of the people whom the forest consumed, than whom the sword devoured that day.

9 And it happened that Absalom met the servants of David, riding on a mule: and as the mule went under a thick and large oak, his head stuck in the oak: and while he hung between the heaven and the earth, the mule on which he rode passed on.

10 And one saw this, and told Joab, saying: I saw Absalom hanging upon an oak.

11 And Joab said to the man that told him: If thou sawest him, why didst thou not stab him to the ground, and I would have given thee ten sicles of silver, and a belt?

12 And he said to Joab: If thou wouldst have paid down in my hands a thousand pieces of silver, I would not lay my hands upon the king's son: for, in our hearing, the king charged thee, and Abisai, and Ethai, saying: Save me the boy Absalom.

13 Yea, and if I should have acted boldly against my own life, this could not have been hid from the king, and wouldst thou have stood by me?

14 And Joab said: Not as thou wilt; but I will set upon him in thy sight. So he took three lances in his hand, and thrust them into the heart of Absalom: and whilst he yet panted for life, sticking on the oak, 15 Ten young men, armour-bearers of Joab, ran up, and striking him, slew him.

16 And Joab sounded the trumpet, and kept back the people from pursuing after Israel in their flight, being willing to spare the multitude.

17 And they took Absalom, and cast him into a great pit in the forest, and they laid an exceedingly great heap of stones upon him: but all Israel fled to their own dwellings.

18 Now Absalom had reared up for himself, in his life-time, a pillar, which is in the king's valley: for he said: I have no son, and this shall be the monument of my name. And he called the pillar by his own name, and it is called the hand of Absalom, to this day.

H.—These men abused his corpse, as if to revenge the insult offered to David's ten wives. Salien.—It is asked whether Joab did wrong? He consulted the public welfare, rather than the parental affection of the king for a son, whom the law condemned to die for rebellion, incest, and murder. Lev. xviii. 29. C. xiii. 28. But still he was not a proper judge to inflict this death in cold blood; and thus to render the salvation of Absalom's soul more desperate. David would, however, have done well to have punished this son, as incorrigible and dangerous to the state. H.

19 And Achimaas, the son of Sadoc, said: I will run and tell the king, that the Lord hath done judgment for him from the hand of his enemies.

20 And Joab said to him: Thou shalt not be the messenger this day, but shalt bear tidings another day: this day I will not have thee bear tidings, because the king's son is dead.

21 And Joab said to Chusi: Go, and tell the king what thou hast seen. Chusi bowed down to Joab, and ran.

22 Then Achimaas, the son of Sadoc, said to Joab again: Why might not I also run after Chusi? And Joab said to him: Why wilt thou run, my son? thou wilt not be the bearer of good tidings.

23 He answered: But what if I run? and he said to him: Run. Then Achimaas, running by a nearer way, passed Chusi.

24 And David sat between the two gates: and the watchman that was on the top of the gate upon the wall, lifting up his eyes, saw a man running alone.

25 And crying out, he told the king: and the king said: If he be alone, there are good tidings in his mouth. And as he was coming apace and drawing nearer,

26 The watchman saw another man running, and crying aloud from above, he said: I see another man running alone. And the king said: He, also, is a good messenger.

27 And the watchman said, the running of the foremost seemeth to me like the running of Achimaas, the son of Sadoc. And the king said: He is a good man: and cometh with good news.

28 And Achimaas crying out, said to the king: God save thee, O king. And falling down before the king with his face to the ground, he said: Blessed be the Lord thy God, who hath shut up the men that have lifted up their hands against my lord the king.

29 And the king said: Is the young man, Absalom, safe? And Achimaas said: I saw a great tumult, O king, when thy servant Joab sent me thy servant: I know nothing else.

30 And the king said to him: Pass, and stand here.

31 And when he had passed, and stood still, Chusi

VER. 17. Him. Thus was the law executed upon Absalom. Deut. xxi. 18. S. Jerom. M.—History scarcely affords a more detestable character; and his punishment was no less terrible than instructive. He was a figure of the Jews persecuting Jesus Christ, while he gave his blood for the redemption of these his enemies, and prayed for them. As they continued obdurate, they were held up as objects of horror both to heaven and to all nations, like Absalom suspended on the tree, and rejected by heaven and earth. C.

VER. 18. No son. The sons mentioned above, C. xiv. 27, were dead when this pillar was erected; unless we suppose he raised this pillar before they were born: (Ch.) or meant this pillar to perpetuate his memory, when they should be no more. Joseph. vii. 9.—This author says that it was a pillar of marble; so that it is different from that which Doubdan (15) mentions, observing, that all who pass throw a stone at it. appeared: and coming up, he said: I bring good tidings, my lord the king: for the Lord hath judged for thee this day, from the hand of all that have risen up against thee.

32 And the king said to Chusi: Is the young man, Absalom, safe? and Chusi answering him, said: Let the enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against him unto evil, be as the young man is.

33 The king therefore being much moved, went up to the high chamber over the gate, and wept. And as he went, he spoke in this manner: "My son, Absalom; Absalom, my son: would to God that I might die for thee, Absalom my son, my son Absalom."

CHAP. XIX.

David, at the remonstrances of Joab, ceaseth his mourning. He is invited back, and met by Semei and Miphiboseth: a strife between the men of Juda and the men of Israel.

AND ^ait was told Joab, that the king wept and mourned for his son:

2 And the victory that day was turned into mourning unto all the people: for the people heard say that day: The king grieveth for his son.

3 And the people shunned the going into the city that day, as the people would do that hath turned their backs, and fled away from the battle.

4 And the king covered his head, and cried with a loud voice: O my son Absalom, O Absalom my son, O my son.

5 Then Joab, going into the house to the king, said: Thou hast shamed this day the faces of all thy servants, that have saved thy life, and the lives of thy sons, and of thy daughters, and the lives of thy wives, and the lives of thy concubines.

6 Thou lovest them that hate thee, and thou hatest them that love thee: and thou hast shewed this day, that thou carest not for thy nobles, nor for thy servants: and I now plainly perceive, that, if Absalom had lived, and all we had been slain, then it would have pleased thee.

7 Now therefore arise, and go out, and speak to the satisfaction of thy servants: for I swear to thee by the

VER. 33. Wept, in private. M.—Would. David lamented the death of Absalom, because of the wretched state in which he died; and therefore would have been glad to have saved his life, even by dying for him. In this he was a figure of Christ weeping, praying, and dying for his rebellious children, and even for them that crucified him. Ch. S. Amb. (de Ob. Valent.) Theod. q. 35.—David had presently ceased to weep for the son of Bethsabee, because he had reason to hope that he was saved. C.

CHAP. XIX. VER. 2. Mourning, as is commonly the case in civil wars. The king being oppressed with grief, a triumph was out of season. M.

VER. 3. Shunned. Heb. "stole away," fearing to enter; though they did at last, in a clandestine manner, (C.) by another gate. M.

VER. 4. Head, continuing to mourn. See C. xv. 30.—Absalom. The name is often repeated, as is usual on such occasions. Virg. Ec. v.—Thus Bion says, "I bewail Adonis. The beautiful Adonis is no more," &c.

VER. 5. Shamed; deceived the expectations. See Joel ii. 12. Joab was one of those who spoil all their services by ostentation and rudeness. Like the first Anthony, Immodicus lingua, obsequii insolens, nimis commemorandis que meruisset. Tacit. Hist. iv.—He speaks to David, his king, as one friend would not do to another. "That sort of men is truly odious, who upbraid with their kindness; which those who have experienced, rather than the authors, ought to remember." Cicero. Amicit.

VER. 6. Thee. What insolence! Kings are often forced to brook the affronts of their higher servants, as well as other masters. There is a gradation in human affairs, which makes the next in dignity and power think himself equal to the highest. Similis ero altissimo. Isai. xiv. 14. H.—David sincerely desired the welfare of all his people, as well as of Absalom. M.

VER. 7. To (satisfac). Heb. "speak to the heart," &c. with a cheerful countenance, to testify that their services will be rewarded. C.

Lord, that if thou wilt not go forth, there will not tarry with thee so much as one this night: and that will be worse to thee, than all the evils that have befallen thee, from thy youth until now.

8 Then the king arose, and sat in the gate: and it was told to all the people, that the king sat in the gate: and all the people came before the king: but Israel fled to their own dwellings.

9 And all the people were at strife in all the tribes of Israel, saying: The king delivered us out of the hand of our enemies, and he saved us out of the hand of the Philistines: and now he is fled out of the land for Absalom.

10 But Absalom, whom we anointed over us, is dead in the battle: how long are you silent, and bring not back the king?

11 And king David sent to Sadoc, and Abiathar, the priests, saying: Speak to the ancients of Juda, saying: Why are you the last to bring the king back to his house? (For the talk of all Israel was come to the king in his house.)

12 You are my brethren, you are my bone and my flesh, why are you the last to bring back the king?

13 And say ye to Amasa: Art not thou my bone and my flesh? So do God to me, and add more, if thou be not the chief captain of the army before me always, in the place of Joab.

14 And he inclined the heart of all the men of Juda, as it were of one man: and they sent to the king, saying: Return thou and all thy servants.

15 And the king returned, and came as far as the Jordan, and all Juda came as far as Galgal to meet the king, and to bring him over the Jordan.

16 And Semei, the son of Gera, the son of Jemini, of Bahurim, made haste and went down with the men of Juda, to meet king David,

17 With a thousand men of Benjamin, and Siba, the servant of the house of Saul: and his fifteen sons, and twenty servants were with him: and going over the Jordan,

VER. 12. Flesh? Amasa was his nephew, and as he had been appointed general by Absalom, his influence would be the greatest to bring back those who had given into the delusion. A sense of his misconduct would also render him more humble, and easier to manage than Joab, whose insolence caused him to be insupportable to the king. David designed to transfer the authority of the latter, (C.) which he had now enjoyed 23 years, since the taking of Sion. David's promise did not oblige him to keep Joab in that office for life, if his conduct should prove unsatisfactory. Hence he appointed Amasa to pursue the rebels, and afterwards Abisai, setting Joab aside. But the haughty warrior supplanted both, and retained the command, as it were in spite of his sovereign. might help over the king's household, and do according to his commandment. And Semei, the son of Gera, falling down before the king, when he was come over the Jordan, 19 Said to him: Impute not to me, my lord, the iniquity, nor remember the injuries of thy servant, on the day that thou, my lord the king, wentest out of Jerusalem, nor lay it up in thy heart, O king.

20 For I, thy servant, acknowledge my sin: and therefore, I am come this day the first of all the house of Joseph, and am come down to meet my lord the king.

21 But Abisai, the son of Sarvia, answering said: Shall Semei, for these words not be put to death, because he cursed the Lord's anointed?

22 And David said: What have I to do with you, ye sons of Sarvia? why are you a satan this day to me? shall there any man be killed this day in Israel? do not I know that this day, I am made king over Israel?

23 And the king said to Semei: Thou shalt not die. And he swore unto him.

24 And Miphiboseth, the son of Saul, came down to meet the king, and he had neither washed his feet, nor trimmed his beard: nor washed his garments, from the day that the king went out, until the day of his return in peace.

25 And when he met the king, at Jerusalem, the king said to him: Why camest thou not with me, Miphiboseth?

26 And he answering, said: My lord king, my servant despised me: for I thy servant spoke to him to saddle me an ass, that I might get on and go with the king: for I thy servant am lame.

27 *Moreover he hath also accused me, thy servant, to thee, my lord the king: but ^b thou, my lord the king, art as an angel of God, do what pleaseth thee.

28 For all of my father's house were no better than worthy of death before my lord the king; and thou hast set me, thy servant, among the guests of thy table: what just complaint therefore have I? or what right to cry any more to the king?

29 Then the king said to him: Why speakest thou any more? what I have said is determined: thou and Siba divide the possessions.

30 And Miphiboseth answered the king: Yea, let him take all, for as much as my lord, the king, is returned peaceably into his house.

31 Berzellai also, the Galaadite, coming down from Rogelim, brought the king over the Jordan, being ready also to wait on him beyond the river.

32 *Now Berzellai, the Galaadite, was of a great age, that is to say, fourscore years old, and he provided the king with sustenance when he abode in the camp: for he was a man exceedingly rich.

33 And the king said to Berzellai: Come with me, that thou mayst rest secure with me in Jerusalem?

34 And Berzellai said to the king: How many are the days of the years of my life, that I should go up with the king to Jerusalem?

35 *I am this day fourscore years old; are my senses quick to discern sweet and bitter? or can meat or drink delight thy servant? or can I hear any more the voice of singing-men and singing-women? why should thy servant be a burden to my lord the king?

36 I, thy servant, will go on a little way from the Jordan with thee: I need not this recompence.

37 But I beseech thee let thy servant return, and die in my own city, and be buried by the sepulchre of my father, and of my mother. But there is thy servant Chamaam, let him go with thee, my lord the king, and do to him whatsoever seemeth good to thee.

38 Then the king said to him: Let Chamaam go over with me, and I will do for him whatsoever shall please thee, and all that thou shalt ask of me, thou shalt obtain.

Martial iv. 4.—Ammianus (2) speaking of the emperor Marcus, says, Cum Palestinam transiret, foetentium Juædorum et tumultuantium sæpe tædio percitur. Some have thought that this odour was removed by baptism. Basnage, T. iii. p. 194. Rom. Sept. adds, "neither had he cut his nails, nor (made or) dressed his mustaches," or upper lip. The chin, as ^c to the ears, was not shaved by the Jews. To cut all the hair was a mark of sorrow, no less than to neglect dressing it. See Lev. xxi. 5. M.—But most interpreters accuse David of injustice, in suffering Siba to reap the fruits of his perfidy, &c. Salien. C. &c.—It is not probable, however, that he would deviate from his wonted generosity, nor suffer Miphiboseth to be injured, if he were convinced of his innocence. Perhaps he might judge it expedient that Siba should have a separate establishment, as he was now unfit to act in his former capacity, and had shewn some sort of affection towards his sovereign, when his own son, and most of his subjects, had revolted against him. over the Jordan, the king kissed Berzellai, and blessed him: and he returned to his own place.

40 So the king went on to Galgal, and Chamaam with him. Now all the people of Juda had brought the king over, and only half of the people of Israel were there.

41 Therefore all the men of Israel running together to the king, said to him: Why have our brethren, the men of Juda, stolen thee away, and have brought the king and his household over the Jordan, and all the men of David with him?

42 And all the men of Juda answered the men of Israel: Because the king is nearer to me: why art thou angry for this matter? have we eaten any thing of the king's, or have any gifts been given us?

43 And the men of Israel answered the men of Juda, and said: I have ten parts in the king more than thou, and David belongeth to me more than to thee: why hast thou done me a wrong, and why was it not told me first, that I might bring back my king? And the men of Juda answered more harshly than the men of Israel.

David might perhaps have waited a little longer, (H.) and shewed less predilection for his own tribe. C. Salien.—But what obligation was there for either? He had been long enough from Jerusalem, and eager to return, as soon as Amasa brought to him the tribe of Juda, and several of Benjamin, v. 16. What hindered the rest from coming in time? Abulensis supposes that he leaned too much towards his own tribe; for which, if true, we behold he was soon chastised; as God is always ready to reward or to punish his servants. Salien.—But all that David said is not recorded. He could hardly have continued silent. All his endeavours to appease the sedition were, however, rendered abortive, by the evil dispositions of his subjects. H.

CHAP. XX. VER. 1. Belial. Sept. "lawless."—Jemini. The tribe of Benjamin continued to be rather disaffected. H.—Part. This was an usual mode of expressing a disunion. 8 K. xii. 16. Act. viii. 21. C.—See C. xix. 43. H. Seba was perhaps a kinsman of Saul, (M.) in some command. C.

VER. 2. Jordan, near which the contest had happened. Some chosen troops attended Seba to the north, while the rest went home. H.

VER. 3. Widowhood, or celibacy, (M.) like nuns. Grot. Salien.—David could not with propriety approach to them, (E.) as they resembled his daughters-in-law; (Lev. xviii. 16. M.) and no other person could marry them, while he was still their husband. H.—The punishment of seclusion was very small in the East, allowing them provisions; but went not in unto them: so they were shut up unto the day of their death, living in widowhood.

4 And the king said to Amasa: Assemble to me all the men of Juda against the third day, and be thou here.

5 So Amasa went to assemble the men of Juda, but he tarried beyond the set time which the king had appointed him.

6 And David said to Abisai: Now will Seba, the son of Bochri, do us more harm than did Absalom: take thou, therefore, the servants of thy lord, and pursue after him, lest he find fenced cities, and escape us.

7 So Joab's men went out with him, and the Cerethi and the Phelethi: and all the valiant men went out of Jerusalem, to pursue after Seba, the son of Bochri.

8 And when they were at the great stone, which is in Gabaon, Amasa came and met them. And Joab had on a close coat of equal length with his habit, and over it was girded with a sword, hanging down to his flank in a scabbard, made in such manner as to come out with the least motion and strike.

9 And Joab said to Amasa: God save thee, my brother. ^bAnd he took Amasa by the chin with his right hand to kiss him.

10 But Amasa did not take notice of the sword which Joab had, and he struck him in the side, and shed out his bowels to the ground, and gave him not a second wound, and he died. And Joab, and Abisai, his brother, pursued after Seba, the son of Bochri.

11 In the mean time, some men of Joab's company, stopping at the dead body of Amasa, said: Behold he that would have been in Joab's stead, the companion of David.

12 And Amasa, embrued with blood, lay in the midst of the way. A certain man saw this, that all

VER. 4. Here, to be invested with the command over the army, and to pursue Seba. M.

VER. 5. Him, owing to some insuperable difficulties. He was not long behind, since he joined the forces at Gabaon, where he was treacherously slain by the envious Joab. H.

VER. 6. Lord, the king; or perhaps Joab. M.—A select company always attended the king; and some of these he sent, for greater expedition, to attack Seba, before he had become too strong. H.

VER. 7. Men. It seems Joab accompanied them, though in a manner divested of his command, by the king's appointing Amasa, and then Abisai, to his exclusion. After the slaughter of the former, he resumed his authority; (v. 10) and David was forced to acquiesce, for fear of another civil war, reserving his punishment for more peaceable times. H.

VER. 8. Stone, where Abner and Joab had formerly joined battle. C. ii. M.—Habit, or body.—Plank; they usually hung at the thigh. Ps. xlv. 4.—Strike, the scabbard was very wide; so that, when it was hanging very high, it would easily fall out, when he stooped; and thus afforded Joab an opportunity of stabbing Amasa, without suspicion. C.—Prot. "Joab's garment, that he had put on, was girded unto him, and upon it a girdle with a sword, fastened upon his loins, in the sheath thereof, and as he went forth, it fell out."

VER. 9. God, &c. Lit. "Hail, my brother." H.—Kiss him. "In former times it was the custom, in Greece, for suppliants to touch the chin, (Plin. xi. 45.) having the left hand upon the person's knees. Iliad A. They touched a woman's cheeks; (Eurip. the people stood still to look upon him, so he removed Amasa out of the high-way, into the field, and covered him with a garment, that they who passed might not stop on his account.

13 And when he was removed out of the way, all the people went on following Joab, to pursue after Seba, the son of Bochri.

14 Now he had passed through all the tribes of Israel unto Abela and Bethmaacha: and all the chosen men were gathered together unto him.

15 And they came, and besieged him in Abela, and in Bethmaacha, and they cast up works round the city, and the city was besieged: and all the people that were with Joab, laboured to throw down the walls.

16 And a wise woman cried out from the city: Hear, hear, and say to Joab: Come near hither, and I will speak with thee.

17 And when he was come near to her, she said to him: Art thou Joab? And he answered: I am. And she spoke thus to him: Hear the words of thy hand-maid. He answered: I do hear.

18 And she again said: A saying was used of old as a proverb: They that inquire, let them inquire in Abela: And so they made an end.

19 Am not I she that answer truth in Israel, and thou seekest to destroy the city, and to overthrow a mother in Israel? Why wilt thou throw down the inheritance of the Lord?

20 And Joab answering, said: God forbid, God forbid that I should; I do not throw down, nor destroy.

21 The matter is not so; but a man of Mount Ephraim, Seba, the son of Bochri by name, hath lifted up his hand against king David: Deliver him only, and we will depart from the city. And the woman said to Joab: Behold his head shall be thrown to thee from the wall.

VER. 12. A certain. Heb. "the man" stationed by Joab, near the body, to inform those who passed, that he had been justly slain. Josephus, (vii. 10.) who observes, that this crime of Joab proceeded from envy, and was less deserving of excuse than the murder of Abner. H.

VER. 14. Tribes, north-west of the Jordan. C.—Abela and Bethmaacha. Cities of the tribe of Nephtali. Ch.—The former is called simply Abel (4 K. xv. 29. C.) as it is here by the Prot. version. (which is translated "Berites," by the Prot. H.) is derived from Bata, "to choose," by S. Jerom. Sept. have read airm, "cities." Some suppose that the inhabitants of Beroth chiefly followed the rebel: or more probably, his fellow citizens of Bahurim (near Mount Ephraim, v. 21, where Semei, a relation of Saul, and many disaffected people resided) shut themselves up with him in Abela.

VER. 15. Works. Heb. a bank, or terrace against the city, and it stood in the trench; (H.) so that the town ditch was filled up. (Grot.) or terraces were raised, from which archers assailed the besieged. Joab made a ditch to defend his men from foreign assailants; and he had already taken the outward wall, so that the town could not hold out for any length of time.—The walls. S. Jerom thinks with battering rams: but they were not yet invented. C.—They undermined the walls, while some attempted to pull them down with hooks and ropes. C. xvii. 18. H.

VER. 16. Say to Joab. This woman was noted for her prudence, and it was hoped that her words would have more influence to disarm Joab. She addresses those who were nearest the wall, that she may have an interview with the general, at the request of her fellow-citizens.

CHAP. XXI.

A famine of three years, for the sin of Saul against the Gabaonites; at whose desire, seven of Saul's race are crucified. War again with the Philistines.

AND there was a famine in the days of David for three years successively: and David consulted the oracle of the Lord. And the Lord said: It is for Saul and his bloody house, because he slew the Gabaonites.

2 Then the king calling for the Gabaonites, said to them: (Now the Gabaonites were not of the children of Israel, but the remains of the Amorrites: *and the children of Israel had sworn to them, and Saul sought to slay them out of zeal, as it were, for the children of Israel and Juda.)

3 David, therefore, said to the Gabaonites: What shall I do for you? and what shall be the atonement for you, that you may bless the inheritance of the Lord?

4 And the Gabaonites said to him: We have no contest about silver and gold, but against Saul, and against his house: neither do we desire, that any man be slain of Israel. And the king said to them: What will you, then, that I should do for you?

5 And they said to the king: The man that crushed shall make an end." Much must be supplied to make the text conformable to the former explication. We may translate, "They said, in ancient times: Let those who require more, go seek at Abela: so they finished their discourse." C.—Prot. "They shall surely ask counsel at Abel: and so they ended the matter."

VER. 19. Truth. Heb. "I am peaceable, faithful in Israel." H.—I am one of the cities most inclined to peace, and to the king's service, noted for lessons of loyalty. C.—Probably there was an academy here. M.—Mother, city, or metropolis. The Hebrews style the inferior towns, daughters. C.—Lord, a city belonging to Israel. H.

VER. 20. God, (Abst.) Lit. "Far be it, far be it from me;" as we need not put the name of God in the mouth of this profane man, without reason. H.

VER. 26. Jairite, a descendant of Jair, (C.) son of Manasse. H.—Priest. Heb. cohen, respected like a priest, (H.) chief favourite, (W.) the Rab. (Chal.) chief counsellor of David, (Vatab.) almoner, &c. It is not certain that he was of the family of Aaron, or qualified to be the domestic chaplain of the king. See C. viii. 16, &c. No other king of Israel had an officer to whom this title was given. C.

CHAP. XXI. VER. 1. Of David, after the revolt of Seba. C.—House. It seems the family and chief officers of Saul, had concurred in his cruelty and unjust zeal. Hence many of them might be still living, to undergo this chastisement; and the rest of the people were guilty of some faults. H.—If they had been perfectly innocent, still God is the dispenser of his own gifts. He is under no obligation of sending health and peace to his creatures. The just often derive greater advantage from crosses than from prosperity. The exemplary punishment of Saul's family was a lesson to kings, and to all mankind, to teach them how they ought to observe justice and the sanctity of oaths.—Gabaonites; probably after the slaughter of the priests, at Nob. 1 K. xxii. 19. C.

VER. 2. Amorrites, by which name all the nations of Chanaan were frequently designated. Gen. xv. 16. M.—They were properly Hevites.—Juda. As if Josue, and all succeeding governors, had acted wrong. Ex. xxiii. 33. Joa. vi. 19. Saul ought, at least, to have consulted God. C.

VER. 3. Atonement, to expiate the injury done to you by Saul; (M.) and that you may turn your curses into blessings. The ancients were convinced, that God attends to the imprecations of the innocent. C.

VER. 4. Gold. It is supposed that David made them an offer of some. Sarien, A. 1040.—Israel besides. At first they required all the progeny of Saul, nine in us and oppressed us unjustly, we must destroy in such manner, that there be not so much as one left of his stock in all the coasts of Israel.

6 Let seven men of his children be delivered unto us, that we may crucify them to the Lord, in Gabaa of Saul, once the chosen of the Lord. And the king said: I will give them.

7 *And the king spared Miphiboseth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, because of the oath of the Lord, that had been between David and Jonathan, the son of Saul.

8 So the king took the two sons of Respha, the daughter of Aia, whom she bore to Saul, Armoni, and Miphiboseth: and the five sons of Michol, the daughter of Saul, whom she bore to Hadriel, the son of Berzellai, that was of Molathi,

9 And gave them into the hands of the Gabaonites: and they crucified them on a hill before the Lord: and these seven died together in the first days of the harvest, when the barley began to be reaped.^b

10 And Respha, the daughter of Aia, took hair-cloth, and spread it under her upon the rock, from the beginning of the harvest, till water dropped upon them out of heaven: and suffered neither the birds to tear them by day, nor the beasts by night.

11 And it was told David, what Respha, the daughter of Aia, the concubine of Saul, had done.

12 And David went, and took the bones of Saul, and number, to be crucified: but, at David's request, and intimation that he had sworn to protect the sons of Jonathan, Miphiboseth and Micha, (H.) they were content with the death of seven. M.—They insist upon the law of retaliation. Salien.—The custom of delivering up criminals to be executed by the relations of the injured dead, still subsists in the East. C.

VER. 6. Chosen. Some think it improbable that they should give Saul this title; and Castalion would substitute ber, "in the mountain," (v. 9) instead of bechir, "anointed," a title which Junius, however, refers to David: "O thou anointed," &c. C.—But why might not these people recognize this character in Saul, which would make the punishment more disgraceful, as they chose the city of Saul, in preference, for the execution of his unhappy offspring? H.—Then, having received an order from God, lest the people might suspect that he was gratifying his private revenge. E. Josep. vii. 10. 12.

VER. 8. Of Michol. They were the sons of Merob, who was married to Hadriel; but they are here called the sons of Michol, because she adopted them, and brought them up as her own: (Ch. Chal. S. Jer. Trad.) or Merob was called Michol; (Sa.) or, what seems most probable, from the word she bore being used, (Cajet.) and as two sisters would hardly have the same name, (H.) Michol has crept into the text instead of Merob. Capel. Salien. C. 1 K. xxv. 44.

VER. 9. Lord. The prophets had frequented this hill. 1 K. viii. 4. 13. So the Gabaonites crucified these seven, before an ancient altar, as victims to appease God's anger, (C.) for the treaty with them having been violated, (H.) particularly after they had embraced the true religion. Salien. Deut. x. 19.—Barley, about Easter. M.

VER. 10. Hair-cloth, to sleep on, occasionally.—Heaven. The famine had been caused by drought. As soon therefore as rain fell, David was assured that God was appeased. He had suffered the bodies to hang so long, for that purpose, though commonly they were to be taken down before night. M.—Respha is supposed, by some, to have guarded the bodies from spring till the rain fell in autumn. But the former opinion seems more plausible. We here behold the custom of watching by the bodies of the dead. See Iliad xxiii.—Beasts. The gibbets were formerly very low. C.—Thus Blandina was exposed to wild beasts. Euseb. Hist. v. 1.

VER. 11. Done. Her piety and affliction were extraordinary. She had been brought up in delicacies, and was a person of uncommon beauty, so as to captivate Abner. C. iii. 8. She must now have been advanced in years. H.

VER. 14. Side of the mountain, or in distinct cavities. C.—Many suppose that Tela, or Sela, is the name of a place (M.) not far from Gabaa. Jos. xviii. 28. C.—Many proper names are thus translated. D.

VER. 15. Again: it is not certain at what time. Some think it was towards the beginning of David's reign, since he leads his men to battle; or the Philistines might have made an irruption into his dominions, about three years after the death of Absalom. C.—David had offered to put himself at the head of the army, against his son. C. xviii. 2. H.—Faint. He was now sixty-four years old. Salien.

VER. 16. Jesbibenob may signify, "Jesbi, the son of Ob." Sept. "Jesbe, of Nob, who was of the race of the giants." Arapha seems to have been one of (410) the bones of Jonathan, his son, from the men of Jabes Galaad, *who had stolen them from the street of Bethsan, where the Philistines had hanged them, when they had slain Saul in Gelboe.

13 And he brought from thence the bones of Saul, and the bones of Jonathan, his son: and they gathered up the bones of them that were crucified,

14 And they buried them with the bones of Saul, and of Jonathan, his son, in the land of Benjamin, in the side, in the sepulchre of Cis, his father: and they did all that the king had commanded, and God shewed mercy again to the land after these things.

15 And the Philistines made war again against Israel, and David went down, and his servants with him, and fought against the Philistines. And David growing faint,

16 Jesbibenob, who was of the race of Arapha, *the iron of whose spear weighed three hundred ounces, being girded with a new sword, attempted to kill David;

17 And Abisai, the son of Sarvia, rescued him, and striking the Philistine, killed him. Then David's men swore unto him, saying: Thou shalt go no more out with us to battle, lest thou put out the lamp of Israel.

18 *There was also a second battle in Gob against the Philistines: then Sobochai, of Husathi, slew Saph, of the race of Arapha, of the family of the giants.

19 And there was a third battle in Gob against the great fame, (v. 18–21–22) who had several children; unless other giants assumed his name. C.—Ounces. Heb. "sicles of brass, in weight." Sicles is only understood, as on similar occasions. Neither is sword expressed; (H.) so that some think he had on a new suit of armour. Sym. "a sword." Rom. Sept. "a club." The weight of the whole spear is specified in Heb. Sept. &c. (C.) as weighing "300—of brass," (H.) of which metal it seems to have been formed, as the Jews had no such money till after the captivity. C.

VER. 17. Lamp; glory and protection. Achilles reproaches himself for not having been "a light to" his friend. Iliad x.

VER. 18. Gob, as Gazer was called by the Philistines; (1 Par. xx. 4. Salien) unless (H.) the former word be a mistake of the transcriber. C.—Sept. (Alex.) reads, Geth. H.—Sobochai, one of David's valiant men. 1 Par. xi. 29.—Saphai is added in Chron. xx.

VER. 19. Adeodatus, the son of Forrest. So it is rendered in the Latin Vulgate, by giving the interpretation of the Hebrew names, which are Elhanan, the son of Jaare. Ch.—We should translate all the proper names, or none; as the present mode is extremely perplexing. Adeodatus might therefore be rendered, "God given;" (Dieudonné, as the French have it, though they will not translate Saltus, but leave Jaare) or, if Adeodatus must remain, as it is sometimes a proper name, why may not Saltus? A mere English reader might suppose that Forrest was a Hebrew name, and, with Swift in jest, maintain the high antiquity of our language. H.—Regularly proper names should be retained. C.—But the learned have often chosen to give the import of foreign names, in the language in which they have been writing. See Du Thou's History. Thus Dubois is styled Sylvius; Newman, Neander; &c.—An embroiderer. Prot. make this a part of the man's name "Jaare-oregim." Sept. "the son of Arioregim." In 1 Par. xx. no notice is taken of his profession. H.—That passage will evince that Elhanan is not the same with David, as some would infer from the mention of Goliath's death, but the son of Jair, uncle of Joab, (C. xxxiii. 24.) who was born at Bethlehem, though the verse in Paral. would insinuate less correctly, that the giant's name was Lechem, thus, "Elehanan . . . slew Lechem, the brother," &c. as the copyist had written ath instead of bith. C.—Our version has not this mistake: "Adeodatus, the son of Saltus, a Bethlehemite, slew the brother of Goliath, the Gethite," &c. 1 Par. xx. 5. H.—It would be difficult to find a passage more disfigured than the present; and, without the help of the Paral. it would be impossible to make it out. C.—Kennicott makes a similar remark. Diss. i. and ii. But he believes that the Book of Chronicles, though the latest, and usually the most corrupt, of the Old Testament, is here perfectly correct; and that the passage before us is strangely corrupted, "Jaare Oregim, a Bethlehemite," being placed instead of, . . . "Jaar slew Lahmi," as he thinks that oregim, "weavers," has been inserted from the line below, p. 79. Josephus (vii. 10.) relates this transaction as follows: "When the king had sent a fresh army against them, Nephan, his relation, displayed the greatest valour. For engaging in a single combat with the bravest man of the Philistines, and killing his antagonist, he caused the rest to turn their backs, and many of the enemy fell in that battle." Thus he evades all the difficulty, adding much out of his own head; and by Nephan, designating Elehanan, the son of his (Joab's) uncle, (C. xxiii. 24.) or Dodo, a word which the Vulg. ren-

Philistines, in which Adeodatus, the son of Forrest, an embroiderer, of Bethlehem, slew Goliath, the Gethite, the shaft of whose spear was like a weaver's beam.

20 A fourth battle was in Geth: where there was a man of great stature, that had six fingers on each hand, and six toes on each foot, four and twenty in all, and he was of the race of Arapha.

21 And he reproached Israel: and Jonathan, the son of Samaa, the brother of David, slew him.

22 These four were born of Arapha, in Geth, and they fell by the hand of David, and of his servants.

CHAP. XXII.

King David's psalm of thanksgiving for his deliverance from all his enemies.

AND David spoke to the Lord the words of this canticle, in the day that the Lord delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul.

2 And he said: "The Lord is my rock, and my strength, and my saviour.

3 God is my strong one, in him will I trust: my shield, and the horn of my salvation: he lifteth me up, and is my refuge: my saviour, thou wilt deliver me from iniquity.

4 ^b I will call on the Lord who is worthy to be praised: and I shall be saved from my enemies.

5 For the pangs of death have surrounded me: the floods of Belial have made me afraid.

6 The cords of hell compassed me: the snares of death prevented me.

7 In my distress, I will call upon the Lord, and I will cry to my God: and he will hear my voice out of his temple, and my cry shall come to his ears.

8 The earth shook and trembled, the foundations of the mountains were moved and shaken, because he was angry with them.

9 A smoke went up from his nostrils, and a devouring fire out of his mouth: coals were kindled by it.

10 He bowed the heavens, and came down: and darkness was under his feet.

11 And he rode upon the Cherubims, and flew: and slid upon the wings of the wind.

12 He made darkness a covering round about him: dropping waters out of the clouds of the heavens.

^a Psalm xvii. 8.

lers patruî ejus, "his paternal uncle," though it hath a wider signification, and denotes other relations. Hence, as Joab was the nephew of David, this brave man might be in the same degree, and born of one of the children of Isai; or, perhaps, Josephus infers that he was a kinsman of David, because he was of the same city. H.—Goliath. He might have the same name as his brother, who had been slain by David forty-three years before; (Salien) or the title of brother may only signify, that this giant resembled the former in size and strength. Prov. xviii. 9.—Beam. See 1 K. xvii. 7. C.

VER. 20. Fourth. Josephus says this was the last war with the Philistines; and Tostat. supposes, that they wished to retake the city of Geth. Salien.—Stature, or "of contradiction." Aquila.—Heb. Madon. Sept. leave it as the proper name of a place, "Madon," specified Joa. xi. 1. and xii. 18. Capel would read, "a man of Madian."—Siz. Such people were styled Sedigit, among the Romans. The daughters of Horatius were thus distinguished, as well as the poet Volcatius. Pliny xi. 43.

VER. 22. Of David, who was present, though it does not appear that he slew any of the four. C.

CHAP. XXII. VER. 1. Spoke, &c. By comparing this with the 17th Psalm, we may be convinced how much the Hebrew varies, particularly if we examine also the MSS. Kennicott specifies no less than 600 variations in this one canticle, and refutes the opinion of those who say that the 17th Psalm is a second edition, corrected by David's own hand, as the MSS. frequently shew the inaccuracies of the printed copies. He has collated them with Walton's Polyglott. The variations are not however all distinct from each other, sometimes twenty MSS. having the same various readings, and many of them relate to the letter v. See Diss. ii.

13 By the brightness before him, the coals of fire were kindled.

14 The Lord shall thunder from heaven: and the Most High shall give forth his voice.

15 He shot his arrows, and scattered them: his lightning, and consumed them.

16 And the overflowings of the sea appeared, and the foundations of the world were laid open at the rebuke of the Lord, at the blast of the spirit of his wrath.

17 He sent from on high, and took me, and drew me out of many waters.

18 He delivered me from my most mighty enemy, and from them that hated me: for they were too strong for me.

19 He prevented me in the day of my affliction, and the Lord became my stay.

20 And he brought me forth into a large place, he delivered me, because I pleased him.

21 The Lord will reward me according to my justice: and according to the cleanness of my hands he will repay me.

22 Because I have kept the ways of the Lord, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

23 For all his judgments are in my sight: and his statutes I have not removed from me.

24 And I shall be perfect with him: and shall keep myself from my iniquity.

25 And the Lord will recompense me according to my justice: and according to the cleanness of my hands in the sight of his eyes.

26 With the holy one, thou wilt be holy: and with the valiant perfect.

27 With the elect, thou wilt be elect: and with the perverse, thou wilt be perverted.

28 And the poor people thou wilt save: and with thy eyes, thou wilt humble the haughty.

29 For thou art my lamp, O Lord: and thou, O Lord, wilt enlighten my darkness.

30 For through thee I shall be girded and run: through my God I shall leap over the wall.

31 As for God, his way is spotless, the word of the Lord is tried by fire: he is the shield of all that trust in him.

^b Psalm xvii. 4.

p. 565. We shall give the explication in the order of the Psalms. The collation of parallel passages is of infinite advantage. Frequently (H.) the words differ so as to explain one another.—Saul. He is specified as the most dangerous. David, by divine inspiration, thanks God for his deliverance from all his enemies, both corporal and spiritual, enjoying peace of mind on account of his sins being forgiven, and all his opponents repressed. W.—This year, the thirty-seventh of David's reign, was free from any commotion. Yet the king seems to have given way to a little vanity, on account of the many valiant men whom God had collected in his service; (C. xxiii.) and hence he consented to the unfortunate resolution of numbering his subjects. Salien, A. 8018.

VER. 7. Temple. David was now busy in making preparations for it.

VER. 11. Upon. Cordell (M.) would translate the Heb. "as in contest."

VER. 13. Kindled. The words ahju abru seem to be wanting here, as they are found in Syr. Arab. and the Psalm. Kennicott would render this most striking image, "at the brightness of his presence his clouds removed; They kindled into coals of fire," &c. Diss. i.

VER. 14. Shall. Heb. as well in the past tense. "The Lord thundered," &c. H.

VER. 16. Overflowings. Heb. "channels," the waters receding as at the Red Sea, and at the passage of the Jordan.

VER. 22. God. Perhaps David might have written this before his fall; or, if afterwards, his sincere repentance had restored him to his former state.

VER. 26. Holy; treating all according to their deserts. H.

VER. 29. Lamp. Heb. Thair, "thou wilt light" my lamp, seems deficient; as it is found in some MSS. Syr. Arab. Psalm xvii. &c. Kennicott.

32 Who is God but the Lord : and who is strong but our God ?

33 God, who hath girded me with strength : and made my way perfect.

34 * Who maketh my feet like the feet of harts, and setteth me upon my high places.

35 Who teacheth my hands to war : and maketh my arms like a bow of brass.

36 Thou hast given me the shield of thy salvation : and thy mildness hath multiplied me.

37 Thou shalt enlarge my steps under me : and my ancles shall not fail.

38 I will pursue after my enemies, and crush them : and will not return again till I consume them.

39 I will consume them, and break them in pieces, so that they shall not rise : they shall fall under my feet.

40 Thou hast girded me with strength to battle : thou hast made them that resisted me to bow under me.

41 My enemies, thou hast made to turn their back to me : and them that hated me, and I shall destroy them.

42 They shall cry, and there shall be none to save : to the Lord, and he shall not hear them.

43 I shall beat them as small as the dust of the earth : I shall crush them, and spread them abroad like the mire of the streets.

44 Thou wilt save me from the contradictions of my people : thou wilt keep me to be the head of the Gentiles : the people which I know not, shall serve me.

45 The sons of the stranger will resist me, at the hearing of the ear they will obey me.

46 The strangers are melted away, and shall be straitened in their distresses.

47 The Lord liveth, and my God is blessed : and the strong God of my salvation shall be exalted.

* Psalm cxliii. 1.—^b Psalm xvii. 49.

VER. 44. Me. Though David conquered some Gentiles, and some were converted to the true faith under the Old Testament, yet the fulness of the Gentiles belongs to the Church of Christ, the perpetual stability of which is here foretold, v. 51. W.

CHAP. XXIII. VER. 1. Last words, which he spoke by inspiration, (M.) or which may be considered as the conclusion of his Psalms, and inserted after the 71st, (C.) or as a preface or summary of those divine canticles ; (D.) or they relate to the last ages, and to the Messias, (Chal.) the end of the law. H.—Some think it has not been inserted among the Psalms, as not being written in verse : (Sanctius) but it is composed in the true spirit of the Hebrew poetry, though very obscure.—Christ, who should be born of him ; or David himself was appointed to be “the king” of God’s people. Sept. “he whom God raised up, the Christ of,” &c. Heb. “sovereign anointed of,” &c.—Psalmist. The Holy Spirit directs David to speak in his own praise. His Psalms were always most highly esteemed in Israel. C.—Said. This preamble may remind us of a similar one of Balaam. Num. xxiv. 8. The prophets generally declare who they are. H.

VER. 2. Tongue. Nothing could more decisively prove the inspiration of the sacred books.

VER. 3. Strong one. This is one of the most common titles of God, 1 K. ii. 2. Heb. “the rock.”—In the fear. Heb. “of the fear ;” that is, of the just, who live in the fear of God. Such abstract expressions are frequent ; so “the son of the captivity, of riches,” &c. means a captive or a rich man. C.—God spoke such words to David as tended to promote solid virtue and piety. H.—We may explain the ruler, &c. of the Messias, who shall diffuse grace and glory throughout the earth. Prot. “He that ruleth over men, must be just, ruling in the fear of God.” An excellent lesson for all in power. H.

VER. 4. As the light, &c. So shall be the kingdom of Christ. Ch.—Heb. “Like the morning light, shall the sun arise.” But is this sense? Is not the sun the light of the morning? The oldest Heb. MS. in England has the word Jehova before Sun, which seems to have been acknowledged by the Sept. though now unintelligible ; and thus we are freed from this difficulty, and the passage is proved to be prophetic of the great sun of justice. Malac. iv. 2. Isai. lx. 2. Kennicott, Dis. i. p. 471.—The Heb. is extremely obscure. C.—Prot. And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds ; as the tender grass springeth out of the earth by clear shining after rain. H.—These comparisons may be applied to the Psalms and other inspired writings, which enlighten the eyes ; (Ps. xviii. 9.) or to Christ, whose glory surpasses that of the sun, (Ps. lxxi. 5.) and whose graces produce the just. Isai. xlv. 8. M.—

48 God, who givest me revenge, and bringest down people under me.

49 Who bringest me forth from my enemies, and liftest me up from them that resist me : ^b from the wicked man, thou shalt deliver me.

50 * Therefore will I give thanks to thee, O Lord, among the Gentiles, and will sing to thy name.

51 Giving great salvation to his king, and shewing mercy to David, his anointed, and to his seed for ever.

CHAP. XXIII.

The last words of David. A catalogue of his valiant men.

NOW these are David’s last words. David, the son of Isai, said : The man to whom it was appointed concerning the Christ of the God of Jacob, ^a the excellent psalmist of Israel, said :

2 The Spirit of the Lord hath spoken to me, and his word by my tongue.

3 The God of Israel said to me, the strong one of Israel spoke, the ruler of men, the just ruler in the fear of God.

4 As the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, shineth in the morning, without clouds, and as the grass springeth out of the earth by rain.

5 Neither is my house so great with God, that he should make with me an eternal covenant, firm in all things, and assured. For he is all my salvation, and all my will : neither is there ought thereof, that springeth not up.

6 But transgressors shall all of them be plucked up as thorns, which are not taken away with hands.

7 And if a man will touch them, he must be armed with iron, and with the staff of a lance : but they shall be set on fire, and burnt to nothing.

8 * These are the names of the valiant men of David. Jesbaham, sitting in the chair, was the wisest chief

* Rom. xv. 9.—^a Acts ii. 10.—^b 1 Par. xi. 11.

We might expect that David was going to compare the glory of his reign and of his family, with that of the rising sun. Judg. v. ult. But he does not finish the comparison, being filled with a sense of his own misery. C.

VER. 5. Neither is my house, &c. As if he should say : This everlasting covenant was not due to my house : but purely owing to his bounty, who is all my salvation, and my will ; that is, who hath always saved me, and granted me what I desired of him ; so that I and my house, through his blessing, have sprung up, and succeeded in all things. Ch.—He clearly distinguishes between the covenant made with him as to his earthly kingdom, and that which regards Christ. W.—Even the former should be of long duration. Ps. cxxxi. 11. H.—Up. Heb. seems to contradict all that had gone before ; “for it shall not flourish.” C.—Prot. “although he make it not to grow ;” (H.) unless we read with an interrogation, “And shall not my family flourish?” which was a natural reference to v. 4. C.—God had blessed David with the dew of heaven, and with the fatness of the earth. M.—His glory and happiness should not be of short duration, like the brightest summer-day, or a transient flower. H.

VER. 6. But. This word is neglected by the Sept. who subjoin this to the preceding verse. “Because the lawless man shall not flourish. They are all like thorns thrust out, for they shall not be handled,” lest they prick. H.

VER. 8. Jesbaham, the son of Huchamoni. For this was the name of this hero, as appears from 1 Chron. xi. v. 11. Ch.—But then sitting, &c. should not be retained. H.—Most tender, &c. He appeared like one tender and weak, but was indeed most valiant and strong. It seems the Latin has here given the interpretation of the Hebrew name of the hero, to whom Jesbaham was like, instead of the name itself, which was Adino the Eznite, one much renowned of old for his valour. Ch.—The Vulg. has, contrary to custom, translated many of the proper names. C.—The French version would suppose that Adino, the Heznite, was the hero’s name ; and queen Elizabeth’s version (1599) is, “He that sat in the seat of wisdom, being chief of the princes, was Adino, the Eznite.” H.—But no such person is mentioned any where else, in the Bible ; and these words have been corrupted, like many others in this chapter, as may be gathered from collating it with Chronicles, &c. Kennicott was encouraged to continue, if not to begin his labours, to shew the imperfection of the printed Hebrew, by comparing these passages, though he had formerly imagined that the text had been preserved in its original purity. See Diss. ii. p. 496. He shews the inaccuracy of queen Elizabeth’s version, and observes that some have very abruptly inferred, that David was the first of his own mighty men, from the Vulg. which is literally, “These are the names of the valiant men of David. Sitting in the chair, the among the three; he was like the most tender little worm of the wood, who killed eight hundred men at one onset.

9 After him was Eleazar, the son of Dodo, the Ahoite, one of the three valiant men that were with David, when they defied the Philistines, and they were there gathered together to battle.

10 And when the men of Israel were gone away, he stood and smote the Philistines till his hand was weary, and grew stiff with the sword: and the Lord wrought a great victory that day: and the people that were fled away, returned to take spoils of them that were slain.

11 And after him was Semma, the son of Age, of Arari. And the Philistines were gathered together in a troop: for there was a field full of lentils. And when the people were fled from the face of the Philistines,

12 He stood in the midst of the field, and defended most wise prince among the three. The same is like the most tender," &c. No name is here specified, (H.) though the catalogue be given expressly to honour their names.—In the chair. Heb. Bashebeth, "seems to be carelessly transcribed in here from the line above," as Oregim was taken from the subsequent line. C. xxi. 19.—Wiseat. Heb. "the Hachmonite."—Three: it is in Heb. "the third;" and in Chron. thirty, improperly. Prot. "the Tachmonite, that sat in the seat, chief among the captains, (the same was Adino, the Eznite) against 800 whom he slew at one time," is therefore inaccurate.—Tachmonite has the th corrupted, from e, which stands for ben, "the son of Hachmoni;" though, as the father of Jashobeam was Zadiel, it would be better rendered the Hachmonite, being his family or local name. It is not always possible to know which is meant. The ellipsis in the Prot. version, and the confounding of Jashobeam with Adino, cannot be excused. Adinu seems to be (H.) corrupted from auror, (as v. 18, and 1 Par.) "lifted up;" catenu, a word retained in the Arabic language, for "his spear;" (Vulg.) wood. L. Clerc reads catnu, which he deems inexplicable, no less than Adinu: but the best copies have catenu; so that we need not reject it.—Killed, or "wounded," is the general interpretation of elol; but it signifies also, "a soldier."—Eight is three, in Paral. Similar mistakes have probably arisen from the use of numeral letters. See 4 K. viii. 26. We read, that Abisai lifted up his spear against 300. This was, perhaps, an usual number for a regiment of three companies. 1 K. xxix. 2. Both Jesabab and Abisai ventured to contend, singly, with so superior a force; but the latter displayed rather less valour, so that he did not attain unto the glory of the former; which he ought to have done, if both had killed the same number. Kennicott would therefore translate, "These are the names of the mighty men, whom David had: Jashobeam, the Hachmonite, chief of Three: He lifted up his spear against 300 soldiers, at one time." He observes that thirty-seven heroes are particularly specified: (v. 39) Joab, (the captain-general) Jashobeam, Eleazar, Shammah, (the first ternary) Abishai, Benaiah, and Asael; (the second ternary) after whom follow thirty, whose exploits are not recorded. If any should still maintain that this verse is correct, we must say (H.) that Adino is a different person from Jesabab, (as the Vulg. reads it, 1 Par.) and that he killed 800; whereas the latter was only like him, in as much as he slew 300. M.—The marvellous is greatly diminished by substituting 300 instead of 800, and by allowing that the heroes contended with, though they might not kill, the whole company of 300 soldiers. See Kennicott. It seems most rational to admit some corrections, to which we are led by the Sept. "Jesabath, (Vatic. Jesosthe, the Chanaaite) the son of Thakemoni. He was the chief of the three. Adino, the Azonean, is useless, (C.) as a proper name: when corrected, it is rendered, (H.) "he drew," &c. Whence have they taken this, as it is not in Heb. at present, unless they read, (C.) auror, elevavit, "he lifted up his spear." Ken.—The number of 800 slain by one man, in one engagement, is also more credible than 800. C.—Josephus increases the number to 900; but then he supposes they were slain in various battles. "The king had thirty-eight, chiefly renowned for their achievements. . . The first, Isamias, the son of Achamani, who rushing, not once, but frequently, into the midst of the enemy, did not cease from slaughtering till he had killed 900." We may observe that he increases the number of the mighty men. H.—Delany reduces it to thirty-six, though he afterwards reckons thirty-seven, erroneously making thirty-one commanders of the third order, when he ought to have allowed the odd one to be the captain-general, and placed him before the two ternaries. Lightfoot also reckons thirty-six, and mentions them in this remarkably false order: 1, Joab; 2, Adino, of Ezui, called Jashobeam, by office; 3, Eleazar. And in the second rank: 1, Abishai; 2, Shammah; 3, Benaiah. Kennicott.—All these officers were styled, Shalischim. See Ex. xiv. 7. C.—A body of "Thirty" was, perhaps, originally formed by David; and, though he afterwards admitted a greater number, they all went by the first name. Salien.

VER. 9. Dodo. In Latin, Patruj ejus, which is the interpretation of the Hebrew name Dodo. The same occurs in v. 24, (Ch.) and signifies, "of his paternal uncle." H.—Sept. read Dudai, (C.) "of his father's brother." He, or his father, is styled Dudai. 1 Par. xxvii. 4. C.—Sept. (Alex.) translate both Dodo and Dudai, "the son of his father's brother," the son of Sousei, or (Vat.) Doudei. Dudai seems to be the more accurate here, as he is thus more distinguished from Dodo, v. 24. Chron. v. 26.—Defied. Heb. is incorrect, and ought to be a proper name as is evident from the word there.—Josephus calls it, Isamias, (perhaps it, and defeated the Philistines: and the Lord gave a great victory.

13 Moreover, also before this, these three who were princes among the thirty, went down, and came to David, in the harvest time, into the cave of Odollam: and the camp of the Philistines was in the valley of the giants.

14 And David was then in a hold: and there was a garrison of the Philistines then in Bethlehem.

15 And David longed, and said: O that some man would give me a drink of the water out of the cistern, that is in Bethlehem, by the gate.

16 And the three valiant men broke through the camp of the Philistines, and drew water out of the cistern of Bethlehem, that was by the gate, and brought it to David: but he would not drink, but offered it to the Lord, originally, Isamias) Chron. Pasdammin, or Ephesdammin. 1 K. xvii. 1. It is hardly probable that the Hebrews should defy or upbraid the Philistines, and immediately run away. We should therefore translate with 1 Par. men. "He was with David at Pasdammin. And when the Philistines were there gathered together to battle, and the men of Israel were gone away, he arose," &c. Kennicott.

VER. 10. Sword; holding it, and exerting himself so long; (Sanctius) or on account of the blood, which glued, as it were, his hand to the sword. Joseph. M.—This verse, and as far as troop in the following, is omitted in 1 Par.; so that Semma is not so much as mentioned, (H.) and of course the number thirty-seven cannot be found. Ken.—Perhaps Samoth may be the same hero. 1 Par. ii. 27. and xxvii. 8. C.

VER. 11. Troop. Heb. Lachaya, has been much controverted: but it appears to be the name of Lechi, or Lehi, "the jaw-bone," (Josephus and Sept. Complut.) so memorable for the exploit of Samson. Bochart Anim. p. 1. B. ii. 15.—Vulg. lit. in stations, "in a station." Some copies of the Sept. "against wild beasts;" "To hunt wild beasts." Syr. and Arab. But it is most probably the name of a place. C.—Lentils. 1 Par. Barley seems more correct, as the field could not be full of both at the same time; (H.) and barley is of more general utility. Kennicott.—Yet some would assert, that there was barley in one part and lentils in the other. Buxtorf, &c.

VER. 13. Before this. The exploits performed before the death of Goliath have been recorded. The following took place soon after the taking of Jerusalem. Heb. simply, "And three of the Schalischim came to David at harvest-time, (Paral. more correctly, to the rocks,) and into the cave," &c. C.—Three is undoubtedly the proper word, though the printed Heb. copies have thirty in the text; except the most ancient edition of Ximenes, 1515, which retains three, with all the versions, and some Heb. MSS. and as the v. 17. itself reads among, would be better above; (v. 23,) as the three officers aforesaid were not of the body of thirty, but of a still higher order.—Harvest. Heb. el Katsir, is never used elsewhere in this sense; and the Sept. have left the latter word as a proper name, "at Kasoar;" etour seems to have been the original word, as in Paral. "to the rock." Such places had frequently caverns or strong holds, 1 K. xxiv. 1. 4.—Camp. The Sept. also seem to have read men, as in Par. instead of with, which never occurs, for "a troop." Ken.—This camp was distant from the station at Bethlehem, (M.) which was distant from Jerusalem "two hours travel." Maundrell.—Giants, or Raphaim, 2 K. xxi. 18. M.

VER. 14. Garrison. Lit. "station," (H.) or advanced guard.—In. The o is omitted in Heb. as on many other occasions; (4 K. xiv. 14. Ken.) owing perhaps to the following words beginning with the same letter. H.

VER. 15. Gate. David had been educated in that town. M.—He expresses his wish to see his native place delivered from the hands of the enemy, more than for water; (Sanctius. Ken.) or, being very thirsty, he speaks his sentiments without designing that any should attempt to procure him the water. C.—The three valiant men considered his desire as a law. M.—They were not to be condemned of rashness, though it would have been such in ordinary men. Salien.—David only intended to try the valour of his soldiers. When they brought the water he would not drink, judging that precious things should be offered to God. W.

VER. 16. Camp, or station of soldiers, v. 13. 14.—Offered it, as "a libation," according to the Heb. and Sept. Vayaneec is commonly used; but vinsoo, in Par. is the truer reading, as "it contains the three radical letters; and it were greatly to be wished that the verbs in every other place had also those radical letters restored, which have been omitted by the Masorets, and supplied by their punctuations." Ken. Dia. i. p. 154.—Lord, as a sacrifice, worthy of him, and to teach his followers to be temperate, (M.) and not to expose their lives unnecessarily. H.—"He had formerly indulged himself in forbidden pleasures." S. Greg.—David thus asked pardon for having, undesignedly, hazarded the lives of his men, (Ken.) and gave thanks for their safe return. Josephus.—A libation of water was solemnly made, 1 K. vii. 6. The pagans used water when they had no wine, as they never sat down to meat, or offered sacrifices, without making a libation. C. See Iliad H. Aeneid viii. 279.

Dixit & in mensa laticum libavit honorem. Aeneid i. 740.

VER. 17. Drink. This word is acknowledged in 1 Par. and in all the ancient 18 Abisai, also the brother of Joab, the son of Sarvia, was chief among three: and he lifted up his spear against three hundred, whom he slew; and he was renowned among the three,

19 And the noblest of three, and was their chief; but to the three first he attained not.

20 And Banaías, the son of Joiada, a most valiant man, of great deeds, of Cabseel: he slew the two lions of Moab, and he went down, and slew a lion in the midst of a pit, in the time of snow.

21 He also slew an Egyptian, a man worthy to be a sight, having a spear in his hand: but he went down to him with a rod, and forced the spear out of the hand of the Egyptian, and slew him with his own spear.

22 These things did Banaías, the son of Joiada.

23 And he was renowned among the three valiant men, who were the most honourable among the thirty:

versions. Ken.—Prot. supply, "Is not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives?" Instead of Jehova, (H.) which ought to have m prefixed, we find malcun; (1 Par.) a word never used in such solemn appeals to the Lord. This seems owing to the superstition of the Jews, who would not pronounce the former name, perhaps in imitation of the heathens, who kept the names of their tutelary gods secret, lest the enemy might call them out, and thus obtain possession of the country. See Macrobius. iii. 9. No mention is made of the Romans making use of this mode of evocation at the last siege of Jerusalem, as they were unacquainted with the true name of God. Virgil (ii. 351,) writes,—

Excussere omnes Adytis Arisque relictis, Dii quibus imperium hoc steterat.—See Servius. Kennicott.

VER. 18. Three. Sept. (Alex.) and Josephus read "six hundred," (H.) against all the rest.

VER. 19. Three. Heb. haci, seems to be mistaken for bossuin, "above two;" as one of the Greek versions in the Hexapla renders it, with the Sept. "Of the three he was more honourable than two; therefore he was their captain, and yet so," &c. Thus we see a double ternary fully established, v. 8. Kennicott.

VER. 20. Banaías. The v at the end of this man's name, is wanting in Par. It serves to distinguish him more from one of the Thirty, who was the 11th captain in waiting on the king; (1 Par. xxvii. 14,) whereas this was the third, (ib. v.) and one of great renown. 3 K. i. 32.—Lions. Heb. ari, "a lion;" and el, "god," designate people "of extraordinary valour." Ken.—Hence the Arabians give the title to Ali, the son-in-law of Mohammed. Bochart, Anim. iii. 1.—These two were noblemen, (Chal.) giants, (Joseph.) or fortresses; (Vatab.) namely, Areopolis, which is divided into two parts by the Arnon. C.—Some suppose that he slew three real lions. The last, being in such a confined situation, enhanced his merit. Cajet. M.—The Alex. copy of the Sept. has a great omission of the words between slew, occasioned by the word recurring twice; as also v. 21. Dr. Milles attributes the omission of the famous text 1 John v. 7, to a similar cause; μαρτυρεται, being found in the subsequent verse. "Proclivi admodum errore, quod norunt, quibus cum veteribus membranis res est." 2nd edit.—"A source of frequent mistakes, as all know who have consulted old MSS."

VER. 21. Sight, for size. Josephus.—Heb. "a man of great aspect," which 1 Par. properly explains "five cubits high."—Hand. Sept. supply what seems to be omitted, "like a weaver's beam," (Ken.) as it is found in Paral.—Rod, or rather "a staff," like David's. 1 K. xvii. 43. and xl. 43. H.—Some men, with a stick or cudgel, will not fear to encounter a man armed; (C.) as we see exemplified in Q. Curtius, (ix. 7,) where Dioxippus, the Athenian wrestler, overcame Horratius of Macedon, who had challenged him out in a fit of drunkenness. H.

VER. 23. Who were. Heb. "he was honourable above the thirty." Sept. erroneously read three; as he was only the second in this series, though superior to the body of thirty. See v. 13. The versions seem here perplexed, for want of observing this distinction of ranks.—Council. Heb. "over his obedience," or "guard." Joseph. C. xx. 23.—Sept. "over his own country," mospetha, instead of the present el mishnahlo, super cusculationem suam: or rather mossnorthu, custodiam suam. Grot. Ken.—Banaías held a very distinguished rank among the officers at court. He was like the king's eye and ear. H.—These titles were given to some by the eastern kings. Apuleius, Mundo. Brisson. Pers. i.—Midas was said to have such great ears, only on account of his spies. Conon. narrat. i. C.

VER. 24. Was one. Heb. the preposition b is here used, which signifies "above;" as v. 13. and 23. and as Junius renders it. H.—"Asael . . was head of the thirty." Arab.—He could not be one of that body, as the number is complete without him, and he is necessary to fill up the second ternary. The Book of Chronicles does not point this out with so much precision as it had been already done. Kennicott.—Asael was slain b. Ahuer. C. ii. 23. "He but he attained not to the first three: And David made him of his privy council.

24 Asael, the brother of Joab, was one of the thirty; Elehanan, the son of Dodo, of Bethlehem,

25 Semma, of Harodi, Elica, of Harodi,

26 Heles, of Phalti, Hira, the son of Acces, of Thecua,

27 Abiezer, of Anathoth, Mobonnai, of Husati,

28 Selmon, the Ahohite, Maharai, the Netophathite,

29 Heled, the son of Baana, also a Netophathite, Ithai, the son of Ribai, of Gabaath, of the children of Benjamin,

30 Banaia, the Pharathonite, Heddai, of the torrent Gaas,

31 Abialbon, the Arbathite, Azmaveth, of Beromi,

32 Eliaba, of Salaboni: of the sons of Jassen, Jonathan,

33 Semma, of Orori, Aliam, the son of Sarar, the Arorite,

34 Eliphelet, the son of Aasbai, the son of Machati, Eliam, the son of Achitophel, the Gelonite,

35 Hesrai, of Carmel, Pharai, of Arbi,

36 Igaal, the son of Nathan, of Soba, Bonni, of Gadi, was captain of the fourth band. 1 Par. xxvii. 7.—Elehanan, the first of the thirty.—Dodo. Lit. patruí ejua, "of his (Asael's) uncle," which might, perhaps, be as well translated as 1 Par. xi. 26. See C. xxi. 19. The Sept. give both, "Dodei, the son of his father's brother," as v. 9; (H.) or "rather those two translations are by some transcriber, or editor, injudiciously thrown together." Kennicott.

VER. 25. Semma. The same with the third hero, though his country is differently written, v. 11. C.—But this is very improbable, as the number of 37 would be thus destroyed. The former was an Hararite. The Sept. style the present captain, Sannoth, in 1 Par.; Vulg. Sannoth; and the Ald. copy has Senoth here. He was the fifth captain; (1 Par. xxvii. 8,) and the four subsequent ones relieved each other in waiting on the king.—Harodi, more correct than Arorite, 1 Par. (H.) as the Sept. also there terminate with di.—Elica is omitted, 1 Par. xi. (Kennic.) as he perhaps died soon; and Zabad succeeding to his honours, comes at the end of these 20 heroes. Ib. v. 30. Junius.

VER. 26. Phalti. Par. Phalonite. H.—Nu has been mistaken for t. This is the seventh captain in waiting. Heb. "Heletz, the Pelonite." It will suffice here to express how Kennicott would write the names of the following mighty men; referring for more particulars to his learned Diss. on 1 Chron. xi. and to the notes on that chap. v. 28, &c. In the body of 30, he places, 1. Elehanan, the son of Dodo, of Bethlehem; 2. Shamhoth, the Harodite; 3. Elica, the Harodite; (supplied by Zabad) 4. Heletz, the Pelonite; 5. Ira, the son of Ikkesh, the Tekoite; 6. Abiezer, the Anathothite; 7. Sibbecai, the Hushathite; (as C. xxi. 18. 1 Par. xx. 4. and xxvii. 11.) 8. Ilai, the Ahohite; 9. Maharai, the Netophathite; 10. Heled, the son of Baana, the Netophathite; 11. Ithai, the son of Ribai, of Gibeai, of the sons of Benjamin; 12. Benaiah, the Pirathonite; 13. Hurai, of the brooks of Gaas; 14. Abialbon, the Arbathite; 15. Azmaveth, the Bahurimite; 16. Eliaba, the Shaalbomite; 17. Gouni, (a word lost in Heb.) of the sons of Hassun; 18. Jonathan, the son of Shamha, the Hararite; (see C. xxi. 21.) 19. Ahiam, the son of Shacar, the Hararite; 20. Eliphelet, the son of Aasbai, the Maacathite; 21. Eliam, the son of Abithophel, the Gilonite; 22. Hetzrai, the Carmelite; 23. Naarai, the son of Azbai; 24. Joal, the brother of Nathan, of Tzobah; (see 1 Par.) 25. Bani, the Gadite; 26. Tzelek, the Ammonite; 27. Naharai, the Barothite, armour-bearer to Joab, the son of Zeruiah; 28. Ira, the Ithrite; 29. Gareb, the Ithrite; 30. Uriah, the Hethite. After these follow Zabad and 15 other brave men, though less renowned than the preceding, 1 Par. xi. 42. It is a pity that the Masorets have introduced a new mode of pronunciation, and that it has been adopted by the Prot. so that it is almost impossible to recognize in their work the scriptural names of the most ancient versions of the Sept. and Vulg. H.

VER. 27. Mobonnai. Sept. have translated the Heb. "of the sons," mobni, (Kennicott) which is corrupted from sobei, or (H.) Sobbochai, who was a Husathite. 1 Par. xi. 29. C.

VER. 28. Selmon, or Ilai.

VER. 29. Heled. Heb. ends improperly in b.

VER. 30. Heddai: d is exchanged for r in Paral. Hurai.

VER. 31. Abialbon, or Abiel.—Beromi, or Azmoth, a Bauramite.

VER. 32. Jonathan. David's nephew, (1 Par.) of the sons of Assem, a Gezonite. This ought, perhaps, to be "Gouni, of the sons," &c. otherwise the name will be lost, contrary to the design of the sacred writer. The verse is not terminated at Jonathan. But he was the son of Sage, (or rather of Semma, as here, v. 33) an Ararite. 1 Par. H.—Sage was also the son of Samma, (v. 11,) as Sage and Age are visibly the same; (C.) though of this we may doubt. H.

VER. 33. Aliam, &c. Par. Ahian, the son of Sachar. The change is easy.

VER. 34. Eliphelet, &c. or Eliphal, the son of Ur; Hepher, a Macherathite; Ahia, a Phelonite; Hesro, a Carmelite. See 1 Par. xi. 35.

VER. 35. Arbi. Par. "Naari, the son of Azbai." H.

VER. 36. Igaal, or Joel, the brother of Nathan. To reconcile these texts, we 37 Selec, of Ammoni, Naharai, the Berothite, armour-bearer of Joab, the son of Sarvia, 38 Ira, the Jethrite, Gareb, also a Jethrite.

39 Urias, the Hethite, thirty and seven in all.

CHAP. XXIV.

David numbereth the people: God sendeth a pestilence, which is stopt by David's prayer and sacrifice.

AND the anger of the Lord was again kindled against Israel, and stirred up David among them, saying: Go, number Israel and Juda.

2 And the king said to Joab, the general of his army: Go through all the tribes of Israel, from Dan to Bersabee, and number ye the people, that I may know the number of them.

3 And Joab said to the king: The Lord thy God increase thy people, and make them as many more as they are now, and again multiply them a hundred-fold in the sight of my lord the king, but what meaneth my lord the king by this kind of thing?

4 But the king's words prevailed over the words of Joab, and of the captains of the army: and Joab, and the captains of the soldiers, went out from the presence of the king, to number the people of Israel.

5 And when they had passed the Jordan, they came to Aroer, to the right side of the city, which is in the vale of Gad.

6 And by Jazer they passed into Galaad, and to the may say the person was adopted by his brother, or had married his daughter, which was not prohibited by the law.—Bonni, or Mibahar, the son of Agarai.

VER. 37. Beurer, or "squire." W.—He is the only one specified, though there were others. H.

VER. 39. Urias, the husband of Bethsabee. We have observed (v. 25.) that in Paral. the number of 37 is completed by Zabad, instead of Elica. H.—Only 36 are specified in these catalogues, as the name of the sixth hero (v. 18.) is omitted, whom some take to be Sobati, Jonathan, (C. xxi. 22.) Joiada, (v. 20.) or Joab. C.—But the truth is, Joab is not mentioned here at all, as he was sufficiently known for the chief; (1 Par. xi. 6.) and he makes up the number of 37. The sixth, therefore, was Asael; (v. 24.) and after him there are exactly 30. For though Gmni be lost, (v. 32.) Semima is substituted in the following verse. H.

CHAP. XXIV. VER. 1. Stirred up, &c. This stirring up, was not the doing of God, but of satan; as it is expressly declared, 1 Chron. xxi. 1. Ch.—David was moved by vanity, &c. thus to displease God.—Among. Heb. "against;" as the king could have done nothing more prejudicial to his people, 70,000 of whom perished on this occasion, v. 16. H.—We might also translate, "The anger of the Lord continued against Israel: for David, for their misfortune, was moved to say, &c." &c. as this would obviate the harshness of the expression. C.—However, as it is the same in the Sept. &c. and as similar words do not prove that God is the author of sin, we may explain this in the same sense, allowing that he suffered the evil to take place, knowing how to draw good out of it. S. Aug. &c. H.—Some take this Satan to be an evil counsellor. C.—The devil may be styled "the fury of God!" as he is his creature, though rebellious. W.

VER. 2. Them. He was led by curiosity. M.

VER. 3. Thing. He speaks in stronger terms, and adds, (1 Par. xxi. 3.) which may be imputed as a sin to Israel. Joab was not extremely religious; yet he perceived the evil consequences, and, along with the other captains, expressed his sentiments with more respect than on former occasions. H.

VER. 5. Gad, at the eastern extremity, on the banks of the Arnon.

VER. 6. Hodsi. Sept. Alex. (6) "of Gad and Eliazar, (6) and they came into Galaad, and into the land of Ethaon Adasai, and they went into Dan Jaran." The other editions vary. Heb. means, "to the land of new subjects," or "lately conquered" (Junius) from the Agarites, (1 Par. v. 10.) which agrees with this situation. C. Lyran.—The commissioners first took an account of the tribe of Ruben, (M.) and then proceeded northward, till they returned from Dan towards the south. H.—Woodlands. S. Jerom reads jar, instead of jan. By transposing a letter, ain would signify Dan, "the spring," which feeds the Jordan.

VER. 7. Tyre, the ancient; about 4000 paces from the new city, which stands in an island. Strabo xvi. See Jos. xix. 29.

VER. 8. Land. Yet they did not number the Levites or Benjamin, nor even the rest exactly, as Joab acted with reluctance. 1 Par. xxi. 6. and xxvii. 24. M.

VER. 9. Eight . . and five. Theodotion says nine and four, which comes to the same sum. H.—But 1 Par. xxi. 5, reads, eleven hundred thousand, and four hundred and seventy thousand fighting men; though even there the Arab. version has the number here specified, which is less incredible. The fighting men are not above a fifth part of the population; and we may allow that David might have about seven million subjects. It seems, therefore, best to abandon the latter number as incorrect, since all commentators confess that similar mistakes have been made by the transcribers; and to maintain the contrary, would be indi-lower land of Hodsi, and they came into the woodlands of Dan. And going about by Sidon,

7 They passed near the walls of Tyre, and all the land of the Hevite, and the Chanaanite, and they came to the south of Juda, into Bersabee:

8 And having gone through the whole land, after nine months and twenty days, they came to Jerusalem.

9 And Joab gave up the sum of the number of the people to the king, and there were found of Israel eight hundred thousand valiant men that drew the sword: and of Juda, five hundred thousand fighting men.

10 But David's heart struck him, after the people were numbered: and David said to the Lord: I have sinned very much in what I have done: but I pray thee, O Lord, to take away the iniquity of thy servant, because I have done exceeding foolishly.

11 And David arose in the morning, and the word of the Lord came to Gad, the prophet, and the seer of David, saying:

12 Go, and say to David: Thus saith the Lord: I give thee thy choice of three things, choose one of them, which thou wilt, that I may do it to thee.

13 And when Gad was come to David, he told him, saying: Either seven years of famine shall come to thee in thy land: or thou shalt flee three months before thy adversaries, and they shall pursue thee: or for three days, there shall be a pestilence in thy land. Now rectly to throw the blame upon the sacred writers. C.—Yet some account for the variation, by saying, that Joab gave not in the full number here, (M. Abul. &c.) which seems contrary to the text, there were found, &c. H.—A. Lapidus supposes, that the excess of number was occasioned by the subsequent list of the Levites, &c. But could they amount to so many? C.—And what proof is there that they were numbered, after the anger of God had manifested itself so severely? H.—Others affirm, that Joab did not take an account of the 288,000 chosen out of the twelve tribes, that 24,000 of them might guard the palace by turns, in each of the twelve months. 1 Par. xxvii. 1 Bochart Anim. p. 1, B. ii. 37. Grot. &c.—But thus there will be 18,000 more than even in Paral. where we find in all 1,570,000, though the tribe of Juda have fewer, by 30,000, than in this book. To account for this, some say, (H.) the proselytes are here taken in, or the inhabitants of all the territory, which was at first assigned to Juda. Jos. xix. 29. M.—All this is conjecture, (H.) and must remain among the systems of history. C.—If Joab chose to diminish the numbers of Israel, why has he increased those of Juda? Did he wish to flatter the king's vanity, or partiality for his own tribe? It is difficult to say what interest Joab could have in withholding the truth; and for the sacred historian to countenance his delusion, would expose us to the same danger of mistake, and overthrow the authority of Scripture, no less than if the author had been liable to error, and uninspired. It seems, therefore, most rational to suppose that we have here the true list of the warriors, and that the book of Paral. has been injured by the negligence of transcribers, as it has on many other occasions. H.

VER. 10. David's heart struck him, after the people were numbered. That is, he was touched with a great remorse for the vanity and pride which had put him upon numbering the people. Ch.—His sin must have been internal, and probably involved a secret confidence in his riches and power, without referring all to God, (H.) or trusting entirely in him. S. Amb. pœn. c. 9. S. Aug. c. Faust. xii. 68. &c.—There was otherwise no prohibition for David's taking this account, (C.) which is so natural for a prince, and may frequently prove of great service. H.—Josephus (vii. 13.) and others assert, that he neglected to require the payment of half a shekel. T. E.—But where does God complain of this neglect? and how do they know that the injunction which was once given to Moses, when the tabernacle was to be furnished, (Ex. xxx. 12.) was to remain in force afterwards? Oleaster (on Exod.) says David acted against God's intention, who had promised that the Israelites should be innumerable. But this reason seems childish; and did not the king abstain, on that very account, from numbering any but those who were fit for war? 1 Par. xxvii. 23. C.—Struck him. Contrition and confession are specified here, as satisfaction is, v. 12. Temporal sufferings are inflicted, even after the sin has been remitted, v. 16. W.

VER. 11. And seer. This was a peculiar distinction of the prophet, (H.) who was appointed to direct David, (M.) to whom he had been long attached. 1 K. xxii. 5. C.

VER. 13. Seven. Par. three; which makes the contrast more striking. H.—The Sept. and some copies of the Arab. version, have the latter number. C.—Gad might first propose seven, and then reduce it to three. M.—But did the prophet deliver the message twice? Usher pleads for the truth of both numbers, though he says, "It was always my opinion, that the Hebrew copy of the Old Testament has been no less exposed to the errors of writers, than that of the New, and all other books." Synt. p. 219. Buxtorf also declares, "it is better piously therefore deliberate, and see what answer I shall return to him that sent me.

14 And David said to Gad: I am in a great strait: *but it is better that I should fall into the hands of the Lord (for his mercies are many) than into the hands of men.

15 And the Lord sent a pestilence upon Israel, from the morning unto the time appointed, and there died of the people from Dan to Bersabee, seventy thousand men.

16 And when the angel of the Lord had stretched out his hand over Jerusalem, to destroy it, the Lord had pity on the affliction, and said to the angel that slew the people: It is enough: now hold thy hand: And the angel of the Lord was by the threshing-floor of Areuna, the Jebusite.

17 And David said to the Lord, when he saw the angel* striking the people: It is I, I am he that have sinned, I have done wickedly: these that are the sheep, what have they done? let thy hand, I beseech thee, be turned against me, and against my father's house.

18 And Gad came to David that day, and said: Go up and build an altar to the Lord, in the threshing-floor of Areuna, the Jebusite.

to believe that both is right." Why! "because both is written." Antic. p. 401 and 4201. The contradiction, in fact, seems to have been occasioned by the mistake of a numeral letter, g (3) for z (7). Kennicott.—Usher, Malvenda, &c. adopt an hypothesis, beautiful enough, but destitute of proof, when they say that God proposed three years in punishment of David's criminal curiosity. But as that famine would have immediately followed the three years' scarcity, already endured, (C. xxi.) and during the seventh, or sabbatical year, nothing could be reaped, the famine would thus rage for seven years. C.—Salien places the 62nd sabbatical year at this very time, A. 3017, and terminates the famine occasioned by the cruel injustice of Saul, A. 1013, which cannot agree with the aforesaid system. H.

VER. 14. Lord, and be exposed to the violence of pestilence, which attacks both rich and poor; whereas the rich can frequently escape the dangers of war, or of famine. C.—David knew that he had sinned, and he did not wish to screen himself from suffering the temporal punishment due to sin. H.—God punishes us equally by the hand of men, as by other means: but the king thus intimates, that he looks upon Him as an indulgent father, who is less severe than the ministers of justice. M.

VER. 15. And. Sept. insert, "And David chose death, (the pestilence, as they usually render it; Salien.) And it was the time of the wheat-harvest. And the Lord gave death in Israel, from morning till dinner-time." H.—Appointed, for three days; though before the end of the last, God took pity on the people, v. 16. C.—Bochart thinks the pestilence ceased to rage at some hour of the first day. Syr. and Arab. "till the sixth hour."

VER. 16. Areuna. Heb. styles him, Oranah, (v. 18. C.) i being substituted for u, and placed after n. He is called Ornan, 1 Par. xxi. 18, (H.) and has the title of Jebusite, as he was originally of that nation, and had been permitted to retain his effects, on his embracing the true religion. Moria was his property, and seems not to have been much inhabited. It was not yet enclosed within the city walls. Here David saw the angel, in the air, ready to strike the inhabitants, and heard the voice from heaven. C.—He had already witnessed the death of many in the city. 1 Par. xxi. 14. The angel waited for God's orders how many to destroy. H.—He did not sheath his sword till David had offered sacrifice to appease the Lord; (v. 21) though others think that the sacrifice was to thank God for the deliverance. C.

VER. 17. Are, like sheep. M.—They were not accountable for the fault of 19 And David went up according to the word of Gad, which the Lord had commanded him.

20 And Areuna looked, and saw the king and his servants coming towards him:

21 And going out he worshipped the king, bowing with his face to the earth, and said: Wherefore is my lord the king come to his servant? And David said to him: To buy the threshing-floor of thee, and build an altar to the Lord, that the plague, which rageth among the people, may cease.

22 And Areuna said to David: Let my lord the king take, and offer, as it seemeth good to him: thou hast here oxen for a holocaust, and the wain, and the yokes of the oxen for wood.

23 All these things, Areuna, as a king, gave to the king: And Areuna said to the king: The Lord thy God receive thy vow.

24 And the king answered him, and said: Nay, but I will buy it of thee, at a price, and I will not offer to the Lord my God holocausts, free-cost. So David bought the floor, and the oxen, for fifty sicles of silver:

25 And David built there an altar to the Lord, and offered holocausts and peace-offerings: and the Lord became merciful to the land, and the plague was stayed from Israel.

their shepherd, or king; nor were they punished for it, (H.) but for joining in the revolts of Absalom, Seba, &c. (Salien) as well as for other secret offences. H.—Some groundlessly condemn the people, for entertaining sentiments of pride, along with David. Both king and people suffer, when either draws down the vengeance of heaven.

VER. 18. Altar. This was done by a positive order. People still had the liberty of sacrificing on the heights of Gabaon. C.—This place was honoured with the tabernacle; and David would have gone thither, if he had not been so much terrified. 1 Par. xxi. 30. H.

VER. 22. Wain. So Josephus reads. Sept. "wheels." Heb. "rollers," to beat out the corn. C.—Prot. "threshing-instruments, and other instruments of the oxen for wood." Paral. adds, that Areuna offered also wheat, and saw the angel, as his four sons, and probably most of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, did.

VER. 23. As a king. Lit. "king Areuna;" e may have been substituted for a, "like," though the latter word is often understood. H.—Some suppose that he was formerly king of the Jebusites, (Vatab.) or one of their descendants, (Grot.) or possessed of great riches, &c. But why is the title never given to him elsewhere? Bochart.—The Sept. Syr. and many Latin copies, do not recognize it; nor was it found in the Chaldean, in the 12th age. Yet without making any change, we may translate, "O king, Areuna has given all these things to the king." The Jews often speak of themselves in the third person, out of respect. Le Clerc. C.

VER. 24. Free-cost, or given gratis. This shews that subjects have property, otherwise they could only yield what was due to the king, as his own. W.—Silver. Sept. "for the silver of fifty sicles." H.—Bochart explains for the money of 50 sicles of gold, which make 600 sicles of silver. Gold was formerly ss twelve to one, compared with silver. Plato in Hipparcho.—But the best method of reconciling this passage with 1 Par. is to say, that David gave the 50 sicles for the oxen and floor, and afterwards purchased the whole piece of ground for 600 (C.) sicles of gold, (or 902*l*. 5*s*. sterling. H.) being informed that the temple was to be erected there, (C.) where Isaac had formerly been brought to be sacrificed. M.—We might also make a colon, or pause, at floor, as if its price were specified elsewhere, and the fifty sicles were given for the oxen. D. M.—The sum amounts to only about 1*l*. 14*s*. 11.

VER. 25. Holocausts; a second time. The former victims had been consumed by fire from heaven. 1 Par. xxi. 26. C.

THE THIRD BOOK OF KINGS.

These and the following Book are called by the holy Fathers, The Third and Fourth Book of Kings; but by the Hebrews, the First and Second. They contain the history of the kingdoms of Israel and Juda, from the beginning of the reign of Solomon to the captivity. As to the writer of these books, it seems most probable they were not written by one man, nor at one time; but as there was all along a succession of prophets in Israel, who recorded, by divine inspiration, the most remarkable things that happened in their days, these books seem to have been written by these prophets. See 2 Paral. alias 2 Chron. ix. 29, xii. 15, xiii. 22, xx. 34, xxvi. 22, xxxii. 32. Ch.—This book informs us of the death of David, C. ii. 11, where some Greek copies concluded the second book “of the reigns or kingdoms,” as they style all the four books. Theodoret and Diodorus follow this division. The point is of no consequence; and the Hebrew editions have often varied. Origen observes, that the Jews denoted these two books from the first words, “Ouammelech David.” Euseb. Hist. vi. 25. H.—In S. Jeron’s time, the four books made only two. The present book details the actions of Solomon, (C.) till the end of the 12th chapter. Then we behold the division of the kingdom: Roboam, Abias, Asa, and Josaphat, reign over Juda; Jeroboam, &c. over Israel; while the prophets Abias, Elias, and Eliseus, appear in the remaining eleven chapters. W.—Though the memoirs seem to have been left by contemporary authors, (H.) one, and most probably Esdras, made the compilation, after the captivity, inserting frequently the very words of his authors, yet so as to make some additional reflections. C.—The Rabbins generally attribute the work to Jeremias. H.—He is more attentive to the house of David, and to display the rewards of piety, and the punishment of vice, as well as the glory of the temple and of religion, than to describe the military exploits, which occupy so much of the profane history. C.

CHAP. I.

King David growing old, Abisag, a Sunamitess, is brought to him. Adonias, pretending to reign, Nathan and Bethsabee obtain that Solomon should be declared, and anointed king.

NOW *king David was old, and advanced in years: and when he was covered with clothes, he was not warm.

2 His servants therefore, said to him: Let us seek for our Lord the king, a young virgin, and let her stand before the king, and cherish him, and sleep in his bosom, and warm our lord the king.

3 So they sought a beautiful young woman, in all the coasts of Israel, and they found Abisag, a Sunamitess, and brought her to the king.

4 And the damsel was exceedingly beautiful, and she slept with the king, and served him, but the king did not know her.

5 And Adonias, the son of Haggith, exalted himself, saying: I will be king. And he made himself chariots and horsemen, and fifty men to run before him.

6 ^bNeither did his father rebuke him at any time,

CHAP. I. VER. 1. Years; sixty-nine, as he died when he was seventy years old. C. 2 K. v. 4.—Warm. Though David was of a strong constitution, he had been so much exposed to fatigue, and so harassed with domestic broils, that his vigour was nearly decayed. C.—The Rabbins say, that the sight of the angel had greatly contributed to weaken him. Lyran, and others, suppose that he was affected with the palsy. Abul. Salien. A. 3019.

VER. 2. Servants. Physicians. Joseph. vi. 14.—People of the faculty still adopt the same sentiments; and when fire and clothes will not procure heat, they advise the application of living creatures. Bartholin ix. Galen vii. Vales. Philoa. c. 19.

VER. 3. Sunamitess. Sunam was not far from Thabor, in the tribe of Issachar. C.—This history leads us to explain the ambition and death of Adonias. H.

VER. 4. Her. Which shews the virtue and temperance of David. M.—She was his wife, at least of a secondary order. Adonias flattered himself, on account of Abisag’s virginity, that the law did not hinder him from marrying her; (Lev. xviii. 8. Kimchi) or he was blinded by ambition. C.—Heretics and persecutors thus attempt in vain, (H.) to defile the Church, the chaste spouse of Jesus, that they may usurp his throne. C.

VER. 5. Him. He was not deterred by the fate of Absalom. H.—He was now the eldest son, and gave himself out for the presumptive heir. C.—David is blamed for some remissness, in not repressing him; (Salien) as his conduct tended to excite confusion, and to frustrate the appointment of God. But the king was convinced that nothing would be able to disturb that order; and he would take measures, in due time, to curb the ambition of his eldest son, from which, as yet, he apprehended no danger. H.—Old age renders people slow. M.

VER. 7. Side. For their own interest, and because they supposed that the throne belonged of course to him. M.—This was the natural privilege, when no other disposition was made by God, or by the kings who succeeded David. They did not esteem themselves bound to leave the crown to their eldest sons. Hitherto God had made choice himself, as he had required. Deut. xvii. 15. In favour of David, he pleased to grant the sovereignty to his descendants. But the king was expected to declare which he preferred, in case he chose to deviate from the natural order, v. 20.

saying: Why hast thou done this? And he also was very beautiful, the next in birth after Absalom.

7 And he conferred with Joab, the son of Sarvia, and with Abiathar, the priest, who furthered Adonias’s side.

8 But Sadoc, the priest, and Banaïas, the son of Joiada, and Nathan, the prophet, and Semei, and Rei, and the strength of David’s army, was not with Adonias.

9 And Adonias having slain rams and calves, and all fat cattle, by the stone of Zoheleth, which was near the fountain Rogel, invited all his brethren, the king’s sons, and all the men of Juda, the king’s servants:

10 But Nathan, the prophet, and Banaïas, and all the valiant men, and Solomon, his brother, he invited not.

11 And Nathan said to Bethsabee, the mother of Solomon: Hast thou not heard that Adonias, the son of Haggith, reigneth, and our lord David knoweth it not?

12 Now then, come, take my counsel, and save thy life, and the life of thy son Solomon.

^b 1 Kings ii. 29. 2 Kings xiii. 21. and xv. 1.

VER. 8. Sadoc, the rival of Abiathar, and a descendant of Eleazar. David had permitted both to perform the functions of the high priesthood; (C.) or one had acted as the delegate of the other. Salien.—Banaïas was distinguished for his valour, 2 K. xxiii. 20. He was in the flower of his age, and, perhaps, aspired at the authority of Joab, whose credit began to decline; as he was grown old, and was known to be rather disagreeable to David, and had been guilty of such horrid murders. Both the contending princes sought to ingratiate themselves with the army and with the priests, as their influence was of the utmost consequence. Solomon was more fortunate, in having also Nathan the prophet on his side; but the throne was secured to him much more on account of the divine decree, 2 K. vii. 12. and xii. 25. H.—Nathan is commonly considered as the tutor of the young prince, (M.) and was styled his “father.” C.—Semei, or Nabath, father of Jeroboam; and Rei, or Ira, who is styled the priest of David, 2 K. xx. 26. S. Jer. Tradit. M.—To confound Semei with Nabath is wrong. Salien.—Army; the king’s guard consisting chiefly of the Cerethi, &c. (C.) who were under Banaïas. The whole army, over which Joab was general, was not always in arms. Sept. “Semei and Rei, other copies read (H.) his friends” (with Syr. Arab.) “and Dain, heroes of David.” Heb. may be, “neither the hearers nor the seers, nor the brave men of David, were with Adonias.” The populace, or the disciples, as well as the prophets, may be thus denoted.

VER. 9. Slain. Either for sacrifice, or simply for a feast; (C.) though it is probable that victims of peace would be offered, as on similar occasions, on which the guests would afterwards feast. 1 K. xi. H.—Rogel, east of Jerusalem, is the vale of Josaphat. M.

VER. 10. Not. Out of contempt, (C.) and because he knew that they would oppose his measures. H.

VER. 11. It not. So that we may safely endeavour to overturn his plans. M.

VER. 12. Life. Both would have been in imminent danger, if the ambitious projects of Adonias succeeded, as he knew that the throne had been promised to Solomon by his father, and he would consider him as a dangerous rival. C.—The Turkish emperors usually destroy or confine their brethren, when they commence their reign. H.

VER. 13. Swear. This he did, either when he comforted her, after the death him: Didst not thou, my lord, O king, swear to me, thy handmaid, saying: Solomon, thy son, shall reign after me, and he shall sit on my throne? why then doth Adonias reign?

14 And while thou art yet speaking there with the king, I will come in after thee, and will fill up thy words.

15 So Bethsabee went in to the king into the chamber. Now the king was very old, and Abisag, the Sunamitess, ministered to him.

16 Bethsabee bowed herself, and worshipped the king. And the king said to her: What is thy will?

17 She answered, and said: My lord, thou didst swear to thy handmaid, by the Lord thy God, saying: Solomon, thy son, shall reign after me, and he shall sit on my throne.

18 And behold, now Adonias reigneth, and thou, my lord the king, knowest nothing of it.

19 He hath killed oxen, and all fat cattle, and many rams, and invited all the king's sons, and Abiathar, the priest, and Joab, the general of the army: but Solomon, thy servant, he invited not.

20 And now, my lord, O king, the eyes of all Israel are upon thee, that thou shouldst tell them, who shall sit on thy throne, my lord the king, after thee.

21 Otherwise it shall come to pass, when my lord the king sleepeth with his fathers, that I, and my son, Solomon, shall be accounted offenders.

22 As she was yet speaking with the king, Nathan, the prophet, came.

23 And they told the king, saying: Nathan, the prophet, is here. And when he was come in before the king, and had worshipped, bowing down to the ground, 24 Nathan said: My lord, O king, hast thou said: Let Adonias reign after me, and let him sit upon my throne?

25 Because he is gone down to-day, and hath killed oxen, and fatlings, and many rams, and invited all the king's sons, and the captains of the army, and Abiathar, the priest: and they are eating and drinking before him, and saying: God save king Adonias:

26 But me, thy servant, and Sadoc, the priest, and Banaias, the son of Joiada, and Solomon, thy servant, he hath not invited.

27 Is this word come out from my lord the king, and hast thou not told me, thy servant, who should sit on the throne of my lord the king after him?

28 And king David answered, and said: Call to me Bethsabee. And when she was come in to the king and stood before him,

29 The king swore, and said: As the Lord liveth, who hath delivered my soul out of all distress,

30 Even as I swore to thee, by the Lord, the God of Israel, saying: Solomon thy son, shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne in my stead, so will I do this day.

31 And Bethsabee, bowing with her face to the earth, worshipped the king, saying: May my lord David live for ever.

32 King David also said: Call me Sadoc, the priest, and Nathan, the prophet, and Banaias, the son of Joiada. And when they were come in before the king,

33 He said to them: Take with you the servants of your lord, and set my son Solomon upon my mule: and bring him to Gihon:

34 And let Sadoc, the priest, and Nathan, the prophet, anoint him there king over Israel: and you shall sound the trumpet, and shall say: God save king Solomon.

35 And you shall come up after him, and he shall come, and shall sit upon my throne, and he shall reign in my stead: and I will appoint him to be ruler over Israel, and over Juda.

36 And Banaias, the son of Joiada, answered the king, saying: Amen: so say the Lord, the God of my lord the king.

37 As the Lord hath been with my lord the king, so be he with Solomon, and make his throne higher than the throne of my lord king David.

38 So Sadoc, the priest, and Nathan, the prophet, went down, and Banaias, the son of Joiada, and the Cerethi, and Phelethi: and they set Solomon upon the mule of king David, and brought him to Gihon.

39 And Sadoc, the priest, took a horn of oil out of the tabernacle, and anointed Solomon: and they sounded the trumpet, and all the people said: God save king Solomon.

40 And all the multitude went up after him, and the people played with pipes, and rejoiced with a great joy, and the earth rang with the noise of their cry.

41 And Adonias, and all that were invited by him, heard it, and now the feast was at an end. Joab also, hearing the sound of the trumpet, said: What meaneth this noise of the city in an uproar?

VER. 39. Horn of oil. Such liquors were commonly kept in vessels of horn. thar, the priest, came: and Adonias said to him: Come in, because thou art a valiant man, and bringest good news.

43 And Jonathan answered Adonias: Not so: for our lord, king David, hath appointed Solomon king;

44 And hath sent with him Sadoc, the priest, and Nathan, the prophet, and Banaïas, the son of Jolada, and the Cerethi, and the Phelethi, and they have set him upon the king's mule:

45 And Sadoc, the priest, and Nathan, the prophet, have anointed him king, in Gihon: and they are gone up from thence rejoicing, so that the city rang again: this is the noise that you have heard.

46 Moreover, Solomon sitteth upon the throne of the kingdom.

47 And the king's servants going in, have blessed our lord king David, saying: May God make the name of Solomon greater than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne. And the king adored in his bed:

48 And he said: Blessed be the Lord, the God of Israel, who hath given this day one to sit on my throne, my eyes seeing it.

49 Then all the guests of Adonias were afraid, and they all arose, and every man went his way.

50 And Adonias fearing Solomon, arose and went, and took hold of the horn of the altar.

51 And they told Solomon, saying: Behold Adonias, fearing king Solomon, hath taken hold of the horn of the altar, saying: Let king Solomon swear to me this day, that he will not kill his servant with the sword.

52 And Solomon said: If he be a good man, there shall not so much as one hair of his head fall to the ground: but if evil be found in him, he shall die.

53 Then king Solomon sent, and brought him out from the altar: and going in, he worshipped king Solomon: and Solomon said to him: Go to thy house.

2 I am going the way of all flesh: take thou courage and shew thyself a man.

3 And keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and observe his ceremonies, and his precepts, and judgments, and testimonies, *as it is written in the law of Moses: that thou mayst understand all thou dost, and whithersoever thou shalt turn thyself:

5 Thou knowest also what Joab, the son of Sarvia, hath done to me, what he did to the two captains of the army of Israel, *to Abner, the son of Ner, and to Amasa, the son of Jether: whom he slew, and shed the blood of war in peace, and put the blood of war on his girdle that was about his loins, and in his shoes that were on his feet.

6 Do, therefore, according to thy wisdom, and let not his hoary head go down to hell in peace.

7 But shew kindness to the sons of Berzellai, the Galaadite, and let them eat at thy table: *for they met me when I fled from the face of Absalom, thy brother.

treacherous murders of two great generals, who had put themselves under his protection, and were endeavouring to promote his welfare. Only the fear of greater commotions had hitherto prevented David from bringing his nephew to public execution, as the people expected. He deemed it requisite to remind his successor of this obligation, when his power should be sufficiently strong, that the impunity of such daring offenders might not destroy the commonwealth. H.—Peace. Pretending affection. Joab had treated Abner and Amasa as the worst of enemies, and their blood had stained his garments. M.

VER. 6. To hell. This word hell doth not here signify the place or state of damnation; but the place and state of the dead. Ch.—It would have been a great scandal if this murderer had died quietly in his old age. Joab had rendered great services to his uncle, for which he had been rewarded. He had been at the head of the armies 40 years. His great age rendered him now less formidable; particularly as the nation enjoyed peace.

12 And Solomon sat upon the throne of his father, David, and his kingdom was strengthened exceedingly.

13 And Adonias, the son of Haggith, came to Bethsabee the mother of Solomon. And she said to him: Is thy coming peaceable? He answered: It is peaceable.

14 And he added: I have a word to speak with thee. She said to him: Speak. And he said:

15 Thou knowest that the kingdom was mine, and all Israel had preferred me to be their king: but the kingdom is transferred, and is become my brother's: for it was appointed him by the Lord.

16 Now therefore, I ask one petition of thee; turn not away my face. And she said to him: Say on.

17 And he said: I pray thee speak to king Solomon (for he cannot deny thee any thing) to give me Abisag, the Sunamitess, to wife.

18 And Bethsabee said: Well, I will speak for thee to the king.

19 Then Bethsabee came to king Solomon, to speak to him for Adonias: and the king arose to meet her, and bowed to her, and sat down upon his throne: and a throne was set for the king's mother, and she sat on his right hand.

20 And she said to him: I desire one small petition of thee; do not put me to confusion. And the king said to her: My mother ask, for I must not turn away thy face.

21 And she said: Let Abisag, the Sunamitess, be given to Adonias, thy brother, to wife.

22 And king Solomon answered, and said to his mother: Why dost thou ask Abisag, the Sunamitess, for Adonias? ask for him also the kingdom; for he is my elder brother, and hath Abiathar, the priest, and Joab, the son of Sarvia.

23 Then king Solomon swore by the Lord, saying: So and so may God do to me, and add more, if Adonias hath not spoken this word against his own life.

24 And now, as the Lord liveth, who hath established me, and placed me upon the throne of David, my father, and who hath made me a house, as he promised, Adonias shall be put to death this day.

25 And king Solomon sent by the hand of Banaias, the son of Joiada, who slew him, and he died.

26 And the king said also to Abiathar, the priest: Go to Anathoth, to thy lands, for indeed thou art worthy of death: but I will not at this time put thee to death, because thou didst carry the ark of the Lord God before David, my father, and hast endured trouble in all the troubles my father endured.

30 And Banaias came to the tabernacle of the Lord, and said to him: Thus saith the king: Come forth. And he said: I will not come forth, but here I will die. Banaias brought word back to the king, saying: Thus saith Joab, and thus he answered me.

34 So Banaïas, the son of Joiada, went up, and setting upon him slew him, and he was buried in his house in the desert.

35 And the king appointed Banaïas, the son of Joiada in his room over the army; and Sadoc, the priest, he put in the place of Abiathar.

36 The king also sent, and called for Semei, and said to him: Build thee a house in Jerusalem, and dwell there: and go not out from thence any where.

37 For on what day soever thou shalt go out, and shalt pass over the brook Cedron, know that thou shalt be put to death: thy blood shall be upon thy own head.

38 And Semei said to the king: The saying is good: as my lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do. And Semei dwelt in Jerusalem many days.

39 And it came to pass after three years, that the servants of Semei ran away to Achis, the son of Maacha, the king of Geth: and it was told Semei that his servants were gone to Geth.

40 And Semei arose, and saddled his ass, and went to Achis, to Geth, to seek his servants, and he brought them out of Geth.

41 And it was told Solomon, that Semei had gone from Jerusalem to Geth, and was come back.

42 And sending he called for him, and said to him: Did I not protest to thee by the Lord, and tell thee before: On what day soever thou shalt go out and walk abroad any where, know that thou shalt die? And thou answeredst me: The word that I have heard is good.

43 Why then hast thou not kept the oath of the Lord, and the commandment that I laid upon thee?

44 And the king said to Semei: Thou knowest all the evil, of which thy heart is conscious, which thou didst to David, my father: the Lord hath returned the wickedness upon thy own head.

45 And king Solomon shall be blessed, and the throne of David shall be established before the Lord for ever.

46 So the king commanded Banaïas, the son of Joiada: and he went out and struck him; and he died.

AND the kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon, and he made affinity with Pharaoh, the king of Egypt: for he took his daughter, and brought her into the city of David: * until he had made an end of building his own house, and the house of the Lord, and the wall of Jerusalem round about.

2 But yet the people sacrificed in the high places for there was no temple built to the name of the Lord until that day.

3 And Solomon loved the Lord, walking in the precepts of David, his father; only he sacrificed in the high places, and burnt incense.

4 He went therefore to Gabaon, to sacrifice there: for that was the great high place: a thousand victims for holocausts, did Solomon offer upon that altar, in Gabaon.

5 And the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night, saying: Ask what thou wilt that I should give thee.

6 And Solomon said: Thou hast shewed great mercy to thy servant David, my father, even as he walked before thee in truth, and justice, and an upright heart with thee: and thou hast kept thy great mercy for him, and hast given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day.

7 And now, O Lord God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David, my father: and I am but a child, and know not how to go out and come in;

8 And thy servant is in the midst of the people which thou hast chosen, an immense people, which cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude.

VER. 24. Slew him, holding the altar; though some think that he was removed by force, like Athalia, 4 K. xi. 15. Both actions were contrary to the reverence due to so holy a place, and perhaps inexcusable; (C.) unless the law had ordered it otherwise. Ex. xxi. 14. H.

VER. 25. Abiathar. See v. 26. Secular princes sometimes nominate, but they must obey, the pastor. W.

VER. 27. Cedron, which led towards Bahurim. He was equally forbidden to go out by any other road; and was put to death for going to Geth.—Head. Thou canst blame myself. Solomon might have put this man to death before: but he chose to pay so much deference to the oath of his father, as not to bring him to execution without a fresh offence.

VER. 29. Servants. Two in number; (Heb. Sept.) perhaps originally from Geth; (M.) to the king of which place David had fled, 44 years before. Abul. q. 44.

CHAP. III. VER. 1. Solomon. By the death of his enemies, and by his affinity with the king of Egypt, and his friendship with Hiram, king of Tyre, who were the most potent princes in the neighbourhood. Eupolemus (ap. Euseb. præp.) has a letter of Solomon to Pharaoh Vaphres, in which the latter is said to have been the friend of David; (Salien) and S. Clement (Strom. i.) produces the testimony of Polyhistor, saying, that Vaphres sent 80,000 Egyptian workmen to assist Solomon to build the temple.—Daughter. Who, probably, embraced the true religion; so that her praises are supposed to be recorded in the 44th Psalm, and in the canticles: though it seems she afterwards relapsed, and became the chief instrument in the perversion of the king. C. xi. 1.—David. She dwelt in the apartments of Bethsabee, (Cant. iii. 4. and viii. 2.) till a magnificent palace could be built for her reception. C. vii. 8. To marry idolatrous women was strictly forbidden. Deut. vii. 3. 1 Esd. x. 2. 2 Esd. xiii. 26.

VER. 2. But yet. It is not clear to what this refers. Heb. "for the rest, (C.) or only;" (as also v. 3.) which may signify that the people, and their king, were blamable; or else, that they zealously offered sacrifices to God, even before the temple was erected. H.—Those who afterwards left that sacred place, to imitate the conduct of idolaters, or of the ancient patriarchs, which was no longer tolerated, are justly condemned. C.—High places. That is, altars where they worshipped the Lord, indeed, but not according to the ordinance of the law; which allowed of no other places for sacrifice but the temple of God. Among these high places, that of Gabaon was the chief, because there was the tabernacle of the testimony which had been removed from Silo to Nob, and from Nob to Gabaon. Ch.—Hither David would have gone, as Solomon did, v. 4. C.—Hence this was not, at least, one of those high places, where it was unlawful to offer sacrifice; as the tabernacle was there, and the altar of holocausts, which Moses had erected. The obligation of sacrificing in no place, except in that which the Lord had appointed, regarded the times while the ark was in the desert, (H.) and when it was placed in the temple. While it continued in an unsettled state, people enjoyed more liberty in this respect; (C.) particularly when there was a prophet present, to sanction what they did. H.

VER. 3. Only, &c. Which David had not done, though it was lawful. Pineda.—Yet we read that he offered victims on Sion, &c. 2 K. vi. 18. H.

VER. 4. Victims. These he accompanied with most fervent prayer. Wisd. vii. 7. 2 Par. i. 9.

VER. 5. In a prophetic dream, or ecstasy. His mind had been so filled with the desire of wisdom, that the same thoughts recurred to him while he slept; and, as he had entertained them voluntarily before, he acquired fresh merit even during that time; as a man, who indulges sensual affections, becomes responsible for the accidents of the night. S. Tho. 1. 2. q. 118. a. 2. and 2. 2. 9. 154. a. 5. S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. xii. 15. C.

VER. 7. In. So as to judge with discretion, and to lead my people. C.

9 *Give therefore to thy servant an understanding heart, to judge thy people, and discern between good and evil. For who shall be able to judge this people, thy people, which is so numerous?

10 And the word was pleasing to the Lord, that Solomon had asked such a thing.

11 And the Lord said to Solomon: Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life nor riches, nor the lives of thy enemies, but hast asked for thyself wisdom to discern judgment;

12 Behold I have done for thee according to thy words, and have given thee a wise and understanding heart, in so much that there hath been no one like unto thee, before thee, nor shall arise after thee.

13 ^bYea, and the things also which thou didst not ask, I have given thee; to wit, riches and glory: so that no one hath been like unto thee, among the kings, in all days heretofore.

14 And, if thou wilt walk in my ways, and keep my precepts and my commandments, as thy father walked, I will lengthen thy days.

15 And Solomon awaked, and perceived that it was a dream: and when he was come to Jerusalem, he stood before the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and offered holocausts, and sacrificed victims of peace-offerings, and made a great feast for all his servants.

16 Then there came two women that were harlots, to the king, and stood before him.

17 And one of them said: I beseech thee, my lord, I and this woman dwelt in one house, and I was delivered of a child with her in the chamber.

18 And the third day after I was delivered, she also was delivered; and we were together, and no other person with us in the house; only we two.

19 And this woman's child died in the night: for in her sleep she overlaid him.

20 And rising in the dead time of the night, she took my child from my side, while I, thy handmaid, was asleep, and laid it in her bosom: and laid her dead child in my bosom.

21 And when I arose in the morning, to give my child suck, behold it was dead: but considering him more diligently, when it was clear day, I found that it was not mine which I bore.

22 And the other woman answered: It is not so as thou sayst, but thy child is dead, and mine is alive. On the contrary, she said; Thou liest: for my child liveth, and thy child is dead. And in this manner they strove before the king.

23 Then said the king: The one saith, My child is alive, and thy child is dead. And the other answereth: Nay; but thy child is dead, and mine liveth.

24 The king therefore said: Bring me a sword. And when they had brought a sword before the king, 25 Divide, said he, the living child in two, and give half to the one and half to the other.

26 But the woman, whose child was alive, said to the king; (for her bowels were moved upon her child) I beseech thee, my lord, give her the child alive, and do not kill it. But the other said: Let it be neither mine nor thine; but divide it.

27 The king answered, and said: Give the living child to this woman, and let it not be killed; for she is the mother thereof.

28 And all Israel heard the judgment which the king had judged, and they feared the king, seeing that the wisdom of God was in him to do judgment.

CHAP. IV.

Solomon's chief officers. His riches and wisdom.

AND king Solomon reigned over all Israel:

2 And these were the princes which he had: Azarias, the son of Sadoc, the priest:

3 Elihoreph, and Ahia, the sons of Sisa, scribes: Josaphat, the son of Ahilud, recorder:

4 Banaias, the son of Joiada, over the army: and Sadoc, and Abiathar, priests.

5 Azarias, the son of Nathan, over them that were about the king: Zabud, the son of Nathan, the priest, the king's friend:

6 And Ahisar, governor of the house: and Adoniram, the son of Abda, over the tribute.

7 And Solomon had twelve governors over all Israel,

* 2 Paral. i. 10.

^b Wis. vii. 11. Mat. vi. 21.

VER. 9. Understanding. Lit. "docile." H.—Heb. "willing to hear," and to obey God. M.

VER. 12. After thee. Solomon has given us some idea of his wisdom in the works which he has left. They were dictated by the Holy Spirit, who adorned his soul with so many graces. C. iv. 29. 30. H.—His knowledge of nature, and of the art of governing, excelled that of any of the kings of Israel; (Lyran, &c. 2 Paral. ix.) though Moses and the apostles had a more comprehensive knowledge of the mysteries of God. C.—Yet, even granting that no mere man might come up to him, Jesus Christ, in whom the treasures of wisdom were contained, was far superior. H.—General propositions are often to be understood with a limitation. M.

VER. 13. Heretofore: 2 Paral. (i. 12,) adds, nor after thee. Eccl. ii. 7. This is also limited by some to the kings of that country. But the riches of Solomon were not excelled by those of the greatest monarchs. Diss. "on the riches which David left." C.

VER. 14. Days. But this he forfeited. M.

VER. 15. Dream. Sent by God, as Gen. xli. 1. C.

VER. 16. Harlots. Rather than simply, "innkeepers." Chal. M.—The latter signification of Zona might, however, seem more natural; as harlots seldom have children; or, at least, any affection for them. Neither would such people have dared to appear before the king. Deut. xxiii. 17.

VER. 19. Him. This she suspected to be the case. They did not then place infants in the cradle, but let them sleep in their bosoms. C.

VER. 25. Other. This sentence manifested the wisdom of Solomon, who knew that the real mother would feel the emotions of parental tenderness. By similar experiments, the truth has sometimes been discovered. Claudius obliged a mother to own her son, by ordering her to take him for a husband. Suet. xv. —The king of Trace told three who pretended to be the sons of the deceased (422) king of the Cimmerians, to shoot an arrow at the corpse; which the real son would not do. C. Diod. Sic.—A native of Mexico, reclaiming a horse which a Spaniard pretended was his, as the judge was under some doubts, the American threw his cloak over the horse's head, and asked which eye was blind? The Spaniard replied, the right; and thus was detected. Palafox.

CHAP. IV. VER. 2. Azarias. Some translate, "grandson of Sadoc, (and son of Achimaas) was priest," to assist his father, unless he was born of some other. Cohen signifies also prince, v. 5. Azarias was scribe, as well as the two following, though not all at the same time. The office was very important. Judg. v. 14.

VER. 3. Sisa. Perhaps the same with Siva, who was under David.—Recorder. Historiographer; (C.) the presenter of petitions. Grot. 2 K. viii. 16.

VER. 4. Abiathar. By this it appears that Abiathar was not altogether deposed from the high priesthood; but only banished to his country house; and by that means excluded from the exercise of his functions. Ch.—He retained the name, as bishops still do, after they have resigned their see. C.—Some think that Solomon reinstated Abiathar in his office. E.

VER. 5. King. President of the council, (M.) steward of the household.—Priest refers to Zabud here, though the Heb. is ambiguous. It means also a prince. H.—He was chief officer and favourite of Solomon, (C.) as Chusai had been of David, 2 K. xvi. 16.

VER. 6. House. Sept. "Eliak was also director of the house" οικονομος. H.—It is impossible to mark, with precision, the extent of these offices.—Tribute or levy of workmen, as it is expressed. C. v. 14.

VER. 7. Month. The lunar year was not then in use; (C.) or else, the first of these governors, was in office during the 13th, or intercalary month, every third year, and the rest in succession. Tostat.

VER. 8. Benhur. Ben here, and in the following verses, may signify "the son who provided victuals for the king and for his household: for every one provided necessities, each man his month in the year.

8 And these are their names: Benhur, in Mount Ephraim.

9 Bendecar, in Maces, and in Salebim, and in Bethsames, and in Elon, and in Bethanan.

10 Benhesed, in Aruboth: his was Socho, and all the land of Ephraim.

11 Benabinadab, to whom belonged all Nephthad: he had Tapheth, the daughter of Solomon, to wife.

12 Bana, the son of Ahilud, who governed Thanac, and Mageddo, and all Bethsan, which is by Sarthana, beneath Jezrael, from Bethsan unto Abelmehula, over-against Jecmaan.

13 Bengaber, in Ramoth Galaad: he had the towns of Jair, the son of Manasses, in Galaad: he was chief in all the country of Argob, which is in Basan, threescore great cities with walls, and brazen bolts.

14 Ahinadab, the son of Addo, was chief in Manaim.

15 Acnimaas, in Nephthali: he also had Basemath, the daughter of Solomon, to wife.

16 Baana, the son of Husi, in Aser, and in Baloth.

17 Josaphat, the son of Pharue, in Issachar.

18 Semei, the son of Ela, in Benjamin.

19 Gaber, the son of Uri, in the land of Galaad, in the land of Sehon, the king of the Amorrites, and of Og, the king of Basan, over all that were in that land.

20 Juda and Israel were innumerable, as the sand of the sea in multitude; eating and drinking, and rejoicing.

21 And Solomon had under him all the kingdoms, from the river to the land of the Philistines, even to the border of Egypt: and they brought him presents, and served him all the days of his life.

22 And the provision of Solomon, for each day, was thirty measures of fine flour, and threescore measures of meal;

23 Ten fat oxen, and twenty out of the pastures, and a hundred rams; besides venison of harts, roes, and buffaloes, and fatted fowls.

24 For he had all the country which was beyond the river, from Thaphsa to Gazan, and all the kings of those countries: and he had peace on every side round about.

25 And Juda, and Israel, dwelt without any fear, every one under his vine, and under his fig-tree, from Dan to Bersabee, all the days of Solomon.

26 And Solomon had forty thousand stalls of chariot horses, and twelve thousand for the saddle.

27 And the foresaid governors of the king fed them; and they furnished the necessities also for king Solomon's table, with great care, in their time.

28 They brought barley also, and straw for the horses and beasts, to the place where the king was, according as it was appointed them.

29 And God gave to Solomon wisdom, and under- standing exceeding much, and largeness of heart, as the sand that is on the sea shore.

of Hur, &c. C.—Sept. retain both the original term, and its explanation. "Ben, the son of Or." But they afterwards read only "the son of Dakar . . of Esed . . of Abinadab . . and Gaber."

VER. 11. To wife. Not at the beginning of his reign, v. 15. M.—This L-apter gives a general idea of the officers who lived under Solomon. C.

VER. 14. Manaim, which is often rendered the camp. The word is read Mahanaim, by the Masorets, (2 K. ii. 8,) and by the Vulg. Gen. xxxii. 2. H.

VER. 19. Land. Heb. "the only officer who was in the land," (H.) except in the towns of Jair, v. 13. C.—His province had belonged to two kings. M.

VER. 20. Multitude. We may suppose seven millions; though, if the calculation of Chronicles be more accurate, they were much more numerous. See 2 K. xxiv. 9. IL

VER. 21. The river. Euphrates. Ch.—To, or "of the land," terra. H.—This river may denote the torrent Besor, as Solomon's dominions extended not only as far as Gaza, but also to the oriental branch of the Nile, v. 24. Thus one verse explains the other. There were, indeed, no kingdoms (C.) in this portion of land, which is now quite barren: but formerly it had several cities, and they belonged to various kings of Egypt, Arabia, the Philistines, &c. H.—Heb. may be rendered "from the river, (Euphrates) the land of the Philistines, and to the border," &c. (C.) agreeably to 2 Par. ix. 26. He exercised authority over all the kings from the river Euphrates to the land, &c. Heb. "the river even unto," &c. Solomon had all the kings of Syria, Ammon, the Philistines, &c. under him; so that his empire took in all that had been promised to Abraham. IL See S. Aug. q. 21. Josue.

VER. 22. Measures (cori). Each of which contained little less than 300 pints. C.—A corus is equivalent to 30 modii, and would support as many men a day; so that the family of Solomon would contain 2,700 people. A Lapide, M.—Villalpand calculates 48,600, and Calvisius 54,000.

VER. 23. Buffaloes. Yachmur means also a sort of wild-goat, like a stag. Deut. xiv. 5. Bochart, Anim. i. B. iii. 22.—Fowls. Some Rabbins explain barburim, (or borbrim) of capons, or birds from Barbary; as if this name had been known in the days of Solomon. C.—There was an ancient Ethiopian Barbary on the Persian gulf, (Bochart) with which the Rabbins were not acquainted. C.

VER. 24. Beyond. Heb. "on the side of," without determining on which. Deut. i.—Thaphsa. The famous Thapsacus, on the Euphrates.—To Gazan. Heb. Hazza. This name is written in a different manner from Gaza, and may signify a country of the Medes, on the frontiers of Armenia. But, as it is pronounced almost alike, and the parallel passage determines for the country of the Philistines, (v. 21,) we may explain it of Gaza. C.

VER. 25. Vine. This expression is often used to imply a state of peace and happiness. The people were then content with rural pleasures. C.

VER. 26. Forty: 2 Par. ix. 25. has four in the Heb. Sept. read in both places 40,000 mares, for chariots, and 12,000 horses. C.—The Alex. copy has 40 here, and 4000 in the latter place, where, instead of horses, it gives horsemen, with the Vulg. These two words are often used as synonymous by the best authors. But it is more difficult to reconcile the number; (C.) as (2 Par. xiv.) we read again differently, he had 1400 chariots, and 12,000 horsemen. H.—Forty might easily be mistaken for four, by only adding in at the end of arba. Bochart. Grot.—Instead of stalls, Calmet supposes stables to be understood, and in each he would place ten horses, which completes the number here assigned. If this be admitted, no change is necessary: but, as præsepe signifies "a stall," we may adhere to the Vulg. which has 40,000 in both places; whereas the Heb. varies, though the sense may be the same. The number of Solomon's chariots was 1400. As two horses were usually employed to draw them, 2800; or, allowing for accidents, changes, &c. 4000 horses would have been amply sufficient. It seems, therefore, that we should admit only so many horses or stalls. H.—"Vignoles conjectures, that the Jews formerly used marks analogous to our common figures; as the Arabians have done for many hundred years. And, if so, the corruption" of hundreds for tens, &c. "may be easily accounted for, by the transcriber's carelessly adding or omitting a single cypher." Kennicott, Diss. ii.—Yet, if 40,000 horses must be admitted, we may say that they were not all intended for the chariots of war, but some for draught-horses, to convey the stones and other materials for the numerous buildings, which Solomon carried on. This might serve to excuse him for having so many horses, (H.) contrary to the letter of the law, and the example of Josue and of David. His subjects were thus, perhaps, engaged in too much commerce with the Egyptians; and the king was forced to burden them with taxes, which at last proved so fatal. Serar. Pineda. C.—Yet some undertake his defence, by saying that he did not act against the spirit of the law; that many of the horses were imposed as a tribute, and Solomon did not place his trust in them. Prov. xxi. 31. 2 Par. ix. 24. Tostat. Bochart. B. ii. 9.—His empire was become more extensive, and his works more splendid; so that what might appear an useless parade in some, might be worthy of praise in Solomon. The law is not so precise. He shall not multiply horses to himself, nor lead back the people into Egypt, being lifted up with the number of his horsemen. Deut. xvii. 16. There is a like prohibition of many wives and treasures.

VER. 27. Fed them and is omitted in Heb. and Sept. H.

VER. 28. Beasts. Racash denotes horses of extraordinary swiftness, (Bochart) or dromedaries, &c. Junius translates, "post-horses." King: so also the Sept. Prot. "the officers were, every man according to his charge." The twelve governors employed others to bring all necessary provisions, (H.) to the places where the king was travelling; (C.) or they took care not only of the king's table, but they had also the general inspection over his stables. H.—Few oats are grown in the East. They feed their horses on barley and straw. C.

VER. 29. Hart; magnanimity, which pride often attempts to imitate, and is therefore designated by the same expression. Prov. xxi. 4. The genius of Solomon was also most penetrating and comprehensive. C.—Enonias thus addresses Apollo, "Thou who knowest both the number of the sands and the extent of the sea—who understandest the dumb, and hearest the man who has not spoken." Eus. præp. v. 34. H.

30 And the wisdom of Solomon surpassed the wisdom of all the Orientals, and of the Egyptians;

31 And he was wiser than all men: wiser than Ethan, the Ezrahite, and Heman, and Chalcol, and Dorda, the sons of Mahol, and he was renowned in all nations round about.

32 Solomon also spoke three thousand parables: and his poems were a thousand and five.

33 And he treated about trees, from the cedar that is in Libanus, unto the hyssop that cometh out of the wall: and he discoursed of beasts, and of fowls, and of creeping things, and of fishes.

34 And they came from all nations to hear the wisdom of Solomon, and from all the kings of the earth, who heard of his wisdom.

CHAP. V.

Hiram, king of Tyre, agreeth to furnish timber and workmen for building the temple: the number of workmen and overseers.

AND^b Hiram, king of Tyre, sent his servants to Solomon: for he heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father: for Hiram had always been David's friend.

2 Solomon sent to Hiram, saying:

3 Thou knowest the will of David, my father, and that he could not build a house to the name of the Lord his God, because of the wars that were round about him, until the Lord put them under the soles of his feet.

^a Eccli. xlvii. 16.—^b A. M. 2992, A. C. 1012.

VER. 30. Orientals of Chaldaea, Arabia, Idumea, &c. Dan. ii. 2. Abd. viii. Num. xxii. 5. Job and his friends were of this description. The Greeks acknowledged that they had received their philosophy from the barbarians; (Laert. preem.) and Casaubon observes, that the ancient defendants of the Christian faith proved the same truth. Not Ibid. They shewed that all true saving knowledge had been derived from the Hebrews. H.—The Chaldees maintain that their countrymen were the fountains of science; and many suppose that Abraham communicated these treasures to the Egyptians; whereas the latter pretend, that a colony from their country had imparted that blessing to the Chaldees. Diodorus (B. i.) says that Belus conducted such a colony, and the Greeks chiefly owed their information to the Egyptians. God had communicated to Solomon all that was of real use in those sciences, in a superior degree. Wisd. vii. 17. Joseph. viii. 2. He was eminently skilled in natural philosophy, &c. C.

VER. 31. All men, of his time (Lyran.) and nation. Munster.—But why should we limit these general expressions? C. See C. iii. 12. 13. H.—Ethan is the same as Idithun. The title of Ezrahite does not seem to belong to him; and Chalcol and Dorda seem to be inserted here by some transcriber from 1 Par. ii. 6. where we read, the sons of Zarah, Ethan and Heman, and Chalcol and Darda, of the tribe of Juda. But they were different from these men, who were probably Levites. C.—We find Chalcol and Dorda mentioned no where else. Heman was an Ezrahite, (Pa. lxxvii.) and a seer of the king, presiding over the singers, (1 Par. xv. 19. and xxv. 4. and 5. M.) who stood in the middle. Ethan's band surrounded the altar, (1b. C. vi. 44.) while Asaph's were on the right hand.—Mahol is the mother of the four, unless the word denote their profession, as sons of "the choir," singing and playing on musical instruments. C.—Solomon was eminent in both respects, as well as in poetry; as he is compared with those who were most noted for compositions and music. Sanctius.

VER. 32. Three thousand parables. These works are all lost, excepting some part of the parables extant in the book of Proverbs; and his chief poem called the Canticle of Canticles. Ch.—The title of Psalm cxvi. attributes it to Solomon. But its authority is not sufficiently established. The book of Proverbs contains at present only 658, (a Lap.) or 800 parables. Clarius—Josephus exaggerates, when he reads 3000 volumes of parables.—Five. Sept. read, "5000 odes," which is adopted by many interpreters. Josephus (C.) and the Chal. agree with the Heb. M.

VER. 33. Wall. Some deny that ezob means hyssop. Kinchi, Levinus, &c. But there is a species which grows on mountains, and even out of walls. Bochart. Sanctius.—It is a small odoriferous plant; whereas the cedar was the largest tree with which the Jews were acquainted. C.—On Libanus there are found such trees above 36 feet in circumference; which extend their branches 111 feet around them. Maundrell, Jerus. p. 239.—Solomon examined all. Wisd. vii. 17, &c. Many works have been falsely attributed to him, which Origen rejects; hom. 85, in Mat. See Joseph. viii. 2. Pineda iii. 29. C.—Perhaps he might have composed some magical works, while he was an idolater. Salien.

VER. 34. Wisdom. The Scriptures relate the coming of the queen of Saba. C. i. Thus Livy attracted the attention of distant nations, who neglected the grandeur of Rome, to visit him. S. Jerom Ep. ad Paulin. Solomon's wisdom is compared to a great river, inundating the whole earth. Eccli. xlvii. 16.

4 But now the Lord my God hath given me rest round about; and there is no adversary nor evil occurrence.

5 Wherefore I purpose to build a temple to the name of the Lord my God, as the Lord spoke to David, my father, saying: "Thy son, whom I will set upon the throne, in thy place, he shall build a house to my name."

6 Give orders, therefore, that thy servants cut me down cedar-trees, out of Libanus, and let my servants be with thy servants: and I will give thee the hire of thy servants whatsoever thou wilt ask: for thou knowest how there is not among my people a man that has skill to hew wood like to the Sidonians.

7 Now when Hiram had heard the words of Solomon, he rejoiced exceedingly, and said: Blessed be the Lord God this day, who hath given to David a very wise son over this numerous people.

8 And Hiram sent to Solomon, saying: I have heard all thou hast desired of me; and I will do all thy desire concerning cedar-trees, and fir-trees.

9 My servants shall bring them down from Libanus to the sea: and I will put them together in floats, on the sea, and convey them to the place, which thou shalt signify to me, and will land them there, and thou shalt receive them: and thou shalt allow me necessities to furnish food for my household.

10 So Hiram gave Solomon cedar-trees, and fir-trees, according to all his desire.

^c 2 Kings vii. 18. 1 Par. xxii. 10.

CHAP. V. VER. 1. Hiram. Josephus says, that the temple was built in the 11th year of this prince. He must therefore have been the son of David's friend, as the former had sent artificers to build David's house, (2 K. v. 11. C.) above 30 years before. But there may be a mistake in the number, as the Scripture evidently speaks of the same king; and Josephus had said before, "Hiram rejoiced exceedingly that Solomon had succeeded to the throne; (for he had been the friend of David) and he sent ambassadors to congratulate with him on his present felicity, by whom Solomon wrote," &c. The mutual letters of these kings were still preserved in the archives of Tyre; and this author confidently appeals to them, as he deems it "impious to insert any fiction" in his history. Ant. viii. 2. He quotes Dius and Menander; who asserted, that these princes proposed enigmas to each other; and that Hiram was obliged to pay a large sum of money, as he could not explain that which Solomon had proposed, &c. C. Ap. i. H.

VER. 3. Wara. Many interpreters assert that this was the real impediment, (Tostat, Salien, &c.) rather than the blood, which David had already spilt, 2 K. vii. and 1 Par. xxii. 8.

VER. 4. Adversary. Lit "Satan." Adad of Idumea, and another of Syria, and Jeroboam, began to molest Solomon, only towards the end of his reign. C. xi. 25.

VER. 6. Libanus. It belonged to Israel, since the victory of David, 2 K. x. 18. Solomon built some fortresses on the mountain. C. ix. 19. The cedar-trees grow chiefly towards Phenicia, above Biblos. They bear a great resemblance with fir-trees, and grow in a pyramidal form. The wood is hard and bitter, so that worms will not molest it. Hence it was much used in the temple of Ephesus, and in other large buildings; lacunaria ex ed. . . propter aternitatem sunt facta. Vitruv. ii. 9.—Sidonians. It seems they were subject to the king of Tyre, or this was the common title of all the Phenicians. C.

VER. 7. Lord (Jehova) God "of Israel," as it is expressed, 2 Par. ii. 12. H.—This pagan prince adored and erected temples and altars in honour of Baal, Astarte, and Hercules; (Josephus, &c.) yet he did not hesitate to acknowledge the God of Israel, as he supposed that there was a god for each nation. See C. xx. 28. 4 K. xvii. 27. C.—Thus many think that they may serve the God of unity, by going to hear the sermons of men who preach a contradictory doctrine. The devil will be satisfied, if he can share the divine honours; but God will admit of no rival, nor can he sanction any but the true religion. H.

VER. 8. Fir-trees. Some take these to be another species of cedars, as they say fir is too slender and corruptible; (Martin, &c.) and Solomon had not asked for it. v. 6; though he does in 2 Paral. ii. 8, where (H.) the word is translated arceuthina, "juniper-trees," by the Sept. and S. Jerom. C.—Beroshim, is rendered fir-trees by Pagnin; box or cedars, &c. by others. The precise import of the Heb. names of plants, animals, &c. is not sufficiently known. M.—Fir is used by the best architects. Vitruvius, ii. 9. C.

VER. 9. There. Joppe was fixed upon, as the port nearest to Jerusalem, 2 Par. ii. 16. The trees were squared and rolled, (C.) or dragged (H.) from the mountain-top to the river Adonis, or the plain of Biblos, and then sent in floats by sea. C.—Household, for the workmen employed in cutting the wood; (2 Par. M.) and also for Hiram's other servants, as the kings of the East paid them not with money. C.—The Tyrians neglected agriculture. Servius.

11 And Solomon allowed Hiram twenty thousand measures of wheat, for provision for his house, and twenty measures of the purest oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram every year.

12 And the Lord gave wisdom to Solomon, as he promised him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon, and they two made a league together.

13 And king Solomon chose workmen out of all Israel, and the levy was of thirty thousand men.

14 And he sent them to Libanus, ten thousand every month, by turns, so that two months they were at home: and Adoniram was over this levy.

15 And Solomon had seventy thousand to carry burdens, and eighty thousand to hew stones in the mountain:

16 Besides the overseers who were over every work, in number three thousand and three hundred, that ruled over the people, and them that did the work.

17 And the king commanded that they should bring great stones, costly stones, for the foundation of the temple, and should square them:

18 And the masons of Solomon, and the masons of Hiram, hewed them: and the Giblions prepared timber and stones to build the house.

CHAP. VI.

The building of Solomon's temple.

AND it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel came

* Supra iii. 12.

VER. 11. Wheat, "ground or beaten." Heb. Paral. H.—By comparing this passage with C. iv. 22, we may see how much the court of Solomon surpassed that of Hiram. The former consumed 90 measures of flour a day; and 20,000 of wheat sufficed for the Tyrian prince's family a whole year.—Twenty. It is supposed by many commentators that thousand is to be supplied from the former sentence; as there seems otherwise to be no proportion between the wheat and the oil. Piscat. &c.—The Sept. Syr. &c. read 20,000. C.—The Alex. copy has not core, but only beth, (H.) or "bath," which is a smaller measure, containing 29 pints and something more, (C.) or seven gallons, four pints, English wine measure; whereas the core, or chomer, consisted of 75 gallons, five pints. Arbuthnot. H.—In Paral. the workmen have 20,000 cores of wheat, and also of barley, and as many baths of wine and of oil; which bear some proportion with each other. C.

VER. 14. Levy, or tribute. The men had only to procure stones, as the Tyrians had engaged to do all which regarded the wood. C.—These were Israelites. M.

VER. 15. Mountain of Libanus. C.—Par. mountains: but the Heb. is singular in both places. They were all proselytes or strangers.

VER. 16. Three hundred. In 2 Par. (ii. 2, and 18,) we read six hundred; (H.) as there are 300 superior officers included. C. M. Sa, &c.—But these 3600 are all overseers. H.

VER. 17. Foundation, which did not appear. C.—What sort would, therefore, be chosen for the most conspicuous parts of the temple? H.

VER. 18. Giblions.—Ezechiel (xxvii. 9) commends them for building ships. Giblions of Gebal is supposed to be the town, which profane authors style Biblos, at the foot of Libanus. Ptolemy also mentions Gabala, to the east of Tyre. C.

CHAP. VI. VER. 1. Eightieth year. This chronology meets with the approbation of most people. See Usher. C. xii. Some, however, find a difficulty in reconciling it with Acts xiii. 20, which seems to attribute 450 years to the government of the judges. C.—Sept. have 440; Josephus 592, though Ruffin neglects the 90 in his version; Petau 520; Severus 582; Clem. Alex. 566; Vossius 580; Cano 590; Serarius 680.—Houbigant would read 350 in the Acts. But Capellus would add 100 here, &c. H.—Second of the sacred year, corresponding with our April. Syr. Chaldee styles it "of the splendour of flowers." M.—The Hurons, and other nations of America, call this "the moon of plants;" the Flemings, "the month for mowing," Grasmaand. Our Saxon ancestors gave descriptive names to the months. See Verstegan. H.—At first, the Hebrews only described the months by their order; "first, second," &c. In Solomon's time we begin to find other names, taken from the Phenicians (Scalig.) Chaldees, (Grot.) or Egyptians. Hardouin, A. 2993.—After the captivity, at least, the Chaldee names were adopted; (H.) 1. Nisan; 2. Jar; 3. Sivan; 4. Tammu; 5. Ab; 6. Elul; 7. Tisri; 8. Marshewan; 9. Casleu; 10. Thebet; 11. Sehebet; 12. Adar; (C.) 13. Veadar, the intercalary month, when requisite, according to the lunar system, which was not perhaps yet adopted. Each of these months generally corresponded with two of ours; Nisan with the end of March and the beginning of April, &c. Sept. here take no notice of Zio, though they do, v. 37. H.—The temple was begun on Monday, May 21, A. 2992. Usher.—It was finished A. 3000, or in the following year, when it was solemnly dedicated. Button.

out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of the reign of Solomon over Israel, in the month Zio, (the same is the second month) he began to build a house to the Lord.

2 And the house, which king Solomon built to the Lord, was threescore cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and thirty cubits in height.

3 And there was a porch before the temple, of twenty cubits in length, according to the measure of the breadth of the temple: and it was ten cubits in breadth, before the face of the temple.

4 And he made in the temple oblique windows.

5 And upon the wall of the temple, he built floors round about, in the walls of the house, round about the temple and the oracle, and he made chambers in the sides round about.

6 The floor that was underneath was five cubits in breadth, and the middle floor was six cubits in breadth, and the third floor was seven cubits in breadth. And he put beams in the house round about on the outside, that they might not be fastened in the walls of the temple.

7 And the house, when it was in building, was built of stones, hewed and made ready: so that there was neither hammer nor axe, nor any tool of iron heard in the house when it was in building.

8 The door, for the middle side, was on the right hand of the house: and by winding-stairs they went

* A. M. 2992, A. C. 1012. 2 Par. iii. 1.

VER. 2. House. Heb. Habayith, "the palace" of the God of Israel, where the priests alone had access. It was surrounded by various courts and apartments, as the ancient temples were very different from ours. All these appendages sometimes go under the common name of the temple. C.—Cubits. The common one contained half a yard. The sacred cubit amounted to 21,888 inches. Arbuthnot. Eze. xliii. 13.—Calmet makes the cubit consist of 24 fingers' breadth, or little less than 20 inches of the French measure, which is greater than ours. H.—Hence the temple would be 102½ feet long, 34 feet 2 inches broad, 51 feet 3 inches high to the ceiling. C.—The walls are not included; else the breadth would be almost 60 cubits, the length 100, and the height 50. Villalpand, ii. 5. 14. M.

VER. 3. Temple. The porch was of the same height as the temple, though we read that it was 120 cubits high, 2 Par. iii. 4. But one word seems there to have been substituted for another, (C.) unless it might resemble a high tower. H.—Before the porch were placed the two brazen pillars. The interior of it was highly adorned by Herod. Josephus, Ant. xv. 11.

VER. 4. Oblique windows. Which were made slanting, that the light might be more easily communicated within. H.—On the outside they were not so large. W. M.—Heb. "windows to see through, shut," with lattices, (C.) or blinds. Prot. "he made windows of narrow lights." H.—Curtains might be hung before them, as no glass was yet used. C.—These windows occupied the five cubits above the chambers, which were built on the west end, and on the sides of the temple, 15 cubits high. C.—No windows were permitted in the holy of holies. M.

VER. 5. Upon the wall. That is, joining to the wall.—He built floors round about. Chambers or cells adjoining to the temple, for the use of the temple and of the priests, so contrived as to be between the inward and outward wall of the temple, in three stories, one above another.—The oracle. The inner temple or holy of holies, where God gave his oracles. Ch.—Sides. Prot. "he made chambers round about." H.—Some think that buttresses were used, to strengthen the building. Sept. "ribs," (M.) or sides. But there seem rather to have been three off-sets; so that the wall kept decreasing in breadth, as it grew higher, (H.) every ten cubits, (Eze. xli. 6. M.) and thus the upper chamber was two cubits broader than the lowest. The beams might thus rest upon the walls, and be easily changed. H.

VER. 6. Temple. This was done for greater respect, and that the wall might not be injured. Ezechiel (xli. 6,) counts 33 chambers on the three sides. S. Jerom seems to double that number; while Josephus acknowledges only 30. C.—Salien has 42, or 14 in each story.

VER. 7. Made ready, &c. So the stones for the building of God's eternal temple, in the heavenly Jerusalem, (who are the faithful) must first be hewn and polished here by many trials and sufferings, before they can be admitted to have a place in that celestial structure. Ch.—Those who have the happiness to be chosen, will be no more disturbed with the noise or inconvenience of persecution, (H.) which they ought to bear in silence upon earth. W.—Building. Screw nails were probably used. The ancient Romans wrought the mouldings, &c. of their pillars, after they were erected. The Rabbins pretend that a little worm, or the stone schamir, which was brought from the earthly paradise by an eagle, up to the middle room, and from the middle to the third.

9 So he built the house, and finished it: and he covered the house with roofs of cedar.

10 And he built a floor over all the house, five cubits in height, and he covered the house with timber of cedar.

11 And the word of the Lord came to Solomon, saying:

12 As for this house, which thou art building, if thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments, walking in them, I will fulfil my word to thee, which I spoke to David thy father.

13 ^b And I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel, and I will not forsake my people Israel.

14 So Solomon built the house, and finished it.

15 And he built the walls of the house on the inside, with boards of cedar, from the floor of the house to the top of the walls, and to the roofs, he covered it with boards of cedar on the inside: and he covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.

16 And he built up twenty cubits with boards of cedar at the hinder part of the temple, from the floor to the top: and made the inner house of the oracle to be the holy of holies.

17 And the temple itself, before the doors of the oracle, was forty cubits long.

18 And all the house was covered within with cedar, having the turnings, and the joints thereof artfully wrought, and carvings projecting out: all was covered with boards of cedar: and no stone could be seen in the wall at all.

^a 2 Kings vii. 16.

or by the devil, Asmodeus, polished all the stones. Maimonides has even written a book on this famous worm. Grotius.—Theodoret (q. 23.) also asserts, without proof, that the stones were found ready cut, in the quarry, and that they had only to be polished. We may form a grand idea of the workmen employed by Solomon, when we consider that they were able to prepare all things, with such exactitude, at a distance. C.

VER. 8. Middle side. Sept. "lower story." C.—"The door of the lower story (rib or side, πλαῖς; Chal. the lower appendage) was under the right wing of the house, and a winding staircase led to the middle, and from the middle to the third story. H.—This sense is very clear. Heb. intimates that the staircase was round like a screw, and was formed in the wall, at one end of the rooms.—Right hand of those who entered the temple, or on the north; though the south is commonly thus designated. The doors opened into the porch, as the temple was not to be made a thoroughfare. C.

VER. 9. Roofs. Prot. "beams and boards of cedar." None of the stones appeared within, v. 18. H.

VER. 10. Height. To prevent the excessive heats. Five other cubits were also subtracted, v. 20. Some translate, "he made also stories of all the temple, each five cubits high;" so that the three stories occupied half the height of the walls, which were 30 cubits in height, v. 2. C.—Covered. Heb. "took (or bound together) the house," &c. The roof was flat. C.—Villalpand maintains the contrary, (in Ezec. xli) with Sanchez, &c. Salien gathers from many of the ancients, that the floor here mentioned, was a balustrade, or the pinnacle of the temple, (Mat. iv.) where people might walk or pray. M.

VER. 11. Saying. By the prophet Ahia, as the Jews suppose he was sent thither to Solomon. The temple had been commenced two years; (Salien) or this apparition took place after the dedication, and is related more at length; (C. ix. 2. C.) though the former opinion seems more agreeable to the context, art building, &c. Instead of as for, (H.) we might supply stabit. "This house . . shall stand;" (Salien) or simply, God looks down upon the building with complacency, and says, "This is the house," by way of eminence. As thou hast endeavoured to honour my name, I will not only fulfil my promises to David, but I will be ever ready to grant thy just requests, in this holy place, provided thou continue faithful, with thy subjects, and obey my commands. H.

VER. 15. Fir. Or perhaps of another species of cedar, resembling the juniper-tree. It is found in Phœnicia and in Lycia. See C. v. 8. It is doubted whether the sanctuary was also boarded, as we read that it was paved with marble. Heb. "with precious or costly stones," 2 Par. iii. 6. But boards might be laid upon them, as they were on other parts of the temple. The magnificence of Solomon appears in his using such costly things, even where they 19 And he made the oracle in the midst of the house, in the inner part, to set there the ark of the covenant of the Lord.

20 Now the oracle was twenty cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in height. And he covered it, and overlaid it with most pure gold. And the altar also he covered with cedar.

21 And the house before the oracle he overlaid with most pure gold, and fastened on the plates with nails of gold.

22 And there was nothing in the temple that was not covered with gold: the whole altar of the oracle he covered also with gold.

23 And he made in the oracle two cherubims of olive-tree, of ten cubits in height.

24 One wing of the cherub was five cubits, and the other wing of the cherub was five cubits: that is, in all ten cubits, from the extremity of one wing to the extremity of the other wing.

25 The second cherub also was ten cubits: and the measure, and the work was the same in both the cherubims:

26 That is to say, one cherub was ten cubits high, and in like manner the other cherub.

27 And he set the cherubims in the midst of the inner temple: and the cherubims stretched forth their wings, and the wing of the one touched one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall: and the other wings in the midst of the temple touched one another.

28 And he overlaid the cherubims with gold.

29 And all the walls of the temple round about he carved with divers figures and carvings: and he made would not be exposed to view. The floor was again covered with plates of gold, v. 30.

VER. 16. The inner house of the oracle. That is, the sanctuary, which he separated from the other part of the temple, with this partition of cedar, instead of the veil, which in the tabernacle of Moses hung before the sanctuary. Ch.—It was a square of 20 cubits, extending from the western end. H.—Hither none but the high priest was allowed to enter, and he but once a year. C.

VER. 17. Itself. Where the priests were stationed. This part was double the length, but of the same breadth, as the most holy place. H.

VER. 18. Out. Heb. "and the cedar boards of the house within, were carved with knops (fruits) and open flowers," (H.) alternately. C.—At all. So the bones in the human body, though concealed, strengthen it; and monks, in their deserts, fortify the Church. W.

VER. 20. Pure gold. Heb. "reserved" by David, or "gold locked up," as most precious. Thin plates were laid on, so as to fit all the various mouldings, flowers, &c.—Cedar. The altar was probably of stone; and upon the cedar boards gold was laid, that the ark might rest upon it. The altar of perfumes was not in the most holy place. C.

VER. 21. Before, v. 17. The holy and the most holy place were equally covered with plates of gold. H.—Heb. "So Solomon overlaid the inner temple with gold reserved, and he made a partition with chains of gold, before the sanctuary, and he overlaid it with gold." H.—The chains were destined to fasten the doors, before locks were invented.

VER. 23. Olive. Heb. "trees full of oil or resin," distinguished from olive trees, 2 Esd. viii. 15. Vatab. translates, "pine;" others, "cypress-wood." C.—Height. Their gigantic stature served to denote the magnificence and greatness of God. They looked towards the east. M.—Their wings extended equalled their height; so that the two cherubims occupied the whole space from north to south, (H.) covering the smaller cherubim of Moses. They only reached half the height of the sanctuary. Their form is not clearly ascertained. See Ex. xxv. 18. C.—What will the Iconoclasts say to these images, which adorned not only the temple, which the people might behold, but also the most sacred place? H.—Villalpand and Salien suppose, that a cherub resembled a young man in the higher parts, adorned with four wings of an eagle and a lion's skin, round his breast and shoulders, while his feet were like those of a calf. M.—Ezechiel seems to insinuate that, in the temple, the cherubim had two faces, one of a man and another of a lion, each looking at palm-trees; as these were placed alternately with the cherubim, round the walls. Ezec. xli. 18. 19.

VER. 29. And divers, &c. Heb. "and open (full-blown) flowers within and without" the sanctuary. We read also of chains of gold connected together & in them cherubims and palm-trees, and divers representations, as it were standing out, and coming forth from the wall.

30 And the floor of the house he also overlaid with gold within and without.

31 And in the entrance of the oracle, he made little doors of olive-tree, and posts of five corners,

32 And two doors of olive-tree: and he carved upon them figures of cherubims, and figures of palm-trees, and carvings very much projecting; and he overlaid them with gold: and he covered both the cherubims and the palm-trees, and the other things, with gold.

33 And he made in the entrance of the temple posts of olive-tree four-square:

34 And two doors of fir-tree, one of each side: and each door was double, and so opened with folding-leaves.

35 And he carved cherubims, and palm-trees, and carved work standing very much out: and he overlaid all with golden plates in square work by rule.

Par. iii. 5. The palm-trees might resemble pillars of the Corinthian order. C.—It is clear that sacred pictures were authorized to be set up in the temple, for God's honour, (W.) though the Jews were so prone to idolatry. H.

VER. 31. Corners, each piece being, perhaps, a cubit in length, so that the two folding-doors would contain ten cubits, or half the wall. But Ezechiel only assigns six cubits to this door, and ten to that which opened into the holy place. Heb. "the lintel and the side posts, a fifth" of the wall; in which sense, the door must not have been above four cubits. So v. 33, four-square is translated also, "a fourth part." But it does not appear to what it refers. Rebikith sometimes means four-square; and why may not chanishith here signify pentagonal? C.—Many suppose that the gate of the sanctuary was of this form, (H.) ending in a point at the top; unless the posts were carved so as to have five angles, like a pillar. Ribera. Templ. ii. 8. M.

VER. 32. And carvings, &c. Heb. "and flowers full-blown." The term anaglyphia, denotes a sculpture in relievo, (C.) or projecting. H.

VER. 34. Fir-tree, or some species of cedar, v. 15.—Double. In the large doors, other smaller were made, that the priests might pass more easily. M.—And so, &c. Lit. "and holding each other, was opened." Both the great and the small doors might open at the same time; (Sanchez) or rather the latter would afford a passage, while the great folding doors were shut. M.—Perhaps both the doors of the holy place and of the sanctuary were so connected, that both opened together. Tract. Middot. iv. 1. C.—But the sanctuary would never be thus exposed to public view. Prot. "two leaves of the one door were folding," &c. H.

VER. 35. And carved, &c. Heb. "and open flowers, (as v. 32) and overlaid them with gold, fitted upon the sculpture;" (H.) so that the shape of every thing appeared.

VER. 36. Court of the priests—Cedar. Some think that the court was surrounded with galleries, supported on three rows of pillars; or one gallery was above another, on pillars of stone, with a third supported by cedar pillars. M.—But Josephus takes no notice of these galleries. Others think that the wall of separation consisted only of two rows of stone, with a third of wood, in all three cubits high. Joseph. viii. 2. Villal.—But the sacred writers seem rather to indicate, that beams of cedar were fixed in the walls, at the distance of three courses of stone, even to the top. This mode of architecture is clearly mentioned, C. vii. 12. 1 Esd. vi. 3. 4. and v. 8. Habac. ii. 11. The ancients admired such a variety, and deemed the building more solid. Vit. i. 5. Eupolemus (ap. Eus. præp. ix. 34.) takes notice, that these beams were fastened together, in the temple, by hooks of copper, weighing each a talent. H.—Such was the structure of the inner court. C.

VER. 38. Bul, afterwards styled Marchesvan. Pagnin thinks that the former name alludes to "the inundation" of rain, at that season, corresponding with our October and November. Chal. "the month of collected fruits." M.—Years. Six months are neglected, (see C. ii. 11.) and as many are redundant. C. vii. 1. Old numbers are often treated in this manner. C.—It is wonderful that Solomon could complete this most stupendous structure (H.) in so short a time. All Asia was 200 years in building the temple of Diana, at Ephesus, and 400 more in embellishing it. Pliny xxxvi. 12.—It is reported that 360,000 men were employed for twenty years, to build a pyramid of Egypt; (C.) which was designed, perhaps, for no other purpose but to shew the pride and magnificence of the king while living, and to contain his ashes after death. Many of the materials for the temple had indeed been collected by David, (1 Par. xxii.) so that Solomon was enabled to finish it in a much shorter time than his own palace, which took him almost thirteen years to bring to perfection. They were almost contiguous to each other, though built on separate hills. The temple occupied the whole of Moria, which was levelled a great deal, to allow space sufficient for such an amazing structure. It was thus founded upon a rock, as an emblem of the perpetuity of the true religion, which has subsisted from the beginning of the world: as may be seen at large in Dr. Worthington; who, on this occasion, gives a retrospective view of what had taken place in the Jewish state, with respect to this most important subject, during the fourth age, or for the space of the last 480 years. See 36 And he built the inner court with three rows of polished stones, and one row of beams of cedar.

37 In the fourth year was the house of the Lord founded, in the month Zio:

38 And in the eleventh year, in the month Bul, (which is the eighth month) the house was finished in all the works thereof, and in all the appurtenances thereof: and he was seven years in building it.

CHAP. VII.

Solomon's palace, his house in the forest, and the queen's house: the work of the two pillars: the sea (or laver) and other vessels.

AND Solomon built his own house in thirteen years, and brought it to perfection.

2 He built also the house of the forest of Libanus; the length of it was a hundred cubits, and the breadth fifty cubits, and the height thirty cubits: and four galleries between pillars of cedar: for he had cut cedar-trees into pillars.

3 And he covered the whole vault with boards of Douay Bible, p. 701, &c. We may be dispensed from repeating these things after him, as they are already, for the most part, observed in the notes; where the attentive reader cannot fail to remark, that the law of the Old Testament was only a figure of that which all must now embrace. *I am not come to destroy, (the law or the prophets) says our Saviour, (Mat. v. 17.) but to fulfil, by accomplishing all the figures and predictions, and by perfecting all that was imperfect, though suitable for the state of mortals in former ages. Children cannot rationally be required to attain, at once, the perfection of manhood. The painter first marks the outlines, which the colouring is calculated to efface, yet so as to render the picture more beautiful. "The cunning Jew" would therefore, in vain, allege the greater antiquity of his religion, as it prefigured and foretold the author and finisher of our faith. And Protestants will act very childishly if they suppose, with Mr. Slack, a Methodist preacher, at Whitby, that this can in any degree enervate the argument of Catholics, who always arraign them before the tribuna. of the apostolic ages, in which they confess our bishops, Linus, &c. existed, and were ordained by the apostles themselves. "Setting aside the apostles, Linus, agreeably to the common opinion, was the first bishop of the Roman-see, who was ordained before the martyrdom both of Peter and Paul." Campbell, 12 lect. quoted by Mr. Slack; (p. 63) who says that he was the first pope, and, of course, that our religion mounts up to the age of the apostles; and, if he thinks to evade this difficulty, by saying, that the Jewish religion was more ancient still, and yet rejected, we may desire him to point out where the Scripture mentions that the religion of Christ was to be rendered more perfect than he left it; as we know from that source, that he was to establish a new law, founded on better promises than those which had been made to the Jews! How will this state of fluctuation, and this relapsing into abominable errors and idolatry, for many hundred years, accord with the promises of Christ? Matt. xxviii. &c. H.—Building it. The dedication was deferred till the following year, probably on account of the jubilee recurring at that time. Usher, A. 3000. C.—But this is very uncertain. Salien fixes upon the year 3030, which was not a year of jubilee; and he rather thinks that the delay was occasioned by the vessels, the brazen sea, &c. which had to be brought from the other side of the Jordan. We may also recollect, that the rainy season was set in before the temple was quite finished; so that it would have been very inconvenient for all Israel to assemble at that time. After the dedication, the temple continued to be adorned, till it was destroyed by Nebuchadonoser, (H.) A. 3416, and lay in ruins fifty-two years, when the Jews were authorized by Cyrus to rebuild it. They could not however finish the work, so as to proceed to a fresh dedication, till the reign of Darius Hystaspes, A. 3489. Herod undertook to rebuild (Button) the greatest part of this second temple, and to adorn it, in the most magnificent manner, A. 3986. This place was honoured by the presence of the Son of God, who foretold the destruction, which took place within that generation. A. D. 70. H.*

CHAP. VII. VER. 1. Thirteen. He was only twelve years and a half; since he finished both the temple and the palace in 20 years. C. ix. 10. Salien observes that Solomon's house was connected with the queen's, as well as with that part which was styled of the forest of Libanus, for their mutual recreation. A. C. 1023. The Rom. Sept. places the 13 first verses at the end, v. 51. H.

VER. 2. Libanus. So it was called, on account of the many cedar pillars brought from that mountain; or because many trees and shrubs were planted in the vicinity. C.—Libanus might also be seen from it, and refreshing breezes be felt. Ar. Mont.—The palace stood on the eastern part of Sion, and to the west of the temple. M.—The vale between them had been filled up, at a vast expense, and a sort of bridge erected, which was called Mello. Thus the palace of David, on the west of Sion, and this of Solomon, served to protect the temple, and to keep the citizens in awe. Salien.—Sanchez declines giving the dimensions of this palace, as they are not satisfactory. M.—Here Solomon resided, and was served in gold, (C.) adorning his palace with shields and targets of the same precious metal. C. x. 16. 21.—Cubits. The more sacred part of the temple was only 60, 20, and 30 cubits. C. vi. 2. But there were various other appendages and towers. This palace must have been very extensive.—And four. Heb. "upon four rows of cedar pillars, with cedar beams upon the cedar, and it was held up with five and forty pillars. And one row had fifteen pillars,

4 Set one against another,

5 And looking one upon another, with equal space between the pillars, and over the pillars were square beams in all things equal.

6 And he made a porch of pillars of fifty cubits in length, and thirty cubits in breadth: and another porch before the greater porch, and pillars, and chapiters upon the pillars.

7 He made also the porch of the throne wherein is the seat of judgment; and covered it with cedar-wood from the floor to the top.

8 And in the midst of the porch, was a small house, where he sat in judgment of the like work. He made also a house for the daughter of Pharaoh ("whom Solomon had taken to wife) of the same work, as this porch;

9 All of costly stones, which were sawed by a certain rule and measure, both within and without: from the foundation to the top of the walls, and without, unto the great court.

10 And the foundations were of costly stones, great stones of ten cubits or eight cubits.

11 And above there were costly stones of equal measure hewed, and in like manner planks of cedar.

12 And the great court was made round with three rows of hewed stones, and one row of planks of cedar, which also was observed in the inner court of the house of the Lord, and in the porch of the house.

13 And king Solomon sent, and brought Hiram from Tyre, pillars." H.—One row of these might be rather pilasters, against the wall; (v. 8,) so that there would be three covered galleries, before the apartments, each supported on 15 pillars. C.

* Supra iii. 1.

VER. 4. Set, &c. Heb. "and windows in three rows, over-against one another; (5) and all the doors and posts square with the windows: and light was against light, in three rows." H.—The palace had three stories; but the galleries before it were of equal height with it.

VER. 6. Porch. Sept. seem to retain the original word ulam, as they read ulam; whence our hall, and the Lat. aula, may be derived. H.—It was a court surrounded by pillars and galleries, in front of the palace. C.—Another. Heb. "the porch before them, (pillars) and the pillars, and the thick beam before them."

VER. 7. Tbb. Heb. "the other side." H.—The eastern princes generally sit before their palace to give judgment; and hence that of the Ottoman emperors is styled the Porte, (C.) or "gate."

VER. 8. House. In the form of a recess or alcove, at the end of one of the aforesaid porches, and probably in that which was nearer the palace. Guards would be stationed in the other. H.—This is the idea which travellers have given us of the palaces in the East. They consist of various apartments, galleries, and courts. Under the outward porch there are guards standing, in a double row; and hence there is a communication with other parts of the house, and with the apartments of the women, which are far removed, and inaccessible to strangers. The women still continue to have separate tents, or apartments; as they had in the days of Sara, Esther, Herodias, &c. Gen. xxiv. Est. i. 11. Mat. xiv. 8. C.—Pharaoh. Till it was finished, this lady had lodged in David's palace; though, as it was deemed in a manner sacred, on account of the presence of the ark, it was judged expedient to remove her. 2 Par. viii. 11. H.—Perhaps she had begun to manifest some signs of a relapse towards idolatry, into which she is supposed chiefly to have induced her husband. C. xi. 4. Salien.

VER. 12. Cedar, in regular courses with the stones. C. vi. 36. Public places were often made in a circular form, and were thus rendered more beautiful. The palace of Solomon might have enclosed the court in this manner, or there were buildings on all the four sides, made of three courses of fine large stones, with the fourth of cedar beams, till the whole was completed. The ancients built for posterity, as we may perceive from the huge stones, well connected, which still remain in the ruins of Egyptian, Greek, and Roman architecture.

VER. 14. Nephthali: 2 Par. (ii. 14.) we read of Dan. But the king of Tyre might be under a mistake, (Sanctius) or he may only insinuate that she lived at the city of that name, in the tribe of Nephthali. M.—One of her husbands might be a Danite, (Grot.) though resident at Tyre.—Father, may also denote a master or officer; in which sense we read in Paral. My father, Hiram. H. S. Jer Trad. M.—If the woman married an idolater, it was contrary to the law: (420)

14 The son of a widow woman, of the tribe of Nephthali, whose father was a Tyrian, an artificer in brass, and full of wisdom, and understanding, and skill to work all work in brass. And when he was come to king Solomon, he wrought all his work.

15 And he cast two pillars in brass, each pillar was eighteen cubits high: ^b and a line of twelve cubits compassed both the pillars.

16 He made also two chapiters of molten brass, to be set upon the tops of the pillars: the height of one chapter was five cubits, and the height of the other chapter was five cubits:

17 And a kind of net-work, and chain-work wreathed together with wonderful art. Both the chapiters of the pillars were cast: seven rows of nets were on one chapter, and seven nets on the other chapter.

18 And he made the pillars, and two rows round about each net-work to cover the chapiters; that were upon the top, with pomegranates: and in like manner did he to the other chapter.

19 And the chapiters that were upon the top of the pillars, were of lily-work, in the porch of four cubits.

20 And again there were other chapiters on the top of the pillars above, according to the measure of the pillar over-against the net-work: and of pomegranates there were two hundred, in rows round about the other chapter.

21 And he set up the two pillars in the porch of the temple: and when he had set up the pillar on the right hand, he called the name thereof Jachin: in like man-

(C.) though Grotius maintains the contrary, when the free exercise of religion was granted.

VER. 15. Eighteen. Both together are said in Paral. to be 35, as if half a cubit too much had been here assigned, which is not unusual with regard to imperfect numbers, v. 1. But Jeremias (lii. 21.) agrees with this passage; and the book of Paral. may not have included a cubit of solid metal at the base or plinth. A. Lap.—The rest was hollow. The chapiters of five cubits, and the bases, which were perhaps as large, are not contained in the 18 cubits, which might otherwise appear to be disproportionate with the circumference of 12 cubits. The Egyptian pillars are sometimes very thick and low; and their temples bear a greater resemblance with that of Solomon, than with those of the Greeks and Romans. C.—Both. Heb. "the second," as if something similar had been observed of the first. C.—But Sheni, signifies also "both, either," &c. M.—Prot. "did compass either of them about." H.—Circles, at equal distances, adorned these pillars. Ex. xxvi. 32. Athen. v. 9.

VER. 16. Five. Comprising all the ornaments. The body was only three cubits, 4 K. xxv. 17. If we include the circles, which join it to the pillar, it would be four; v. 19, and with the rose, and ornaments at the top, five cubits high. Atheneus distinguishes three parts in the Egyptian chapiters; (1) next to the pillar, was seen a circle or wreath of flowers; (2) the stalk, out of which proceeded (3) a rose beginning to open. C.—In the passages, which seem to contradict this text, the omission of the cornice or architrave, may cause the difference. M.

VER. 18. The pillars. This word may have changed places with pomegranates.

VER. 19. Of lily-work, seems also transposed. Calmet would translate, Heb. "and he made pomegranates, two rows round each net, to cover the chapter, which was at the top of the pillar, and in, &c. (19) and the chapter, which was above the pillars of the court, (or porch) four cubits high. And he made rows of 200 pomegranates, all round, to cover one of the crowns of the pillars, and he did the like for the other crown; (20) and he also made a chapter, like a rose, (or lily) at the top of the pillars, above, and over-against the body, which was beyond the nets." The rose seemed to grow out of the pillar. The chapiters were not square, but of a circular form. Pelletier supposes that these pillars were of the ancient Doric order. It is certain that all the chapter was not in the form of a lily, as the Heb. would now insinuate, but only the top part of it. C. v. 22. The long addition of one of the crowns, &c. may be unnecessary, if the original signify either; (as v. 15) "to cover either crown."

VER. 20. Chapter, (capitelli secundi.) H.—Villalpand thinks this "second chapter," is rather the cornice, round which the pomegranates hung. M.—Sept. "and of roses, five rows, all round, upon the second circle." H.

VER. 21. Temple. Against the wall, (Jer. lii. 23,) on each side of the door, which leads to the holy place. The pillars might be 28 cubits high, v. 15.—

ner he set up the second pillar, and called the name thereof Booz.

22 And upon the tops of the pillars he made lily-work: so the work of the pillars was finished.

23 *He made also a molten sea, of ten cubits, from brim to brim, round all about; the height of it was five cubits, and a line of thirty cubits compassed it round about.

24 And a graven work, under the brim of it, compassed it for ten cubits going about the sea: there were two rows cast of chamfered sculptures.

25 And it stood upon twelve oxen, of which three looked towards the north, and three towards the west, and three towards the south, and three towards the east: and the sea was above upon them, and their hinder parts were all hid within.

26 And the laver was a hand breadth thick: and the brim thereof was like the brim of a cup, or the leaf of a crisped lily: it contained two thousand bates.

27 And he made ten bases of brass, every base was four cubits in length, and four cubits in breadth, and three cubits high.

28 And the work itself of the bases, was intergraven: and there were gravings between the joinings.

29 And between the little crowns and the ledges, were lions, and oxen, and cherubims; and in the joinings likewise above: and under the lions and oxen, as it were bands of brass hanging down.

30 And every base had four wheels, and axle-trees of brass: and at the four sides were undersetters, under the laver molten, looking one against another.

31 The mouth also of the laver within, was in the top of the chapter: and that which appeared without, was of one cubit all round, and together it was one cubit and a half: and in the corners of the pillars were divers engravings: and the spaces between the pillars were square, not round.

* 2 Par. iv. 2.

Jachin intimated that God "will establish."—Booz means, "strength is in him." C.—Both together might foretel the stability of the temple. "He shall establish in strength." We have already mentioned the conjecture of Houbigant, that these two pillars were erected in honour of some of Solomon's progenitors, though the former be lost in his genealogy. Ruth iv. 22. H.—Jachin. That is, firmly established.—Booz. That is, in its strength. By recording these names in holy writ, the Spirit of God would have us understand the invincible firmness and strength of the pillars on which the true temple of God, which is the Church, is established. Ch.

VER. 22. Lily, or rose, as Susan means both. This ornament seems to have been detached from the rest of the chapter, and one cubit high, v. 16. C.

VER. 23. Brim, in diameter. The circumference was about 30 cubits; for it is not exactly three times as much as the diameter. C.—The latter is as 7 to 22, with respect to the circumference. But the Scripture takes no notice of trifles. M.

VER. 24. Ten cubits. All was not therefore ornamented. Prot. "there were knobs compassing it, ten in a cubit. . . the knobs were cast in two rows, when it was cast." H.—The signification of Pekahim is not ascertained, whether it be "apples, balls," &c. or perhaps a corrupt word for Bokrim, "oxen," or "ox heads;" as 2 Paral. (iv. 3.) clearly explains it. C.—There also it is insinuated, that the carvings commenced only towards the bottom, where the circumference was reduced to 10 cubits. M.

VER. 25. Oxen. Josephus and the Jews would condemn Solomon for making these figures; but it is clear that his present was acceptable to God, as well as his person. C.—Within. The oxen were of solid brass, to support such a weight. M.—Some think that the water was discharged through their mouths. But Pelletier believes that there were cocks placed between each of the four divisions of oxen, which let water into a basin below, in which the priests might purify themselves. He supposes also that the vessel was double; the cup would contain 2000 baths, and the foot or basin another 1000, by which means he would reconcile this book with that of Chronicles. Mélanges, T. i. p. 115.

VER. 26. Two thousand bates. That is, about ten thousand gallons. This was the quantity of water which was usually put into it: but it was capable, if brim-full, of holding three thousand. See 2 Par. iv. 5. 7. Ch.—The bates contained 32 And the four wheels, which were at the four corners of the base, were joined one to another under the base: the height of a wheel was a cubit and a half.

33 And they were such wheels as are used to be made in a chariot: and their axle-trees, and spokes, and strakes, and naves, were all cast.

34 And the four undersetters, that were at every corner of each base, were of the base itself, cast and joined together.

35 And on the top of the base, there was a round compass of half a cubit, so wrought that the laver might be set thereon, having its gravings, and divers sculptures of itself.

36 He engraved also in those plates, which were of brass, and in the corners, cherubims, and lions, and palm-trees, in likeness of a man standing, so that they seemed not to be engraven, but added round about.

37 After this manner, he made ten bases, of one casting and measure, and the like graving.

38 He made also ten lavers of brass: one laver contained four bates, and was of four cubits: and upon every base, in all ten, he put as many lavers.

39 And he set the ten bases, five on the right side of the temple, and five on the left: and the sea he put on the right side of the temple, over-against the east, southward.

40 And Hiram made cauldrons, and shovels, and basins, and finished all the work of king Solomon in the temple of the Lord.

41 The two pillars and the two cords of the chapters, upon the chapters of the pillars: and the two net-works, to cover the two cords, that were upon the top of the pillars.

42 And four hundred pomegranates for the two net-works: two rows of pomegranates for each net-work, to cover the cords of the chapters, which were upon the tops of the pillars.

43 And the ten bases, and the ten lavers on the bases.

about five gallons. W.—Some imagine, without grounds, (C.) that the measure in Par. was of a less capacity. Villalp. A. Lapide.—The smaller is called metreta, "measure," after the Greek, as it had no proper name. Salien.—Instead of a hand's breadth, it is lit. "three ounces," or the fourth part of a Roman foot; which is equivalent to four fingers' (H.) breadth, or a "hand's breadth," as the Heb. tophach implies, or a little above three inches.—Crisped, or "full-blown lily." The Chaldee supposes it was thus ornamented. Heb. "with flowers of lilies," (C.) or "roses." Shoshan. H.

VER. 27. Bases. These were designed to wash the victims. Pelletier.

VER. 28. And. Heb. is very obscure in this and the following verse. Indeed interpreters are so little agreed about the precise signification of some of the terms, that it is not necessary to repeat their sentiments.

VER. 32. Joined. Yet not so as to be immovable. C.

VER. 36. Palm-trees were not expressed, v. 29. All was in relieve, and represented in its natural posture. C.—About. One would have taken them to be alive, they were so well executed. Heb. "according to the proportion of every one, and added round about," (H.) projecting. M.

VER. 39. Right side, to the south, between the temple and the altar of holocausts.—Sea. It was the most towards the east, of the five basins, (C.) or near the eastern gate of the priests' court, standing to the south of the entrance, that they might purify themselves. M.—S. Justin (ap. ii.) observes that the pagans imitated this custom. But this ought not to hinder Christians from employing a thing which is innocent in itself, and calculated to make them aspire to the greatest purity, when they approach to God. H.

Spargit & ipse suos lauro vorante capillos

VER. 40. Shovels. Scutras may also signify "cauldrons," from their resemblance with a shield. These terms occur Ex. xxvii. 3. (C.) and are here properly translated, shovels, &c. H.—The Jews say there were always, at least, three things of the same species, that one might be ready in case another was defiled.

VER. 41. Cords: no mention of these had been made before. The same terms are frequently expressed in a different manner, v. 15, to 20. Heb. "the two pillars and the chapters round, (C.) which were on the top of the pillars and the two nets to cover the two bowls of (or the two circular) chapters," &c. If 44 And one sea, and twelve oxen under the sea.

45 And the cauldrons, and the shovels, and the basins. All the vessels that Hiram made for king Solomon, for the house of the Lord, were of fine brass.

46 In the plains of the Jordan, did the king cast them in a clay ground, between Socoth and Sarthan.

47 And Solomon placed all the vessels: but for its exceeding great multitude the brass could not be weighed.

48 And Solomon made all the vessels for the house of the Lord: the altar of gold, and the table of gold, upon which the loaves of proposition should be set:

49 And the golden candlesticks, five on the right hand, and five on the left, over-against the oracle, of pure gold: and the flowers like lilies, and the lamps over them of gold: and golden snuffers,

50 And pots, and flesh-hooks, and bowls, and mortars, and censers, of most pure gold: and the hinges for the doors of the inner house of the holy of holies, and for the doors of the house of the temple, were of gold.

51 And Solomon finished all the work that he made in the house of the Lord, and brought in the things that David, his father, had dedicated, the silver and the gold, and the vessels, and laid them up in the treasures of the house of the Lord.

CHAP. VIII.

The dedication of the temple: Solomon's prayer and sacrifices.

THEN^b all the ancients of Israel, with the princes of the tribes, and the heads of the families of the children of Israel, were assembled to king Solomon, in Jerusalem: that they might carry the ark of the covenant of the Lord, out of the city of David, that is, out of Sion.

2 And all Israel assembled themselves to king Solo-

VER. 45. Fine brass (aurichalco). Some pretended that gold was mixed with this sort of brass. But Pliny (xxxiv. 2.) informs us that it came out of the mines, without dross.—Heb. "polished (or refined) brass." C.—It might resemble the Corinthian brass. M.

VER. 46. Sarthan. This place was on the west, and Socoth on the east of the Jordan, near Bethsan. C. iv. 12. C.—Jos. iii. 16. H.—Adrichomius places both on the east, in the tribe of Gad. M.

VER. 47. Weighed. It was deemed unnecessary, and too troublesome. H.—Heb. "And Solomon would not have all the vessels weighed," on account of the too great number: "the weight of the brass was not discovered." Vatable.

VER. 48. Altar, not that on which the ark was placed, (C. vi. 20. C.) though some are of that opinion; (M. &c.) but perhaps the altar of incense. The one which Moses had made was probably too small, (C.) and reposit in the treasury. Rabbins.—Table. In 1 Par. iv. 8. we find ten specified, one between each candlestick, in the holy place. Josephus (viii. 2.) mentions an incredible number of gold and silver utensils, which are not found in Scripture; and the Rabbins are not sparing in miracles, to promote a respect for the temple. No venomous creature, they say, was ever seen in Jerusalem; nor did man seek for lodgings in vain, &c. The priests were so numerous, that the same person had never to offer the perpetual sacrifice or incense twice in his life. No one durst spit in the temple, nor turn his back on the altar, &c. C.

VER. 49. Dedicated. Lit. "sanctified," (H.) or set apart. W.—Gold, unwrought. M.

CHAP. VIII. VER. 2. Ethanim was afterwards called Tisri. H.—Usher places the dedication on Friday, 30th October, the 8th of the seventh month. The people continued at Jerusalem till the 23rd. The feast of expiation fell on the 10th, (H.) during the octave of the dedication. After this, the feast of tabernacles commenced on the 15th, for other seven days. This was the year of jubilee; and Solomon had waited on purpose, that the people might have more leisure to attend on such a solemn occasion. C.—But on this we cannot rely. There might be other reasons for the delay; (See C. vi. 38.) and one of the chief might be, a desire to perform this ceremony in the seventh or sabbatical month, which was honoured with more festivals than any other. It had just elapsed, before the temple was finished, in the preceding year. H.

VER. 3. Priests, who were also Levites, as it is expressed in 2 Par. v. 4. Perhaps the ark was uncovered, (C.) as the Canthites carried it when folded up. H.

VER. 4. Ark, from the city of David, along with the tabernacle, (Salien) mon, on the festival day, in the month of Ethanim, the same is the seventh month.

3 And all the ancients of Israel came, and the priests took up the ark,

4 And carried the ark of the Lord, and the tabernacle of the covenant, and all the vessels of the sanctuary, that were in the tabernacle: and the priests and the Levites carried them.

5 And king Solomon, and all the multitude of Israel, that were assembled unto him, went with him before the ark, and they sacrificed sheep and oxen, that could not be counted or numbered.

6 And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord into its place, into the oracle of the temple, into the holy of holies, under the wings of the cherubims.

7 For the cherubims spread forth their wings over the place of the ark, and covered the ark, and the staves thereof above.

8 And whereas the staves stood out, the ends of them were seen without, in the sanctuary before the oracle, but were not seen farther out, and there they have been unto this day.

9 Now in the ark there was nothing else^a but the two tables of stone, which Moses put there at Horeb, when the Lord made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt.

10 And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the sanctuary, that a cloud filled the house of the Lord, 11 And the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord.

12 Then Solomon said: "The Lord said that he would dwell in a cloud.

which had been made for it in the palace, v. 1. They also (H.) brought the Mosaic tabernacle from Gabaon, (C. Josephus, &c.) and reposit both (H.) in the treasury of the temple, as they were now of no other service. Jeremias was authorized to take the ark, the tabernacle, and the altar of incense, in order to prevent their falling into the hands of the Chaldees. He placed them in a cave, where they have never, perhaps, been discovered. 2 Mac. ii. 4.

VER. 5. Sacrificed, by the hands of the priests, (M.) or at least (H.) gave them the blood to offer upon the altars, which were placed at six paces from one another, in imitation of David. 2 K. vi. 13. C.—Could not. See C. vii. 47.

VER. 6. Wings. These covered the smaller cherubim, upon the ark. H. C. vi. 23. 27.—They formed a sort of throne, with their wings extended, from one side of the building to the other, (C.) twenty cubits long. H.

VER. 8. Out. In the days of Moses, these staves had touched the veil of the tabernacle: but now, as the place for the ark was twice as large, they were no longer perceived; though they remained in the holes prepared for them by Moses, till the author wrote; which must have been before the captivity. Unless we thus distinguish the times, the Heb. contains a palpable contradiction. C.—"They drew out (or lengthened) the staves, and the heads . . . were seen out in the holy place . . . and they were not seen out." H.—To a person standing at a small distance, they were not visible, though they rather touched the veil. 2 Par. v. 9. M.

VER. 9. Nothing else, &c. There was nothing else but the tables of the law within the ark. But on the outside of the ark, or near the ark, were also the rod of Aaron, and a golden urn with manna. Heb. ix. 4. Ch. W.—These might have been in the ark while it was not fixed: but after the temple was built, all but the tables was placed in the treasury; where, we find, the book of the law was discovered, under Joas. Deut. xxxi. 26. 2 Par. xxxiv. 14. Others think that, in the days of S. Paul, the rod, &c. might have been reposit in the ark, though they had not been admitted at the time when this book was written. Bellar. &c.—But we have no assurance that the ark was ever placed in the second temple; and Josephus informs us, that when the Romans destroyed the temple, "there was nothing at all" in the sanctuary. C.—In arca might easily signify ad, or juxta arcam, "near the ark." Salien.

VER. 12. Cloud. He alludes to Lev. xvi. 2. M.—God had so frequently appeared in this manner, that Solomon was authorized to consider it as the symbol of his presence. Ex. xiv. 19. xxiv. 16. and xl. 32. Ps. xvii. 12. This 13 Building, I have built a house for thy dwelling, to be thy most firm throne for ever.

14 And the king turned his face, and blessed all the assembly of Israel: for all the assembly of Israel stood.

15 And Solomon said: Blessed be the Lord the God of Israel, who spoke with his mouth to David, my father, and with his own hands hath accomplished it, saying:

16 Since the day that I brought my people Israel, out of Egypt, I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel, for a house to be built, that my name might be there: but I chose David to be over my people Israel.

17 And David, my father, would have built a house to the name of the Lord, the God of Israel:

18 And the Lord said to David, my father: Whereas, thou hast thought in thy heart to build a house to my name, thou hast done well in having this same thing in thy mind.

19 Nevertheless, thou shalt not build me a house, but thy son, that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build a house to my name.

20 The Lord hath performed his word which he spoke: and I stand in the room of David, my father, and sit upon the throne of Israel, as the Lord promised: and have built a house to the name of the Lord, the God of Israel.

21 And I have set there a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the Lord, which he made with our fathers, when they came out of the land of Egypt.

22 And Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord, in the sight of the assembly of Israel, and spread forth his hands towards heaven,

23 And said: Lord God of Israel, there is no God like thee, in heaven above, or on the earth beneath: who keepest covenant and mercy with thy servants, that have walked before thee with all their heart:

24 Who hast kept with thy servant David, my father, what thou hast promised him: with thy mouth thou didst speak, and with thy hands thou hast performed, as this day proveth.

25 Now, therefore, O Lord God of Israel, keep with thy servant David, my father, what thou hast spoken to him, saying: "There shall not be taken away of thee a man in my sight, to sit on the throne of Israel: yet so that thy children take heed to their way, that they walk before me as thou hast walked in my sight.

26 And now, Lord God of Israel, let thy words be established, which thou hast spoken to thy servant David my father.

27 Is it then to be thought that God should indeed dwell upon earth? for if heaven, and the heavens of heavens, cannot contain thee, how much less this house which I have built?

28 But have regard to the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplications, O Lord, my God: hear the hymn and the prayer, which thy servant prayeth before thee this day:

29 That thy eyes may be open upon this house, night and day: upon the house of which thou hast said: "My name shall be there: that thou mayst hearken to the prayer which thy servant prayeth, in this place to thee:

30 That thou mayst hearken to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, whatsoever they shall pray for in this place, and hear them in the place of thy dwelling in heaven; and when thou hearest, shew them mercy.

31 If any man trespass against his neighbour, and have an oath upon him, wherewith he is bound, and come, because of the oath, before thy altar, to thy house, 32 Then hear thou in heaven: and do and judge thy servants, condemning the wicked, and bringing his way upon his own head, and justifying the just, and rewarding him according to his justice.

33 If thy people Israel shall fly before their enemies (because they will sin against thee) and doing penance, and confessing to thy name, shall come and pray, and make supplications to thee in this house:

34 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them back to the land which thou gavest to their fathers.

35 If heaven shall be shut up, and there shall be no rain, because of their sins, and they, praying in this place, shall do penance to thy name, and shall be converted from their sins, by occasion of their afflictions:

36 Then hear thou them in heaven, and forgive the luminous cloud filled the whole temple, to convince all that the Lord was pleased with the devotion of the king, and of his people. C.

VER. 13. Ever. He seems to contrast this solid and glittering fabric with the cloud, (M.) as, in some sort, more worthy of God's presence. H.

VER. 14. Stood. It is pretended that the king alone was allowed to sit. C. —But here Solomon stood, upon an eminence made of brass. 2 Par. vi. 13. H. —He pronounced the blessing, (part of which is given, v. 15–22) with his face turned towards the people, as he was also in the court of Israel. Then turning himself to the altar (C.) of holocausts, (M.) with his hands uplifted, he began to pray, v. 23, to 54. See Ex. xxxix. 43. 2 K. vi. 18, where Moses and David blessed the people, on similar occasions. C.—Thus the priests of the Catholic Church turn to the people, when they bless or speak to them; and look towards the altar, when they pour forth their supplications for them to God. Sectaries would always behold the face of the preacher. H.—Blessed. Princes bless their subjects, as parents do their children. W.

VER. 15. Own hands, or almighty power, (M.) hath fulfilled his promise. H.

VER. 22. Heaven, falling on his knees, v. 54. 2 Par. vi. 13. This is the first instance we find of people praying on their knees, which was common afterwards. 1 Esd. ix. 5. Isai. xlv. 24. Dan. vi. 10. Acts ix. 40. and xx. 36. The Christian church generally adopts this custom. So did the pagans, (Et genibus promus, supplex, amittisque rogant, Metam. iii.) as they also stretched forth their hands. Sustulit: exutas vinclis ad sidera palmas, says Virgil. Æn. ii. 153. This practice was very general. Ps. xxvii. 2. 1 Tim. ii. 8.

VER. 25. Sight. Solomon was aware of the conditions on which he held his crown and the divine favour, so that his fall is the more inexcusable. H.—His posterity lost a great part of the kingdom, though they had the right to rule over Juda, till the coming of Christ. W.

VER. 27. Earth. Full of admiration, he breaks out into this pathetic exclamation, wondering that God should deign to accept of what he had done; and that, by the symbol of his presence, he should engage to honour this temple in a more particular manner, and to shower down his graces with a more liberal hand on those who should there present themselves before him. This wise prince was not ignorant that God's immensity fills all places.—Heavens. We know not how many heavens the Jews admitted. We find, 1. the air, 2. the region of the stars, 3. the residence of God, thus specified; and this last is here denoted as the most excellent of all. S. Paul styles it the third heaven. 2 Cor. xii. 2. The Basilidians counted as many heavens as there are days in the year. S. Iræn. i. 90.

VER. 29. My name. It shall be called the house of God. H.—There people shall come to do homage to the Lord. C.

VER. 31. Oath. In certain cases, an oath would clear a person. Ex. xxii. 11. Solomon prays that perjury may be disclosed.—Altar. It was customary to touch the altar, when a person took an oath, as Hannibal did. K. Latinus says,

Tango aras mediosque ignes et Numina testor—

Nulla dies pacem hanc Italiam nec fœdera runpet.—Æn. xii. 201.

VER. 32. Justice. A reward is clearly promised to good works. W.

sins of thy servants, and of thy people Israel: and shew them the good way wherein they should walk, and give rain upon thy land, which thou hast given to thy people in possession.

37 If a famine arise in the land, or a pestilence, or corrupt air, or blasting, or locust, or mildew; if their enemy afflict them, besieging the gates, whatsoever plague, whatsoever infirmity,

38 Whatsoever curse or imprecation shall happen to any man of thy people Israel: when a man shall know the wound of his own heart, and shall spread forth his hands in this house;

39 Then hear thou in heaven, in the place of thy dwelling, and forgive, and do so as to give to every one according to his ways, as thou shalt see his heart (for thou only knowest the heart of all the children of men)

40 That they may fear thee all the days that they live upon the face of the land, which thou hast given to our fathers.

41 Moreover also the stranger, who is not of thy people Israel, when he shall come out of a far country for thy name's sake, (for they shall hear every where of thy great name, and thy mighty hand, 42 And thy stretched out arm) so when he shall come, and shall pray in this place, 43 Then hear thou in heaven, in the firmament of thy dwelling-place, and do all those things, for which that stranger shall call upon thee: that all the people of the earth may learn to fear thy name, as do thy people Israel, and may prove that thy name is called upon on this house, which I have built.

44 If thy people go out to war against their enemies, by what way soever thou shalt send them, they shall pray to thee towards the way of the city, which thou hast chosen, and towards the house, which I have built to thy name:

45 And then hear thou in heaven their prayers, and their supplications, and do judgment for them.

46 But if they sin against thee, (*for there is no man who sinneth not) and thou being angry, deliver them up to their enemies, so that they be led away captives into the land of their enemies, far or near;

47 Then if they do penance in their heart, in the place of captivity, and being converted, make supplication to thee in their captivity, saying: We have sinned, we have done unjustly, we have committed wickedness:

48 And return to thee with all their heart, and all their soul, in the land of their enemies, to which they

VER. 41. Stranger. God watches over all mankind; and oblations were received from all sorts of people, even from idolaters. The kings of Persia and Egypt, the Roman emperors, &c. made great presents. 1 Esd. iii. 7. and vii. 21. Joseph. xi. and xii. 2. It seems the court of the Gentiles was only made after the captivity. have been led captives: and pray to thee towards the way of their land, which thou gavest to their fathers and of the city which thou hast chosen, and of the temple which I have built to thy name:

49 Then hear thou in heaven, in the firmament of thy throne, their prayers, and their supplications, and do judgment for them:

50 And forgive thy people, that have sinned against thee, and all their iniquities, by which they have transgressed against thee: and give them mercy before them that have made them captives, that they may have compassion on them.

51 For they are thy people, and thy inheritance, whom thou hast brought out of the land of Egypt, from the midst of the furnace of iron.

52 That thy eyes may be open to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, to hear them in all things for which they shall call upon thee.

53 For thou hast separated them to thyself for an inheritance, from amongst all the people of the earth, as thou hast spoken by Moses, thy servant, when thou broughtest our fathers out of Egypt, O Lord God.

54 And it came to pass, when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication to the Lord, that he rose from before the altar of the Lord: for he had fixed both knees on the ground, and had spread his hands towards heaven.

55 And he stood, and blessed all the assembly of Israel with a loud voice, saying:

56 Blessed be the Lord, who hath given rest to his people Israel, according to all that he promised: there hath not failed so much as one word of all the good things that he promised by his servant Moses.

57 The Lord our God be with us, as he was with our fathers, and not leave us, nor cast us off:

58 But may he incline our hearts to himself, that we may walk in all his ways, and keep his commandments, and his ceremonies, and all his judgments, which he commanded our fathers.

59 And let these my words, wherewith I have prayed before the Lord, be nigh unto the Lord our God day and night, that he may do judgment for his servant, and for his people Israel, day by day:

60 That all the people of the earth may know, that the Lord he is God, and there is no other besides him.

61 Let our hearts also be perfect with the Lord our God, that we may walk in his statutes, and keep his commandments, as at this day.

62 And the king, and all Israel with him, offered victims before the Lord.

63 And Solomon slew victims of peace-offerings, still invited to attend the chapels of the true God, that they may receive information, and deserve to obtain the blessing of faith. H.

VER. 44. Name. It was the practice of the religious Jews, to pray with their eyes turned towards the holy place, v. 48. which he sacrificed to the Lord, two and twenty thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep: so the king, and all the children of Israel, dedicated the temple of the Lord.

64 In that day the king sanctified the middle of the court, that was before the house of the Lord; for there he offered the holocaust, and sacrifice, and the fat of the peace-offerings: because the brazen altar that was before the Lord, was too little to receive the holocaust, and sacrifice, and the fat of the peace-offerings.

65 And Solomon made at the same time a solemn feast, and all Israel with him, a great multitude, from the entrance of Emath to the river of Egypt, before the Lord our God, seven days and seven days, that is, fourteen days.

66 And on the eighth day, he sent away the people: and they blessed the king, and went to their dwellings, rejoicing, and glad in heart, for all the good things that the Lord had done for David, his servant, and for Israel, his people.

CHAP. IX.

The Lord appeareth again to Solomon: he buildeth cities: he sendeth a fleet to Ophir.

AND it came to pass when Solomon had finished the building of the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all that he desired and was pleased to do,

2 That the Lord appeared to him the second time, as he had appeared to him in Gabaon.

3 And the Lord said to him: I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication, which thou hast made before me: I have sanctified this house, which thou hast built, to put my name there for ever; and my eyes, and my heart, shall be there always.

4 And if thou wilt walk before me, as thy father walked, in simplicity of heart, and in uprightness: and wilt do all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my ordinances, and my judgments, counting the oblations of individuals. The law had not prescribed any particular rites for the dedication of places. But common sense dictated that sacred things should be distinguished from such as were common. H.) unless that passage relate to the same time as that which is here recorded more in detail, and took place in the night, after Solomon had poured forth his most solemn prayer. C.—Others think that God deferred answering his petition for thirteen years, till Solomon was on the point of falling off from the observance of piety, that so he might be restrained more effectually. Salien, A. C. 1011.—Fire from heaven had sufficiently signified that his former request had been granted. M.—The context shews that the admonition was not sent till the palace was finished, (v. 1 and 10) in the 23rd year of Solomon. Salien.

Israel for ever, as I promised David, thy father, saying: There shall not fail a man of thy race upon the throne of Israel.

6 But if you and your children, revolting, shall turn away from following me, and will not keep my commandments, and my ceremonies, which I have set before you, but will go and worship strange gods, and adore them:

7 I will take away Israel from the face of the land which I have given them; and the temple which I have sanctified to my name, I will cast out of my sight; and Israel shall be a proverb, and a by-word among all people.

8 And this house shall be made an example of: every one that shall pass by it, shall be astonished, and shall hiss, and say: "Why hath the Lord done thus to this land, and to this house?"

9 And they shall answer: Because they forsook the Lord their God, who brought their fathers out of the land of Egypt, and followed strange gods, and adored them, and worshipped them: therefore hath the Lord brought upon them all this evil.

12 And Hiram came out of Tyre, to see the towns which Solomon had given him, and they pleased him not;

VER. 7. Take away, by death or exile. H.—Sight. God is disposed to grant favours to those who approach his temples with piety. If they indulge their passions, he will suffer these holy places to be profaned, as a dreadful warning of his displeasure. The Jews enjoyed prosperity while they continued faithful. On their revolt, the ark was taken, the temple pillaged by Sennacherib, burnt by Nabuchodonosor, profaned by Antiochus, and destroyed by the Romans. C.

VER. 8. Example. Heb. "at this house, on high," (or dedicated "to the most high;" Paral.) "every," &c. H.—It shall be treated with no more regard than the high places of idols. C.—Though at present so much exalted, it shall be reduced to a heap of ruins, (Vatab.) and destroyed. Chal.

16 Pharaoh, the king of Egypt, came up and took Gazer, and burnt it with fire: and slew the Chanaanite that dwelt in the city, and gave it for a dowry to his daughter, Solomon's wife.

17 So Solomon built Gazer, and Bethhoron the nether,

18 And Baalath, and Palmira, in the land of the wilderness.

Philadelphus gave his daughter Bernice to Antiochus, of Syria, with an immense dowry, which caused her to be styled Phernophorus. 25 Solomon also offered three times every year holocausts, and victims of peace-offerings, upon the altar which he had built to the Lord, and he burnt incense before the Lord: and the temple was finished.

26 And king Solomon made a fleet in Asiongaber, which is by Ailath, on the shore of the Red Sea, in the land of Edom.

VER. 22. Bondmen. Par. To serve in the king's works; for they were warriors, &c. The natural subjects performed the more honourable offices. H.—Strangers pay tribute. Matt. xvii. 24. Sesostria, king of Egypt, caused many temples to be erected after his expeditions, with this inscription: "No native laboured at them." Diodorus i.

VER. 23. Officers of the crown. There were 250 over the army, (Paral.) or 3,800, (3,600, Par.) including those who presided over the proselytes. C. v. 16. C.—These were employed while the temple was building. M.

VER. 24. Mello, taking it from the public, and adorning it with the most beautiful structures, for the honour and convenience of his queen. T.

VER. 25. Year, at the three great festivals, with peculiar solemnity, (C.) as well as holocausts every day, and on the sabbaths and new moons. 2 Paral. viii. 13. See ib. xxxi. 3. C.—He established funds for all these victims. M.

VER. 26. Fleet. Some ancient Latin editions have, (H.) "a name," or monument. W.—Ailath, to the east. See Num. xxxiii. 13.

VER. 27. Fleet, from Tyre, (C.) or from the island of the same name, in the Red Sea. Grotius.

VER. 28. Ophir, in the East Indies; (M.) an island called Taprobana, or Sumatra; (Salien) or a country near the heads of the Euphrates and Tigris. C. Dissert.—The variety of opinions is astonishing. Huet fixes upon Sophola, on the eastern coast of Africa; and supposes that the fleet of Hiram might proceed down a canal, which seems to have been formerly opened for a communication between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea. Strabo i. 17. and ii. D.—The various commodities might be procured either in Africa, or, on the voyage, in other countries. H.—Twenty. Par. reads fifty. The letters c (20) and n (50) may easily have been mistaken. Huet.—The thirty talents might be the value of other parts of the cargo, or might be spent in repairs and wages. C.—The sum here mentioned might be also refined gold. M.

CHAP. X. VER. 1. Saba is written with sh, to denote a part of Arabia, and with z, when Ethiopia is meant. Pa. lxxi. 10. The former is here designated, (M.) being "the ends of the earth, east" of Judea, (Tacit. Hist. v.) and lying also to the south of that country. Matt. xii. 42. This region was famous for gold, &c. and acknowledged the dominion of women:

Imperat hic sexus.—Claud. Eutrop. i.

Grotius follows the opinion of Josephus (viii. 6.) and Origen, (hom. 2. in Cant.) who place the seat of this queen's empire at Meroe. The Abyssinians also pretend that their kings are descendants of Solomon, by the queen of Saba; and that Azarias, the son of Sadoq, stole the tables of the law, when he brought back his pupil from Jerusalem. Sanctius.—This shows their vanity and ignorance. C.—Still many suppose that this queen came from their country. W. &c.—Lord, who had raised Solomon to so great splendour, while, on the other hand, the king endeavoured to enhance his glory. H.—If we place the stop after Solomon, we may say that the queen was moved by divine grace, and attracted, like the Gabaoites, (Jos. ix. 9.) to embrace the true religion; (C.) though she seems to have professed it already, as many others did among the Gentiles. H.—The Fathers look upon her as a figure of the Christian Church. S. Hilary, Ia. exxi. S. Iren. iv. 45. &c. Barbara natione, non animo. S. Paulin, ep. 1.—Questions came to king Solomon, and spoke to him all that she had in her heart.

3 And Solomon informed her of all the things she proposed to him: there was not any word the king was ignorant of, and which he could not answer her.

4 And when the queen of Saba saw all the wisdom of Solomon, and the house which he had built,

5 And the meat of his table, and the apartments of his servants, and the order of his ministers, and their apparel, and the cup-bearers, and the holocausts, which he offered in the house of the Lord, she had no longer any spirit in her;

6 And she said to the king: The report is true, which I heard in my own country,

7 Concerning thy words, and concerning thy wisdom. And I did not believe them that told me, till I came myself, and saw with my own eyes, and have found that the half hath not been told me: thy wisdom and thy works exceed the fame which I heard.

8 Blessed are thy men, and blessed are thy servants, who stand before thee always, and hear thy wisdom.

9 Blessed be the Lord thy God, whom thou hast pleased, and who hath set thee upon the throne of Israel, because the Lord hath loved Israel for ever, and hath appointed thee king, to do judgment and justice.

10 *And she gave the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices a very great store, and precious stones: there was brought no more such abundance of spices as these which the queen of Saba gave to king Solomon.

11 (*The navy also of Hiram, which brought gold from Ophir, brought from Ophir great plenty of thyne-trees, and precious stones.

12 And the king made of the thyne-trees the rails

* 2 Par. ix. 9.

Thus the ancients tried each others skill. Judg. xiv. 12. See C. iv. 80. The questions might regard natural history or religion. M.

VER. 4. House, the palace, or rather the temple, (C.) or both. M.—Dion (37) and Tacitus extol the grandeur of the temple, which Titus destroyed. What would they have said of that built by Solomon? C.

VER. 5. In her. She fainted away in rapture and astonishment. H.—Thus the church of the Gentiles is taught, by the gospel, to lay aside the spirit of pride, &c. W.

VER. 9. Justice. Kings are given by God, either in his mercy or in his anger. C.—They are not appointed for themselves alone. M.—This queen was moved to take so long a journey, to hear and to see Solomon, as a figure of the many potentates who should embrace the Christian faith. W.

VER. 11. Thyne. Pliny (iii. 16.) mentions a species of tall and incorruptible trees, called thya. The wood was odoriferous, and very costly. Citri et menaeum insania, quas femine viris contra margaritas regeant. B. xiii. and xv. 16. Calypso burnt it, to perfume her whole island. Homer.—It was used as a sort of incense in sacrifices, and thence received its name. H.—Sept. translate, "pained;" and elsewhere, pine-trees, which is adopted by S. Jerom. 2 Par. ii. 8. C.—Heb. reads almuggin in one place, and algunin in the other, the letters being transposed; "for I suppose, says Kennicott, it will hardly be said that these trees were both almus and algum." H.—One word might be the Ethiopian pronunciation. Huet.—Yet Kimchi observes, that such transpositions of letters are very common among the Hebrews. D.—Solomon had desired Hiram to send him some algum, or "gum bearing" wood: but as there was not sufficient, or so fine, in Libanus as in Ophir, or in foreign parts, he procured more from those countries. The wood might probably resemble that of settum, or of black acacia, (Ex. xxv. 5.) whence the gum of Arabia is extracted. Acanthos, in Thebais, was celebrated for its fine thorn-trees, and for its gum. Strabo xvii. C.—it is placed near Memphis. Plin. iv. 10.—The Rabbins commonly understand the Heb. to mean, "coral," which is not fit for instruments, much less for architecture. Others translate ebony, or Brazil wood, but without reason. C. T.

VER. 12. Rails. Heb. mihad, "pillars, supporters, or banisters." H.—Most interpreters suppose the rails were on each side of the road, leading from the palace to the temple. C.—Paral. stairs.—Citerns, or harps and lyres. H.—Heb. "kinnoeth and nebalim."

VER. 14. Gold. His stated revenue was, 4,646,350*l.* sterling. H.

VER. 15. Merchants; wholesale. M.—Arabia, the desert, which was peopled by various nations. Arob means, "a mixture, or assemblage," as well as "the light, and a fruitless country." Sept. seem to have read abor, "all the kings of the house of the Lord, and of the king's house, and citerns and harps for singers: there were no such thyne-trees as these brought nor seen unto this day.)

13 And king Solomon gave the queen of Saba all that she desired, and asked of him: besides what he offered her of himself of his royal bounty. And she returned, and went to her own country, with her servants.

14 And the weight of the gold that was brought to Solomon every year, was six hundred and sixty-six talents of gold:

15 Besides that which the men brought him that were over the tributes, and the merchants, and they that sold by retail, and all the kings of Arabia, and the governors of the country.

16 And Solomon made two hundred shields of the purest gold: he allowed six hundred sicles of gold for the plates of one shield.

17 And three hundred targets of fine gold: three hundred pounds of gold covered one target: and the king put them in the house of the forest of Libanus.

18 King Solomon also made a great throne of ivory: and overlaid it with the finest gold.

19 It had six steps: and the top of the throne was round behind: and there were two hands on either side holding the seat: and two lions stood, one at each hand.

20 And twelve little lions stood upon the six steps, on the one side and on the other: there was no such work made in any kingdom.

21 Moreover, all the vessels out of which king Solomon drank, were of gold: and all the furniture of the house of the forest of Libanus was of most pure gold: there was no silver, nor was any account made of it in the days of Solomon:

of the other side" the Euphrates, who were also called Arabs. See C. iv. 24.—Country around Judea, comprising the Phylarchs of Arabia, (Gen. xvii. 20.) and the Philistine Satraps.

VER. 16. Shields. Heb. tsinnu is rather indeterminate, denoting something sharp or pointed; "a dart," &c. C.—Par. spears. Some of the shields were made with a point, projecting from the middle, (H.) with which the enemy might be wounded. M.—These arms were used when the king went to the temple, and were repositied in the arsenal, at his return. C. xiv. 28.

VER. 17. Targets, smaller than the former, and resembling a crescent.

Ducit Amazonidum lunatis agmina peltis. Enclid i. C.—Par. reads, shields.—Fine. Sept. "ductile." Heb. asul, "beaten, refined," &c.—Hundred is omitted in Heb. and Sept. (H.) but is found in 2 Par. (ix. 16.) where we read 300 of gold, in like manner as 600 of gold in the preceding verse, without specifying the particular weight in either. These targets or shields, seem to have been heavier than the former, and designed only for ornament, being placed in the great hall, as they weighed each 375 Roman pounds, or 18,000 sicles; (C.) unless mina, pound, be here put for sicle; as Josephus (ii. 3.) says the sons of Jacob sold their brother for twenty pieces of silver. Gen. xxxvii. 28. M.—Sallien thinks that 200 shields were each worth 600 sicles, and these 300 targets weighed each 300 sicles of gold. H.

VER. 18. Ivory. Heb. "of the tooth" (or horn) of elephants: people do not agree of which the ivory is formed. See Pliny (viii. 3.) for the former sentiment, and for the latter, Varro vi. Ezeas. (xxvii. 15.) seems to unite both sentiments, calling it, "horns of the tooth." H.—Ivory may, in effect, be wrought like horn.—Finest. Heb. "gold of Uphas." This was the country whence it was brought; (Jer. x. 9.) probably Colchis, where the river Phasis, or Phison, flows. Gen. ii. 11. C.—The Chaldee calls Uphas, (in Jeremias) Ophir; and Huet supposes that Paz and Parvaim designate the same place. C. ix. 28. Job xxviii. 17. D.—In Paral. we only read, pure gold, which would suffer the ivory to appear in some places. C.

VER. 19. Behind, like an alcove, (H.) placed in the porch of the palace. C. vii. 8.—Hands, for the elbows to rest on. In Paral. S. Jerom translates, "little" arms. The feet might also be made in this shape. Josephus (viii. 5.) represents them as forming the seat: (C.) and the Sept. place them on each side: "the fore-parts of oxen, projected from the back of the throne, and hands on the throne, on each side of the seat." In Paral. also, we find a foot-stool of gold. H.

VER. 21. No silver vessels, (C.) though there was a great abundance of that metal, v. 27. It was not deemed worthy to be admitted at the king's table. H.

22 For the king's navy, once in three years, went with the navy of Hiram by sea to Tharsis, and brought from thence gold, and silver, and elephants' teeth, and apes, and peacocks.

23 And king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom.

24 And all the earth desired to see Solomon's face, to hear his wisdom, which God had given in his heart.

25 And every one brought him presents, vessels of silver and of gold, garments, and armour, and spices, and horses, and mules, every year.

26 And Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen, and he had a thousand four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen: and he bestowed them in fenced cities, and with the king in Jerusalem.

27 And he made silver to be as plentiful in Jerusalem as stones: and cedars to be as common as sycamores which grow in the plains.

28 And horses were brought for Solomon out of Egypt, and Coa: for the king's merchants bought them out of Coa, and brought them at a set price.

* 2 Par. i. 14.—^b Deut. xvii. 17. Eccl. xlvii. 21.

VER. 22. To Tharsis. This word in Heb. signifies, "the sea." Isai. ii. 16. and xxiii. 10. M.—But when it signifies some particular place, (H.) it probably refers to Tarsus of Cilicia, which was once the most famous mart on the Mediterranean, though not perhaps in the days of Solomon, but after it had been embellished by the Assyrian kings. "Ships of Tharsis," often denote such as were fit for a long voyage; and of this description were the fleets of Solomon and of Hiram, which sailed from Asiongaber to Ophir, and touched at various ports, where they procured what they wanted. C.—Heb. "the king had at sea a navy of Tharsis." once in three years: the navy of Tharsis came, bringing gold," &c. H.—Teeth. Heb. Shenhabim. The latter word is commonly rendered elephants, & being lost at the beginning. Bochart.—Syriac and Arab. intimate, that the elephants were brought alive. Perhaps n may be dropped after b; so that we should read, ehnim, as Ezec. xxvii. 15, and translate ivory and ebony; the one being remarkable for its white, and the other for its black colour. Both might be procured on the coasts of Ethiopia, by which the fleet passed. The Persians, and Sesostris, required the people of the country to pay both for tribute. Pliny xii. 14. Diod. i.—Apes. Heb. Kophim. Greek, κῆπος. There was a peculiar species in Ethiopia, which the Egyptians adored at Babylon, near Memphis, and was exhibited by Julius Cæsar, in the public shows. Solin. Bochart.—Peacocks is not expressed in the Sept. C.—The Roman edition, instead of elephants, &c. inserts, "stones," &c. intended for the various edifices and towns, which Solomon fortified, to keep under the nations of Chanaan, whom he forced to labour, &c. But the Alexandrian copy has, ραῖνες, "peacocks," as thucim is rendered (H.) by the Chal. Syr. &c. C.—Huet observes, that these birds were scarcely known in the time of Alexander, and would therefore understand, psittacos, "parrots." D.—But peacocks were called, "birds of Media," as they were very common in that country, (C.) and about Babylon. Diod. ii.—The fleet of Solomon might advance as far as the confines of Media. Josephus adds, that it brought home Ethiopian slaves, who were in high esteem in a country where eunuchs were employed to guard the women, (C.) as there would be less danger of too great familiarity. H.

VER. 24. The earth; or, the kings of, &c. Paral.

VER. 26. Hundred chariots. Par. forty thousand horses, in the stables, and 12,000 chariots and horsemen; though the chariots may be referred to the former number, conformably to the Heb. and to C. iv. 26. M.—Many of the horses were not employed in the chariots, (Salien) which were 1400 in number. 2 Par. i. 14. M.

VER. 27. Sycamores, (Heb. shikmin) which were formerly very common in Palestine, as they are still about Cairo, in Egypt. The fruit resembles figs, as the leaves do the mulberry tree; whence the name is a compound of σῖκος, "a fig," and μῆρα, "a mulberry;" though some would prefer μῆρος, "a fool," to denote that the fruit is "insipid." It is however sweeter than wild figs, and proceeds from the trunk of the tree. C.

VER. 28. Egypt was once very famous for horses, and the breed is much admired by travellers. The Turks will not suffer strangers to have them. The canals made by Sesostris and other kings, caused their numbers to be diminished. Herod ii. 108.—Yet there were many used in the time of Ezechias. 4 K. xviii. 24.—And Coa. Some take this to be the name of some unknown place, (D.) or of a town in Arabia Felix, (Ptol. vi. 17.) or "of a fair." T.—Heb. "and from Michoe," which was the ancient name of Troglodytis, near Egypt. Pliny vi. 29. C.—Prot. "and linen yarn; the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price." Mokue signifies "a thread;" (H.) and the linen cloth of Egypt was in high estimation. Isai. xix. 9. Ezec. xxvii. 7. Pliny xix. 1.—Jarchi and others understand, "a string" of horses, tied together by the tails. But Bochart translates, "They brought horses for Solomon out of Egypt; and, as for the tribute, the custom-house officers of the king received it, at a certain rate," agreed upon between Solomon and the king of Egypt.

VER. 29. Fifty, upon an average.—Hethites: some had retired, and built 29 And a chariot of four horses came out of Egypt, for six hundred sicles of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty. And after this manner did all the kings of the Hethites, and of Syria, sell horses.

CHAP. XI.

Solomon, by means of his wives, falleth into idolatry: God raiseth him adversaries, Adad, Razon, and Jeroboam: Solomon dieth.

AND king Solomon loved many strange women, besides the daughter of Pharaoh, and women of Moab, and of Ammon, and of Edom, and of Sidon, and of the Hethites:

2 Of the nations concerning which the Lord said to the children of Israel: "You shall not go in unto them, neither shall any of them come into yours: for they will most certainly turn away your hearts to follow their gods. And to these was Solomon joined with a most ardent love.

3 And he had seven hundred wives as queens, and three hundred concubines: and the women turned away his heart.

4 And when he was now old, his heart was turned Lusa; Judg. i. 26.) others dwelt beyond Libanus. 4 K. vii. 6. These kings sold horses to Solomon; or, according to the Heb. the Jews had the traffic of horses in their own hands. C.—Prot. "and so for all the kings... did they bring them out by their means." Sept. "thus to all the kings... of Syria, on the sea-shore, they came out." H.—The merchants sold horses to these kings, at 150 sicles a piece. C.

CHAP. XI. VER. 1. Strange women, who had been brought up in the service of idols, and were not sincerely converted. H.—Riches engaged Solomon in the love of pleasure, and this brought on his ruin. C.—He began with the spirit, but ended in the flesh. Gal. iii. 8. Eccles. xlvii. 21. He was aware of the dangerous conversation of women. Eccl. xix. 2. Yet he has left us in his own person an example of that dreadful truth, that it is difficult to love with discretion. H.—Amare et sapere vix cuiquam conceditur.—Nothing could be more beautiful than the commencement of his reign, nor more terrible than the latter part of it. Thou hast stained thy glory, &c. Eccl. xlvii. 22. Hence we may apply to him, How art thou fallen from heaven? Isai. xiv. 12. C.—Pharaoh. This marriage seems to be blamed, as the source of Solomon's misfortunes; though it is probable, that she had pretended to embrace his religion. M. Salien.—He ought to have repudiated her as soon as she relapsed. T.

VER. 2. Gods. See Ex. xxxiv. 16. Deut. vii. 4. The law only forbids expressly the marrying of the women of Chanaan. But it was easy to discern, that the spirit of the law equally prohibited connexions with others who were addicted to idol-worship. See 1 Esd. x. 3. Such alliances are always dangerous, and generally prove fatal; (C.) unless there be good reason to believe that the parties are sincerely converted: in which case the prohibition ceases. H.—Love. Thus, inimur in vetitum semper, cupimusque negata; and, stolen waters are sweeter, says impure love; but her guests are in the depths of hell. Prov. ix. 17. 18.

VER. 3. Concubines, or secondary wives. H.—Those who have any sense of modesty, can hardly read this without blushing. Salien.—Solomon was guilty not only of intemperance, but also of a transgression of the precept. M. Deut. xvii. 17.—He shall not have many wives: though as that command is indefinite, and David had eighteen, without blame, (2 K. iii. 3.) it is difficult to say how many a person might have, at that time, without exceeding the bounds of moderation. H.—But a thousand wives for one man, is certainly too great a number. When Solomon wrote the Canticles, he had only sixty queens and eighty concubines. Cant. vi. 8. The Rabbins allow the king eighteen wives. But it is probable that most of the kings indulged themselves in a greater latitude. Darius, of Persia, took along with him to the wars 350 concubines, when he was over-come by Alexander. Athen. xiii. 1. Priam had also many wives, besides Hecuba, the queen. The inferior wives looked upon those who had this title with a degree of respect, bordering on adoration. C.

VER. 4. Old; about fifty. Salien. C.—This is an aggravation of his guilt. H.—Solomon spent the first thirty years of his reign in virtue: but towards the termination of it, he gave into idolatry, and into such excesses, that he deserves to be ranked with Henry VIII. who began well, but ended with dishonour. H.—Heart, and mind also, v. 9. He sacrificed to idols, not only externally, but gave them internal worship; (Salien) so much was his understanding darkened, unless (H.) he acted against his better knowledge. Eccles. ii. 9. T.—Father who did not continue long in sin. D.—"The wisdom, which had been given to him, entirely abandoned his heart, which the discipline even of the smallest tribulation had not guarded." S. Greg. Pastoral. p. 3.—"He had commenced his reign with an ardent desire of wisdom, and when he had obtained it by spiritual love, he lost it by carnal affections." S. Aug. Doct. iii. 21.—"Prosperity, which is a severe trial for the wise, was more disadvantageous to him than wisdom herself had been profitable." De Civ. xvii. 20.—The Fathers do not attempt to palliate the guilt of Solomon; and those aggravate his crime, who endeavour to excuse him by saying, that his mind was still convinced that there could be but away by women to follow strange gods: and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was the heart of David, his father.

5 But Solomon worshipped Astarthe, the goddess of the Sidonians, and Moloch, the idol of the Ammonites.

6 And Solomon did that which was not pleasing before the Lord, and did not fully follow the Lord, as David, his father.

7 Then Solomon built a temple for Chamos, the idol of Moab, on the hill that is over-against Jerusalem, and for Moloch, the idol of the children of Ammon.

8 And he did in this manner for all his wives that were strangers, who burnt incense, and offered sacrifice to their gods.

9 And the Lord was angry with Solomon, because his mind was turned away from the Lord, the God of Israel, *who had appeared to him twice;

10 And had commanded him concerning this thing, that he should not follow strange gods: but he kept not the things which the Lord commanded him.

11 The Lord therefore said to Solomon: Because thou hast done this, and hast not kept my covenant, and my precepts, which I have commanded thee, I will divide and rend thy kingdom, and will give it to thy servant.

12 ^bNevertheless, in thy days I will not do it, for David thy father's sake: but I will rend it out of the hand of thy son.

13 Neither will I take away the whole kingdom; but I will give one tribe to thy son, for the sake of David, my servant, and Jerusalem, which I have chosen.

14 And the Lord raised up an adversary to Solomon, Adad, the Edomite, of the king's seed, in Edom.

* Supra ix. 2.—^b Infra xii. 15.

one God, and that his adoration of idols was merely external, and out of complaisance to his wives. See Sanctius, &c. C.

VER. 5. Astarthe. Heb. Hashtoreth, "ewes," is in the plural form, as if to denote many idols. But the moon, or the queen of heaven, (Jer. vii. 18.) is particularly designated. Judg. ii. 12. H.—Some explain it of Venus (Sanctius) or Juno. T.—Moloch. Heb. Molcom, (their king) "the abomination;" (H.) supposed to be the sun, (Sanctius) or saturn. T. See 4 K. xxiii. 10.

VER. 7. Chamos. Bacchus or Priapus, called Kōmos, by the Greeks, as he presided over "feasting." His worship was most shameful, and therefore performed in the night. The temples erected by Solomon, were not entirely demolished till the reign of Josias. T.—Hill. Heb. "Then Solomon erected a high place (temple, altar, or grove) to Chamos, the abomination of Moab, on the, &c. hill;" it is supposed of olives, (H.) to the east of Jerusalem, which was hence called, the mount of offences. 4 K. xxiii. 13. C.—Yet no place was consecrated to idols within the city. M.—The idols of Egypt are not specified, though the daughter of Pharaoh would, probably, interest herself in their favour. The Jews were more prone to those of Chanaan. We find, however, that they were addicted to the worship of Adonis, who was highly revered in Egypt; (Eze. viii. 14. C.) and the golden calves were an imitation of Apis. H.—Six temples were probably built, as wives of so many different nations are specified, v. 1. Abul. Salien.

VER. 9. Twice, or repeatedly. See C. ix. 2. H.—He had appeared to him at Gabaon, and after the consecration of the temple, (M.) besides sending a prophet to him while he was building. C. vi. 12. Abul.—God was not content with giving him the general commandments: he had condescended to caution him in a most particular and earnest manner: (H.) so that his transgression is more horrible and ungrateful. C.—No doubt the priests and prophets had often besought him to alter his conduct; but the sinner is deaf, till God speak to his heart. Salien. A. 3054.

VER. 11. This. Lit. and Heb. "Because thou hast this with thee." H.—Since this is thy conduct, and fixed determination, to abandon my service, I will also reject thee. The Lord spoke to him in a third vision, (C.) or by the mouth of Ahias, (Abul.) who was likewise appointed to inform Jeroboam of his election to a part of the kingdom. Salien. A. 3059.

VER. 12. Sake. As David placed this son upon the throne, the disgrace would seem to revert on him. M.—Here we behold the reward of piety, and how desirable a thing it is to have saints for our parents. H.

15 *For when David was in Edom, and Joab, the general of the army, was gone up to bury them that were slain, and had killed every male in Edom,

16 (For Joab remained there six months with all Israel, till he had slain every male in Edom,)

17 Then Adad fled, he and certain Edomites of his father's servants, with him, to go into Egypt: and Adad was then a little boy.

18 And they arose out of Madian, and came into Pharan, and they took men with them from Pharan, and went into Egypt, to Pharaoh, the king of Egypt: who gave him a house, and appointed him victuals, and assigned him land.

19 And Adad found great favour before Pharaoh, in-somuch that he gave him to wife the own sister of his wife, Taphnes, the queen.

20 And the sister of Taphnes bore him his son, Genubath; and Taphnes brought him up in the house of Pharaoh: and Genubath dwelt with Pharaoh among his children.

21 And when Adad heard in Egypt that David slept with his fathers, and that Joab, the general of the army, was dead, he said to Pharaoh: Let me depart, that I may go to my own country.

22 And Pharaoh said to him: Why, what is wanting to thee with me, that thou seekest to go to thy own country? But he answered: Nothing; yet I beseech thee to let me go.

23 God also raised up against him an adversary, Razon, the son of Eliada, ^dwho had fled from his master, Adarezer, the king of Soba.

24 And he gathered men against him, and he became a captain of robbers, when David slew them of Soba: and they went to Damascus, and dwelt there, and they made him king in Damascus.

* 2 Kings viii. 14.—^d 2 Kings viii. 6. 1 Par. xviii. 6.

VER. 13. One tribe. Besides that of Juda, his own native tribe. Ch.—That of Benjamin had been so reduced, that it scarcely deserved the name of a tribe. It was also invariably connected with the adjoining tribe of Juda; as many of the other tribes, after the captivities of Assyria and Babylon, went by the common title of Jews. T.—The Levites, and many of the Israelites, came to inhabit in the land of Juda, for the sake of the true religion. C. xii. 17. 2 Par. xi. 13. 16. Jeroboam banished the tribe of Levi from his dominions, that he might more easily introduce a change of religion among his subjects. The two kingdoms were thus almost equal in strength. C.—Chosen for the abode of holiness, and the seat of government. Salien.—One tribe . . and Jerusalem; which latter may denote the tribe of Benjamin. W.

VER. 14. Adversary. Heb. Satan. Nothing of this kind could molest him, while he continued faithful. C. v. 4. But now he sees the arm of God stretched out, pressing him to repent.—Adad. Sept. Ader. Josephus says that this prince solicited Pharaoh to let him return into his own country, after the death of Joab: but was prevailed upon to desist from the attempt, till the affairs of Solomon began to decline. He then endeavoured to get possession of the country; but, being repelled by the strong garrisons of the Hebrews, he went and joined Razar, (Heb. Razon) who had revolted against Adarezer; and made inroads into the dominions of Solomon, after he had conquered a part of Syria. Ant. viii. 7. Others think that Solomon consented, at the entreaty of Pharaoh, that Adad should reign over Idumea, on his paying tribute; and that the latter attempted to throw off the yoke. Salien.—But these particulars are uncertain, and Idumea was subject to the kings of Juda till the days of Joram. 2 Par. xxi. 8. C.

VER. 15. In Edom, in the 15th year of his reign. Salien.—Abisai was the general in this expedition. 2 K. viii. and 1 Par. xviii. 12.

VER. 17. Boy. About five (Salien) or 12 years of age. Pineda.

VER. 18. Land, to maintain him (Josephus) out of the royal domains, (C.) of which the kings were possessed. Didor. i. p. 46.—He appointed him governor of some part of the country. Vatable.

VER. 19. Full. Sept. "elder sister of his wife Thekemina." H.

VER. 23. Razon. He must have been now about 94 years old; unless this was the son of Adarezer's general. Salien. M.

VER. 24. Robbers, or (Heb. and Sept.) "a band" with whom he made depredations. H.—Damascus, with David's consent, on their admitting a garrison. (2 K. viii. 8.) and consenting to pay tribute; (M.) or Razon might make himself master of this place, only after the apostasy of Solomon. His successors became 25 And he was an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon: and this is the evil of Adad, and his hatred against Israel; and he reigned in Syria.

26 ^aJeroboam also, the son of Nabat, an Ephrathite, of Sareda, a servant of Solomon, whose mother was named Sarua, a widow woman, lifted up his hand against the king.

27 And this is the cause of his rebellion against him; for Solomon built Mello, and filled up the breach of the city of David, his father.

28 And Jeroboam was a valiant and mighty man: and Solomon seeing him a young man ingenious and industrious, made him chief over the tributes of all the house of Joseph.

29 ^bSo it came to pass at that time, that Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, and the prophet Ahias, the Silonite, clad with a new garment, found him in the way: and they two were alone in the field.
